A JAILHOUSE LAWYER'S MANUAL

Table of Contents

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Preface vi
Foreword by Justice Thurgood Marshall vii
Acknowledgments viii
Legal Disclaimer ix
Table of Contents xi

SECTION I: INTRODUCTION TO THE JLM AND HOW TO USE IT

Chapter 1 How to Use the JLM

A. General Comments 1
B. How to Use the JLM to Learn About the Law 1
C. How to Use the JLM When Filing a Lawsuit 2
D. How to Use the JLM if You Are Not Imprisoned in New York State 3

SECTION II: LEARNING YOUR RIGHTS

Chapter 2 Introduction to Legal Research

A. Introduction 4
B. An Overview of the Court System 4
C. Legal Research: How to Find and Support Legal Arguments 8
D. Citation 20
E. Important Next Steps 22
F. Summary 24
G. Other Ways to Learn About Legal Research 24
H. Conclusion 25
Appendix A: Citation Examples of Common Authorities 26

Chapter 3 Your Right to Learn the Law and Go to Court

A. Introduction 29
B. Fulfilling the Actual Injury Requirement 30
C. How the State's Limited Duty to Provide Access to the Courts May Apply to You 31
D. What Is an Adequate Law Library 33
E. The State's Duty to Permit Access to Adequate Legal Assistance 35
F. The State's Duty to Provide Materials 35
G. Conclusion 37
Appendix A: Directory of Selected Law Libraries Offering Services to Prisoners 38

SECTION III: HOW TO FILE A LAWSUIT AND LEARN ABOUT YOUR CASE

Chapter 4 How to Find a Lawyer
A. Introduction 41
B. Attorneys for Criminal Appeals 41
C. Attorneys for Civil Cases 42
D. Conclusion 43

Chapter 5 Choosing a Court and a Lawsuit: An Overview of the Options
A. Introduction 44
B. Lawsuits to Challenge Your Conviction or Sentence 44
C. Lawsuits to Challenge the Conditions of Your Imprisonment 45
D. Conclusion 49
Appendix A: Lawsuits That Challenge Your Conviction or Sentence 51
Appendix B: Lawsuits That Challenge the Conditions of Your Imprisonment 52

Chapter 6 An Introduction to Legal Documents
A. Introduction: The Right and Responsibilities of Self-Representation 54
B. The Legal Documents 54
C. Conclusion 58
Appendix A: Legal Documents Table 59
Appendix B: Sample Memorandum of Law 60

Chapter 7 Freedom of Information
A. Introduction 69
B. The Federal Freedom of Information Act 69
C. New York's Freedom of Information Law 78
D. Medical/Health Records 82
E. Administrative Records 83
F. Parole Records 83
G. Criminal History Records 83
H. Inmate Records 84
I. Correcting Errors in Your Personal History or Correctional Supervision History Records 85
J. Federal Citizen Information Center 86
K. Conclusion 86
Appendix A: State Freedom of Information Laws 87
Appendix B: Sample Department of Justice Certification of Identity Form 88
Appendix C: Sample Letters 89
Appendix D: Addresses 92

Chapter 8 Obtaining Information To Prepare Your Case: The Process of Discovery
A. Introduction 95
B. Civil Discovery 96
C. Criminal Discovery 104
D. Conclusion 110
Appendix A: Sample Discovery Documents 111

SECTION IV: HOW TO ATTACK YOUR CONVICTION OR SENTENCE

Chapter 9 Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence
A. Introduction 114
B. Limits on Your Right to Appeal 115
C. What You Can Ask the Court to Do Before It Hears Your Appeal 125
D. What You Can Ask the Court to Do in an Appeal 127
E. Preparing Your Papers for Your Appeal 135
F. Continuing Your Appeal 138
G. Three Options for Dealing with Ineffective Assistance of Appellate Counsel 139
H. Conclusion 142
Appendix A: The Court to Which You Should Appeal 143
Appendix B: Sample Papers for a Criminal Appeal 144

Chapter 10 Applying for Re-Sentencing for Drug Offenses
A. Introduction 158
B. Re-Sentencing for Federal Drug Crimes 158
C. Re-Sentencing for Drug Crimes in New York State 166
D. Conclusion 181
Appendix A: Sample Forms for Applying for Federal Re-Sentencing 182
Appendix B: Sample Application for NY State Re-Sentencing 189
Appendix C: Sample Pro Se Application 193

Chapter 11 Using Post-Conviction DNA Testing to Attack Your Conviction or Sentence
A. Introduction 196
B. Common Procedures Used to Obtain DNA Testing 196
C. Legal Assistance for Those Seeking Post-Conviction DNA Testing 202
D. Conclusion 203
Appendix A: Projects that May Offer Assistance in Obtaining DNA Testing 204

Chapter 12 Appealing Your Conviction Based on Ineffective Assistance of Counsel
A. Introduction 210
B. Ways to Claim Ineffective Counsel 210
C. How to Prove Ineffective Counsel 212
D. Common Ineffective Counsel Claims 217
E. Conclusion 219

Chapter 13 Federal Habeas Corpus
A. Introduction 220
B. The Fundamental Elements of a Federal Habeas Corpus Argument 224
C. What You Cannot Complain About 249
D. Procedures for Filing a Petition for Habeas Corpus 256
E. The Mechanics of Petitioning for Federal Habeas Corpus 275
F. How to Get Help From a Lawyer 284
G. Conclusion 285
Appendix A: The Nine Step Appeals Process 286
Appendix B: Checklist for First-Time Federal Habeas Corpus Petitioners 287

SECTION V: HOW TO ATTACK THE CONDITIONS OF YOUR IMPRISONMENT

Chapter 14 The Prison Litigation Reform Act
A. Introduction 288
B. Filing Fees 288
C. The "Three Strikes" Provision 294
D. Screening and Dismissal of Prisoner Cases 302
E. Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies 304
F. Mental or Emotional Injury 336
G. Attorneys' Fees 346
H. Waiver of Reply 347
I. Hearings by Telecommunication and at Prisons 348
J. Revocation of Earned Release Credit 349
K. Diversion of Damage Awards 350
L. Injunctions 350
M. Conclusion 353

CHAPTER 15 Inmate Grievance Procedures
A. Introduction 354
B. Exhausting Your Administrative Remedies 354
C. Grievances in New York 356
D. The Basic Structure of the New York IGP 358
E. The New York IGP Rules 359
F. Rules for Inmate Grievance Procedures in Other States 366
G. Conclusion 367

Chapter 16 Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law
A. Introduction 368
B. Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Challenge State or Local Government Action 372
C. Your Lawsuit 388
D. Alternate Ways to Bring Lawsuits 413
E. Special Concerns for Prisoners in Federal Prisons 415
F. Conclusion 417
Appendix A: Sample Forms 418

Chapter 17 The State's Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions
A. Introduction 439
B. Know Your Rights: Tort Actions 439
C. Protecting Your Rights 446
D. Checklist for Filing With the Court of Claims 456
E. Conclusion 457
Appendix A: Sample Tort Claim and Supporting Papers 458

Chapter 18 Your Rights At Prison Disciplinary Proceedings
A. Introduction 475
B. Definition of "Due Process" 475
C. Due Process in Prison 476
D. Prisoners' Basic Rights in Disciplinary Procedures 486
E. New York Disciplinary Proceedings and Appeal Procedures 496

F. Administrative Segregation Proceedings 501
G. Conclusion 505

Chapter 19 Your Right to Communicate with the Outside World
A. Introduction 506
B. The Right to General (Non-Legal) Correspondence 507
C. Legal Correspondence with Courts, Public Officials, and Attorneys: Privileged Correspondence 515
D. Internet Communication 519
E. Receipt and Possession of Publications 520
F. Access to the News Media 525
G. Visitation 526
H. Using Telephones 530
I. Conclusion 532

SECTION VI: HOW TO ATTACK YOUR CONVICTION, SENTENCE, OR PRISON CONDITIONS AT THE STATE LEVEL

Chapter 20 Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence
A. Introduction 533
B. When to Use Article 440 533
C. How to File an Article 440 Motion 546
D. What to Expect After You Have Filed Your Article 440 Motion 548
E. What Relief the Court Can Provide Under Article 440 549
F. How to Appeal if Your Article 440 Motion Is Denied 549
G. Conclusion 550
Appendix A: State Post-Conviction Relief Statutes 552
Appendix B: Sample Article 440 Motions and Supporting Papers 553

Chapter 21 State Habeas Corpus: Florida, New York, and Texas
A. Introduction 560
B. Florida 565
C. New York 574
D. Texas 587
E. Conclusion 591

Chapter 22 How To Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules
A. Introduction 592
B. What You Can Complain About Under Article 78 594
C. When You Can Obtain Relief Under Article 78 599
D. Procedures for Filing an Article 78 Petition 602
E. How to Bring an Article 78 Proceeding 609
F. How to Appeal Your Article 78 Decision 610
G. Conclusion 612
Appendix A: Sample Article 78 Petitions and Supporting Papers 613

SECTION VII: GENERAL HEALTH AND SAFETY RIGHTS IN PRISON

Chapter 23 Your Right to Adequate Medical Care
A. Introduction 627
B. Source of the Right to Adequate Medical Care 628
C. Specific Health Care Rights 639
D. Medical Care for Female Prisoners 644
E. Your Right to Infomed Consent and Medical Privacy 648
F. Actions You Can Bring When You Are Denied Medical Care 650
G. Conclusion 653

Chapter 24 Your Right To Be Free From Assault by Prison Guards and Other Prisoners
A. Introduction 654
B. Your Right to be Free from Assault 655
C. Sexual Assault and Rape 673
D. Assault on LGBT or Effeminate Prisoners 677
E. Legal Remedies Available for Victims of Unlawful Assault 680
D. Conclusion 682

Chapter 25 Your Right To Be Free From Illegal Body Searches
A. Introduction 683
B. Involuntary Exposure 684
C. Body Searches 686
D. Should You Resist an Illegal Body Search? 699
E. Legal Remedies 700
F. Conclusion 701

Chapter 26 Infectious Diseases: AIDS, Hepatitis, Tuberculosis and MRSA in Prisons
A. Introduction 702
B. Background Information on Infectious Diseases 702
C. Constitutional Rights in a Prison Setting 706
D. Legal Rights Concerning Testing for Infectious Diseases 707
E. Legal Rights and Prevention of Infectious Diseases 712
F. Legal Rights and Confidentiality 715
G. Legal Rights and Medical Treatment 717
H. Discriminatory Treatment and Infectious Diseases 719
I. Sentencing Persons with Infectious Diseases 721
J. Life After Imprisonment: Planning For Your Release 722
K. Conclusion 722
Appendix A: Resources for Information, Counseling, and Support 723

SECTION VIII: ISSUE-SPECIFIC RIGHTS

Chapter 27 Religious Freedom in Prison
A. Introduction 727
B. The First Amendment Establishment Clause 728
C. The First Amendment Free Exercise Clause, the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000 (RLUIPA), and the Religious Freedom Restoration Act (RFRA) 732
D. Your Rights Under State Statutes 752
E. Faith-Based Rehabilitation Programs 754
F. Conclusion 755
Appendix A: List of Religious Organizations 756

Chapter 28 Rights of Prisoners with Disabilities
A. Introduction 758
B. Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act, and the Americans with Disabilities Act 759
C. Enforcing Your Rights Under the ADA and Section 504 778
D. Conclusion 784

Chapter 29 Special Issues for Prisoners with Mental Illness
A. Introduction 785
B. Your Right to Receive Treatment 788
C. What to do if you Receive Unwanted Treatment 796
D. Conditions of Confinement for Prisoners With Mental Illness 808
E. Special Considerations for Pretrial Detainees 812
F. Where to Go for Help 818
G. Conclusion 819
Appendix A: Resources for Prisoners with Mental Illness 820
Appendix B: Contact Information for Disability Advocates, Inc. v. New York State Office of Mental Health 822

Chapter 30 Special Information for Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, and Transgender Prisoners
A. Introduction 823
B. Changes in the Law 824
C. Unequal Treatment Because of Sexual Orientation or Gender Identity 827
D. Jury Bias 830
E. Your Right to Control Your Gender Presentation While In Prison 832
F. Your Right to Confidentiality Regarding Your Sexual Orientation or Gender Identity 836
G. Assault and Harassment 839
H. Housing and Protective Custody 844
I. Visitation Rights 847
J. Right to Receive LGBT Literature 850
K. Conclusion 853
Appendix A: LGBT Resources 854

Chapter 31 Security Classification and Gang Validation
A. Introduction 855

B. General Security Classification 855
C. Gang Validation 863
D. Conclusion 869

Chapter 32 Parole
A. Introduction 870
B. New York 870
C. Minimum Term of Incarceration Under an Indeterminate Sentence and Conditional Release Under a Determinate Sentence 871
D. Shock Incarceration Program 871
E. Sentence of Parole Supervision 872
F. Parole Release Hearing and Appeals 873
G. Release on Parole 881
H. Revocation of Your Parole 884
I. Release From Parole Supervision 888
J. Parole in California 889
K. Parole in Florida 890
L. Parole in Illinois 892
M. Parole in Texas 893
N. Parole in Michigan 894
O. Conclusion 895

Chapter 33 Rights of Incarcerated Parents
A. Introduction 896
B. Private Placement of Your Child With a Relative or Friend 898
C. Foster Care 898
D. Involuntary Termination of Parental Rights 913
E. Incarcerated Fathers with Children in Foster Care 919
F. Voluntary Adoption 921
G. Getting to Court 922
H. The Right to Counsel 922
I. Conclusion 923
Appendix A: Request for an Order to Produce 924
Appendix B: Services for Incarcerated Parents 925

Chapter 34 The Rights of Pretrial Detainees
A. Your Rights During Investigation and Interrogation 931
B. Your Right to Counsel at Trial 935
C. Bail 939
D. Your Right to a Speedy Trial 942
E. Conditions of Pretrial Detention 947
F. Conclusion 956
Appendix A: State Speedy Trial Statutes 957

Chapter 35 Getting Out Early: Conditional & Early Release
A. Introduction 959
B. New York State 959
C. Sentencing Structure in New York 959
D. Good-Time Credit 961
E. Conditional Release 965
F. Early Release From a Definite Sentence 972
G. Presumptie Release 972
H. Clemency and Commutation in New York 974
I. Compassionate Release for Persons with Terminal Diseases 978
J. Federal Sentences 980
K. Credit for Time Served 981
L. Substantial Assistance Prosecuting Others 983
M. Additional Ways the BOP can Shorten a Federal Sentence 984
N. Federal Supervised Release 995
O. Federal Executive Clemency 999
P. Conclusion 1003

SECTION IX: APPENDICES

Appendix I Addresses of Federal Courts and New York State Prisons and Their Respective Federal Judicial Districts
A. Addresses of Federal Courts 1004
B. New York State Prisons and Their Respective Federal Judicial Districts ... 1025

Appendix II New York State: Filing Instructions & Addresses of New York State Courts
A. General Filing Instructions 1026
B. How to File Poor Person's Papers With the County Attorney 1026
C. New York Supreme Court Addresses 1027
D. County Clerk Addresses for Counties Outside New York City 1031
E. New York Court of Appeals and Appellate Division Addresses 1035

Appendix III Addresses of New York District Attorneys 1037

Appendix IV Directory of Legal and Social Services for Prisoners
A. Legal Services 1043
B. Social Services 1056
C. Official Corrections Agencies 1061

Appendix V Definitions of Words Used in the JLM 1062

Appendix VI Definitions of Latin Words Used in the JLM 1074

A JAILHOUSE LAWYER'S MANUAL

Chapter 1:
How to Use the JLM

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

CHAPTER 1

HOW TO USE THE JLM

A. General Comments

If you have been convicted of a crime and sentenced to prison, A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual (the "JLM") is for you. It contains information about challenging your conviction or your sentence, your rights while you are in prison, and different ways to obtain an early release from prison.

The JLM contains thirty-six Chapters. You should begin by reading Chapters 2, 5, and 6. These Chapters teach you the basics of understanding and using legal materials. You can also look in the Table of Contents for the subject or subjects that are related to your concerns.

The Appendices at the end of the JLM are also important. Appendices I and II contain the addresses of the federal courts and state courts in New York. Appendix III is a list of addresses for District Attorneys' offices in New York. Appendix IV contains a list of several organizations that help prisoners. Appendix V contains a dictionary of legal terms used in the JLM.

The JLM discusses only those areas of law that relate to prisoners' rights. To learn about the law relating to other matters—such as automobile accidents or apartment leases—you will need to look elsewhere. Chapter 2, "Introduction to Legal Research," explains how to research these and other areas of law in your prison law library.

Similarly, although the JLM explains the procedures you can use to attack your conviction, it does not explain many other areas of the law, such as the constitutional limits on the power of the police to search you, to seize evidence from you, or to arrest you. The JLM does not describe the limits on a grand jury's power to indict you, or the limits on what the prosecutor can say to the jury or ask witnesses or defendants during the trial. If you have been convicted of a crime, these are areas of law that you will probably need to know more about to determine whether your conviction was lawful. The most important rules in these areas of the law derive from the Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Amendments of the U.S. Constitution, and court rulings declaring what these amendments mean in relation to cases like your own. The best way to learn about Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Amendment issues is to research them in the library using the skills you will learn by reading Chapter 2 of the JLM.

In general, it is always a good idea to seek the assistance of a lawyer in pursuing any legal action. But it is often not possible to get professional legal assistance—at least at first. If you do not have a lawyer, the JLM can help you initiate a legal action on your own, or interest a lawyer in your case. Even if you have a lawyer, the JLM will be helpful because no one is more concerned about your rights and needs than you. If you know what your lawyer should be doing, what papers he or she should be filing, and what questions he or she should be asking, you will be better able to actively participate in your case. You might even be able to help your lawyer with some of the work. Remember, in criminal appeals and most other actions, very strict time limits exist. Learn these time limits and make sure your attorney files all necessary papers on time.

Two final suggestions about using the JLM: use it cautiously and share it. Use it cautiously because it may contain statements that are out-of-date by the time you read them and because it may take years of litigation before you can vindicate your rights in court. To make sure that a statement, statute, or holding is not out-of-date, follow the steps described in Chapter 2, which explain "Shepard's" and "pocket-parts." Never forget that an incorrect or weak legal argument may waste a valuable opportunity to challenge a violation of your rights.

Share the JLM because there are not enough to go around. Share it also because you will benefit from others' understanding and assertion of their rights. One prisoner's victory in court may bring about changes in prison conditions that will improve life for all prisoners, including you.

B. How to Use the JLM to Learn About the Law

If you are not a jailhouse lawyer and you want to learn the basic tools of the jailhouse lawyer, begin by reading Chapter 2, "Introduction to Legal Research." If at all possible, read Chapter 2 in the law library and look at each book the Chapter mentions. Do not expect to understand all of Chapter 2 the first time you read it. It often takes law students many months before they understand how all of the different research tools work. The key to learning how to do legal research is practice.

The next step is to read Chapter 6, which introduces you to basic legal documents and to the most common types of legal proceedings. After you have read Chapters 2 and 6, you will be able to understand how the research for the memorandum in Chapter 6 was done and why the memorandum was written. From this point on, it is simply a question of refining your skills and broadening your familiarity with the law. The best way to do this is to read the remainder of the JLM.

If you come across a word in the JLM that you do not understand, refer to Appendix V. If the word is not explained there, use the legal dictionary in your prison's law library.

If you already know how to do legal research but have a specific problem, look at the Table of Contents to see which sections may be applicable to your problem. If you need to determine your rights in an area covered by the JLM, like religious freedom or temporary release programs, read the appropriate Chapter and then confirm what it states through research in the library. This is done by finding the part(s) of the Chapter discussing your problem and then writing down the cases or statutes that are cited in the footnotes. If these authorities are cases, read the cases and then Shepardize them; if they are statutes, find the statutes, check their pocket-parts to make sure that they have not been repealed or amended, and then look at the "notes of decisions" in the pocket-parts to see if they have been recently interpreted by the courts. Although terms like "Shepardize" and "notes of decisions" may seem strange to you right now, Chapter 2 will explain them. You should make sure to read all the Chapters that might contain information on any part of your case.

You should read Chapter 5 if you have a serious problem and you think you require relief (help) from a court. This Chapter directs you to other Chapters that explain the kinds of legal proceedings you can use. Again, verify and update anything cited in the JLM that you plan to use in your case. Outdated and incorrect cases or statutes will jeopardize your chances of winning or may delay the process.

If no Chapter in the JLM discusses your problem, you will have to start from the beginning, using the legal research skills that you will learn by reading Chapter 2. It is also possible that one of the Chapters in the JLM discusses a similar problem. If this is the case, it may be helpful to start your research by reading some of the cases or statutes cited in that Chapter.

C. How to Use the JLM When Filing a Lawsuit

Once you have decided that your rights have been violated or that you have a valid claim and you want to go to court, you should turn to the sample legal papers in Chapters 9, 16, and 17 (and Chapters 10, 20, and 22 for New York State Prisoners). Each of these Chapters discusses a different kind of lawsuit and provides examples of the legal papers that you must send to the court in order to initiate the suit. These legal papers are called "forms" because you can use the basic language provided in the sample form and fill in the blanks with the facts that apply to your case. For example, Chapter 9, "Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence," contains the types of papers you will need to start a criminal appeal.

It is important that you do not tear these sample legal papers out of the JLM and do not copy them word for word. If you tear them out and try to send them to a court, or if you simply copy them and then send your copy to a court, the court will either throw them out or send them back to you. In order to use these forms, you must read the first part of the Chapter that discusses how to use them. Then follow the footnotes contained in each legal paper. These tell you exactly how to prepare your own version.

After you have written your version of the legal papers, you must make copies of what you have written. Each Chapter tells you how many copies you will have to make. Then you will have to mail the original plus several copies to a court. Appendices I and II explain to which court the papers should be sent. You may also have to send copies to the District Attorney. Appendix III contains the mailing addresses of all of the District Attorneys in New York. Most prisons have photocopying machines. If your prison does not, you can copy your papers by retyping or rewriting them.

Chapters 4 and 9 also explain how to request a court-appointed lawyer to pursue your case. When you make this request—by filing "poor person's" or in forma pauperis papers—you can also ask the court to assume the responsibility for "serving" all of your papers on your opponents and to allow you to proceed without paying court fees up front. Under the Prison Litigation Reform Act ("PLRA"), prisoners may be required to pay court-filing fees in full. The full cost of the fees will be deducted gradually from your prison account. For a fuller discussion of the PLRA and how it affects your rights, read Chapter 14 of the JLM, "The Prison Litigation Reform Act."

D. How to Use the JLM if You Are Not Imprisoned in New York State

Many of the Chapters in the JLM discuss the law as it exists in New York State. If you are not a prisoner in the state of New York, these laws do not apply to you. You must find out what laws and regulations your state or municipality has issued. Similarly, cases decided by New York state courts that are described in the JLM do not apply directly to non-New York state prisoners.

If you are unable to find materials dealing with the laws and regulations of your state in the JLM, do not be discouraged. The JLM is valuable for prisoners outside of New York for several reasons. First, many of the Chapters discuss laws that affect prisoners outside of New York. Several Chapters have parts on, or are entirely devoted to, the law of states other than New York. In addition to Chapters in the JLM that address state law outside of New York, you may find information on the laws and regulations affecting you in the State Supplements. Currently, State Supplements are being written for prisoners in Texas, California, and Louisiana state prisons, with plans to write supplements for other states in the coming years. If you are a state prisoner in Texas, California, or Louisiana, these supplemental books will provide you with information on the state laws and regulations affecting your rights, especially when they are different from the laws discussed in the main JLM. The JLM is also valuable for prisoners outside of New York, Texas, California, and Louisiana for two other reasons. First, as you will learn in Chapter 2, decisions by the United States Supreme Court discussed in the JLM apply to all prisoners throughout the nation. Second, by reading the Chapters in the JLM you will learn how to effectively research the laws of your own state. Chapter 2 gives you the skills to become an excellent jailhouse lawyer no matter what state law applies to you.

Although this book does not always present you with the exact answer you need, it teaches you how to get the answer on your own. Wherever you are imprisoned, you can use your new-found skills to protect your rights and advance your interests. A careful reading of the Chapters that relate to your problem will allow you to think like a lawyer and to analyze your problem from a legal perspective. Knowing how to think this way is very important because what matters most is not what remedies you think best, but the remedies to which you are entitled by law.

A JAILHOUSE LAWYER'S MANUAL

Chapter 2:
Introduction to Legal Research

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

CHAPTER 2

INTRODUCTION TO LEGAL RESEARCH*

A. Introduction

To be an effective "jailhouse lawyer," you must understand both how the judicial system is organized, and how to find and use the law so that you can work within that system. This Chapter will first explain the structure of the courts that make up the judicial system. Then, this Chapter will discuss how you can research the law in your prison library. Legal research is important in helping you understand your rights under the law, so that you can present your position to a court clearly and effectively.

Before you research the law, you will need to know the powers and functions of the court where you will make your argument. Different types of courts have different powers, and hear different types of arguments. For example, the argument you make in a trial court may not be appropriate in an appellate court. Part B of this Chapter describes how the judicial system is organized and will help you understand the different powers that courts have at each level of the system. Part C explains basic legal research and provides an outline for how to develop legal arguments. Part D provides the general rules for how to cite cases and statutes in documents that you submit to a court. Part E suggests next steps you should take after you complete your legal research, such as double-checking that all your cases are up-to-date and have not been overruled.

B. An Overview of the Court System

In order to move your case successfully through the judicial system, you need to understand the system's basic structure. Some courts will only hear cases that have to do with a certain subject matter. Other courts will only hear specific types of legal proceedings (such as an appeal), or will only hear cases from a certain geographic area. So before you file a case, you have to make sure that you are filing it with the correct court. Courts are responsible for determining what a law means. There are two types of law: law created by a legislature, and law created by judges on a court. Understanding this basic structure will help you be an effective jailhouse lawyer.

1. The Court System

The American judicial system is made up of two types of courts: trial courts and appellate courts. In trial courts lawyers put evidence before a judge or jury, who decides the facts of the dispute. Criminal trials determine the guilt or innocence of the accused, while civil cases determine whether the defendant is liable (responsible for damages or wrongs) to the plaintiff. (In civil cases, one party sues another party for a remedy.) Appellate courts review the legal conclusions of trial courts for errors. If the appellate court finds legal errors, it may order a new trial. The major difference between trial and appellate courts is that the trial courts decide issues of fact (did person A hit person B with a baseball bat?), while appellate courts generally will only check to make sure that the trial court correctly applied the law to the facts that the trial court found (if person A did hit person B, was it an assault?). Appellate courts will rarely interfere with the facts that have been found by the trial court. (If the trial court decided person A did hit person B, the appellate court will generally accept that as true.) Appellate courts will normally only consider arguments about the law, and not about the facts.[1]

Most states and the federal system have two levels of appellate courts. The "intermediate" appellate court[2] is often called the Court of Appeals in the state system and the Circuit Court of Appeals in the federal system. The higher level of appeal, normally the "court of last resort," is often called the Supreme Court. If you are a criminal defendant, than you usually have an automatic right to appeal your conviction or

---

* This Chapter was revised by Susan Maples based on previous versions by Kristin Heavey, Jennifer Parkinson, Paul Quinlan, William H. Knight, Andrew Cameron, and Patricia A. Sheehan.

1. Normally, appellate courts will overturn factual findings of a trial court only if there was no evidence presented at trial to support the trial court's factual finding.

2. The first level of appellate court is called an "intermediate" appeal court because it is between the trial court below and the higher appellate court above.

sentence to the intermediate appellate court.[3] You can only appeal to a higher appellate court if that court agrees to hear your case. Usually, higher appellate courts only grant appeals to cases that raise new legal issues. The typical court structure is shown below in Figure 1.

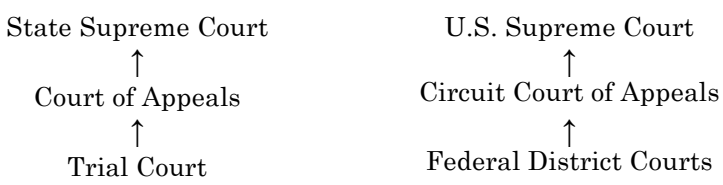

Figure 1: Typical Organization of State and Federal Courts. (For a more detailed diagram, see the inside front and back covers of the JLM).

Some states have different names for their courts, but the basic organization remains the same.[4] The organization of the federal system is similar to that of the states. Every state and the District of Columbia has its own system of courts. Each court system only handles cases in its jurisdiction. Jurisdiction is the area over which a court has the power to resolve disputes and enforce its decisions. Some courts have jurisdiction only over certain subject matter, and some courts only have jurisdiction over certain territory. Both of these types of jurisdictions are discussed below.

(a) Subject Matter Jurisdiction

Courts are divided into state and federal courts. Federal courts only have jurisdiction over cases that involve the U.S. Constitution or a law passed by the U.S. Congress (called a "federal statute").[5] State courts are generally free to deal with any matter (i.e., a state court can decide a dispute that has to do with a state law or a federal law). Defendants often prefer to bring their case in federal court, if possible, because federal courts can often hear cases more quickly than state courts.

In addition to the distinction between state and federal law, some courts are further limited in the subject matter of law they may consider. For example, the New York City Criminal Court can only hear non-felony criminal cases; the Federal Tax Court can only hear tax cases.[6]

(b) Territorial Jurisdiction

Courts are also limited to hearing cases from particular regions. For example, the Criminal Court of New York City can only hear cases about crimes that took place in New York City. Similarly, the federal court for the Eastern District of New York is restricted to hearing cases about incidents arising in Long Island, Queens, Brooklyn, and Staten Island. So even if a case is within a court's subject matter jurisdiction, the court cannot hear the case unless it also took place in the court's territorial jurisdiction.

Appellate courts also have limited geographic jurisdiction. Each federal Circuit Court of Appeals represents a specific geographic region; the regions are numbered and may include more than one state. The following are the twelve Circuit Courts and the states (and territories) that are in their jurisdiction:

First Circuit: Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Puerto Rico, and Rhode Island;
Second Circuit: Connecticut, New York, and Vermont;
Third Circuit: Delaware, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and the Virgin Islands; Fourth Circuit: Maryland, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, and West Virginia;

---

3. Prosecutors, on the other hand, can only rarely appeal.

4. For example, New York State has a more complicated court structure, but it still follows the basic pattern of other states. In New York, the trial court is called the Supreme Court. The intermediate appellate courts are called the Appellate Division, which is subdivided into four regional Departments; each Department has jurisdiction over different parts of the state. The highest court is called the Court of Appeals. For more details on the organization of the New York State court system, see the diagrams on the inside back cover of the JLM.

5. U.S. Const. art. III, § 2. The § symbol means section. Additional federal statutes also provide original jurisdiction in federal district court for civil cases that concern the "Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States." 28 U.S.C. § 1331 (2008). You can also file a civil complaint in federal district court if you and the other party are citizens of different states and the dispute involves more than $75,000. 28 U.S.C. § 1332 (2008).

6. Handeland v. Comm'n of Internal Revenue, 519 F.2d 327, 329 (9th Cir. 1975) ("The basic jurisdiction of the Tax Court ... is now limited to … Federal income, estate, and gift taxes").

Fifth Circuit: Louisiana, Mississippi, and Texas;[7]
Sixth Circuit: Kentucky, Michigan, Ohio, and Tennessee;
Seventh Circuit: Illinois, Indiana, and Wisconsin;
Eighth Circuit: Arkansas, Iowa, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, North Dakota, and South Dakota;
Ninth Circuit: Alaska, Arizona, California, Guam, Hawaii, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Oregon, Washington, and the Northern Mariana Islands;
Tenth Circuit: Colorado, Kansas, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Utah, and Wyoming;
Eleventh Circuit: Alabama, Florida, and Georgia;
D.C. Circuit: District of Columbia.

The U.S. Supreme Court is the highest appellate court in the federal judicial system and is the final court of appeal for all federal cases. The Court can also hear criminal appeals from the highest appellate state court, but only if those cases involve constitutional questions or issues of federal law.[8] If a case does not have a federal legal issue, then the state Supreme Court is the court of last resort for criminal cases that began in the state court system.

Understanding the position and powers of different courts will help to make sure that you file your case in a court that has the power to hear it, and has the power to grant you the remedy you are asking for. If you know the limited jurisdiction of various courts, you will also know if a court has acted beyond its powers. For example, if you were convicted of assault in the Federal Tax Court, the conviction is invalid because that court is only authorized to hear tax cases; convicting someone of assault would exceed its subject matter jurisdiction. Similarly, if you were convicted of a crime in the Criminal Court of New York City but the offense took place outside the City of New York, then the court would not have jurisdiction over the case.

2. The Basis of Judicial Decision Making: What is "The Law"?

(a) Types of Law: Constitutions, Statutes, and Case Law

Judges make decisions based on law. Your goal as a jailhouse lawyer is to convince the judge that the law supports your arguments. There are three sources of law: (1) constitutions; (2) legislation (also called "statutes" or "statutory law"); and (3) case law (previous decisions made by judges). Judges weigh each source of law in the following order: constitutions are more persuasive (more convincing to the court) than legislation, and legislation is more persuasive than case law. Figure 2 lists the sources of law from most to least persuasive.

U.S. Constitution (strongest authority, most persuasive)
↓
Federal legislation
↓
State constitutions
↓
State legislation
↓
Case law from appellate courts
↓
Case law from trial courts (weakest authority, least persuasive)

Figure 2: Hierarchy of Sources of Law

Part C of this Chapter will describes how to find the relevant law(s) for your case. Before you start researching, though, it is important that you understand how the different kinds of law work together.

A constitution is the supreme law of the jurisdiction. The United States Constitution is the supreme law of the United States. Each state also has a constitution; if a state constitution and the U.S. constitution are in conflict, a court will follow the U.S. constitution.[9]

---

7. Before Oct. 1, 1981, the 5th Circuit included all of the states that are now in the 5th Circuit plus all of the states now in the 11th Circuit.

8. As explained in Part B(1)(a) of this Chapter, federal law includes matters involving the Constitution, a federal statute, or a treaty.

9. U.S. Const. art. VI.

The second type of law, legislation, refers to laws passed by a legislature (by the U.S. Congress for federal law and state legislatures for state law). Legislation is the typical form in which laws are enacted. Finally, case law is the law that results when a court decides a case. The following section provides additional information on case law.

(b) Case Law: How to Use Legal Precedents

In deciding a case, the court is making law in two ways. First, the court determines what the law says about the dispute between the parties directly involved in the case. More broadly, this decision will also affect other people because the court's resolution of the issues in the case forms precedent for other similar cases: the case becomes an example, and sets out a rule that other judges will follow in similar cases. When a court is deciding a case, it will look at how other courts decided similar issues in the past, and will follow those examples (those precedents). Courts rely on earlier, similar cases, to determine how a current case should be resolved. This process is called "stare decisis," which means "already decided." The greater the similarity between the cases, the stronger the precedent. Therefore, it is very important to find out whether issues in your case have already been decided by your court or other courts. These other cases can help you predict how a judge would rule in your case. You can also see what arguments were successful in other cases, so that you can use those arguments to succeed in your case. If you find arguments that hurt your case, you will need to rebut (argue against) them before the court.

If you find precedent cases that support your arguments, you will try to show the court that your case is sufficiently similar to the previous cases so that the conclusions in those cases should be followed in your case. For example, suppose that you have been placed in solitary confinement because you complained to a newspaper reporter about prison conditions. You should look for a precedent case that ruled that the prison cannot punish a prisoner, or put a prisoner in solitary confinement, for similar complaints. If you find such a case, your next step is to convince the court that you were placed in solitary confinement because of your complaints, and not for a different, valid reason. Then, you should use the rulings in the precedent cases to argue that your case should be decided in the same way.

If the precedent case works against you, you will have to convince the court that your case is different enough that the judge should not follow the precedent. This is called "distinguishing" a case.[10] One way you can distinguish your case is to show that there were factual differences between your case and the earlier cases. A superficial (or insignificant) difference like the following will not help your case: "that case involved them, but my case involves me." A useful distinction is one that casts doubt on whether the precedent should be applied in your case. For example, it would be useful to demonstrate that the facts are so different that the cases are not really the same: "in that case the defendant didn't get a speedy trial because he fired his lawyers three times when they were ready to go to trial, but my trial has been delayed over and over through no fault of my own."

It is important for you to note that not all precedent cases are equally persuasive. If the case was decided by a judge on the same court as your judge, or by an appellate court above your court, the precedent case is very strong. In effect, the earlier case defined the law in your particular jurisdiction. A lower court must follow the higher court's precedent, or risk almost certain reversal by the higher court. The court that created the precedent is also unlikely to overrule itself without extremely good reasons. Precedents from the same court or from the appellate court above it are sometimes called "controlling precedents."[11] Additionally, a case decided in the United States Supreme Court is controlling precedent for all other courts. Courts rarely refuse to follow controlling precedents. However, in some instances, older controlling precedents may carry less weight when applied to a modern case. Furthermore, precedents can be overruled (and therefore become useless) if a higher court believes a lower court made an incorrect decision, or if the legislature passes a law that invalidates a court's decision. It is therefore very important to make sure the precedent you have found is still good law (i.e., has not been overruled).

10. Ignoring the case is not a good idea because the other side will likely use it against you in its arguments.

11. Certain state court systems are structured to require trial courts to consider the decisions of all appellate courts within the state as controlling. For example, New York's first level appellate courts are called the Appellate Division. The Appellate Division is divided into four Departments. An appellate decision from any Department is controlling for all trial courts within the state, unless the trial court's own Appellate Division rules otherwise. Stewart v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc., 181 A.D.2d 4, 7, 584 N.Y.S.2d 886, 889 (2d Dept. 1992) (rev'd on other grounds by Stewart v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc., 81 N.Y.2d 203, 613 N.E.2d 518, 597 N.Y.S.2d 612 (N.Y. 1993)); Mountain View Coach Lines, Inc. v. Storms, 102 A.D.2d 663, 664, 476 N.Y.S.2d 918, 919–20 (2d Dept. 1984). But see People v. Salzarulo, 168 Misc. 2d 408, 411, 639 N.Y.S.2d 885, 887 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County 1996) (holding that while other departments are "entitled to have their rulings accorded great respect and weight," trial courts are only bound by the appellate court in their Judicial Department).

Precedents from other jurisdictions are valuable but are not controlling (so your judge is not obligated to follow the precedent case). A case from another jurisdiction sets out the law in that court, but not necessarily for your court. Still, the reasoning in the case might persuade your judge, especially if no court in your jurisdiction has ruled on the legal issue. For instance, if most courts in other states have decided an issue in the same way, those out-of-state decisions can still provide a suggestion for how your state should decide the issue.

Chapter 6 of the JLM, "An Introduction to Legal Documents," will discuss the legal papers you need to provide to a court. These documents are very important; they should be written clearly and persuasively, and should have no errors. Before you write any papers, however, you will need to figure out your most compelling or convincing arguments and find cases to support those arguments. Finding precedent cases is an extremely important part of your research because those cases will reveal which arguments were successful with other courts, and which arguments were not. Cases from higher precedent courts, and cases that are very similar to yours, carry the greatest weight and will help your case the most. You should search for similar cases not only in your jurisdiction but also in other jurisdictions (even though cases from your own jurisdiction will be much more persuasive). You will also need to distinguish any precedent cases that do not support your argument, as discussed above. Finally, you should also consider public policy reasons why a court should rule in your favor. Public policy reasons are arguments that a court should find in your favor because the resulting decision will be good for society as a whole, not just for you.

C. Legal Research: How to Find and Support Legal Arguments

1. Sources for Legal Research

There are three categories of resources in your law library. The first category is "primary sources." Primary sources include the documents that make up the "law": constitutions, legislation, and case law (court decisions). Primary sources also include law created by "delegated authority," such as executive orders, regulations, and the rulings of administrative tribunals. Since legislative bodies such as the U.S. Congress cannot regulate the details of every law, other government bodies (such as administrative agencies) fill in the details of generally worded statutes, usually by creating regulations. Courts base their decisions on all of these primary sources of law.

The second category of resources found in a law library is "secondary sources." These are not themselves law, but books and articles that discuss and comment on the law. This commentary can help you understand the law and help you to find relevant primary sources. Secondary sources include textbooks, treatises, form books, dictionaries, periodical literature such as law journals, and manuals like the JLM. While courts prefer primary sources, sometimes you can use a secondary source, such as a law review article or a treatise, if you cannot find any applicable cases or statutes. These sources can be useful in persuading a court to rule a certain way. However, you should not use a manual such as the JLM as authority for the court—you should use the JLM to help you find law which you can then use to persuade the court.

The third category of resources found in a law library is search books. Search books are library tools that help you to find primary and secondary sources of authority. They include digests of court decisions, citators (such as Shepard's), and annotated statute books. These search tools can help you find cases to make strong arguments, and are discussed in more detail in the remainder of this Chapter.

2. Methods of Legal Research

Your goal in researching a legal question should be to find relevant primary sources. Your prison library will contain research tools that will help you find these primary sources, in addition to the sources themselves. Although you will need to find different sources for each case, the research process will be similar. This process has seven basic steps:

(1) Analyze the problem;
(2) Get an overview of the subject matter;
(3) Find relevant legislation;
(4) Find relevant cases;
(5) Check other sources;

(6) Update your research; and
(7) Cite cases.

If you are familiar with an issue you may be able to skip some steps, although we recommended that you follow all seven steps for each research issue. This way, you can be sure that you have researched your question completely and accurately.

Remember to take careful notes during your research. Your notes will provide a record of your research and will help you to avoid losing information. Careful note-taking is key to successful legal research.

(a) Analyze the Problem

Your case will begin with a story, not a precise series of legal issues. While you will eventually translate the story into legal issues, you must first confirm the facts of your story. If you are preparing to appeal your criminal conviction, you must first review all the evidence from the trial court transcript. If you are filing a civil case (for example, if you are suing the prison for use of excessive force), you should gather as much information as possible about what happened, especially written documentation (medical records, complaints you have filed, etc.). As your research progresses, you will need to look at the facts again to determine which ones are most important.

If you are planning to appeal a lower court decision, remember that the appellate court will accept the facts as found by the lower court. Challenging the factual findings of the lower court is very difficult (see footnote 1 in this Chapter). Therefore, you should research your legal issues as they apply to the facts that the lower court found.

Once you have a firm grasp of the facts of your case, you should examine the legal issues they raise. In doing so, you should start by asking yourself the following three questions:

(1) What are the legal issues that I want to raise?;
(2) Which court has the power to hear my case and rule on the issues I will raise?; and
(3) If the court accepts the merits of my legal arguments and rules in my favor, does the court have the power to award me the relief that I seek (such as award me money, reverse my conviction, or force someone else to take a specific action)?

The last question is whether the court can grant you your requested remedy. Remedies are discussed in detail in Chapter 9 and Chapters 13–17 of the JLM. The remainder of this Chapter deals with the first two questions.

The first question goes to the heart of your case: what legal issues do you want the court to consider? To answer, you should look first at the general areas of law in your case. Is your case about arrest? bail? parole?

In a civil case, you need to find out what you will have to prove in order to show that the defendant is liable for each claim you are asserting. (In civil cases, you are the plaintiff and each person or prison you are suing is a defendant.) You should also be prepared to rebut (argue against) any defenses the defendant makes. You will find much of this information in case law, but statutes may also be important.

If you are appealing a criminal conviction, you should focus on errors made by the trial court. You should review secondary sources covering arrest and trial practices to learn the most common arrest and trial errors. Then you should thoroughly review the lower court proceedings and the judge's decision in your case to find any areas of possible error. Conducting focused research on the laws applicable to your case will help you to figure out whether an error was made. While this Chapter focuses on how to conduct the legal research that is necessary for your appeal, you should also read Chapter 9 of the JLM, "Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence." Chapter 9 contains important information such as how to file your appeal, time limitations you might face, and your right to have a lawyer.

As you are deciding which issues to investigate, it may be helpful to break down the general areas of law into more specific problems. For example, you may start your research in a broad area of law (such as "criminal procedure") and move to a narrower area (such as "searches incident to arrest") and ultimately to a precise question (such as, "can a police officer use a "choke hold" to arrest a suspect and search for drugs?"). It is easier to research a narrow issue and build it into a larger case than to try to research the entire case right away.

Once you have a legal question, you must ask which court has jurisdiction to hear it. As discussed in Part B(1) of this Chapter, there are both territorial (geographic) and subject matter limits on a court's power. You must bring your action or appeal in a court that has jurisdiction to hear it, or your case will be dismissed. Territorial jurisdiction for a trial court will depend on where the alleged incident took place. For an appellate court, territorial jurisdiction will depend on which court made the ruling that you are appealing (see Part B(1) of this Chapter). You should also confirm subject matter jurisdiction before beginning extensive research on the merits of your case. While most cases will not involve complicated jurisdictional issues, you must make sure you are filing your case in a court that has jurisdiction to hear it.

(b) Get an Overview of the Subject Matter

Legal research is hardest at the beginning, since you will need to understand the general area of law that covers your case before you focus on narrower issues. Background reading will help you understand how to apply the current law to your facts. Two particularly helpful sources for general overviews are legal encyclopedias, which provide concise summaries of the law, and treatises, which provide a more detailed analysis of a particular type of law. Prison libraries usually have the two most common legal encyclopedias, American Jurisprudence and Corpus Juris Secundum, as well as copies of treatises such as McCormick on Evidence, Johnson's The Elements of Criminal Due Process, Kerper's Introduction to the Criminal Justice System, and Kerper's Legal Rights of the Convicted. As you read these background materials, be sure to take notes about any cases, legislation, or constitutional provisions that seem like they may help your case. To find a subject in an encyclopedia or treatise, use either the "index" (usually found in the back of a book; if you are talking about more than one index, the plural is "indices") or the "table of contents" (usually found in the beginning of a book). Both types of research are fully described later in this Chapter.

(c) Find Relevant Legislation

After learning the basics of a subject area, you should turn to the main sources of law—legislation and cases. Research can take a long time, so remember to take good notes about the sources you read and to follow the outline this Chapter provides.

You should start your research by reading legislation. Legislation includes constitutions, federal and state statutes, and supporting governmental enactments, such as regulations and administrative decisions. Constitutions and statutes are generally broken down into parts called articles, sections (the § symbol means "section"), and clauses. Regulations issued by state or federal agencies, such as the New York Department of Correctional Services or the U.S. Bureau of Prisons, are an important form of legislation and should be checked during your research. Each form of legislation will now be discussed in greater detail.

(i) Federal Constitution

Constitutions create the structure of government and define individual rights and liberties. They are the most important authorities, and the Constitution of the United States is the supreme law of the United States. Any federal case or statute, or any state constitution, case, or statute that violates the U.S. Constitution is "unconstitutional," which means it is completely invalid. Thus, the Constitution should be your first source to research your case, and you should determine if a constitutional provision applies to your case at the beginning of your research. The first ten amendments to the Constitution (known as the "Bill of Rights"), along with the Fourteenth Amendment, are the most important parts of the Constitution for criminal defendants and prisoners. They contain guarantees of personal rights and liberties. Of particular interest are the First Amendment (freedom of speech), the Fourth Amendment (search and seizure), the Fifth Amendment (grand jury indictment, double jeopardy, self-incrimination, and due process), the Sixth Amendment (jury trials for crimes and procedural rights), and the Eighth Amendment (excessive bail and cruel and unusual punishment). The Fourteenth Amendment is also very important because it prohibits state governments from depriving you of life, liberty, or property without due process of law (i.e., certain legal procedures), and it guarantees the equal protection of law. Similar rights are guaranteed to you from the federal government through the Fifth Amendment. The text of the Constitution can be found in each of the first twenty-eight volumes of the United States Code Annotated ("U.S.C.A.").

(ii) State Constitutions

Each state has its own constitution. The text of the New York State Constitution appears in the first few volumes of McKinney's Consolidated Laws of New York Annotated ("McKinney's"). Each state's constitution is supreme over all other laws of that state, including state statutes passed by the legislature, and cases that state courts decide. But, state constitutions are not supreme over federal law (federal law includes the U.S. Constitution and laws passed by the U.S. Congress). State constitutions apply only to state law. While many provisions of state constitutions are similar to provisions found in the U.S. Constitution, your state constitution may give you more rights than the U.S. Constitution. Thus, you should always consult your state constitution after reviewing the U.S. Constitution.

The U.S. Constitution and most state constitutions are found in "annotated" volumes. Annotated volumes include the text of each constitutional provision as well as summaries of cases that have interpreted them. Following the constitutional text is a section titled "Notes of Decisions," which has the case summaries grouped into separate legal subjects. There is an index to these legal subjects at the beginning of each Notes of Decisions section. You will find the case citation[12] at the end of each summary. Annotated volumes also contain other helpful research tools. These include cross-references, which are citations to legal encyclopedias and relevant treatises in which the same legal subject is discussed, as well as the West "key number system" (discussed in Part C(2)(d) of this Chapter). Finally, annotated volumes often contain summaries of legislative history, which give you information about why a particular law was passed.

To find the relevant constitutional provisions for your case, use the constitutional index found at the back of the final constitutional volume.[13] The methods you use to locate statutes[14] and cases[15] related to your legal question are also applicable to finding relevant constitutional provisions in a constitutional index.

(iii) Federal Statutes

The U.S.C.A. contains the text of the U.S. Constitution and all laws passed by the U.S. Congress. Following the text of many of the legislative provisions is a section titled "Notes of Decisions" which contains summaries of cases that have interpreted each provision. These summaries are not law but will give you an idea of which cases may be helpful to read in detail. The U.S.C.A. also contains other useful research tools such as cross-references to the West key number system (discussed in Part C(2)(d) of this Chapter), which can be found in the section entitled "Library References," located after each legislative provision.

The U.S.C.A. is divided into fifty "titles." Each title brings together in one place all federal laws in a particular subject area. For example, Title 18 brings together all federal laws concerning crimes and criminal procedure, while Title 28 does the same for laws concerning the judiciary and judicial procedure. Each title may contain multiple volumes. There is a paperback index to the entire U.S.C.A. (excluding the constitutional volumes) shelved after the main volumes. Each title also has its own index located in its last volume.

The text of all federal laws also appears in the United States Code ("U.S.C."). The U.S.C. is organized in exactly the same way as the U.S.C.A. It differs from the U.S.C.A. in that each title contains only the law, not the Notes of Decisions. Your prison library may have the U.S.C.A., the U.S.C., both, or neither.

If you are charged with an offense under federal law, a useful starting point is to review the text of the provision under which you are charged. Beneath the text of that provision of law there may be summaries of cases interpreting the text that will allow you to see how courts have applied that provision in other cases.

It is essential that your research be current. Hardcover volumes of sources are not replaced frequently. The most up-to-date information is found in soft cover updates found in a folder inside the back cover of each hardcover volume or next to the volumes on the shelf (called the "pocket part"). Soft cover updates contain information received after publication of the hardcover volume. These pocket parts will reveal any recent amendments (changes) to the statutory provision and any recent cases interpreting that provision. You must check the pocket part for the most current law whenever you use a hardcover volume of any source in your research.[16]

The entire U.S.C. is updated every six years. The most recent volumes are from 2006. The U.S.C.A. is updated more frequently. If your prison library has not updated its collection of hardcover volumes, you should continue to check the pocket parts to make sure that your research is up to date.

You should always check whether statutes have changed before relying on them in a legal paper. When referring to a federal statute, cite to the most recent U.S.C. or U.S.C.A. in your prison library, meaning the 12. Case citations are discussed in Part D of this Chapter.

13. Note that there is a separate index for the constitutional volumes of the U.S.C.A. A larger multi-volume paperback index is published for the rest of the U.S.C.A. volumes that refer to legislation, but that index does not contain any references to the Constitution.

14. Statutes are described in Part C(2)(c)(v) of this Chapter.

15. Cases are described in Part C(2)(d) of this Chapter.

16. When a statute has been amended or repealed within the past twelve months, the pocket part may not have the most recent change. For the most up-to-date information, consult the paperback supplement normally shelved at the end of the volumes you are using. Paperback supplements are updated monthly.

book and pocket parts that you looked at while researching your case. It may not be the same year as the versions cited in the JLM.

(iv) State Statutes

State statutes are organized in a manner similar to federal statutes. Each state organizes its statutes a little differently, but consider New York as an example. The permanent laws of New York are found in McKinney's Consolidated Laws of New York Annotated ("McKinney's").[17] Like the U.S.C.A., McKinney's is organized according to subject matter but divided into "books" rather than "titles," and arranged in alphabetical order. (But, like titles, each book may contain multiple volumes.) Thus, Book 10B brings together all New York laws on the subject of Correction Law (Prison Law), Book 11A does so for Criminal Procedure, and Book 39 for Penal Law (Criminal Law). McKinney's also contains "Notes of Decisions" summarizing cases that have interpreted each provision. When working with state statutes, as with federal statutes, be careful to consult the pocket parts for information on the most current legislation and cases. State statutes are updated frequently. The years listed in JLM citations to state statutes may not correspond to the version in your prison library. As with federal statutes, cite to the version in your prison library.

McKinney's also contains a section called "Practice Commentary" following certain statutory provisions. This commentary is neither a case summary nor actual law, but it reflects the comments of a lawyer who has studied the statute. The commentaries help researchers understand the law. Like general summaries of particular subjects, commentaries can be useful sources of analysis and research information.

If you are charged with an offense under state law, a useful starting point is to review the text of the provision under which you are charged. In New York, crimes are defined in Book 39, "Penal Law." The procedural aspects of criminal prosecution are found in the New York Criminal Procedure Law ("N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law"). The N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law is found in the fifteen volumes that make up McKinney's Book 11A. Do not confuse the N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law with the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules ("N.Y. C.P.L.R."), which explains the rules of the courts in New York.

(v) Finding Statutes—The General Index

You will not always have a particular statute or statutory section to begin your research. If you are starting from scratch and the provision under which you were charged is not helpful, the best place to turn is the "general index" of a source. This is true whether you are researching the U.S. Constitution, federal legislation, or state legislation. The general index is normally found in separate volumes at the end of the source you are using. For example, the general index for New York legislation is found in several paperback volumes shelved after the McKinney's main volumes. The index lists topics in alphabetical order, so you can begin by searching for a word that describes or is related to your problem. These descriptive words can refer to an event (for example, "arrest" or "homicide"), certain persons (for example, "addicts" or "police"), places (for example, "prison" or "hospital"), or things (for example, "motor vehicles" or "weapons"). General descriptive words are divided into subcategories. For example, under "weapons" you will find separate entries for different types of firearms. The general index is designed to lead you to the relevant statutes from a variety of descriptive words. Thus, you need not find the "perfect" word. Keep track of the different possible descriptive words as you research and use the many indices to help you find relevant authorities.

A second method of finding legislation is to check the title or book index. The title or book index is similar to a table of contents, and is found at the beginning of each volume. So, for example, scanning the names of the McKinney's volumes shows three possible criminal titles: "Correction Law," "Penal Law," and "Criminal Procedure Law." If you were researching a procedural issue (say your home was searched pursuant to a search warrant in the middle of the night), the volumes on Criminal Procedure Law (Book 11A) seem like the most useful place to begin. You would then take out a volume of 11A and turn to its "book index." Note that this table appears after the shorter "Table of Contents" section, and is immediately before the statutory provisions. The book index breaks down the general subject of Criminal Procedure into smaller topics and subtopics.

17. If you need to find a law that is no longer in force (for example, if you were convicted under a version of the Penal Law that was later changed), look first to McKinney's for the current version of the law. After the current statute, find the "Historical and Statutory Notes" section, which will tell you what year of the Session Law to look at in order to find the old law. That year's "Session Law" can be found in McKinney's Session Laws of New York. It is unlikely, however, that a prison library will have the Session Laws. If your library does not have the Session Laws, the "Historical and Statutory Notes" section often lists a short summary of changes that have been made to the original law.

Following each subtopic is a list of statutory sections that deal with that subtopic, so you can review the subtopics to find statutory provisions that may be helpful for your research. For example, on the issue of "nighttime searches," the book index in any of the volumes of 11A shows a section on "procedures for securing evidence," and another on "search warrants." If you go to the volume of 11A that contains the legislation on search warrants (Sections 690.05 to 690.55) and turn to the beginning of that section, you will see another listing of even more specific subtopics that includes "search warrants; when executable" (Section 690.30). Turning to that section of the legislation, you will find that, in New York, search warrants may only be used between 6:00 a.m. and 9:00 p.m. unless the warrant provides otherwise. Thus, you have found a law to support your complaint if the warrant used to search your house did not explicitly allow the search to be conducted at night. After the text of Section 690.30, you will find a "Practice Commentaries" and a "Notes of Decisions" section that contains summaries of a number of cases applying this legal rule to various circumstances. Updating your findings by turning to the pocket part of that volume reveals several more recent cases on nighttime searches.

Do not be discouraged if you are having trouble finding a relevant law. Research takes time, and you may need to try the general index, the title or book index, or even a little browsing before you can find relevant legislation. Or, your case may be governed by court cases rather than legislation. Finding case law is the subject of Part C(2)(d) of this Chapter.

(vi) Legislative History

When reading legislation, the "legislative intent," or what the legislators hoped the statute would accomplish, is sometimes unclear. Knowing the legislative intent can often help you to better understand the legislation. It may help you apply the legal rule to the facts of your case. Your exact factual situation may not have been considered by the legislators when they created the law. The best way to find legislative intent is to review the "legislative history" of the legislation. State legislative history is difficult to find and often cannot be found at all. This Subsection will concentrate on how to find the legislative history of federal laws and therefore learn the congressional purpose behind federal legislation.

Legislative history consists of the written record of what Congress considered before passing a law. It includes the text of the bill[18] introduced into the legislature, any later amendments (changes) to the bill, committee and conference reports[19], congressional hearings, and the debates of the House of Representatives and Senate. Committee reports are produced by the Congressional Committees that review legislation. Conference reports are produced by "conferences" set up when the House and Senate pass different versions of the same legislation. Because the conference report is produced jointly by the committees of both the Senate and the House just before the final passage of the legislation, it is perhaps the most important source of legislative intent.

Legislative history is found in many books that are not located in prison libraries. However, one publication, the United States Code Congressional and Administrative News ("U.S.C.C.A.N."), publishes "compiled" legislative histories that bring several sources together in one place. Although the U.S.C.C.A.N. does not provide all legislative history, it is the only source of legislative history you are likely to find in a prison library. There are several volumes of the U.S.C.C.A.N. for each year. To use these books, you must know the year in which the statute was passed. The U.S.C.A. tells you the year the statute was passed at the end of each section. It may also tell you where in the U.S.C.C.A.N. to find the legislative history. Each set of annual U.S.C.C.A.N. volumes also contains a table of "Legislative History." This table lists all the laws passed during that year and identifies certain parts of the legislative history. To find legislative history in U.S.C.C.A.N., look in the index found in the last volume of that year. Search the index for the name or the subject matter of the statute you are researching. The index will list the page number where you can find legislative history for that topic. The volumes of U.S.C.C.A.N. with "Legislative History" on their spines contain the text of the legislative report from the House of Representatives or the Senate.

---

18. A statute is called a "bill" before it is passed by legislators.

19. The House of Representatives and the Senate are subdivided into committees that work in a particular area. For example, the House Judiciary Committee works on legislation that concerns the federal judiciary.

If you review the legislative history of a statute, you will often find a statement by a member of Congress or by a committee that explains what Congress intended it to mean. If this explanation helps your argument, you should quote it in the papers you submit to the court.

Legislative histories of state statutes are hard to find because few states keep a record of the process of enacting a bill. In New York, legislative history is usually found in the New York Legislative Annual, which you are unlikely to find in a prison library. Your library may, however, have McKinney's Session Laws of New York (see footnote 17 of this Chapter), which contains limited legislative history for some bills enacted that year. This legislative history is found at the end of the final Session Law volume for that year.

(vii) Court Rules

Court rules govern the mechanics of how to get a case into court and what procedures are used once the case is before the court. Sometimes these rules are called "rules of practice" or "rules of procedure." The U.S. Supreme Court has created court rules that apply to all cases in federal courts. The rules are published as part of Title 28 of the U.S.C.A. (in the volumes that have the word "rules" on their spines), and include "Notes of Decisions" sections summarizing cases interpreting the rules. Formally, the rules are separated into the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (rules for federal civil cases), the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure (rules for federal criminal cases), and the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure (rules for appellate procedure in all federal cases). There may also be additional local rules enacted by local federal courts. In addition, the Federal Rules of Evidence govern what can be used as evidence in federal cases. The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and the Federal Rules of Evidence are published in separate volumes that are part of Title 28 of the U.S.C.A.

State courts have their own court rules. In New York, for example, the rules are contained in McKinney's New York Rules of Court. This paperback volume contains the rules of court for all New York state courts. It also contains the "local federal rules" for the federal district courts in New York and the Second Circuit Court of Appeals. These rules will tell you which court to file papers in and how the papers should be filed (size, form, etc.). The rules will also tell you the usual court calendar. For example, some courts hear certain kinds of cases only on specific days of the week. The rules will also tell you what information is required for certain kinds of lawsuits. If you are involved in a New York State or federal case, always review the New York Rules of Court. In particular, review the section(s) that apply to the court to which you are sending your papers. This review should be done before filing any legal papers, since you do not want to find out afterwards that the deadline for filing the papers has already passed. If you cannot figure out something in the New York Rules of Court, sometimes a court clerk will tell you the answer over the telephone. The addresses and telephone numbers of the trial courts in New York are contained in Appendix II of the JLM. Call the courthouse and ask for the court clerk's office. Although this does not always work, it might save you time and effort.

(viii) Administrative Codes

Federal and state legislatures often give government agencies the power to create rules or regulations that govern specific subjects. The rules are often referred to as "administrative" rules or regulations. Here are two examples: the federal government gives the Bureau of Prisons power to make specific rules about how federal prisons are run, and a state will often allow the state's Department of Corrections to make specific rules about how state prisons are run.

All federal administrative rules and regulations are published in the Code of Federal Regulations ("C.F.R."). Similarly, rules and regulations from all departments or agencies within a state are also collected together and published. Each state organizes the regulations a little differently, but the publications are often referred to as the administrative "code," "rules," or "regulations." For instance, New York's administrative rules are published in the Official Compilation of Codes, Rules & Regulations of the State of New York ("N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs."), and Texas' codes are published as the Texas Administrative Code ("Tex. Admin. Code"). Your prison library may have a copy of the C.F.R. and/or a copy of your state's administrative code.

If you are in a federal prison, you may want to review a copy of the C.F.R. to find out if any provisions are relevant to your case. The C.F.R. has many volumes, organized alphabetically by subject matter, and a separate general index will likely be shelved after the main volumes. This general index is a good place to begin your research. For instance, you can open the general index and look under "Prisons Bureau," and under this main heading (which will be in bold type), there are several subtopics. You can scan those subtopics, and if any of them appears to be related to your case, the index will refer you to the appropriate title and section of the C.F.R. For example, if you are interested in parole issues, you can look under "Prisons Bureau" for the subtopic on "Parole," which will refer you to "28 C.F.R. 572." This means that the rules on parole in federal prisons are contained in Title 28, Part 572 of the C.F.R. You can then pull out the appropriate volume from the shelf (the title and part information is on the spine of the book), and read through Part 572 to see if there is a "section" that interests you. Note that in the C.F.R., sections are simply subtopics under each Part. For example, you would not refer to "Part 572," but to "section 572.30." The index to the C.F.R. is updated once every year.[20]

If you are in a state prison, you may want to review a copy of your state's administrative code. The administrative code will likely have many volumes, organized by subject. A good place to begin your research is in the general index, which should be in one or more volumes shelved after the code's main volumes. For instance, if you have a question about how much exercise time prisoners are supposed to have, you may want to begin by looking in the general index under "prisons." In New York, the index would then refer you to the section on "correctional institutions." Under "correctional institutions," there are many subtopics. One of these subtopics is "exercise," which refers you to "7 § 304.3" and "7 § 1704.6." If you then look at Title 7, section 1704.6 of the N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs., you will find that in New York, most prisoners have the right to exercise outside of their cells for at least one hour each day. If you are using a state administrative rule or regulation in your legal papers, be sure to check whether the regulation has been recently updated or changed. Updates to state administrative code can usually be found in soft cover volumes that follow the main volumes of the administrative code.

(d) Find Relevant Cases

The bulk of your research time will be spent trying to find cases to support your arguments. In researching cases, you want to search for a case that is similar to your case. To be most useful to you, the case must have very similar facts to your case, have been decided by a court in your jurisdiction, and must not have been reversed on appeal, or overruled by a later case or statute. It also helps if the case is recent.

Sometimes you may hear about the "holding" or the "dicta" of a case. The holding is the major part of the decision in a case and usually controls only those cases with facts like the case the court decided. Dicta is all of the other things that the court says in the opinion ("dicta" is the plural; when you are talking about only one such comment, say "dictum"). For example, the holding of a case may be that you have the right to an attorney in a criminal case, and other comments that the court may make about the general role of an attorney would be dicta. You will rarely find a "perfect" case (one that matches the facts of your case exactly). Thus, your search should be for cases that have strong similarities to your case.

In addition to looking for similar cases that help you, you need to be aware of any similar cases that do not support your position. You must be prepared to explain to the judge why that contrary case should not apply to your situation or why the judge should not follow that case.[21] Remember, your opponent will also be researching your case. You must be ready to respond to your opponent's arguments and to make your own.

A law report is the written record of the decision reached by the court. The decision set out by the court is called an "opinion." Books that contain these reports are known as "reporters." This is where you will find case law to support your arguments.

(i) Federal Reporters

There are three levels of courts in the federal system, and each level has a separate reporter containing the court's decision. The Supreme Court reporter is called the United States Reports (abbreviated as "U.S."). The circuit court (the intermediate federal appellate court) reporter is called the Federal Reporter (abbreviated as "F.," "F.2d," or "F.3d"). The trial court is called a district court and its reporter series is called the Federal Supplement (abbreviated as "F. Supp." or "F. Supp. 2d"). Not all decisions of federal district courts are published. Publication is called "reporting" a decision. In New York, there are four federal district courts: the Northern, Southern, Eastern, and Western Districts. Reported decisions of each of these courts are found in the F. Supp. Each reported case is found and referred to by its "citation." The citation of a case provides the official way of referring to an opinion, and tells you where to find the text of the opinion in the correct reporter. Citations will be explained in Part D of this Chapter, but you may want to read that Part now.

20. To get updates before the new version is printed, you first have to look at the monthly "List of C.F.R. Sections Affected" which will refer you to the appropriate section in the Federal Register. It is highly unlikely that you will have access to these resources in prison.

21. See Part B(b)(2) of this Chapter for more information on precedential cases.

Unfortunately, many opinions that are of interest to prisoners are "unreported" or "unpublished"—that is, they do not appear in the Federal Supplement or Federal Reporter volumes available in prison law libraries. Many cases that do not appear in a reporter are available on computer services like Lexis and Westlaw. Citations like "2000 U.S. App. LEXIS 12345" or "2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12345" are Lexis citations. In the JLM, unpublished cases are generally cited to Lexis ("LEXIS"), and occasionally Westlaw ("WL"), and are always indicated with the text "(unpublished)" after the citation. Sometimes cases have book citations (such as "F.2d") but the opinions are not actually printed; they are just listed in a table. In the JLM, table citations are included, where available, along with a citation to an electronic source.

You should note that a citation like "___ F. Supp. ___, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12345" does not mean the case is unpublished, but that it is merely a recently reported decision that will be available in the Federal Supplement in the near future. You should check to see if this decision has been published in a reporter since the JLM was printed.

The JLM cites published decisions whenever possible. Courts generally prefer that you cite published cases, so you should research the rules of the court in which you are filing before you cite unpublished cases. Some courts may bar citations to unpublished cases altogether; some permit it in certain circumstances where specific requirements are met, such as serving a copy of the case on other parties and on the court. These rules can be obtained for a small fee from the court clerk (the pro se clerk in New York). At the very least, an unpublished case may help you predict the outcome of similar lawsuits. Many legal researchers find unpublished cases helpful because they can shed light on particular applications of settled law; in areas in which the law is unsettled, unpublished cases may provide the only insight into how a court may respond to a certain type of claim.

Recently, the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure were changed, which affects your ability to cite to unpublished cases in certain situations. For federal appellate courts, you can now cite to any unpublished cases that were decided on or after January 1, 2007.[22] You should note that most unpublished cases are not precedential, which means that courts do not have to follow their holdings. They can be cited, however, for their persuasive value. Also, you generally do not need to attach a paper copy of the case to your petition or brief, as long as the case is available on a publicly accessible database.[23] Some jurisdictions have more specific rules. For example, many federal courts allow you to cite to unpublished cases even if they were decided before January 1, 2007.[24]

---

22. Fed. R. App. P. 32.1.

23. The two computer services mentioned above, Lexis and Westlaw, are examples of publicly accessible databases.

24. The 1st, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 10th, and 11th Circuit Courts allow citation to unpublished cases decided before and after Jan. 1, 2007. 1st Cir. R. 32.1.0(a) ("An unpublished judicial opinion, order, judgment or other written disposition of this court may be cited regardless of the date of issuance."); 3rd Cir. I.O.P. 5.7 ("The court by tradition does not cite to its non-precedential opinions as authority. Such opinions are not regarded as precedents that bind the court because they do not circulate to the full court before filing."); 4th Cir. R. 32.1 ("If a party believes … that an unpublished disposition of this Court issued prior to January 1, 2007, has precedential value in relation to a material issue in a case and that there is no published opinion that would serve as well, such disposition may be cited if the requirements of FRAP [Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure] 32.1(b) are met."); 5th Cir. R. 47.5.3 ("Unpublished opinions issued before January 1, 1996, are precedent. Although every opinion believed to have precedential value is published, an unpublished opinion may be cited pursuant to Fed. R. App. P. 32.1(a)."); 6th Cir. R. 28(g) ("Citation of unpublished decisions is permitted. FRAP 32.1(b) applies to all such citations."); 10th Cir. R. 32.1(a) ("The citation of unpublished decisions is permitted to the full extent of the authority found in Fed. R. App. P. 32.1."); 11th Cir. R. 36.2 ("Unpublished opinions are not considered binding precedent, but they may be cited as persuasive authority."). However, the 2nd, 7th, 8th, and 9th Circuit Courts allow citation to unpublished cases only if the cases were decided on or after Jan. 1, 2007. 2nd Cir. R. 23(c)(2) ("Citation to summary orders filed prior to January 1, 2007, is not permitted in this or any other court, except in a subsequent stage of a case in which the summary order has been entered, in a related case, or in any case for purposes of estoppel or res judicata."); 7th Cir. R. 32.1 ("No order of this court issued before January 1, 2007, may be cited except to support a claim of preclusion (res judicata or collateral estoppel) or to establish the law of the case from an earlier appeal in the same proceeding."); 8th Cir. R. 32.1a ("Unpublished opinions issued on or after January 1, 2007, may be cited in accordance with FRAP 32.1."); 9th Cir. R. 36.3 ("Unpublished dispositions and orders of this Court issued on or after January 1, 2007 may be cited to the courts of this circuit in accordance with Fed. R. App. P. 32.1."). When filing in the D.C. Circuit Court, you can cite to its own unpublished opinions dating back to Jan. 1, 2002, but you can only cite to

There are a few ways you can learn about cases that don't appear in the federal reporters. First of all, you can read the JLM. While ordinarily you should never cite a case that you haven't read, for some cases you may have to rely on the descriptions in this book (if, having read the rules of the court in which you are filing your claim, you decide it is acceptable to cite unpublished cases).

The West Group sells a compilation of U.S. Court of Appeals unpublished opinions called the Federal Appendix, last updated (at the time of this printing) in 2009. You could ask your library to subscribe to the Federal Appendix, but your library might not grant your request, as the 182-volume set is very expensive. You can also ask a lawyer or someone else with access to Lexis or Westlaw to print out the case and send it to you. Keep in mind that these electronic sources are expensive and lawyers who assist pro se prisoners may not have the resources to respond to such requests.

Finally, some federal courts will send prisoners copies of unreported cases, upon request and for a fee; others will not. Send your request to the clerk of the court in which the case was decided. You could also try writing a letter to the chambers of the judge who wrote the opinion and request a copy. In both instances, be sure you include the case name, the docket number (for example, "No. 12 345 67"), the court, and the date of the decision you are requesting. All of this information should be available in the JLM citation. If you can tell which decision you are looking for (e.g., the summary judgment motion, the motion to dismiss, or the motion to set aside the jury verdict, etc.), indicate that as well.[25]

Citations will be discussed further in Part D of this chapter. However, here is a short example of a citation: Mukmuk v. Comm'r, 369 F. Supp. 245 (S.D.N.Y. 1974). The italicized portions of the citation are the parties involved in the case. (Comm'r is the accepted abbreviation for "Commissioner.") The first number (369) is the volume number of the reporter, which appears on the spine of the book. "F. Supp." identifies the Federal Supplement reporter. The second number (245) is the page in the 369th volume of the Federal Supplement where the case of Mukmuk v. Comm'r begins (the 245th page). The information in parentheses refers to the court in which the case was decided (S.D.N.Y. is the accepted abbreviation for the Southern District Court of New York) and the year in which the case was decided (1974). Thus, if you need to refer to this case in your legal papers, you should use the citation listed above. In your research, you will come across many similar citations, or variations of such citations. You can use a citation to find the text of the case by following the procedure explained in this paragraph. A fuller explanation of citations is provided in Part D and Appendix A of this Chapter.

The second level of courts in the federal system is called the circuit court of appeals.[26] There are twelve such circuits in the United States.[27] Circuit courts are the intermediate appellate courts in the federal system. Reports of all circuit court decisions are found in the Federal Reporter (abbreviated as "F.", "F.2d" or "F.3d"). The Federal Reporter has three series of reporters (so the volume numbers do not get too high within each series) with volumes individually numbered within each series. Each circuit court of appeals covers the appeals from several federal district courts. For example, cases from the four New York federal district courts plus the district courts of Connecticut and Vermont are appealed to the Second Circuit Court of Appeals (abbreviated "2d Cir."). Thus the case United States v. Bush, 47 F.3d 511 (2d Cir. 1995) is a 1995 case from the Second Circuit Court of Appeals found on page 511 of volume 47 of the Federal Reporter (Third Series).

The third and highest level of the federal court system is the United States Supreme Court. There is only one U.S. Supreme Court. In addition to hearing cases from lower federal courts, the Supreme Court can also hear certain cases from state high courts. All U.S. Supreme Court decisions are reported in the "official" reporter, United States Reports (abbreviated as "U.S."). Decisions of the Supreme Court are also reported in two "unofficial" reporters, the Supreme Court Reporter (abbreviated as "S. Ct.") and the United States unpublished opinions from another circuit court decided prior to Jan. 1, 2007 if that particular court's rules allow it. D.C. Cir. R. 32.1 ("All unpublished orders or judgments of this court, including explanatory memoranda (but not including sealed dispositions), entered on or after January 1, 2002, may be cited as precedent … [U]npublished dispositions of other courts of appeals entered before January 1, 2007, may be cited only under the circumstances and for the purposes permitted by the court issuing the disposition …").

---

25. You can sometimes tell what motion the decision relates to by the parenthetical explanation that follows the citation. For example, if a case citation has a parenthetical explanation that begins with "(granting motion to dismiss where …)," the decision you are looking for decided the motion to dismiss.

26. When a losing party is not satisfied with the outcome of a trial court case, it can challenge the decision by bringing the case before the circuit court for review.

27. See Part B of this Chapter for a discussion of the Circuit Courts of Appeals.

Supreme Court Reports, Lawyers' Edition (abbreviated as "L. Ed." or "L. Ed. 2d").[28] The text of the opinions published in any of the three Supreme Court reporters is identical, although the citations are different. However, if you are citing a case in a legal paper, use the United States Reports ("U.S.") citation, if available. Thus, the citation for the famous case that requires the police to inform those in custody of their rights is Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436 (1966). As only Supreme Court cases are reported in the reporter "U.S.," it is not necessary to list the court name in the citation.

Prison libraries usually have copies of only the Supreme Court Reporter. However, you can find the "U.S." citation at the top of each case in the Supreme Court Reporter listed above the case name. The "S. Ct." version of the case also provides cross-references throughout the opinion to the corresponding "U.S." pages. This is useful if you are quoting text from the decision, since you can read the decision in the "S. Ct." reporter but cite the correct page in the "U.S." reporter. We have tried to give the citations to all three of the Supreme Court reporters in the JLM.

(ii) State Reporters

State reporters are organized in the same way as federal reporters. New York has three levels of courts and three official state reporters. New York Miscellaneous Reports (abbreviated as "Misc." or "Misc. 2d") reports the decisions of state trial courts. Appellate Division Reports (abbreviated as "A.D." or "A.D.2d") reports the decisions of New York's intermediate appellate courts. New York Reports (abbreviated as "N.Y." or "N.Y.2d") and the North Eastern Reporter (abbreviated as "N.E." or "N.E.2d") both report decisions rendered by New York's highest court, the New York Court of Appeals.

Important appellate decisions of the New York courts are also reported in an unofficial reporter called the New York Supplement (abbreviated as "N.Y.S." or "N.Y.S.2d"). This is the only New York reporter in most New York prison libraries. The text of opinions published in the New York Supplement is identical to that published in the official reporters. However, if possible, citations to the official reporter should be used in papers submitted to New York state courts. The N.Y.S. or N.Y.S.2d version of the case provides the official citation at the beginning of each opinion (for example, it will give the N.Y.2d citation). Every state has its own official reporter. Check your prison library to find the official reporter of your state.

(iii) Reporters as Research Tools

All reporters are useful as research tools, but those published by West Publishing Company ("West") are the most useful. West reporters begin each case by providing "headnotes." Headnotes are separate paragraphs that summarize each of the major issues decided in the case. Each headnote is numbered and labeled with a "key number" that identifies the legal issue that was discussed. As the next Subsection of this Chapter will explain, these key numbers allow you to find other cases that deal with the same issue.

Although they are useful research tools, headnotes are not official parts of the decision and therefore should not be quoted or discussed in legal papers. Reading only the headnotes may give you a mistaken understanding of the decision. If the headnote discusses a topic that might be relevant to your case, you should find and read the section of the decision on which the headnote is based. If this section of the decision is helpful, that part of the decision can be used in your legal papers. To find the part of the decision that supports a particular headnote, refer to the paragraph(s) in the decision labeled with the same number as the headnote. Because West publishes almost all of the major reporters, headnotes will be present in most case reports that you read. Ultimately, however, you must read the entire case to determine if the case will be truly useful to you.

(iv) Digests and the "Key Number System"

You may have found helpful cases while doing your background reading (for example, in treatises), or while researching relevant constitutional or statutory references (in the "Notes of Decisions" section of the applicable source). If you have not found any useful cases (and even if you have), the next step is to look at a "digest." Your prison library probably has three digests. The United States Supreme Court Digest is the digest used to find relevant Supreme Court cases. For relevant cases from other federal courts, use the

28. One advantage of the Lawyers' Edition is that for selected cases, not only is the text of the case provided but attorneys' briefs submitted to the Court are also summarized. This reporter also includes essays written by its editorial staff on significant issues raised by selected cases. These essays provide a good review of the case law on those issues.

Federal Practice Digest. Your prison library should also have a state digest, which will help you find relevant cases from your state. In New York, that digest will be the New York Digest.

Digests summarize case law using the West headnotes discussed above. Whereas cases have individual headnotes for each issue discussed in the case, the digests take headnotes from all the reported cases, and group them together by subject matter. These subject areas, known as the "Digest Topics," are arranged alphabetically. You can use digests by finding the broad subject area relating to your issue. Examples of Digest Topics include arrest, bail, convicts, and criminal law. Within each Digest Topic, there will likely be many subtopics, each of which is assigned a "key number." You will know you are looking at the key number because it will have a little picture of a key in front of it. Once you find the Digest Topic and key number of a particular legal point, you can use that number to find cases on that legal point in any jurisdiction. The key numbers are the same for all digests. For example, Criminal Law (110) key number 37(1)[29] can be used to find cases on the subject of entrapment in New York state courts (by looking in the New York Digest), in federal courts (by looking in the Federal Practice Digest), and the U.S. Supreme Court (by looking in the U.S. Supreme Court Digest), or cases from any state court (by looking in the digest of that state). For this reason, finding a key number for a particular issue in your case can greatly advance your research.

Under each key number, a digest will list "headnotes," i.e., cases and their citations that address the topic of the key number. Depending on how often a particular issue is litigated, there may be no headnotes, or there may be hundreds of headnotes under each key number. Headnotes are listed first by the level of the court that decided the case, next in alphabetical order by jurisdiction, and finally in reverse chronological order (by date, beginning with the most recent) within each jurisdiction. Each headnote also provides a citation to the relevant case.

Digests do not provide comments on cases; they simply contain organized lists of headnotes (cases by topic). It is up to you to decide whether a particular case might be applicable to your legal problems. Once you decide that a headnote discusses an issue that might be helpful, you should write down the citation given in the headnote and use that citation to find the text of the case in a reporter. You can decide whether the headnote has pointed you to a useful case only after you have actually read that case. Digests are only research guides; you may find that a headnote points you to a helpful case, but you also may find that a promising headnote leads you to an unhelpful case.

Note that digests are usually published in several series, with each series limited to a certain time period. For example, the fourth series of the New York Digest only contains headnotes for cases decided from 1978 to the present; for earlier cases, you would need to consult an earlier series of this digest. You must be aware of the period covered by the digest to maximize your research effort. Each digest will explain its coverage in its preface, found at the beginning of each volume. As with all other sources, do not forget to update by referring to the pocket part[30] of each hardcover volume you consult.

(v) Finding Key Numbers

There are three basic ways to find relevant key numbers. The first and easiest way is if you have already found a useful case. Obtain the case from a reporter published by West. Next, review the headnotes found at the beginning of the case. One or more of the headnotes will concern the issue(s) with which you are interested. At the beginning of the headnotes there will be a number preceded by the picture of a key. This is the "key number." As described earlier, this key number can be used to find other cases that address the same issue by looking in the digests under that key number.

The two other ways of obtaining key numbers are similar to the way you would find relevant legislation. As described earlier, one of these ways is the "book index" method. This method requires looking in a digest's book index (located at the front of the volume), and scanning the alphabetical list of subject areas (digest topics) and the breakdown of each subject area into smaller topics and even smaller subtopics. For example, suppose that you were looking for federal cases on whether a search pursuant to a search warrant could be executed at night. You would start by pulling out the volume that has "Search and Seizure" on the spine of the book (volumes 84 and 85 in the Federal Practice Digest (Fourth Series)). At the beginning of the section on Searches and Seizures is an index that breaks down the large topic of Searches and Seizures into smaller

29. "110" refers to the section containing Criminal Law, "37" refers to the key number for entrapment, and "(1)" refers to the subsection of "entrapment" entitled "in general." This is where you will find the cases most often cited for the concept of entrapment.

30. For a discussion on pocket parts see Part C(2)(c)(iii) of this Chapter.

and more specific legal areas. Part III refers to "Execution and Return of Warrants." By looking at the subtopics under Part III, you will find an entry for "Time of Execution" and an even more specific entry for "nighttime execution." This last entry of "nighttime execution" corresponds to the key number 146 in the digest topic "Searches and Seizures." You should then write down all possible key numbers (here, Search and Seizure 146), and look up each key number and review a few headnotes under the numbers. In this way you will find useful key numbers and potentially helpful cases.

The final way of finding key numbers is by using the general index to the digests. This index is called the Descriptive Word Index ("DWI") and contains several volumes. The DWI lists words in their common, everyday usage. It then tells you what digest topic in the main part of the digest you should look at to find cases and headnotes related to that word. Often, the DWI will give you the key number under which to look.

For example, suppose that you wanted to know whether you were entitled to be represented by a lawyer in prison disciplinary proceedings. A reasonable place to start looking would be the digest topic "Prisons" since that is where the disciplinary proceeding is to occur. In the DWI of the New York Digest (Fourth Series), there is a subheading under "Prisons" called "Proceedings" under which you will see a section titled "Discipline and Grievance," which includes "counsel and counsel substitutes." Next to "counsel and counsel substitutes" is the key number Prisons 13(9).

You would then look at the digest volume containing the digest topic "Prisons" and turn within that volume to key number 13. You will see that the specific issue of whether you are entitled to be represented by counsel in prison disciplinary proceedings is discussed as the ninth heading under key number 13, or "13(9)." As indicated earlier, you should read the descriptions of the cases, write down the citations of possibly useful cases, and then read these cases. To find similar cases in another jurisdiction, look up "Prisons 13(9)" in the digest for that jurisdiction.

A more specialized digest index is the Words and Phrases Index, which is found in a separate volume of each digest series. This index gives citations of cases that define a word or phrase. For example, if you want to know in detail what is meant by the term "detention," look it up in this index. The index will give you the citations of cases that have defined that term. Although the Words and Phrases Index will not give you a key number, you can go to the cases it cites to obtain relevant key numbers.

D. Citation

Whenever you mention cases, statutes, regulations, etc. in your legal writing, these materials must be referenced in a proper legal form known as a "citation." Legal citations allow a reader to easily find the sources that you use in your legal writings.

There are many rules about citation style, and the major ones are detailed below. Also, Appendix A at the end of this Chapter analyzes the most common types of citations and will help you understand basic citation style. Detailed rules for every imaginable legal citation are contained in A Uniform System of Citation (commonly called "The Bluebook"), a publication that your prison library may have. Proper legal citation of cases, constitutions, and statutes should not be ignored, as it not only helps your readers find the materials that you are discussing, but also gives the judge a good first impression of your research.

1. Citing Cases

A case citation includes information about the parties involved in the case, the reporter in which the case can be found, the court that decided the case, and the date of decision. An example of a complete case citation is: People v. Delaremore, 212 A.D.2d 804 (N.Y. App. Div. 1995). The "case name" (a listing of the names of the parties on either side) comes first and is underlined or italicized: People v. Delaremore or People v. Delaremore. Next comes the information that tells you where to find the case, in this order: the volume number of the reporter, the abbreviation of the reporter, and the page number where the case starts (in this example, 212 A.D.2d 804). The final portion of the citation is enclosed in parentheses. It includes the court that decided the case and the year the decision was released (here, (N.Y. App. Div. 1995)). The court name "N.Y. App. Div." stands for the New York Supreme Court, Appellate Division. Note that in New York, the intermediate level of appellate court (the Appellate Division) is split into four separate "Departments." If you are citing an Appellate Division case to a New York state court, you may also want to include which Department the decision came from. So in the example above, the court name could be expanded to "N.Y. App. Div. 2d Dept." in order to show that the decision came from the Second Department. If the reporter that you are using publishes the decisions of only one state (for example, N.Y.S.2d), it is not necessary to repeat the state in the court name. For example, a correct citation would be: People v. Aponte, 759 N.Y.S.2d 486

(App. Div. 1995), not "(N.Y. App. Div. 1995)." If the reporter publishes the decisions of only one court (for example, S. Ct.), it is not necessary to list that court in the citation. Appendix A at the end of this Chapter summarizes the major citation styles.

You will sometimes want to refer to a particular page within the written opinion. If you are citing part of a case for the first time, put a comma after the number of the first page of the case and then put the specific page number (called a "pin cite"). For example, Allen v. Hardy, 478 U.S. 255, 259 (1986) indicates you are specifically referring to page 259 of the case Allen v. Hardy, which starts on page 255. If you have already given a citation to that particular case earlier in the paper, you can use a short form (abbreviated citation). The basic rule for a short form is to write the name of the first party in the case (for example, Allen), then the volume number of the reporter and the reporter abbreviation, and then the word "at," followed by the page number of what you want to cite (478 U.S. at 259). So, the short form citation of this case would be: Allen, 478 U.S. at 259. If the first party is a governmental party, use the other party's name. Thus, United States v. Rosario would be shortened to Rosario and never to United States.

Normally, you cite to the decision of the highest court that considered a case. For example, if the case was ultimately decided by the New York Court of Appeals (the highest state court in New York), it is not necessary to cite to the decisions of the lower New York courts that heard the same case. There may be times, however, that you wish to cite to the lower court decision. It would be appropriate to cite a lower court decision where the lower court considered an issue that a later court upheld without comment. However, if the case has been appealed to a higher court, this should be reflected in the citation. For example, Schmuck v. United States, 840 F.2d 384 (7th Cir. 1988), aff'd, 489 U.S. 705 (1989). This citation shows that the U.S. Supreme Court "affirmed," or upheld, the decision of the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals in the Schmuck case. If a decision has been reversed on appeal but the part of the decision that helps you was not reversed, the citation should reflect this—for example, People v. Perkins, 531 N.E.2d 141 (Ill. App. Ct. 5th Dist. 1988), rev'd on other grounds sub nom. Illinois v. Perkins, 496 U.S. 292 (1990). This citation tells you that the Supreme Court decided the Perkins appeal two years after the Fifth District of the Illinois Appellate Court made its decision, and reversed that decision for a reason unrelated to the part of the case that helps you. The citation also shows that the Supreme Court considered the case under a different name than the Fifth District of the Illinois Appellate Court (that is what "sub nom." means).

When you cite a federal appellate court decision, you also should show whether the Supreme Court has refused to review the decision. For example, United States v. Fisher, 895 F.2d 208 (5th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 834 (1989). "Cert." stands for "writ of certiorari," which is what the Supreme Court issues when it decides to review a lower court decision. "Cert. denied" means that a party asked the Supreme Court to review the case but the Supreme Court refused to issue certiorari and thus refused to review the case. The Supreme Court refuses to review an overwhelming majority of the cases that come before it for certiorari.

You must check each case you cite to find out whether it was appealed and whether it was reversed or affirmed on appeal. Read Part E(2)(a) of this Chapter for information of how to update a case. If the entire case was reversed, you should not mention the lower court's decision in your legal papers because it is no longer good law.

2. Citing Statutes

Citations for statutes are similar to other legal citations. The citation shows: (1) the "volume" number of the book the statute is in (the "title" or "book" number); (2) the statutory source in which you found the statute (for example, the United States Code Annotated is cited as U.S.C.A.); (3) the section of the law to which you are referring; and (4) the date of publication of the volume in which you found the statute. An example is 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 (1994). Here, "42" is the title, "U.S.C.A." is the abbreviation for United States Code Annotated, "§" means section, "1983" means the section 1983 within title 42, and "1994" is the year the volume you looked at was published. If the statute was changed recently, you must cite to the changed version of the statute. You can determine if a statute has been changed by looking at the supplement or "pocket part" at the back of the hardcover volume. For instance, if section 1983 had been amended in 1995, you would cite the amended section like this: 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 (Supp. 1995). If you want to refer to the entire statute and only part of it has been amended, you would cite it like this: 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 (1994 & Supp. 1995).

Citations for federal administrative regulations are very similar to citations for statutes. The citation includes (1) the title number of the regulation; (2) the source in which you found the regulation (the Code of Federal Regulations is cited as C.F.R.); (3) the specific section cited; and (4) the date of the code edition. For example, 28 C.F.R. § 544.70 (2003) refers to section 544.70 of Title 28 of the C.F.R. of the volume published in 2003. This section discusses the Federal Bureau of Prisons' literacy program.

The format for citations to state administrative codes is slightly different in each state, but generally contains the same information as citations to statutes or federal regulations. Generally, the citation includes (1) the source that contains the state's administrative code (for example, the Official Compilation of Codes, Rules & Regulations of the State of New York, cited as N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs.); (2) the title or book number of the regulation (for example, in New York, Title 7 contains the rules and regulations of the Department of Corrections); (3) the specific section of the regulation to which you are referring; and (4) the publishing date of the volume in which you found the regulation. For example, N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7 § 1704.6 (2003) is the correct citation for Title 7, section 1704.6 of the Codes, Rules, and Regulations of the State of New York. Although the format varies slightly in each state, you may be able to find the correct citation format for your state's administrative code by looking in the first few pages of any volume of the code. Depending on the publisher of your state's code, these pages may include information that gives the correct, official citation format.

Any citation in a footnote should be followed by a period.

E. Important Next Steps

1. Check Other Sources

A final way to research an issue is to read the JLM. If there is a chapter that discusses the issue or topic that you are interested in, read the cases cited in that chapter. If you want additional cases in a subject area, you can obtain the key numbers by looking at the case headnotes in the relevant reporter. The key numbers will allow you to find additional cases in the digests.

To find out more about a relevant case and its subject matter, you can look up that case in the "Table of Cases" in a relevant treatise. If the case is listed, read what the treatise author has to say about the case and the issues it discusses. While not binding on courts, treatise commentary can be helpful to a researcher and can be used to support your legal arguments.

Although legislation and case law will be the major sources of support for your legal arguments, other sources in your library might also be useful. Another review of general treatises may be helpful in explaining some of the cases you found, and may also provide leads for other potential arguments. You should also read legal magazines and newspapers. Your prison library will likely have the local legal newspaper, such as the New York Law Journal. Any other type of legal aid found in your library should also be consulted. Practice commentaries, loose-leaf services, manuals, form books, textbooks, and legal dictionaries are all useful sources that your law library may have.

2. Update Your Research

It is extremely important that your research be up-to-date. You should make sure that any authority you use is current law. To ensure that statutes are current, consult the latest code editions and supplements. As described in Part C(2)(c)(iii) of this Chapter, a hardcover volume will likely have soft cover updates in the pocket located at the back of the volume. It may also have additional updates shelved after the main volumes. Additionally, you must make sure that any case you use has not been overturned or overruled. Finally, you must confirm that the issue you have been researching has not been reinterpreted or modified by recent cases or statutes. You normally check to make sure that cases and the issues decided in them are up-to-date with a research tool called Shepard's Citations ("Shepard's").

(a) Shepard's

Shepard's is a research tool that provides a listing of all cases that have cited the case you are checking. Using this tool is called "Shepardizing." Shepard's serves two purposes: (1) it allows you to update your research and confirm that the case you wish to rely upon has not been affected by later legal developments (overruled, criticized, etc.), and (2) it points you to more cases that might be helpful.

There is a separate series of Shepard's volumes for each level of federal courts. Thus, there is a separate series for the Federal Supplement, the Federal Reporter, and the United States Reports (U.S.C.). Shepard's volumes are also available for state reporters. The basic function of Shepard's is to list every reported case that discusses a particular case. You use it to check for updates to cases that you want to cite. Updating means checking to see if the case is still good law that you can rely on. Thus, if Miranda v. Arizona is discussed in ten other cases, Shepard's will identify these ten cases. Shepard's will list a case that overrules the case you wish to update, as well as other cases that discuss, explain, or even mention the case you are updating. This will allow you to find out what other courts have said about the case you are updating and will also show you how other courts have handled the issues raised by that case.

Cases are listed in Shepard's only by citation, not by name. To "Shepardize" a case, first find the Shepard's series that matches the reporter in which your case is found. The corresponding case reporter name is printed on the binding of each Shepard's volume. For example, if the case you are updating is reported in "F.2d," find the Shepard's volumes that have "Federal Reporter (Second Series)" printed on the binding. The binding will also show what year(s) or volume(s) of the reporter are covered by that Shepard's volume. Next, find the volume number in the citation of the case you are updating. (The volume is the first number in the citation.) Open the Shepard's volume that includes the volume of the reporter, then search for that volume number in the upper right hand corner of the page. Once you've found the page where the citations for that volume number begin, look down the columns of citations listed until you find the starting page number of the case you are updating. This page number will be printed in large bold type. Beneath the bold page number are citations to cases that have mentioned the case you are updating. Citations in Shepard's are provided alphabetically by jurisdiction and in reverse chronological order (most recent to oldest) within each jurisdiction. The citations are not given in full. They contain only the volume number, the reporter, and the page number that refers to the case you are updating. (Note that the page number provided is not the first page of the cited case, but rather the page where the case you have Shepardized is mentioned.)

A list of abbreviations appears at the front of each Shepard's volume to help you decode and understand the reporter abbreviations. There are often letters in front of the listed citations. The letters are a code that tells you how the later cases treated the case you are Shepardizing. They tell you whether a later court overruled, criticized, or followed the case. The code letters are explained in a table on the inside of the front cover of each Shepard's volume. The most important symbols to look for are "o" which indicates the case you are researching has been overruled, "r" which indicates that the case you are researching has been reversed, and "d" which indicates that the case you are researching has been distinguished (that is, another court has created an exception to the case you are researching). These are "negative treatments" of the case. Negative treatment makes a case less reliable. If the case you are researching has been overruled or reversed, then it is no longer useful to you. If it has been distinguished, then you must find out why it was distinguished and then make arguments why your situation should not be distinguished from the case you are Shepardizing. Sometimes a court reverses, overrules, or distinguishes only a part of a previous case rather than the entire opinion. Therefore, it is important to determine whether the specific issue of interest to you has been reversed, overruled, or distinguished. Even if the court overruled or reversed the case based on a different issue, if you use this case in your legal documents, your case citation should indicate that the case was reversed on other grounds so the court knows you have done your research.

To find the most recent cases that have mentioned the case you are updating, check the hardcover supplements, if any. Next, check the current paperback supplements. You should check the supplements just as you would the main volume, because they are organized in the same way. There are also volumes of Shepard's citations for statutes and federal rules, which list the judicial opinions that cite particular statutory provisions or federal rules. These are used to update statutes and rules in the same manner as the series for updating case law.

Shepardizing is used not only to update cases but also as a means to find other helpful cases. If you already have one case that is useful, Shepardizing that case will often lead you to other cases that will be helpful. The disadvantage of this method of finding cases is that Shepard's does not contain headnotes. Thus, you must read the cited case to learn whether it is helpful. However, you can shorten your search if you know the relevant headnote number from the case you are updating. You can use this headnote number to limit the cases you need to review to those containing the same number. In some citations there is a small superscript number between the reporter abbreviation and the page number; this shows that the cited case discusses the issue described in that headnote (superscript is text written small and high like this word: superscript). If you are interested in the issue discussed in headnote number 2 of the case you are updating, scan the list of citations for those that have a superscripted "2" in the citation. This will limit your review of cases to those that discuss the issue corresponding to headnote number 2 of the case you are updating. However, not all citations will list which headnotes are discussed. If you find a citation that does not list which headnotes are discussed, then you cannot tell whether that case will be useful until you read it.

Regardless of whether you use Shepard's to find cases, you must always use it to ensure the cases you are citing were not overruled, reversed, or distinguished.

F. Summary

Research is a key step in developing and presenting a legal argument. This Chapter has suggested an outline for the development of your legal arguments:

(1) Analyze the problem: separate your case into small, separate issues. This will help you get started and provide manageable issues for you to research;
(2) Get an overview of the subject area: review treatises and legal encyclopedias to obtain an introduction to the details of particular areas of law;
(3) Find relevant legislation: consult the annotated codes to find U.S. and state constitutional provisions, federal statutes, state statutes, and legislative history;
(4) Find relevant cases: read cases cited in annotated codes such as U.S.C.A. and McKinney's. Find additional cases through digests, key numbers, indices, words and phrases tables, and Shepard's;
(5) Check other sources: review treatises, legal periodicals, practice commentaries, manuals, form books, texts, and legal dictionaries for additional commentary;
(6) Update your research: make certain that you rely on the most up-to-date editions and supplements, and that you Shepardize your case law and legislation; and
(7) Complete your citations: properly cite the authorities upon which you rely.

Two preliminary issues that you will want to confirm before beginning your research are: (1) which court has jurisdiction to hear your case (both territorial and subject matter jurisdiction), and (2) if you are appealing a conviction, whether the prosecutor followed proper court rules to get your case to court. The following are the sources most often used in prison law libraries to find the law.

For federal law:

(1) U.S.C.A. (for statutes and the annotations that follow the statutory text); and
(2) Modern Federal Practice Digest (for federal cases on specific topics).

The major reporters you will be looking to for reported federal cases will be: the Federal Supplement, cited as __ F. Supp. __, __ F. Supp. 2d __, and __ F. Supp. 3d __ (the 3d series will contain the most recent cases), for selected cases from all federal district courts; the Federal Reporter, cited as __ F. __, __ F.3d __, and __ F.3d __ (the 3d series will contain the most recent cases), for cases from all federal circuit courts of appeals; and the Supreme Court Reporter, cited as __ S. Ct. __, for cases from the U.S. Supreme Court. In case citations the reporter volume number goes before the reporter name, and the page number on which the case begins goes after.

For New York law:

(1) McKinney's (for statutes and for the case annotations that follow the statutory text); and
(2) New York Digest (for New York cases on specific topics).

The major reporter you will be looking to for reported New York cases will be the New York Supplement (Second Series). It is cited as __ N.Y.S.2d __.

G. Other Ways to Learn About Legal Research

Many organizations have developed materials to help non-lawyers understand the law. For example, West Publishing Company publishes The Guide to American Law, Everyone's Legal Encyclopedia, which is directed toward non-lawyers. Additionally, a detailed explanation of how to conduct legal research is found in M. Cohen's Legal Research in a Nutshell. Finally, the law is full of technical terms. Black's Law Dictionary (9th ed. 2009) is particularly helpful in explaining legal terms.

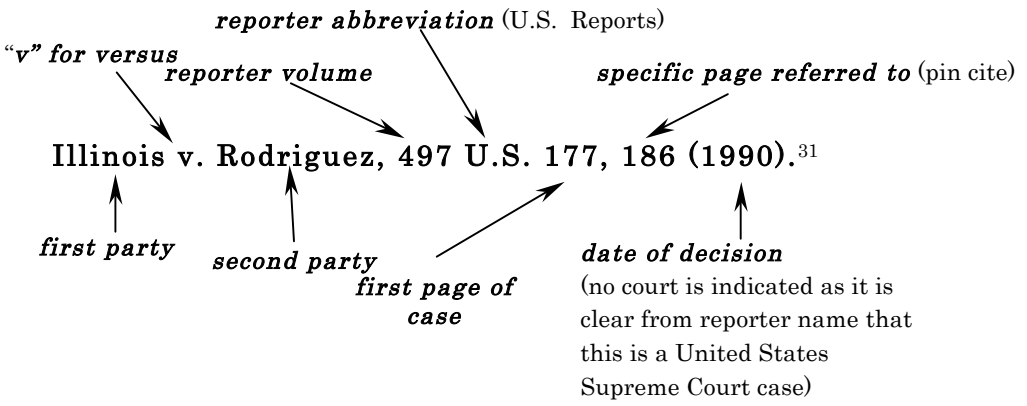
H. Conclusion

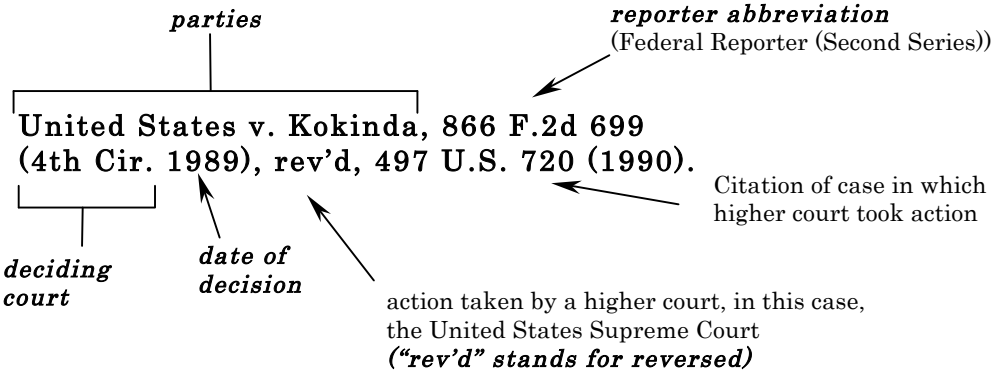
Legal research is an important task for jailhouse lawyers because it provides you with the legal rules and principles you will need to argue your case effectively. The process begins with identifying the appropriate court (state versus federal, trial versus appellate, one with proper jurisdiction). The next step involves breaking down the issues in your specific case—the factual story—to see what legal sources you can use to make your argument. You should start with finding the legislation or administrative rules that apply, which can help you identify where your rights have been violated or how a court got it wrong. It will then be important to find precedents that have facts similar to your case and support your position. Finally, after you gather different legal sources, you must make sure these sources are still valid and up-to-date (i.e., Shephardize) and cite them properly.

APPENDIX A

CITATION EXAMPLES OF COMMON AUTHORITIES

A-1. Federal Cases

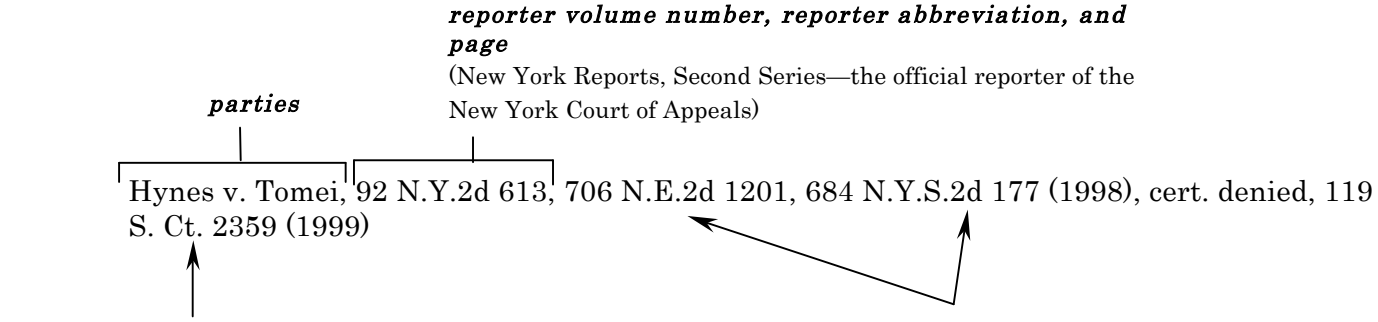




Shortform (abbreviated) citation for the above case after it has been cited in full earlier in your legal paper:

31. You will notice that the JLM often cites to many different reporters for each case. Often, cases are published in more than one reporter; these "extra" citations are "parallel citations." If possible, you should always cite to an official reporter (for example, "U.S.," or "F.2d."). If you do not have the official reporter available at your prison library, just make sure that your citation to an unofficial reporter is accurate.

A-2. State Cases

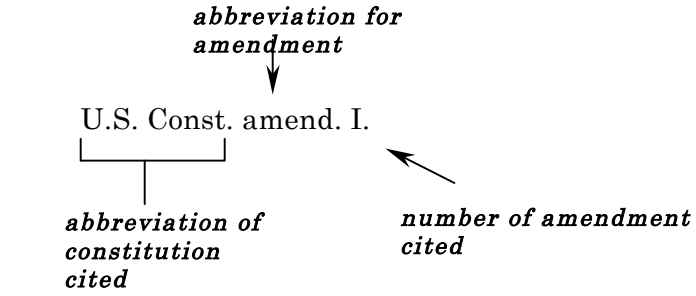


Action taken by a higher court, in this case, the United States Supreme Court. ("cert. denied" indicates that the U.S. Supreme Court denied the petition for certiorari). The reporter "S. Ct." is an unofficial reporter for the U.S. Supreme Court. This is a recent case—often cases are available in the Supreme Court Reports ("S. Ct.") before they are printed in the United States Reports ("U.S."). The next number is the citation of the case in which the Supreme Court took action.

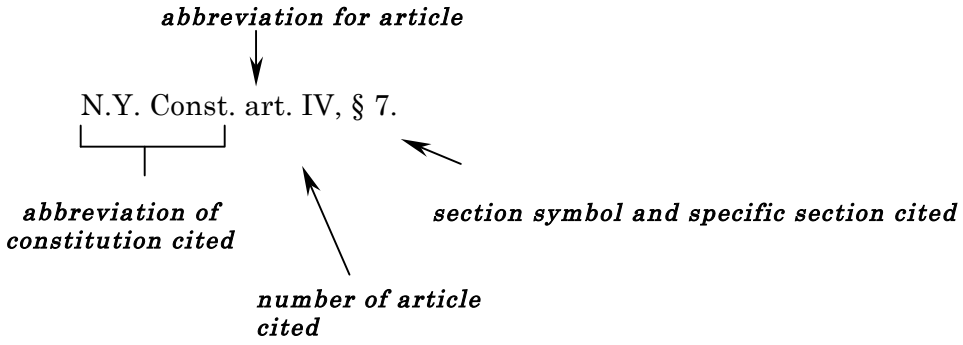
parallel citations
The two citations that refer to "N.E.2d" and "N.Y.S.2d" are parallel citations. For more information on parallel citations, see note 29 of this Appendix A.

A-3. Constitutions

United States Constitution

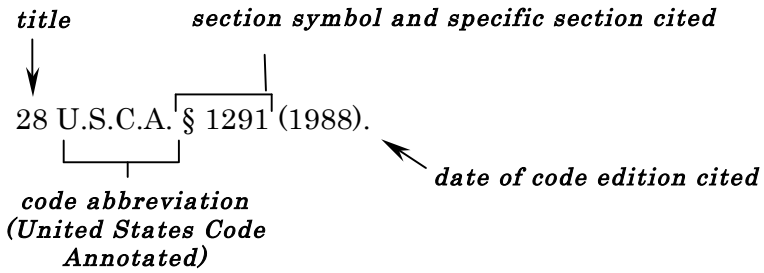


State Constitution

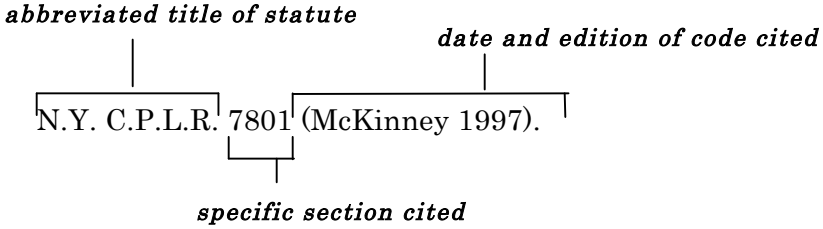


A-4. Statutes

Federal Statute



State Statute



A-5. Definitions for Common Statutory Abbreviations

Ann.	Annotated
App.	Appendix
art.	Article
Civ.	Civil
Comp.	Compilation
Const.	Constitution
Ct.	Court
Crim.	Criminal
et seq.	et sequentes, latin for 'and the following ones'
Gen.	General
Jud.	Judicial
P. or Proc.	Procedure
Rev.	Revised
R.	Rules
Stat.	Statutes
S. Ct.	Supreme Court
tit.	Title

A JAILHOUSE LAWYER'S MANUAL

Chapter 3:
Your Right to Learn the Law and Go to Court

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

CHAPTER 3

YOUR RIGHT TO LEARN THE LAW AND GO TO COURT*

A. Introduction

Although many rights are suspended while you are in prison, courts have protected a prisoner's constitutional right to access the state and federal courts.[1] This right includes a prisoner's ability to prepare and submit petitions and complaints, including federal habeas corpus petitions and civil rights actions.[2] The Supreme Court held in Bounds v. Smith that "the fundamental constitutional right of access to the courts requires prison authorities to assist inmates in the preparation and filing of meaningful legal papers by providing prisoners with adequate law libraries or adequate assistance from persons trained in the law."[3] In other words, the Supreme Court believes that prisoners need a way to learn the law in order to take full advantage of their constitutional right to access the courts. If the state stands in the way of your ability to do legal research or get legal assistance, you may be able to file a suit claiming that you have been denied access to the courts. You may also be able to file a suit claiming a denial of court access if the state prevents you from creating and mailing your legal papers by withholding necessary resources or materials. The Supreme Court stated in Bounds that the right of access to the courts includes the state's obligation to provide indigent prisoners "with paper and pen to draft legal documents, with notarial services to authenticate them, with stamps to mail them."[4]

The Supreme Court has limited the circumstances in which a prisoner can win a denial of access suit. In 1996, the Court held in Lewis v. Casey that in order for a prisoner to have a cause of action under Bounds, he must first show that an actual injury has occurred because he has been denied access to the courts. This actual injury requirement means you must show both that the State's legal access program was inadequate, and that you suffered an actual injury because of its inadequacies. The Supreme Court went on to hold that proving an actual injury requires showing that a "non-frivolous legal claim" has been frustrated.[5] Therefore, under Lewis, you must show (1) your right of access to the courts was denied, and (2) because of that denial you lost a non-frivolous legal claim.[6]

Congress has also limited the ability of prisoners to bring denial of access suits. In 1995, Congress enacted the Prison Litigation Reform Act ("PLRA") which, among other things, requires prisoners to exhaust their prison's administrative remedies before filing claims alleging violation of civil rights under 42 U.S.C. Section 1983 in federal court. The information provided in this Chapter is to be used only as a supplement to the information provided in Chapter 14 of the JLM. If you decide to pursue any claim in federal court, you must read Chapter 14 of the JLM on the Prison Litigation Reform Act. Failure to follow the requirements in the PLRA can lead, among other things, to the loss of your good-time credit and to the loss of your right to bring future claims in federal court without paying the full filing fee at the time you file your claim.

---

* This Chapter was revised by Sarah Jackel based on previous versions by Laura Burdick, Shima Kobayashi, Monica Ratliff, Jeffra Becknell, Carolyn Hotchkiss, and Marianne Yen. Special thanks to John Boston of the Prisoners' Rights Project at The Legal Aid Society.

1. See Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S. 396, 419, 94 S. Ct. 1800, 1814, 40 L. Ed. 2d 224, 243 (1974) (describing right of access to courts as part of constitutional due process of law requirements); see also Murray v. Giarratano, 492 U.S. 1, 11 n.6, 109 S. Ct. 2765, 2771 n.6, 106 L. Ed. 2d 1, 12 n.6 (1989) (tracing right of access to courts to due process and equal protection clauses of U.S. Constitution).

2. Bounds v. Smith, 430 U.S. 817, 828 n.17, 97 S. Ct. 1491, 1498 n.17, 52 L. Ed. 2d 72, 83 n.17 (1977). For an explanation of federal habeas corpus petitions and how to use them, see JLM, Chapter 13. Civil rights actions involve the violation of your constitutional rights. For more information about your constitutional rights and how to sue those who violate your constitutional rights, see Chapter 16 of the JLM, which discusses Section 1983 and Bivens actions.

3. Bounds v. Smith, 430 U.S. 817, 828, 97 S. Ct. 1491, 1498, 52 L. Ed. 2d 72, 83 (1977).

4. Bounds v. Smith, 430 U.S. 817, 824–25, 97 S. Ct. 1491, 1496, 52 L. Ed. 2d 72, 81 (1977).

5. Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 351–53, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2180–81, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 617–19 (1996). Lewis was a class action claiming denial of prisoners' right of access to courts. The Supreme Court reversed a Ninth Circuit decision ordering Arizona to provide prisoners with extensively equipped law libraries and experienced library staff.

6. Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 350–51, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2179–89, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 617–18 (1996).

This Chapter explains what constitutes a violation of your right of access to the courts. Parts B and C explore the threshold requirements you must prove before the court will examine your opportunities for access: that you suffered an actual injury and that you did so because the state failed to fulfill its duty. Part B explains the actual injury requirement, as stated in Lewis v. Casey. Part C outlines the reach of the state's[7] duty to provide you access to the courts. The later Parts explain your rights once these requirements have been met. Part D explains what adequate law libraries must contain. Part E explains what constitutes adequate assistance from persons trained in the law (including the role of jailhouse lawyers[8] in providing adequate assistance). Part F explains the state's duty to provide you with legal materials. Appendix A provides a list of organizations that will help you to get certain legal materials. Be aware, however, that these organizations usually charge a fee for their services.

Because the rights described in this Chapter relate to the conditions of your confinement, the PLRA requires you first try to protect your rights through your institution's administrative grievance procedure. Read Chapter 15 of the JLM for further information on inmate grievance procedures. If you are unsuccessful or do not receive a favorable result through these procedures, you can then either bring a case under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, file a tort action in state court (or in the Court of Claims if you are in New York), or file an Article 78 petition in state court if you are in New York. More information on all of these types of cases can be found in Chapter 5, "Choosing a Court and a Lawsuit," Chapter 14, "The Prison Litigation Reform Act," Chapter 16, "42 U.S.C. § 1983," Chapter 17, "Tort Actions," and Chapter 22, "Article 78," of the JLM.

B. Fulfilling the Actual Injury Requirement

The Supreme Court in Lewis v. Casey narrowly interpreted the Bounds decision by holding that establishing a violation of your right to access the courts requires showing "actual injury" from the alleged violation.[9] The actual injury requirement is not a new concept, but the Lewis approach makes things harder for prisoners. Establishing that the prison's law library or legal assistance program is inadequate is not enough to prove actual injury. You must also show that you were kept from pursuing a non-frivolous claim—that is, "a claim for relief that is at least arguable in law and in fact"[10]—because of these inadequacies.[11]

One way to prove an actual injury may be to show a complaint you prepared was dismissed for failure to meet a technical requirement you could not have known about because of the insufficient legal assistance provided at your prison facility.[12] Another way may be to show you were prevented from filing a claim in the

---

7. "State" in this chapter means either a state government or the federal government. In other words, if you are a federal prisoner, when we refer to "state" in this chapter, for you it means the federal government.

8. Black's Law Dictionary 851 (8th ed. 2004) defines a jailhouse lawyer as "[a] prison inmate who seeks release through legal procedures or who gives legal advice to other inmates."

9. Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 351, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2180, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 617–18 (1996); see also Chirceol v. Phillips, 169 F.3d 313, 317 (5th Cir. 1999) (finding that denial of access to funds from prison accounts to pay for filing fees did not constitute an actual injury because the complaint had been successfully filed); Tourscher v. McCullough, 184 F.3d 236, 242 (3d Cir. 1999) (finding that defendant failed to allege facts demonstrating that the number of hours he was required to work frustrated his access to the courts); Klinger v. Dept. of Corr., 107 F.3d 609, 617 (8th Cir. 1997) (showing a complete and systematic denial of access to the law library or legal assistance was not enough to demonstrate actual injury); Oliver v. Fauver, 118 F.3d 175, 178 (3d Cir. 1997) (dismissing a claim because the prisoner suffered no injury as a result of alleged interference with legal mail); Pilgrim v. Littlefield, 92 F.3d 413, 416 (6th Cir. 1996) (holding that pro se prisoners failed to demonstrate that inadequacy of the prison law library or legal assistance caused actual injury); Sabers v. Delano, 100 F.3d 82, 84 (8th Cir. 1996) (finding prisoner had to show actual injury due to denial of access to courts, even if denial was systematic; specifically, prisoner had the burden of showing that the "lack of a library or the attorney's inadequacies hindered [her] efforts to proceed with [the] legal claim in a criminal appeal, post-conviction matter, or a civil rights action."); Stotts v. Salas, 938 F. Supp. 663, 667–68 (D. Haw. 1996) (holding that a state prisoner transferred to another state must show actual injury to have law books sent from the state of his former prison).

10. Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 399, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2203, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 662 (1996).

11. Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 352–53, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2179, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 616 (1996). The Court said, "the inmate … must … demonstrate … the alleged shortcomings in the library or legal assistance program hindered his efforts to pursue a legal claim." Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 351, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2180, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 618 (1996).

12. Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 351, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2180, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 618 (1996).

first place because of weaknesses in the legal facilities provided.[13] If you and others bring a class action, you must show the injury was systemic—that is, you must show a system-wide problem.[14]

C. How The State's Limited Duty to Provide Access to the Courts May Apply to You

There are a few things to keep in mind when developing your claim: (1) your state's duty to provide you with adequate law libraries or adequate assistance from persons trained in law may not extend to the type of action you want to bring; (2) your correctional facility can choose how it will meet its duty to provide legal information or expertise; (3) the state's duty almost always applies regardless of the kind of facility in which you are incarcerated; (4) it is currently unclear how far the state's duty to provide access extends; (5) the state's duty applies whether or not you are considered indigent.

First, courts disagree about whether your right of access to the courts is applicable in all cases or only in those cases involving constitutional rights. In Lewis v. Casey,[15] the Supreme Court stated that your right of access does not guarantee your right to file any claim; instead, this right is limited to non-frivolous lawsuits that attack prison sentences or challenge the conditions of confinement.[16] Though this language is somewhat unclear, Lewis and subsequent cases have narrowly defined the claims to which the right of access to the courts extends.[17] For example, some courts have held that the state's duty extends only to the initiation of habeas corpus proceedings, direct appeals, and civil rights actions,[18] because these are the only actions specifically mentioned in Bounds v. Smith.[19] Thus, your state's duty to provide access to the courts may not extend to ordinary civil proceedings.[20] Nonetheless, you should check your state's law on this issue, which may cover civil proceedings.

Second, the state may choose how to fulfill its duty.[21] The state may provide you with an adequate law library, adequate assistance from persons trained in the law, a combination of the two, or something slightly 13. Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 351, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2180, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 618 (1996) (arguing that a prisoner could prove actual injury if the "inadequacies of the law library" prevented him from even filing a complaint).

---

14. See, e.g., Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 349, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2179, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 616 (1996) (holding that "isolated instances of actual injury" are not enough to show a systemic Bounds violation).

15. Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606 (1996).

16. The Supreme Court in Lewis held:

> "Bounds does not guarantee inmates the wherewithal to transform themselves into litigating engines capable of filing everything from shareholder derivative actions to slip-and-fall claims. The tools it requires to be provided are those that the inmates need in order to attack their sentences, directly or collaterally, and in order to challenge the conditions of their confinement. Impairment of any other litigating capacity is simply one of the incidental (and perfectly constitutional) consequences of conviction and incarceration."

Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 355, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2182, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 620 (1996).

17. See, e.g., Thaddeus-X v. Blatter, 175 F.3d 378, 391 (6th Cir. 1999) (holding that "a prisoner's right to access the courts extends to direct appeals, habeas corpus applications, and civil rights claims only"); Wilson v. Blankenship, 163 F.3d 1284, 1291 (11th Cir. 1998) (holding that the civil forfeiture case that the plaintiff was attempting to litigate was "not a type of case that is included under the right of inmates' access to courts under Lewis").

18. Thaddeus-X v. Blatter, 175 F.3d 378, 391 (6th Cir. 1999).

19. Bounds v. Smith, 430 U.S. 817, 828, 97 S. Ct. 1491, 1498, 52 L. Ed. 2d 72, 83 (1977) (holding federal habeas corpus or state or federal civil rights actions are encompassed within right of access to the courts); see also Knop v. Johnson, 977 F.2d 996, 1009 (6th Cir. 1992) (determining that requiring a state to provide affirmative legal assistance to prisoners in actions unrelated to constitutional rights or their incarceration would be "an unwarranted extension of the right of access"); cf. Glover v. Johnson, 75 F.3d 264, 269 (6th Cir. 1996) (finding female prisoners not entitled to legal assistance in child custody matters); John L. v. Adams, 969 F.2d 228, 235–36 (6th Cir. 1992) (holding states do not have a duty to provide affirmative assistance to prisoners on civil matters arising under state law, but noting that "states are required to provide affirmative assistance in the preparation of legal papers in cases involving constitutional rights and other civil rights actions related to their incarceration … [and also that] in all other types of civil actions states may not erect barriers that impede the right of access of incarcerated persons"); Walters v. Edgar, 900 F. Supp. 197, 229 (N.D. Ill. 1995) (finding prisoners have no constitutional right to assistance from the state to pursue child custody matters).

20. See Glover v. Johnson, 75 F.3d 264, 269 (6th Cir. 1996) (holding female prisoners not entitled to legal assistance in child custody matters); John L. v. Adams, 969 F.2d 228, 235–36 (6th Cir. 1992) (holding that states do not have a duty to provide affirmative assistance to prisoners on civil matters arising under state law).

21. Morello v. James, 810 F.2d 344, 346–47 (2d Cir. 1987) ("The right of access to the courts is substantive rather than procedural. Its exercise can be shaped and guided by the state but cannot be obstructed, regardless of the procedural means applied." (citations omitted)); Ramos v. Lamm, 639 F.2d 559, 583 (10th Cir. 1980) ("Bounds does not hold that inmates have an absolute right to any particular type of legal assistance. The states are still free to choose among a variety of methods or combinations thereof in meeting their constitutional obligations [to provide access to the different.[22] For example, an inadequate or non-existent law library may not violate a prisoner's right of access when the state provides some other sort of legal assistance.[23] At the same time, while the state is free to devise its own legal access plan, there is no guarantee that courts will find it sufficient to satisfy your right of access to the courts.[24]

Third, the state's duty to provide you with access to the courts is not limited to those in state prison, but also extends to prisoners in county and city jails,[25] incarcerated juveniles,[26] persons serving brief sentences in local jails, pretrial detainees, and mental patients under commitment. Prisoners who are transferred from one state correctional facility to another or from a state correctional facility to a federal correctional facility retain their right of access to the courts and therefore must be provided some legal access program.[27] However, as in Blake v. Berman, the court may find that the state has fulfilled its duty by providing you with persons trained in the law but no legal materials pertaining to the state in which you were convicted.[28] For example, a federal court in New York has suggested that a state might fulfill its obligation to provide access to the courts by either supplying law books or providing legal counsel to state prisoners incarcerated in federal facilities.[29]

Fourth, the extent of a state's duty to assist your access to the courts is unclear. For instance, is it enough for a state to assist only until you are finished writing your complaint? Lewis greatly limits the Bounds decision by explaining that prison authorities have no duty to enable the prisoner to find or courts]." (citations omitted)); Glover v. Johnson, 75 F.3d 264, 266–67 (6th Cir. 1996) (holding that state could terminate funding for prison legal services program that provided female prisoners with assistance on child care matters because the termination did not violate the right of access to courts).

---

22. The Supreme Court has pointed out that "while adequate law libraries are one constitutionally acceptable method to assure meaningful access to the courts," alternative programs may be acceptable. Bounds v. Smith, 430 U.S. 817, 830, 97 S. Ct. 1491, 1499, 52 L. Ed. 2d 72, 84 (1977). The Bounds Court suggested some alternatives to having a law library:

> "Among the alternatives [to providing law libraries] are the training of inmates as paralegal assistants to work under lawyers' supervision, the use of paraprofessionals and law students …, the organization of volunteer attorneys through bar associations or other groups, the hiring of lawyers on a part time consultant basis, and the use of full-time staff attorneys, working either in new prison legal assistance organizations or as part of public defender or legal services offices."

The Bounds Court did not consider this list of proposed alternatives exhaustive, stating that "a legal access program need not include any particular element we have discussed, and we encourage local experimentation." Bounds v. Smith, 430 U.S. 817, 831–32, 97 S. Ct. 1491, 1499–1500, 52 L. Ed. 2d 72, 84–85 (1977).

23. Prison authorities may "replace libraries with some minimal access to legal advice and a system of court-provided forms … that asked the inmates to provide only the facts and not to attempt any legal analysis." Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 352, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2180, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 618–19 (1996) (citations omitted). See also Blake v. Berman, 877 F.2d 145, 146 (1st Cir. 1989) (finding law school clinical program might be considered an adequate alternative to a law library).

24. See Novak v. Beto, 453 F.2d 661, 663–64 (5th Cir. 1971) (finding that a prison legal access program consisting of a small "library," permission to use the law books of fellow prisoners, the prison employment of two full time attorneys, and three senior law students employed one summer may not be a sufficient alternative to allowing prisoners to provide some form of legal assistance to one another).

25. See Leeds v. Watson, 630 F.2d 674, 676–77 (9th Cir. 1980) (finding that there is a question of obstruction when prisoners in a county jail are required to get a court order to have access to a law library close by, and must be accompanied by a guard, and are not given sufficient information concerning these requirements); Williams v. Leeke, 584 F.2d 1336, 1340 (4th Cir. 1978) (finding that a situation where a prisoner in a city jail was only allowed access to legal resources 45 minutes a day, three days a week was "on its face a constitutional violation"); Cruz v. Hauck, 475 F.2d 475, 476 (5th Cir. 1973) (holding that prison regulations must not unreasonably invade the relationship of the prisoner to the courts in a case where the prisoner was in a county jail); Tuggle v. Barksdale, 641 F. Supp. 34, 36–37 (W.D. Tenn. 1985) (discussing how the fundamental right of access to the court may be applied in a county jail).

26. John L. v. Adams, 969 F.2d 228, 233 (6th Cir. 1992) (holding that incarcerated juveniles have a constitutional right of access to the courts).

27. Messere v. Fair, 752 F. Supp. 48, 50 (D. Mass. 1990) (holding that neither a copying service providing Massachusetts law but requiring specific citations, nor a Connecticut legal assistance program that refused to work on Massachusetts legal materials, provided a prisoner "meaningful access to the Massachusetts courts within the contemplation of Bounds v. Smith").

28. Blake v. Berman, 877 F.2d 145, 146 (1st Cir. 1989) (finding prison program providing legal assistance instead of full law library satisfied access requirements).

29. See Kivela v. U.S. Attorney Gen., 523 F. Supp. 1321, 1325 (S.D.N.Y. 1981) (holding prisoners' right of access to courts satisfied where state has provided either law books or legal counsel), aff'd, 688 F.2d 815 (2d Cir. 1982).

recognize violations of his rights[30] or to "litigate effectively once in court."[31] This seems to imply that your right to access the courts extends only until the time that you file your claim. Therefore, the state could technically assist you until you submit your complaint and forgo any assistance from then on.

Finally, the right of access to the courts applies to prisoners regardless of their financial status.

D. What is an Adequate Law Library?

The Supreme Court has never defined exactly what an "adequate" law library is.[32] The American Association of Law Libraries' ("AALL") Special Committee on Law Library Services to Prisoners has a suggested list of resources that should be in a prison law library, but states are not required to follow the AALL's guidelines, and various circuits have come up with their own list of what a prison law library should contain.[33] Even if a prison has a law library that meets either a circuit's requirements or the AALL's guidelines, a court may still decide that access to the court has been denied if books are frequently missing[34] or if prisoners cannot use the library.[35] For example, functionally illiterate prisoners,[36] non-English speakers,[37] and the blind cannot use typical law libraries.[38] When prisoners cannot use the law library because of illiteracy, an inability to speak English, or a disability, the state may need to provide a legal 30. Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 354, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2181, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 619 (1996) (denying that "the State must enable the prisoner to discover grievances" (emphasis omitted)).

---

31. The Lewis Court restricted the Bounds ruling to require states to provide the tools "that the inmates need in order to attack their sentences, directly or collaterally, and in order to challenge the conditions of their confinement. Impairment of any other litigating capacity is simply one of the incidental (and perfectly constitutional) consequences of conviction and incarceration." Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 355, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2182, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 620 (1996).

32. The Court simply stated that prisoner access to the courts should be "adequate, effective, and meaningful" and that "'[m]eaningful access' to the courts is the touchstone." Bounds v. Smith, 430 U.S. 817, 822–23, 97 S. Ct. 1491, 1495, 52 L. Ed. 2d 72, 79–80 (1977) (quoting Ross v. Moffitt, 417 U.S. 600, 611, 615, 94 S. Ct. 2437, 2444, 2446, 41 L. Ed. 2d 341, 351, 353 (1974)).

33. In Lindquist v. Idaho State Bd. of Corr., 776 F.2d 851, 856 (9th Cir. 1985), the Ninth Circuit held that the following list of books "meets minimum constitutional standards and provides inmates with sufficient access to legal research materials to prepare pro se pleadings, appeals, and other legal documents" for Idaho State: Idaho Code; Idaho Reports; United States Reports, from 1962 to present; Federal Reporter Second Series, beginning with volume 273 [1960]; portions of the United States Code Annotated, including Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure and Federal Rules of Evidence; Appellate Rules of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals; Local Rules of the United States District Court for the District of Idaho; various Nutshells on procedure, civil rights, criminal law, constitutional law, and legal research; West Pacific Digest Second Series; various volumes of Federal Practice & Procedure; Manual for Complex Litigation Pamphlet Subscription; Federal Practice & Procedure, Criminal Pamphlet; West Federal Practice Digest 2d; Pacific Digest Second Series; Federal Supplement, beginning with volume 482 [1980]. In Tuggle v. Barksdale, 641 F. Supp. 34, 39 (W.D. Tenn. 1985), the court stated that the law library in question should include: [all] volumes and titles of U.S.C.A … which cover the United States Constitution, and Titles 5, 15, 18 with complete rules of the various courts, 28 with complete rules, 42 and the General Index … Federal Practice and Procedure by Wright and Miller, … Tennessee Code Annotated Volume 7 and 10 and Criminal Law Library (2-volume set, latest edition)[,] … Black's Law Dictionary latest edition. See also Griffin v. Coughlin, 743 F. Supp. 1006, 1020–25 (N.D.N.Y. 1990), in which the court detailed and examined the inventory of the Clinton Main law library and stated that it was constitutionally sufficient and provided prisoners with "access to a law book inventory which rises above the constitutional minimum."

34. Walters v. Edgar, 900 F. Supp. 197, 226–27 (N.D. Ill. 1995) (finding that prison's replacement of missing volumes only once a year appeared to be inadequate maintenance of library, and holding that even if prisoners might be responsible for stealing the missing volumes, "each plaintiff's right of access to the courts is individual, and therefore a … [prisoner] cannot be prevented access by … theft").

35. See, e.g., Cruz v. Hauck, 627 F.2d 710, 721 (5th Cir. 1980) ("Library books, even if 'adequate' in number, cannot provide access to the courts for those persons who do not speak English or who are illiterate."); Acevedo v. Forcinito, 820 F. Supp 886, 888 (D.N.J. 1993) ("[F]or prisoners who cannot read or understand English, the constitutional right of access to the courts cannot be determined solely by the number of volumes in, or size of, a law library.").

36. See, e.g., Lindquist v. Idaho State Bd. of Corr., 776 F.2d 851, 855–56 (9th Cir. 1985) (stating that "[a] book and a library are of no use, in and of themselves, to a prisoner who cannot read"); U.S. ex rel. Para-Prof. Law Clinic v. Kane, 656 F. Supp. 1099, 1105–07 (E.D. Pa. 1987) (the elimination of a jailhouse lawyer association, leaving only a law library for prisoners, would leave functionally illiterate prisoners without court access), aff'd, 835 F.2d 285 (3d Cir. 1987).

37. See, e.g., U.S. ex rel. Para-Prof. Law Clinic v. Kane, 656 F. Supp. 1099, 1106 (E.D. Pa. 1987) (stating that "Spanish-speaking inmates who cannot read or write English are unable to present, with reasonable adequacy, complaints to the courts without assistance").

38. Phillips v. United States, 836 F. Supp. 965, 967–68 (N.D.N.Y. 1993) (stating that a prisoner's blindness may effectively deny him access to the prison law library).

assistance program consisting of persons trained in the law in addition to, or in place of, an adequate prison law library.[39]

Generally, the state may limit your access to law libraries and legal materials for security reasons.[40] The Supreme Court held in Lewis v. Casey that restrictive practices justified by security concerns will be upheld even if they obstruct court access.[41] For instance, prison officials may restrict the amount of time an individual prisoner may spend in the library[42] and the amount of time the library is open "in light of legitimate security considerations."[43] But, the state may not limit your access to law libraries or legal assistance to the point that your right of access to the courts is frustrated.[44]

Prison regulations that affect segregated prisoners' access to law libraries, legal materials, and legal assistance have spawned a great deal of litigation. Courts have stopped states from enforcing regulations restricting or withholding law books from prisoners in solitary confinement.[45] Several (but not all) courts have criticized requirements that make prisoners request specific books to be delivered to their cells,[46] or identify the exact materials they want to use before entering the library.[47] However, a prison can meet its obligation to provide a segregated prisoner with access to the courts by allowing some, but not unfettered, access to legal materials or some access to legal assistance.[48]

---

39. Phillips v. United States, 836 F. Supp. 965, 967–68 (N.D.N.Y. 1993) (stating that denial of access to a legal assistance program may give rise to a claim of denial of access to the court).

40. Lindquist v. Idaho State Bd. of Corr., 776 F.2d 851, 858 (9th Cir. 1985) (stating that "[p]rison officials of necessity must regulate the time, manner, and place in which library facilities are used") (citing Twyman v. Crips, 584 F.2d 352, 358 (10th Cir. 1978)).

41. Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 361–62, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2185, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 624 (1996) (holding that "delays in receiving legal materials or legal assistance" are "not of constitutional significance, even where they result in actual injury" as long as they come from "prison regulations reasonably related to legitimate penological interests").

42. Shango v. Jurich, 965 F.2d 289, 292–93 (7th Cir. 1992) (holding that restrictions on library hours which included: being closed nights, weekends, and holidays; allowing general population prisoners to use library, optimally for 10 to 11 hours, one day each week; and limiting the library visitation hours for prisoners in segregation and protective custody to about three hours every third to fifth weekday, did not deny prisoners the constitutional right of meaningful access as described in Bounds); see also Lindquist v. Idaho State Bd. of Corr., 776 F.2d 851, 858 (9th Cir. 1985) (stating that library being open a minimum of eleven hours each day was "an adequate amount of total library access time").

43. Shango v. Jurich, 965 F.2d 289, 292 (7th Cir. 1992) (quoting Caldwell v. Miller, 790 F.2d 589, 606 (7th Cir. 1986)).

44. See Straub v. Monge, 815 F.2d 1467, 1469 (11th Cir. 1987) (stating that "[r]egulations and practices that unjustifiably obstruct the availability of professional representation or other aspects of the right of access to the courts are invalid" (quoting Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S. 396, 419, 94 S. Ct. 1800, 1814, 40 L. Ed. 2d 224 (1974)).

45. See, e.g., Knell v. Bensinger, 489 F.2d 1014, 1017 (7th Cir. 1973) (holding that, although a prisoner in isolation does not have unlimited rights to use the library, if a prisoner in solitary confinement is prevented from using the library or consulting an advisor to prepare a petition, the courts may find that the prisoner's right of access was effectively denied); U.S. ex rel. Para-Prof. Law Clinic v. Kane, 656 F. Supp. 1099, 1104–05 (E.D. Pa. 1987) (finding prison's program of providing a small number of cases or books to segregated prisoners was unconstitutional, and prison had a "duty to insure that the 'opportunity to do legal research [given to segregated prisoners] must be at least the equivalent of the opportunity that is available to an inmate who is permitted to go personally to the prison library'" (quoting Wojtczak v. Cuyler, 480 F. Supp. 1288, 1301 (E.D. Pa. 1979)); Johnson v. Anderson, 370 F. Supp. 1373, 1383–85 (D. Del. 1974) (holding prison rules allowing a prisoner in solitary confinement access to only one law book of his choosing on two times during the week violated the prisoner's due process right), modified on other grounds, 420 F. Supp. 845 (D. Del. 1976).

46. The runner system or paging system, "also known as an 'exact-cite system' because an inmate must request materials by exact cite," has been deemed an inadequate legal access system for both segregated and non-segregated prisoners by some courts. Cannell v. Bradshaw, 840 F. Supp. 1382, 1389 (D. Or. 1993) (holding paging system alone does not provide adequate access to the courts); Griffin v. Coughlin, 743 F. Supp. 1006, 1023 (N.D.N.Y. 1990) (finding book request system deprived protective custody prisoners of meaningful access to the courts).

47. See, e.g., Cepulonis v. Fair, 732 F.2d 1, 4 (1st Cir. 1984) (finding requirement that prisoners identify specific volumes sought prior to entering library to be suspect); Williams v. Leeke, 584 F.2d 1336, 1339 (4th Cir. 1978) ("It is unrealistic to expect a prisoner to know in advance exactly what materials he needs to consult.").

48. See, e.g., Lovell v. Brennan, 566 F. Supp. 672, 696–97 (D. Me. 1983) (stating that an adequate legal access plan would provide segregated prisoners with access to law books and a prisoner advocate, or other persons trained in the law, depending on the circumstances), aff'd, 728 F.2d 560 (1st Cir. 1984).

E. The State's Duty to Permit Access to Adequate Legal Assistance

While the Bounds v. Smith Court described various legal substitutes for law libraries,[49] it never defined the elements of an adequate legal access program or adequate assistance from persons trained in the law. Therefore, it is not exactly clear what "adequate" means in these contexts, but courts have occasionally described what might qualify.[50] For example, if the state only provides people to assist you who are not trained in the law, the court would most likely find that such assistance does not satisfy your right of access to the courts.[51]

Occasionally, the state may decide to fulfill its obligation to provide you with access to courts by allowing other prisoners to assist you.[52] Prisoners who provide other prisoners with legal assistance are called jailhouse lawyers or "writ writers."[53] In Johnson v. Avery, the Supreme Court held that a state could not prevent one prisoner from assisting another prisoner in the preparation of his writ in the absence of reasonable alternatives to such assistance.[54] Therefore, if the state does not provide you with any sort of adequate legal access program, it cannot prohibit you from getting assistance from a jailhouse lawyer.[55] Although the state may not prohibit you from getting assistance from a jailhouse lawyer, the state still has the power to reasonably regulate the activities of jailhouse lawyers.[56] For example, the state can require that a jailhouse lawyer get approval from the state prior to helping another prisoner.[57] The state can also prohibit jailhouse lawyers from visiting the cells of the prisoners they are assisting,[58] and from receiving payment for their services.[59]

F. The State's Duty to Provide Materials

The Supreme Court has held that the right of access to the courts includes providing indigent prisoners "with paper and pen to draft legal documents, with notarial services to authenticate them, and with stamps

---

49. Bounds v. Smith, 430 U.S. 817, 831, 97 S. Ct. 1491, 1499–500, 52 L. Ed. 2d 72, 84–85 (1977).

50. In Gluth v. Kangas, the Ninth Circuit upheld the district court's imposition of a training program for prisoner legal assistants. The Gluth Court stated that "Bounds requires, in the absence of adequate law libraries, some degree of professional or quasi-professional legal assistance to prisoners. Although legal training need not be extensive, Bounds does require that inmates be provided the legal assistance of persons with at least some training in the law." Gluth v. Kangas, 951 F.2d 1504, 1511–12 (9th Cir. 1991) (citations omitted).

51. Valentine v. Beyer, 850 F.2d 951, 956 (3d Cir. 1988) ("An untrained legal research staff is insufficient to safeguard an inmate's right of access to the courts") (quoting Para-Professional Law Clinic v. Kane, 656 F. Supp. 1099 (E.D. Pa. 1987), aff'd, 835 F.2d 285 (3d Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 993, 108 S. Ct. 1302, 99 L. Ed. 2d 511 (1988)).

52. This has also been called "mutual assistance among inmates." Johnson v. Avery, 393 U.S. 483, 490, 89 S. Ct. 747, 751, 21 L. Ed. 2d 718, 724 (1969).

53. See Johnson v. Avery, 393 U.S. 483, 487–88, 89 S. Ct. 747, 749–750, 21 L. Ed. 2d 718, 722–23 (1969) (discussing role of prisoners who provide legal assistance to other prisoners).

54. Johnson v. Avery, 393 U.S. 483, 490, 89 S. Ct. 747, 751, 21 L. Ed. 2d 718, 724 (1969) (striking down a prison regulation that forbade prisoners from providing each other with any sort of legal help or advice).

55. Johnson v. Avery, 393 U.S. 483, 490, 89 S. Ct. 747, 751, 21 L. Ed. 2d 718, 724 (1969) ("[U]nless and until the State provides some reasonable alternative to assist inmates in the preparation of petitions for post-conviction relief, it may not validly enforce a regulation … barring inmates from furnishing such assistance to other prisoners."). However, you have no right to demand the assistance of a specific jailhouse lawyer. See Storseth v. Spellman, 654 F.2d 1349, 1353 (9th Cir. 1981) (prisoner had no right to "services of a particular writ writer"); Prisoners' Legal Ass'n v. Robertson, 822 F. Supp. 185, 190 (D.N.J. 1993) (holding a prisoner has no "right to the assistance of a particular prisoner").

56. Johnson v. Avery, 393 U.S. 483, 490, 89 S. Ct. 747, 751, 21 L. Ed. 2d 718, 724 (1969) ("[T]he State may impose reasonable restrictions and restraints upon the acknowledged propensity of prisoners to abuse both the giving and the seeking of assistance … for example, by limitations on the time and location of such activities ..."); Sizemore v. Lee, 20 F. Supp. 2d 956, 958 (W.D. Va. 1998) (holding the prisoner can be ordered not to engage in writ writing on an individual basis when the security of the prison requires the order and that writ writers were not mandated where the prison provided prisoners with a law library and legal assistance.

57. Rivera v. Coughlin, 210 A.D.2d 543, 543–544, 620 N.Y.S.2d 505, 506 (3d Dept. 1994) (upholding determination of disciplinary violation by a prisoner who sent a letter to the FBI on behalf of another prisoner without receiving prior approval for providing such assistance pursuant to state directives).

58. Bellamy v. Bradley, 729 F.2d 416, 421 (6th Cir. 1984) (holding that prisoner was not denied effective assistance of counsel where jailhouse lawyers were prohibited from visiting his cell).

59. Johnson v. Avery, 393 U.S. 483, 490, 89 S. Ct. 747, 751, 21 L. Ed. 2d 718, 724 (1969) (jailhouse lawyers may be punished for receiving payment for legal assistance); Henderson v. Ricketts, 499 F. Supp. 1066, 1069 (D. Colo. 1980) ("Compensation to jailhouse lawyers by other inmates may be prohibited.").

to mail them."[60] In other words, even if the state provides an adequate law library or assistance from persons trained in the law, failure to provide you with the materials necessary for drafting, notarizing, and mailing your legal documents may also violate your right to access the courts.

There are a few important things to remember before claiming that you have been denied access to the courts because of the state's refusal to provide you with materials. First, you may not be entitled to all or any of the materials that you request. The courts have held: that prisoners may be given pencils instead of the pens mentioned in Bounds; [61] that prisoners have no constitutional right to use or possess computers or typewriters;[62] that the state is not required in all cases to provide free photocopying;[63] that the state need not provide unlimited free postage;[64] and that a notary need not be available at all times.[65] Second, unlike its duty to provide adequate law libraries or assistance from persons trained in the law, the state's duty to provide you with materials may only apply to indigent prisoners. You may need to research the laws and regulations in your state to determine what the accepted standard for indigence is in your correctional facility and in your state.[66] Third, your right of access to the courts may be balanced against the state's "legitimate interests, including budgetary concerns."[67] In other words, a court could determine that the

---

60. Bounds v. Smith, 430 U.S. 817, 824–25, 97 S. Ct. 1491, 1496, 52 L. Ed. 2d 72, 81 (1977).

61. Canell v. Bradshaw, 840 F. Supp. 1382, 1391 (D. Or. 1993) ("Security considerations may … justify the issuance of two-inch 'golf' pencils.") (citing Jeffries v. Reed, 631 F. Supp. 1212, 1215 (E.D. Wash. 1986)). However, the court also stated that if the prisoner in Canell had suffered from a medical condition preventing him from drafting legal documents longhand with a two-inch pencil, then "[u]nder those circumstances, a full-sized writing instrument or typewriter might become an indispensable tool for communicating with the court. If prison officials know of such a problem, then their denial of … [the prisoner's] request could constitute a deprivation of necessary legal supplies unless that action was justified by a sufficient penological interest." Canell v. Bradshaw, 840 F. Supp. 1382, 1391 (D. Or. 1993).

62. See, e.g., Taylor v. Coughlin, 29 F.3d 39, 40 (2d Cir. 1994) (finding "no constitutional right to a typewriter as an incident to the right of access to the courts … [and no] constitutional right to typewriters of a specific memory capacity" (citations omitted)); Sands v. Lewis, 886 F.2d 1166, 1169 (9th Cir. 1989) (holding that prisoners have no constitutional right to a typewriter); Am. Inmate Paralegal Ass'n v. Cline, 859 F.2d 59, 61 (8th Cir. 1988) ("Prison inmates have no constitutional right of access to a typewriter and prison officials are not required to provide one as long as the prisoner is not denied access to the courts.") (citation omitted); Walters v. Edgar, 900 F. Supp. 197, 229 (N.D. Ill. 1995) ("[P]risons are not required to provide inmates with typewriters."); Howard v. Leonardo, 845 F. Supp. 943, 946 (N.D.N.Y. 1994) ("[I]nmates have no constitutional right to the possession and use of a typewriter … since prisoners are not prejudiced by filing hand written briefs.") (citation omitted)); Lehn v. Hartwig, 13 Fed. Appx. 389, 392 (7th Cir. 2001) (holding that "if prisoners have no constitutional right to a typewriter, they certainly do not have a right to a computer.") (citations omitted)); but see Tuggle v. Barksdale, 641 F. Supp. 34, 38 (W.D. Tenn. 1985) (holding jail must provide a sufficient number of usable typewriters in legal room unless they can be proven to be a security threat).

63. Gittens v. Sullivan, 670 F. Supp. 119, 122 (S.D.N.Y. 1987), aff'd 848 F.2d 389 (2d Cir. 1988) (finding provision of carbon paper to prisoners was "sufficient to provide proper access to the courts …. The State should not be forced to provide free access to copier machines for prisoner use when there is an acceptable, less costly substitute."); Dugar v. Coughlin, 613 F. Supp. 849, 854 (S.D.N.Y. 1985) (noting prisons may make prisoners pay for photocopies, as this is a "reasonable balance of the legitimate interests of both prisoners and the State"). But see Canell v. Bradshaw, 840 F. Supp. 1382, 1392 (D. Or. 1993) (holding prisoner has clearly established right to photocopying under certain limited circumstances).

64. Gittens v. Sullivan, 670 F. Supp. 119, 123 (S.D.N.Y. 1987) (holding provision of $1.10 per week for stamps and an additional advance of $36.00 for legal mailings to indigent prisoner satisfied the constitutional minimum for access to the courts); Dugar v. Coughlin, 613 F. Supp. 849, 854 (S.D.N.Y. 1985) (upholding directive providing that prisoners could mail five one-ounce letters per week free of charge but would have to pay for any mail weighing more than one ounce, or in excess of five one-ounce letters in one week, because "a prisoner's constitutional right of access to the courts … does not require that prisoners be provided with unlimited free postage"); see also Pacheco v. Commissioner, 897 F. Supp. 671, 681 (N.D.N.Y. 1995).

65. The courts have held that correctional facilities must provide prisoners with notaries public. Tuggle v. Barksdale, 641 F. Supp. 34, 39–40 (W.D. Tenn. 1985) (holding the prison "must continue to afford notary publics for all inmates"). Correctional facilities, however, need not make the notary services available five days a week. Dugar v. Coughlin, 613 F. Supp. 849, 854 (S.D.N.Y. 1985) (holding that prisoners do not have a constitutional right to notary services five days a week).

66. See, e.g., Gluth v. Kangas, 951 F.2d 1504, 1508–09 (9th Cir. 1991) (finding that the Department of Correction's indigency policy, which only allowed a prisoner to apply for indigency classification if his prison account balance was less than $12.00 was unconstitutional because it forced prisoners to choose between purchasing the mandatory hygienic supplies and essential legal supplies, and that an indigency standard of $46.00 was more appropriate).

67. See Gittens v. Sullivan, 670 F. Supp. 119, 122 (S.D.N.Y. 1987) ("The State should not be forced to provide free access to copier machines for prisoner use when there is an acceptable, less costly substitute."); Dugar v. Coughlin, 613 F. Supp. 849, 853–54 (S.D.N.Y. 1985) (holding that making prisoners pay for photocopies is a "reasonable balance of the state's duty to provide you with materials is limited by state budgetary or security concerns. Fourth, the state's duty to assist you may only apply to habeas corpus petitions and civil rights actions involving constitutional claims.[68]

Finally, when you sue on the basis of the state's refusal to provide necessary materials, you also need to show that you suffered an "actual injury" as a direct result of that refusal. Because standards vary depending on where you are, you will need to research this "actual injury" requirement in your state and circuit. Canell v. Bradshaw is an example of one state's particular requirements. In Canell, a prisoner claimed that he was denied access to the courts because the state would not make photocopies for him. The court stated that he could prove that the state had deprived him of meaningful access to the courts, but in order to do so he would have to: demonstrate that he wanted to copy specific documents which could not be duplicated longhand; that those documents were to be filed with the court as part of a specific memorandum or other document; that he had advised [prison] officials of this need; his request was denied either by or in accordance with a policy promulgated by the defendants; that those documents were relevant and necessary to the particular case; and had to be omitted from the filing as a consequence of the prison officials' refusal to provide photocopying services.[69]

Remember, if you are going to pursue this type of action, you must bring a Section 1983 or a Bivens claim. Please see Chapter 16 of the JLM for more details on these claims.

G. Conclusion

In this Chapter, you have learned that if you (1) exhaust your prison's administrative remedies for getting your complaint heard, (2) are not able to go to court or are hindered in pursuit of your claim by state interference, and (3) suffer an injury as a result of the state's interference or denial of your right to access the courts, you may pursue a claim against the state. You can request that the state provide you with access to an adequate law library, adequate assistance from someone trained in the law, or some other legal access program. A state can regulate its jails and prisons for the purpose of discipline and safety, but cannot completely deny a prisoner's right of access to the courts.

Pursuing a claim has several requirements. First, you must show that you suffered an actual injury from the state's failure to provide you with an adequate opportunity to litigate your claim.[70] Second, some state courts have held that the state only needs to provide you with an adequate law library or legal access program if you want to pursue federal habeas corpus petitions or state or federal civil rights actions. Third, the state, not you, decides what type of legal access you will get, though it must provide you meaningful access to the courts.[71] Fourth, the state must adhere to the requirements laid out in this Chapter whether or not you are considered indigent. Finally, the state can place reasonable limits on your ability to use the library or other legal access programs.

---

legitimate interests of both prisoners and the State").

68. See Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 354–55, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2181–82, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 620 (1996) (holding that Bounds only requires states to provide tools that "inmates need in order to attack their sentences, directly or collaterally, and in order to challenge the conditions of their confinement. Impairment of any other litigating capacity is simply one of the incidental (and perfectly constitutional) consequences of conviction and incarceration.").

69. Canell v. Bradshaw, 840 F. Supp. 1382, 1392 (D. Or. 1993).

70. See Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 350–51, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2180, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 617–18 (1996) (explaining that there is no general right to a law library or legal assistance except as they relate to a prisoner's actual ability to access the courts).

71. Williams v. Leeke, 584 F.2d 1336, 1339 (4th Cir. 1978) ("Under Bounds, the state is duty bound to assure prisoners some form of meaningful access to the courts. But states remain free to satisfy that duty in a variety of ways.").

APPENDIX A

DIRECTORY OF SELECTED LAW LIBRARIES OFFERING SERVICES TO PRISONERS

If your state is not listed, you, or someone you know, should check the Southern Center for Human Rights's webpage (http://www.schr.org) for organizations and libraries providing legal materials to prisoners.

CALIFORNIA

Oakland Alameda County Law Library
125 Twelfth Street
Oakland, CA 94607
(510) 208-4832
http://www.acgov.org/law/index.htm

Serves Alameda County prisoners. Photocopies are $0.52/page plus a $10 handling fee, tax, postage and prepayment. The library requires correct citations and gives no legal advice. 30-page limit per request.

Los Angeles Los Angeles County Law Library
301 W. First Street.
Los Angeles, CA 90012
(213) 629-3531
http://lalaw.lib.ca.us

This library serves prisoners and other institution residents in California. No material is loaned. Correct citations are required and limited reference work is done. Prepayment is required.

Photocopies: $12.00 transaction charge per document for the first 25 pages (includes postage and tax) and sales tax if applicable. $0.25 per page over first 25 pages.

Payee: Los Angeles County Law Library

San Diego San Diego County Public Law Library
1105 Front Street
San Diego, CA 92101-3904
(619) 531-3900
http://www.sdcpll.org

This library serves prisoners and other institutional residents located at institutions in California. It lends materials to prisoners of San Diego County Jail under procedures set up by the Sheriff under a federal court consent decree. Loan periods are 1, 3, or 7 days. Correct citations are required.

Photocopies: $0.20 per page, $5.00 fee per citation. Shipping and handling is $0.50 per order plus postage (prepayment required).

Payee: San Diego County Public Law Library

Santa Clara Heafey Law Library
Attn: Prisoner requests
Santa Clara University
500 El Camino Real
Santa Clara, CA 95053

Serves prisoners in California institutions. Exact citations are required. Only primary materials (cases, statutes, administrative regulations; not journal articles or treatises) are eligible for photocopying. There is a 30-page limit on photocopies per year. Photocopies are provided free of charge. No material is loaned, and no reference work is done. Library will only respond to mail requests.

 These are the libraries or facilities that provide materials in states where the most *JLM*s are sold. If you live in a different state than those listed, you should contact law school or governmental law libraries in your state.

Ventura Ventura County Law Library
800 South Victoria Avenue
Ventura, CA 93009-2020
http://www.infopeople.org/ventura/vclaw

This library serves prisoners in Ventura County only. Correct citations are required and only cases and statutes are available.

Photocopies: $0.25 per page, plus postage. Prepayment is required; limit of 20 pages per letter.

NEW JERSEY

Trenton New Jersey State Library
185 West State Street P.O. Box 520
Trenton, NJ 08625-0520
(609) 278-2640
www.njstatelib.org

Serves only prison libraries located at institutions operated by New Jersey State Department of Corrections. Requests must be submitted by NJDOC prison librarians on behalf of prisoners. There is no charge to prison libraries, but there is a limit of 50 pages per day per prison. No material is loaned, and all material must be law-related. Correct citations are required. Limited reference work is done, and no legal advice is given.

NEW YORK

Albany Prisoner Services Project—New York State Library
Cultural Education Center Empire State Plaza
Albany, NY 12230
(518) 474-5355
http://www.nysl.nysed.gov/index.html

Serves only prisoners located at institutions operated by New York State Department of Correctional Services. To access library services, a prisoner should send a letter to the library and the library will respond by sending the proper forms. No material is loaned and all material must be law related. Correct citations are required and limited reference work is done, but no legal advice is given. No charge for photocopies. In addition, prisoners may borrow non-law material through their prison libraries and inter-library loan.

New York Fordham Law School Library
140 West 62nd Street
New York, NY 10023
(212) 636-6900
http://lawlib1.lawnet.fordham.edu/

This library serves prisoners and other institution residents located at institutions in New York. No materials are loaned, no reference work is done, and correct citations are desirable. The library will only provide copies of published materials.

Photocopies: $0.10 per page, plus $5.00 postage and handling fee. Limit of 75 copies per request. Prepayment by money order payable to Fordham Law Library required.

VIRGINIA

Charlottesville University of Virginia Law Library
580 Massie Road
Charlottesville, VA 22903
(434) 924-3384
http://www.law.virginia.edu/html/librarysite/library.htm

This library serves prisoners and other residents of Virginia institutions only. No material is loaned and correct citations are required. No legal advice is given.

Photocopies: $0.50 per page. Prepayment required; quotations given.

Payee: University of Virginia Law Library

Williamsburg Wolf Law Library
William and Mary School of Law
PO Box 8795
Williamsburg, VA 23187-8795
(757) 221-3255
http://www.wm.edu/law/lawlibrary/

The library will provide cases if correct citations are given. No legal advice is given. In addition, prisoners may borrow certain materials that circulate (books and treatises, not statutes or case reporters) through inter-library loan if their prison library has an official ILL program.

Photocopies: Prices are per item requested; quotations are given. $3.00 for less than 10 pages. $5.00 for 11–20 pages. $7.00 for 21–40 pages. $10.00 for 41–60. No copies over 60 pages.

Payee: Photocopy Account/Marshall-Wythe Foundation

A JAILHOUSE LAWYER'S MANUAL

Chapter 4:
How to Find a Lawyer

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

CHAPTER 4

HOW TO FIND A LAWYER*

A. Introduction

Finding a lawyer if you do not have the money to pay a private attorney can be difficult, but it is not impossible. Before you try to find a lawyer, you must know the following:

(1) The type of correctional institution you are in (city, county, federal or state);
(2) The type of case for which you are seeking representation (civil, criminal, or criminal appeal);
(3) If you are seeking a criminal appeal, the name of the county in which you allegedly committed the crime; and
(4) Your county of residence.

The more specific information you know about your case, the easier it will be to find a lawyer and to help the lawyer prepare your case. There are generally two types of cases in which you may be involved:

(1) Criminal: A criminal case is a case in which the state charges you with a crime. If you have already been convicted and are in prison, you are probably not currently involved in a criminal trial unless the state thinks that you committed a crime while you were in prison. Therefore, this chapter does not discuss how to find a lawyer for a criminal trial. But, you may want to try a criminal appeal. A criminal appeal is a case in which you appeal from the conviction or sentence that sent you to prison. If you have a right to a criminal appeal, you also have the right to a lawyer if you cannot afford one.[1] Read Part B below if you would like to find a lawyer to help you in your criminal appeal.
(2) Civil: A civil case is a case in which you either bring a claim against someone (an individual or the state), or an individual brings a non-criminal claim against you. You file a civil lawsuit whenever you bring any of the suits explained in the JLM Chapters about federal and state habeas corpus, Section 1983, Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules, and tort actions. Unlike in criminal cases and appeals, you do not have the right to a lawyer when filing a civil case. Read Part C if you would like to try to find a lawyer to help you in your civil case.

B. Attorneys for Criminal Appeals

When you have the right to bring a criminal appeal, you also have the right to have a lawyer assigned to your case if you are unable to pay a private lawyer to represent you.[2] If you cannot afford an attorney for your criminal appeal, you should petition the court to proceed as a poor person (or what in legal terms is called in forma pauperis) and ask the court to assign an attorney to your case. Chapter 9 of the JLM, "Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence," has sample poor person's papers.

One of the first places you should try contacting when looking for a lawyer is the Public Defender or Indigent Defender office in any of the following places:

(1) The county where the appellate court (the higher court) is located;
(2) The county where your prison is;
(3) The county where your original trial took place; or
(4) The county where you live.

These offices can provide you with further information about having a lawyer assigned to your criminal appeal. If you have access to the Internet, the easiest way to find a Public Defender is by doing

---

* This Chapter was written by Won Park based on a previous version by Angie Armer and members of the 1991–1992 Columbia Human Rights Law Review.

1. Douglas v. California, 372 U.S. 353, 357–58, 83 S. Ct. 814, 816–17, 9 L. Ed. 2d. 811, 814–15 (1963) (finding that a state must provide counsel for an indigent defendant in a first appeal from a criminal conviction).

2. Douglas v. California, 372 U.S. 353, 357–58, 83 S. Ct. 814, 816–17, 9 L. Ed. 2d. 811, 814–15 (1963). There are some higher-level appeals that you do not necessarily have the right to bring, such as an appeal to the United States Supreme Court. In these cases, you may not have the right to a lawyer if you cannot afford one. See Ross v. Moffitt, 417 U.S. 600, 610, 94 S. Ct. 2437, 2443, 41 L. Ed. 2d 341, 351 (1974) (holding that a state need not appoint counsel to aid a poor person pursuing a second-tier discretionary appeal).

a simple Internet search. For example, you can try using the term "Public Defender" and the name of one of the four counties mentioned above on a research site like Google or Yahoo.[3]

If you would like to choose your lawyer instead being assigned one, you have fewer options than if you were filing a civil suit. Most Legal Aid offices do not handle criminal appeals. But, some organizations have specific criminal appeals divisions. The Legal Aid Society of New York City is one such organization. See Appendix IV of the JLM for other such groups. You might also contact local prisoners' rights groups, which may refer you to organizations that handle criminal appeals free of charge.[4] Keep in mind that lawyers cannot arrange contingency fees with you for a criminal case. Read Part C below for more information about contingency fees.

C. Attorneys for Civil Cases

If you are looking for a lawyer for a civil case in the federal courts, think about whether it is worth it to bring your case in light of what may happen under the Prison Litigation Reform Act ("PLRA"). You must read Chapter 14 of the JLM, "The Prison Litigation Reform Act," to understand the requirements of the PLRA. Failure to follow the requirements in the PLRA can have negative consequences. For example, you can lose the good-time credit you have earned so far. Some attorneys do not know very much about the PLRA, so you should make sure to know about it yourself so that you can tell your attorney about the requirements.

If you have a civil case, and you are incarcerated in a New York state institution, you may be able to find a lawyer through the Prisoners' Legal Services of New York ("PLS"). PLS is described in the very beginning of Appendix IV of the JLM (Part A(1)(a)). PLS provides assistance to prisoners in state institutions in cases involving habeas corpus, jail time and sentence problems, and warrants and detainers. They may also be able to forward your letter to a private attorney who could handle your Section 1983 case, Article 78 petition, or tort action. But unlike the Legal Aid Society of New York mentioned above, PLS does not handle criminal cases or criminal appeals.

If you are in a city, county, or federal prison, check the other organizations listed in Appendix IV to see if special legal assistance programs serve prisons in your area. Check if a Legal Aid office exists in the county in which you are incarcerated. If none exist in your county, check for offices in the surrounding counties, since these organizations might still be able to help you. Note that Legal Aid organizations usually handle only civil matters, unless they have a special criminal appeals division. Also, many Legal Aid offices may not be able to help you because their government funding does not allow them to help prisoners. However, the Prisoners' Rights Project of the Legal Aid Society of New York does not receive government funding, and it sometimes takes cases that help prisoners.

You can also ask the court to appoint a lawyer for you. You should do this at the same time that you file your poor person's papers.[5] New York law states that a New York court may assign an attorney to you in a civil case at the same time it permits you to proceed as a poor person, but this is very rare.[6] If you can establish your inability to pay a lawyer, then you may be able to get a lawyer assigned to your case if your claim is substantial. For example, you are much more likely to get a lawyer if there is a lot

---

3. To find a list of Federal Public Defenders, visit the Office of Defender Services website, available at http://www.fd.org. Federal Public Defenders either work for the federal government directly, or are paid through federal government funds. Note that Federal Public Defenders take on fewer cases than state or local Public Defenders.

4. The American Civil Liberties Union ("ACLU") publishes a Prisoners' Assistance Directory with contact information for organizations helping prisoners around the U.S. This book costs $35. If you would like to buy it, write to:

National Prison Project of the ACLU
Attn: Prisoners' Assistance Directory
915 15th St. NW, 7th Floor
Washington, D.C. 20005

5. Chapters 2–8 of the JLM discuss how to bring a lawsuit. Chapter 9 of the JLM, "Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence," explains how to file poor person's (also called in forma pauperis) papers in the context of an appeal. You should change the affidavit example shown in Appendix B-3 of JLM, Chapter 9 to show that you are filing poor person's papers in a civil case, not a criminal appeal. See N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 1101 (McKinney 2010). These papers establish that you do not have the money to pay for a lawyer.

6. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 1102(a) (McKinney 2010). The court has the discretion to appoint you a lawyer for free if a lawyer is needed to reach a fair decision. But, you do not have a constitutional or statutory right to a lawyer. See In re Smiley, 36 N.Y.2d 433, 438, 330 N.E.2d 53, 55, 369 N.Y.S.2d 87, 91 (1975) (noting that there is no absolute right to assigned counsel and that the determination to assign an attorney lies within the discretion of the court).

of factual investigation that must be done on your case that you cannot do because you do not have the money. You are also more likely to get a lawyer if the facts of your case depend on the credibility (believability) of people involved.[7] In general, if your case requires you to know very complex legal issues that you yourself may not be able to handle, the court may be more willing to assign you a lawyer.[8] If you are not assigned a lawyer but your case survives the defendants' motion for summary judgment,[9] you should again request that the court assign you a lawyer, as they may be more likely to do so at that stage.[10] Remember, if the court assigns you a lawyer, you will have little or no say as to who your lawyer will be. Thus, you may want to first try on your own to find a lawyer whom you trust and who is committed to helping you.

Remember that many lawyers will be taking your case to earn a fee. Whether you pay a flat fee (fixed amount of money for the lawyer to represent you), an hourly fee, or a contingency fee, you will still be expected to pay for the lawyer's litigation expenses, either before or after money is spent on your case.[11] These expenses may include things like long-distance telephone calls, postage, photocopying, stenographers for depositions, hiring an investigator, medical reports, etc. Unless you get poor person's status, you are also responsible by law for all court costs, such as filing fees.

If you cannot pay a lawyer's fees, a lawyer might take your case for a contingency fee.[12] You will be asked to sign an agreement giving the lawyer a percentage (usually 33%) of whatever money the other side gives you if you win (the "recovery"). If you do not win, your lawyer gets no money. Lawyers cannot ask you for a contingency fee in criminal or domestic relations (family law) cases.

D. Conclusion

Finding a lawyer whom you trust and who you can work with is an important part of your legal process. You should feel that you can be truthful with your lawyer, and that your lawyer is working in your best interest. Even if finding a good lawyer seems frustrating, keep on trying. When you write letters to ask for legal help, provide as much specific information about your case as possible so that a lawyer can see you have a good case.

If you cannot find a lawyer, or you choose not to hire an attorney, you have the option of acting pro se. This means that you represent yourself without the aid of an attorney. You should still try to proceed pro se if you cannot find a lawyer.

---

7. For example, if you claim that your warden assaulted you, the facts of your case would depend on the credibility of you, your warden, witnesses, and maybe other prisoners or staff members who knew you and the warden. In such a case, a court might be more willing to assign you a lawyer.

8. See Hodge v. Police Officers, 802 F.2d 58, 61–62 (2d Cir. 1986) (reaffirming that the Maclin factors apply to judicial determinations of appointment of counsel); Maclin v. Freake, 650 F.2d 885, 887 (7th Cir. 1981) (setting forth the factors for a district court to consider in determining whether to appoint counsel). But see Stewart v. McMickens, 677 F.Supp. 226, 227–228 (S.D.N.Y. 1988) (interpreting Hodge to require appointment of counsel "only where the individualized assessment suggests that an apparently legitimate case cannot proceed without the assistance of an attorney").

9. Summary judgment is when a court decides before a trial that no trial will be necessary, because in applying the law to important undisputed facts, one party is clearly the winner.

10. You should request assignment of counsel again at this stage because if your case survives a summary judgment motion, then the court thinks that it is worthy of a trial or hearing. See Hendricks v. Coughlin, 114 F.3d 390, 393 (2d Cir. 1997) (invalidating lower court's application of a bright line rule of appointing counsel only after plaintiff's case survived a motion for summary judgment).

11. See N.Y. State Bar Assoc., The Courts of New York: A Guide to Court Procedures with a Glossary of Legal Terms 66–68 (2001), http://www.nysba.org/Content/NavigationMenu/PublicResources/GuidetotheiCourtsofNewYork/CourtsofNY2002.pdf (discussing the basis of your legal fees as well as your rights as a client).

12. You cannot be convinced to enter into a contingency fee arrangement by fraud, nor can your lawyer ask for so much money that the lawyer obviously took advantage of you. See Gair v. Peck, 6 N.Y.2d 97, 106, 160 N.E.2d 43, 48, 188 N.Y.S.2d 491, 497–498 (1959) (holding contingency fees may be disallowed where "the amount of the fee, standing alone and unexplained, may be sufficient to show that an unfair advantage was taken of the client or, in other words, that a legal fraud was perpetrated on him"); see also King v. Fox, 7 N.Y.3d 181, 191, 851 N.E.2d 1184, 1191, 818 N.Y.S.2d 833, 840 (2006) (stating a contingency fee may be unconscionable if not proportional to the value of the services rendered).

A JAILHOUSE LAWYER'S MANUAL

Chapter 5: Choosing a Court and a Lawsuit: An Overview of the Options

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

CHAPTER 5

CHOOSING A COURT AND A LAWSUIT: AN OVERVIEW OF THE OPTIONS

A. Introduction

This Chapter will briefly explain the different lawsuits available to you, so that you can decide which type of lawsuit is best for you to bring. Each kind of lawsuit is described in more detail in later chapters of the JLM, so you should read those chapters for more specific information.

The first step you should take when determining what suit to bring is to ask yourself: Do I want to attack the cause of my imprisonment, or the circumstances I am suffering in prison, or both? If you think unlawful circumstances led to your imprisonment, read Part B of this Chapter. If you think something unlawful and damaging has happened to you while in prison—for example, the prison refuses to give you your mail—read Part C. If you are not sure, read both Part B and Part C for more information.

For the best chance of success, you must pay attention to things the law requires you to do when bringing the type of suit you choose. Many lawsuits require you to do certain things before you even begin the lawsuit itself (such as pursue an administrative grievance). Some lawsuits also require you to do certain things once you have begun the lawsuit (such as pay court fees, unless you can qualify for an exception).

Different types of lawsuits have different results, or remedies. For example, some lawsuits allow you to demand that the opposing party pay you money if you win. Other lawsuits do not result in money awards, or damages, but may require the opposing party to do something (such as give you your mail) or stop doing something that is causing you harm. Some types of lawsuits may lead to the reversal of your sentence or conviction, while other types do not provide for such remedies. Once you know what remedies each type of lawsuit can provide, you can decide which type of suit, if any, is right for you to file.

B. Lawsuits to Challenge Your Conviction or Sentence

1. Criminal Appeals

If a New York trial court convicted you of a crime, you have the right to appeal your conviction or your sentence to a higher New York court.[1] Prisoners in other states, and prisoners who were convicted of a federal crime, have a similar right to appeal their convictions.[2] On appeal, the higher, or appellate, court will examine the record of your trial to determine whether the judge or prosecutor committed any legal errors[3] in conducting your trial or sentencing. The appellate court may also determine if the jury properly weighed the evidence at trial, or if your sentence was excessively harsh or longer than the maximum time allowed by law. JLM, Chapter 9, "Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence," explains the criminal appeals process in detail.

2. Post-Conviction Remedies

New York also has three other procedures you can use to challenge the legality of your sentence or conviction. These additional procedures are frequently called post-conviction remedies, because you are asking the court to help you after you have been convicted. These procedures are different from an appeal, because during the appeal process your conviction is not yet final. The three post-conviction remedies are: (1) an Article 440 motion, (2) a petition for state habeas corpus, and (3) a petition for federal habeas corpus. These procedures do not exist only in New York. Chapter 20 of the JLM lists the statutes in every state that are similar to New York's Article 440 motion.[4] JLM, Chapter 21, covers state habeas corpus procedures for Florida and New York. State specific habeas corpus procedures are published in the JLM State Supplements, where available.

Furthermore, prisoners in every state have the right to petition for federal habeas corpus. Federal habeas corpus is described in more detail in JLM, Chapter 13. Keep in mind, however, that an appeal is

---

1. N.Y. Crim. Proc. §450.10 (McKinney 2007).
2. Fed. R. App. P. 4(b).
3. Legal errors are explained in JLM, Chapter 9, "Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence;" JLM, Chapter 20, "Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence;" JLM, Chapter 13, "Federal Habeas Corpus;" and JLM, Chapter 21, "State Habeas Corpus."
4. See JLM, Chapter 20, "Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Conviction or Sentence," Appendix A.

often the most effective way of challenging your sentence or conviction and is required if you want to raise certain arguments later. You should try to appeal your sentence before you use these other remedies.

(a) Article 440 Motion[5]

In an Article 440 motion, you request the trial court to review circumstances that made your conviction or sentence unfair. Examples of these circumstances are a change in the law, discovery of new evidence, an unauthorized or illegal sentence, or misconduct by the prosecutor or judge of which you did not and could not have known at the time of your trial.[6] You may also make an Article 440 motion on the grounds that you were convicted and sentenced in violation of your rights under the U.S. or New York State constitutions.[7] However, you cannot raise any claims that you have already raised or could have raised in your criminal appeal. Relief under an Article 440 motion is a new trial, a new appeal, or a new sentence. Keep in mind that although there is no statute of limitations (time limit) for making an Article 440 motion, a court may not grant your motion if you wait too long after your sentencing to make your motion.[8] Chapter 20 of the JLM, "Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence," discusses Article 440 in great detail, and you should read it before making this motion.

(b) State Habeas Corpus[9]

State habeas corpus petitions challenge the government's right to keep you in prison by asserting that your confinement is not legal. In general, however, New York courts will require you to use Article 440 instead of a petition for state habeas corpus unless you are challenging a parole or bail decision. Relief under habeas corpus is immediate release from custody. Chapter 21 of the JLM, "State Habeas Corpus," explains New York habeas corpus in detail, as well as Florida habeas corpus procedures. State specific habeas corpus procedures are published in the JLM State Supplements, where available. New York habeas corpus is also available to challenge bail determinations, revocations of your parole, extradition, arraignment and delay, misdemeanor complaint and delay, felony complaint and delay, and speedy trial issues.

(c) Federal Habeas Corpus[10]

Federal habeas corpus is a procedure through which you can get a federal judge to review a claim that you were convicted or sentenced in violation of your rights under the federal Constitution. This is different from an Article 440 motion or a petition for state habeas corpus, where you ask a state judge to review your state constitutional claims. Recently, federal judges have been more reluctant to interfere in state criminal proceedings, and, therefore, it has become more difficult for prisoners to get federal courts to review their state claims.[11] Furthermore, federal legislation now requires that prisoners exhaust all forms of state relief, such as filing an Article 440 motion or petitioning for state habeas corpus, before seeking relief in federal court.[12] You also have only one year to make a federal habeas corpus claim from the time you were sentenced or re-sentenced to prison.[13] Chapter 13 of the JLM, "Federal Habeas Corpus," explains federal habeas corpus in detail, and you should read it carefully if you wish to bring a federal habeas claim.

C. Lawsuits to Challenge the Conditions of Your Imprisonment[14]

Before you decide to bring a claim about your prison conditions, it is very important that you read JLM, Chapter 14, "The Prison Litigation Reform Act." The PLRA, as it is know, makes it harder for prisoners to 5. N.Y. Crim. Proc. §§ 440.10–440.65 (McKinney 2005 & 2007 Supp.).

6. N.Y. Crim. Proc. § 440.10(1)(a)–(g) (McKinney 2005 & 2007 Supp.).
7. N.Y. Crim. Proc. § 440.10(1)(h) (McKinney 2005 & 2007 Supp.).
8. See People v. Byrdsong, 161 Misc. 2d 232, 236, 613 N.Y.S.2d 543, 545 (Sup. Ct. Queens County 1994) (declaring that a post-conviction motion filed nine years after trial and seven years after appeals was, in the interest of finality, too long of a time period to continue further litigation).
9. N.Y. C.PL.R. 7001–12 (McKinney 2007).
10. 28 U.S.C. §§ 2241–66 (2006).
11. This concern will not be relevant to you if you are a federal prisoner in a federal institution.
12. The Prison Litigation Reform Act is explained briefly in Part (C), and in detail in JLM, Chapter 14.
13. 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(1) (2006) ("A 1-year period of limitation shall apply to an application for a writ of habeas corpus by a person in custody pursuant to the judgment of a State Court.").
14. You can also file a complaint with the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ), but, this is not a lawsuit, as they do not have to respond to your complaint. See Part C(6) for more details on the DOJ process.

take their complaints about prison conditions to federal court. The PLRA also imposes harsh consequences if you bring your claim incorrectly. Though the PLRA only applies to federal court cases, many states have passed similar laws to reduce the amount of prisoner litigation, especially civil suits. JLM, Chapter 2, "Introduction to Legal Research," will help you learn how to research if your state has laws similar to the PLRA.

For federal court claims, the PLRA requires you pay the full court filing fee even if you proceed in forma pauperis (as a poor person). If you file as a poor person, however, your fees will be taken in installments from your prison account. This means instead of having to pay all the fees at one time, you can pay a little at a time. However, if you file a federal claim in forma pauperis, you risk receiving a strike under the "three strikes" provision of the PLRA. The three strikes provision states that if you have three cases dismissed as frivolous, malicious, or failing to state a valid legal claim, you will have to pay the full filing fee up front to pursue your next claim. If you receive three strikes, you will not be able to use the in forma pauperis procedure. Moreover, if the court finds you have filed a lawsuit for malicious or harassing purposes, you may lose any good-time credit you have earned.[15]

Additionally, the PLRA requires you to use or attempt to use, a process known as "exhausting," all of your administrative remedies before you bring a claim in court.[16] You must pursue all institutional grievance procedures and their appeals before filing a federal claim. Otherwise, your claim will be thrown out and you will not get your filing fee back. Remember, these are only a few of the restrictions imposed by the PLRA. Therefore, you should read Chapter 14 of the JLM before you file any federal claim.

1. Filing an Administrative Grievance

The PLRA requires you to use all administrative grievance programs available to you—both state and federal—before filing a federal court case. Many states also have this requirement. In New York, you must first file a complaint in the New York State Inmate Grievance Program before bringing a lawsuit. See JLM, Chapter 15, "Inmate Grievance Procedures," for more details about the New York program as well as some basic information about similar inmate grievance programs in other states.

The New York State Inmate Grievance Program allows prisoners in any of the facilities of the Department of Correctional Services ("DOCS") to file a complaint. Grievances must be about a DOCS policy, rule, or regulation, either as it is written or as correction officials or officers have applied it to you personally. Issues and problems that do not relate to a DOCS policy, rule, or regulation, or that do not involve you personally cannot be resolved through this program. For example, if your complaint involves a policy, rule, or action of an outside agency, such as the Division of Parole, DOCS cannot help you.[17] Therefore, the PLRA will not prevent you from filing a federal claim without first exhausting the DOCS grievance procedure if your claim does not relate to a DOCS policy, rule, or regulation. You should be certain before proceding, however, and it may still be a good idea to file a grievance just to be sure.

2. 42 U.S.C. § 1983

A federal law, 42 U.S.C. § 1983 ("Section 1983"), allows you to sue state and city prison or jail officials and guards if they deprive you of your federal constitutional rights (like your right to adequate medical care, to be free from assault, and to have access to the courts and to legal materials). You cannot use Section 1983 to attack your conviction or sentence.

When you file a Section 1983 complaint, you must give a detailed description of the incident or practice which you want remedied. If the problem affects many prisoners, you might also be able to bring your lawsuit as a class action. A class action is a suit brought on behalf of you and others who experience the same problem or have the same complaint.[18] You can also add any supplemental state claims to your federal cause of action if a state claim involves the same facts as the alleged federal claim.[19]

---

15. 28 U.S.C. § 1932 (2006).

16. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(a) (2006).

17. State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040 § III (F), Inmate Grievance Program (1998) (as revised Aug. 22, 2003).

18. But keep in mind that you need a lawyer to file a class action. You cannot file one by yourself.

19. See Part C(6)(b) of JLM, Chapter 16, "Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law," for more information on supplementing your federal § 1983 case with state claims.

Section 1983 has a statute of limitations, which is the limit on the amount of time you have before your right to file a lawsuit expires. Section 1983 claims use the state statute of limitations for personal injury suits in the state in which the court is located. The statute of limitations period begins to run when you find out about (or should have found out about) the injury that you are complaining about.

A federal judge who hears a Section 1983 claim may order any one or more of the following remedies: (1) an injunction (an order to prison officials to stop denying you your rights or to take steps to allow you to exercise your rights); (2) money damages (to make up for your injuries); or (3) a declaratory judgment (a statement by the court about the nature and limits of your rights made before they have been violated).

After you determine the district court in which you must file, you should write to the clerk of that district court asking for the forms and information you need. You can complete the filing of your Section 1983 lawsuit simply by mailing the appropriate documents to the clerk. Chapter 16 of the JLM, "Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law," discusses Section 1983 suits in detail.

3. Bivens Actions[20] under 28 U.S.C. § 1331

There is no statute similar to Section 1983 allowing you to sue federal officials who deprive you of your federal rights. However, you can use what is called a "Bivens action" under 28 U.S.C. § 1331(a) to sue federal officials.[21] A Bivens action is similar to a Section 1983 claim. Much of the information applying to Section 1983 claims also applies to Bivens actions. For example, just like a Section 1983 action, you may use a Bivens action to complain about conditions or treatment violating your constitutional rights. The PLRA similarly requires that you exhaust all available administrative remedies before filing your Bivens action.

A Bivens action allows you to sue a federal officer who violated your rights. However, you can only sue a federal officer as an individual, but not as an official. This means that you can sue the officer as a person, but not as a government employee, and therefore your remedies are limited to what the individual can do to make you whole.[22] Additionally, you cannot bring a Bivens action against a federal agency or a private corporation operates a federal prison facility.[23] If you wish to sue a private corporation that operates prison facilities, you might have more success trying to bring a state tort claim. Federal courts also may not listen to your complaint if it sounds like you are suing for a harm that is relatively less serious, such as your personal items being taken from you.

If you bring a Bivens action, you must serve a copy of the summons and complaint on (1) the named defendants, (2) the U.S. Attorney for the district in which you bring your suit, and (3) the U.S. Attorney General in Washington, D.C.[24] If you seek injunctive or declaratory relief (meaning you are asking the court to stop something being done to you, but you are not asking for money), you may file your suit in the federal district where any defendant resides, where the events complained of occurred or are occurring, or where you presently reside.[25] If you are suing under Section 1331 for only money damages, you need to serve the summons and complaint on (1) the U.S. Attorney for the district in which you bring your suit, (2) the U.S. Attorney General in Washington, D.C., and (3) the officer or employee you are suing.[26] To sue for damages, you must file in the federal district in which all the defendants reside or the district in which your claim

---

20. For more information on Bivens actions see Part E of Chapter 16 of the JLM, "Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 & 28 U.S.C. §1331 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law."

21. The claim comes from the case Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Fed. Bureau of Narcotics, 403 U.S. 388, 389, 91 S. Ct. 1999, 2001, 29 L. Ed. 2d 619, 622 (1971) (allowing a lawsuit against federal agents claiming a 4th Amendment violation).

22. See Robinson v. Overseas Military Sales Corp., 21 F.3d 502, 510 (2d Cir. 1994) (stating that a Bivens action "must be brought against the federal officers involved in their individual capacities."). This is because if you sue an officer in his "official capacity," it is like suing the federal government, and under the concept of "sovereign immunity," the federal government cannot be sued.

23. See Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. v. Meyer, 510 U.S. 471, 486, 114 S. Ct. 996, 1006, 127 L. Ed. 2d 308, 324 (1994) (holding that Bivens suits cannot be brought against a federal agency); see also Corr. Servs. Corp. v. Malesko, 534 U.S. 61, 63, 122 S. Ct. 515, 517, 151 L. Ed. 2d 456, 461 (2001) (refusing to extend Bivens to allow recovery against a private company operating a halfway house under contract with the Federal Bureau of Prisons).

24. Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(i).

25. 28 U.S.C. §1391(e) (2006).

26. Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(i)(3).

arose (where the events you are complaining about occurred). [27] All service must be by registered or certified mail. [28]

4. Tort Actions in State Courts

As noted above, if you were injured by a state official or employee, and as a result your constitutional rights were violated, you may file a Section 1983 suit. This is a claim under federal law even though the person who injured you is a state official or employee. You may also file a tort action in state courts against anyone who deliberately or carelessly injured you, or damaged or destroyed your property. You can file a state tort action regardless of whether they violated any of your constitutional rights, and regardless of whether you are also filing a Section 1983 federal suit.[29] Even if you are not filing a Section 1983 suit, you can bring a tort action in state courts. [30]

In New York, if the person who injured you was a state official, state employee, or someone acting under the authority of the state (like a private doctor the state hired), you may sue New York State in the Court of Claims. The Court of Claims only allows such claims against the state and can only award money damages; it cannot issue an injunction. Also, before filing suit in the Court of Claims, you must exhaust administrative procedures, like the Inmate Grievance Program, and you must pay the filing fee. Read JLM, Chapter 17, "The State's Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions," for more information about tort suits.

5. Tort Suits in Federal Courts

If you are a federal prisoner and want to sue for a simple tort violation, you must sue using the Federal Tort Claims Act ("FTCA")[31] instead of a Bivens action. The FTCA creates the procedures to sue the federal government for harm federal employees may have caused you or your property while they were doing their jobs. You must first send in a completed Form 95, "Claim for Damage, Injury, or Death," and ask for damages from the federal agency whose employee allegedly caused the harm.[32] Many FTCA cases go through the agency and are settled there. If your claim is denied, however, you may file suit in federal court. Remember, if you have not gone through the administrative remedies before going to federal court, the judge will dismiss your case.

6. Article 78 Proceedings

Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law allows you to go to court to challenge decisions made by New York State administrative bodies or officers.[33] Like the other suits mentioned in Part C of this chapter, you cannot use Article 78 to challenge your conviction or sentence. Article 78 is useful to challenge decisions made by administrative bodies like the Department of Correctional Services, the Board of Parole, and the Temporary Release Committee, or by state employees such as prison guards and administrators. You may challenge decisions made by bodies like these if you think they did something wrong when making a decision in one of the following four ways: (1) they acted beyond their legal authority; (2) they failed to do something required by law; (3) they made an unreasonable or grossly unfair (arbitrary) decision; or (4) they made a decision at a hearing without enough evidence to warrant such a decision.[34] Even though you cannot challenge your sentence or conviction under Article 78, you may challenge the Board of Parole's decision to revoke your parole, which, if successful, would lead to your release from prison. Chapter 22 of the JLM, "How to Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the N.Y. C.P.L.R." discusses Article 78 proceedings in greater detail.

---

27. Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(i).
28. Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(i)(1).
29. If someone did violate your constitutional rights, you may also file a tort action in a federal court.
30. If you file a tort action in New York state court, you should file your claim in the New York Court of Claims.
31. Federal Tort Claims Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1346(b) (2000).
32. You can get this form by writing to the clerk of the federal district court in which you plan to file your action. See U.S. Dept. of Justice Civil Division Forms – Form SF 95, available at http://www.justice.gov/forms/dojform.php (last visited October14, 2010).
33. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 7801 (McKinney 1994 & Supp. 2006).
34. N.Y. C.P.L.R. §§ 7803(1)–(4) (McKinney 1994 & Supp. 2006).

7. Challenging Unconstitutional Prison Conditions Through the Department of Justice

The U.S. Department of Justice ("DOJ") has authority under the Civil Rights of Institutionalized Persons Act to investigate state and local institutions for unconstitutional conditions.[35] This unit does not investigate federal institutions; you must use another agency like the Bureau of Prisons if you want to file a complaint about a federal prison.[36] The DOJ will only investigate allegations of systemic abuse—problems experienced by many prisoners. If you think your prison suffers from widespread constitutional abuses, you might consider writing to the DOJ. The DOJ cannot provide individual relief, nor can it bring a claim regarding your criminal sentence. For these matters, you should contact an attorney.[37]

The Special Litigation Section of the DOJ protects the constitutional and federal statutory rights of persons confined in certain institutions owned or operated by state and local governments. These institutions include facilities for individuals who are mentally ill or developmentally disabled, nursing homes, juvenile correctional facilities, and adult jails and prisons. The department's recent focus has included work on abuse in nursing homes, juvenile facilities, sexual victimization of women prisoners, and the unmet medical needs of prisoners and pre-trial detainees.

The Special Litigation Section enforces federal civil rights statutes in four major areas: (1) conditions of institutional confinement; (2) law enforcement misconduct; (3) access to reproductive health facilities and places of religious worship; and (4) protection of institutionalized persons' religious exercise rights. The DOJ receives a large number of claims every year and cannot investigate every claim. The DOJ also takes a long time to conduct an investigation, so it is important to be patient if you do bring a claim.

If you write to the DOJ, try to be as specific and clear as possible. Your letter should include your name, prisoner ID number, race, the length of your sentence and how much of it you have served, and a description of what happened or the condition you believe to be unconstitutional. When you talk about what happened, be sure to include all relevant information, including how many times the abuse happened, the names and races of the people involved, and whether the abuse has happened to other prisoners. If you know of others who have had similar experiences, encourage them to write letters too. Send the letter to:

Special Litigation Section
Civil Rights Division, U.S. Department of Justice
950 Pennsylvania Avenue NW
Patrick Henry Building, Room 5028
Washington, D.C. 20530
Telephone: (877) 218–5228; (202) 514–6255; Fax: (202) 514–0212; (202) 514–6273

If you are filing a complaint under the Americans with Disabilities Act, you must write to a different division of the DOJ. JLM, Chapter 28, "Rights of Prisoners with Disabilities," will help you file this complaint. A summary of the Special Litigation Section's work is also available on the DOJ website at http://www.justice.gov/crt/split/index.php (last visited October 17, 2010).

D. Conclusion

When considering bringing a lawsuit, you should determine the details of your grievance. Defining your problem will help you decide which laws or procedures are the most appropriate for your situation. After considering your issue, decide whether you are challenging your conviction or sentence, or if you are challenging the conditions of your imprisonment. Read additional chapters of the JLM that relate to your issue to help you make a decision. Next, learn what will be required of you for different types of legal action. Review the different types of suits described above for each type of legal problem, and think about what is required to be successful. In addition to comparing the legal requirements of the different types of actions, be sure to think back to what your problem is, who is responsible, and decide what your goals are for fixing that problem. Since different lawsuits provide different types of solutions, you should evaluate your potential courses of action with your goal in mind. At that point, you will be in the best position to decide if legal action is right for you, and if so, which type of lawsuit you should pursue.

35. 42 U.S.C. § 1997 (2000). Some federal courts in New York have held that, under the PLRA, prisoners must exhaust the DOJ's disability complaint procedure in addition to their internal prison grievance procedure before filing a disability-related complaint in federal court. Other courts have disagreed. For more information about whether your complaint would qualifiy as an "administrative remedy" under the PLRA, read Part E(1) of JLM, Chapter 14.

36. For more information, see http://www.bop.gov (last visited October 17, 2010).

37. See http://www.justice.gov/crt/split/complaints.php (last visited October 17, 2010).

APPENDIX A

LAWSUITS THAT CHALLENGE YOUR CONVICTION OR SENTENCE

Type of Suit	Characteristics of the Suit	Where Do I Bring My Claim: State or Federal Court?	Important Things to Remember	JLM Chapters you should consult
Criminal Appeal	A higher court looks at your case to see if the lower court, judge, or prosecutor committed any legal errors during the trial or sentencing.	It depends on where you were first convicted. If you were convicted in a state trial court, you will appeal to a higher state court. If you were convicted in a federal court, you will appeal to a higher federal court.	The higher court can only look for legal errors, not factual ones.	Chapter 9: "Appealing Your Sentence or Conviction"
Article 440	A trial court reviews circumstances that may have made your conviction or sentence unfair.	You can bring this claim only in the New York state courts. See JLM, Chapter 20, Appendix A for similar laws in other states.	You cannot raise any claims you have already raised or could have raised in a criminal appeal.	Chapter 20: "Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence"
Federal Habeas Corpus	A federal judge reviews your claim that your rights were violated under the U.S. Constitution.	You may bring a federal habeas corpus claim only in federal court.	You must have tried to use all the relief that your state provides before seeking federal habeas corpus. Remember that you have a one-year time limit to bring a federal habeas corpus action. You must have exhausted all your remedies before this. Judges do not often grant habeas relief.	Chapter 13: "Federal Habeas Corpus"
State Habeas Corpus	In New York, state habeas corpus is used mainly to challenge bail determinations and revocations of parole.	You may bring a state habeas corpus claim only in state court.	In New York, try Article 440 before you bring a state habeas petition. Courts will generally make you use Article 440 unless you are challenging bail or a parole decision.	Chapter 21: "State Habeas Corpus"

APPENDIX B

LAWSUITS THAT CHALLENGE THE CONDITIONS OF YOUR IMPRISONMENT

Type of Suit	Characteristics of the Suit	Which Court-State or Federal?	Important Things to Know	JLM Chapters you must consult
Administrative Grievance	You may file a complaint to an administrative body. In prison, this means that you will first file a complaint with your prison.	An administrative grievance is not filed with a court, but the PLRA requires you to bring an administrative grievance before challenging prison conditions in federal court.	Make sure you know about the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) and its requirements. See JLM, Chapter 14, "The Prison Litigation Reform Act."	Chapter 15: "Inmate Grievance Procedures"
42 U.S.C. § 1983	You may sue state or city prison officials if they violate your federal constitutional rights and federal statutory rights "under color" of state law.	Section 1983 claims are usually filed in federal court.	You cannot use a Section 1983 claim to challenge your conviction or sentence. You must follow the state statute of limitations (deadline) for personal injury suits and file your complaint by this deadline. Consider whether you might also bring your suit as a class action. You cannot use a Section 1983 claim if you are complaining about a federal official.	Chapter 16: "Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S. § 1331 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law"
28 U.S.C. § 1331 (Bivens Actions)	You use this type of lawsuit to complain about federal officials who violate your federal constitutional rights. This is the federal equivalent to a Section 1983 suit, so much of the information about Section 1983 suits also applies to Bivens actions.	You may only bring a Bivens action in federal court.	You can sue a federal official only in his individual capacity, not in his official capacity. You cannot sue federal agencies through a Bivens action. You cannot use this suit to sue private corporations that work with the federal government to operate your prison facility (use a tort action instead).	Chapter 16: "Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S. § 1331 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law"

Type of Suit	Characteristics of the Suit	Which Court-State or Federal?	Important Things to Know	JLM Chapters you must consult
Tort Actions	In addition to a Section 1983 suit or a Bivens action (above) you can file a tort action against anyone who deliberately or carelessly injured you or your property. You can bring a tort claim by itself.	You may bring a tort action in federal or state court.	In New York, you can sue the state of New York in the Court of Claims if the person who injured you was a state official or employee. Remember, if you are a federal prisoner, you must first exhaust administrative remedies under the Federal Tort Claims Act and Prison Litigation Reform Act before bringing a claim in federal court.	Chapter 17: "The State's Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions"
Article 78	You may challenge decisions made by administrative bodies or officers in court (for example, the Board of Parole, or state-employed prison guards). You may challenge decisions that may be unlawful or actions that show the administrative bodies failed to follow the law.	You may bring an Article 78 suit only in New York State Court.	You cannot use this type of lawsuit to challenge your conviction or sentence.	Chapter 22: "How to Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules"
U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ)	The DOJ will investigate only allegations of systemic abuse (continued unconstitutional behavior that harms everyone) in state and local institutions.	This type of claim is brought in federal court.	The DOJ cannot provide individual relief—it will only look into problems that are experienced by many prisoners. The DOJ also will not look into problems in federal institutions. If you decide to write to the DOJ Special Litigation Unit, make sure your letter is as clear and specific as possible.	There are no JLM Chapters on this subject. For more information, go to: http://www.usdoj.gov/crt/split/complaints.htm

A JAILHOUSE LAWYER'S MANUAL

Chapter 6:
An Introduction to Legal Documents

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

CHAPTER 6

AN INTRODUCTION TO LEGAL DOCUMENTS*

A. Introduction: The Right and Responsibilities of Self-Representation

You have the right to bring your own lawsuit and to represent yourself in court. This is called bringing a lawsuit pro se.[1] Although it is always helpful to have the aid of a lawyer, it is not always possible to get legal assistance, especially in the early stages of a lawsuit. If you plan to start a legal action, it is crucial that you familiarize yourself with the documents that you will need to provide to the court. Courts require that certain documents are prepared and filed at specific times in order to begin and maintain a lawsuit. The purpose of this Chapter is to give you a general introduction to legal documents and a basic framework that explains the order in which documents are required in most cases.

Each type of lawsuit described in the JLM has at least one plaintiff or petitioner and at least one defendant or respondent.[2] In some lawsuits, there may be more than one plaintiff. For example, several prisoners who were all mistreated in the same way can bring a lawsuit together. Your lawsuit will be stronger if you can show that you have been a victim of a regular practice that is illegal, or if you can demonstrate that several people suffered the same mistreatment. You may even be able to bring a lawsuit in the name of a group of people without having to ask them all to join your lawsuit as plaintiffs. Such a lawsuit is called a class action and may be very powerful.[3] If you are suing prison officials who are mistreating several prisoners, but you are the only plaintiff, the prison officials can have the case thrown out by merely improving conditions for you and no one else. This is because the court only has power over those people named in the suit—once the prison officials have improved conditions for you, your case is moot and will be dismissed. If this happens, the court cannot do anything about the conditions or mistreatment of others unless another suit is brought. On the other hand, if you bring a class action naming all the prisoners who are suffering as plaintiffs, prison officials may have to improve conditions for everyone before the court can dismiss the case. You should try to find a lawyer for this type of case.

In some cases, there may also be more than one defendant. Under the rule of supervisor liability (respondeat superior), an employer may sometimes be held liable for the illegal acts of his or her employees. Therefore, you should always name as a defendant the individual who injured you, as well as that individual's superiors up to the Commissioner of Corrections.

If you are a plaintiff, you would begin your lawsuit by notifying the court and the person you are suing that you intend to sue. This is done by filing papers (discussed in more detail below) with the court. In these initial papers, you explain the problem you are having and what you would like the court to do about it. Once the court receives these papers, the person you are suing is allowed to defend himself by filing papers with the court that respond to your charges. At this point, you are generally given another opportunity to file more papers, in which you respond to what your opponent has stated in his papers. In most cases, this exchange of claims and responses to the charges occurs before the court makes any decisions on the substance (also called the "merits") of the lawsuit itself.

B. The Legal Documents

All lawsuits, regardless of type, require the same basic legal documents. These documents usually fall into five categories: (1) papers needed to start the lawsuit; (2) supporting papers; (3) miscellaneous papers; (4) the answer from the party being sued; and (5) the reply to that answer by the party bringing the lawsuit. Although they serve the same functions, the names of these documents may differ depending upon the

---

* This Chapter was written by Taryn A. Merkl based in part on previous versions by Colleen Romaka and other former members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review.

1. New York Prisoners' Legal Services publishes a newsletter entitled "Pro se," which discusses how to proceed pro se in various contexts. Many libraries have it. The newsletter is also available from Prisoners' Legal Services. To subscribe, send in a request with your name, DIN number, and facility to Pro Se, 114 Prospect Street, Ithaca, NY 14850.

2. The terms "plaintiff" and "petitioner" are both used to refer to the person who brings a lawsuit. Similarly, the terms "defendant" and "respondent" are both used to refer to the person who is being sued. Which terms are used will vary depending on the court in which the case is brought.

3. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 (the Federal Rule of Civil Procedure laying out the procedures for class actions); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 901–09 (McKinney 2006) (the rule laying out the procedures for class actions in New York State courts).

particular lawsuit you choose to file. For example, in a federal habeas corpus action, the paper needed to start a lawsuit is called a petition, while in a criminal appeal it is called a notice of appeal.

JLM, Chapters 2–5 describe in detail the various types of lawsuits that you may bring and provide you with instructions on how to prepare the forms that you need for each type of suit. A summary of different types of lawsuits, based on New York procedure, is also given in JLM Chapter 5. This Part provides an overview of the legal documents you will need to prepare if you decide to bring one of the actions discussed in the JLM. The chart at the end of this Chapter matches the various names given to the five basic categories of papers to each type of lawsuit that you may bring.

What comes to most people's minds when they think about a lawsuit is a courtroom trial. However, before any case actually gets into court, certain legal documents must be prepared and filed with the court. If you are appearing (bringing a lawsuit) pro se (without a lawyer), you are responsible for preparing the necessary documents. Therefore, it is important that you read Chapters 2–5 of the JLM, and carefully follow the directions on how to write the necessary documents. This Part discusses the functions of the five basic types of legal documents necessary to start and maintain the various legal actions.

1. Papers Needed to Start a Lawsuit

Once you have determined what type of action you would like to bring, you must file papers with the court explaining why you are seeking help from the court (pleadings). In these documents, you will usually state what your opponent has done to you and what you want the court to do about it. You will also explain the basis of the court's jurisdiction (power) to hear your case. Depending upon what type of lawsuit you bring, the names of the papers may differ. The chart at Appendix A of this Chapter provides the names of these papers for each lawsuit. You should refer to the section of the JLM describing your legal problem in detail to determine how these documents should be prepared.

2. Supporting Papers

In the papers that you file to start a lawsuit you will make certain claims about what your opponent did to you and why you are seeking help from the court. At this point in most lawsuits, the court will need some sort of evidence that supports your claims. Two types of supporting evidence, affidavits and memorandums, are discussed below:

(a) Affidavits

Supporting papers usually take the form of an affidavit. An affidavit is a sworn (either notarized or signed by a friend of the court) written statement, by a party to the lawsuit, or by a witness, supporting the claims you made in your starting papers. An affidavit's purpose is to provide the court with some factual evidence that supports your claims. Therefore, it should contain specific facts. It may consist of your own testimony and/or that of someone else who witnessed or has firsthand knowledge of the facts of your claim.

(b) Memorandum of Law

In some suits, a legal memorandum (or brief) is required. A legal memorandum is a statement of the law (as opposed to the facts) on a particular legal issue. A memorandum discusses the legal arguments upon which your claim is based. In your memorandum, you present the facts of your case, and compare them to similar cases. The memorandum of law serves a purpose similar to that of the affidavit—it demonstrates support for the claims that you made in your starting papers. The legal memorandum, an example of which appears in Appendix B of this Chapter, should begin with a statement of the facts in your case. The body of the memorandum should deal with all of the legal issues that you think arise from the facts of your case. The legal issues will be based on your legal rights or laws that provide a privilege. You should research these questions of law and explain to the court how other courts have dealt with the issues you are raising. Chapter 2 of the JLM, "Introduction to Legal Research," explains how to research an issue in the law library.

3. Miscellaneous Papers

You may also file miscellaneous papers, which usually deal with procedural questions of law (the process by which your case is decided). These questions of law differ from substantive questions of law (the factual and legal issues of your case), but they nevertheless can affect your chances of success in the lawsuit. For example, they may include a request for a lawyer, whose expertise could make the difference between whether you win or lose your case. They may also include a request to file (or proceed) as a poor person, known as in forma pauperis, which would free you from having to pay the normal fees and filing costs necessary to bring a lawsuit.[4] The miscellaneous papers that you will need to file will differ depending on the type of lawsuit you are bringing. You should refer to the chart at Appendix A of this Chapter to determine what papers are appropriate for your particular lawsuit. You should also refer to the specific section of the JLM that discusses your legal problem in detail in order to determine how to prepare these documents.

4. Answering Papers from the Opposing Party

The party you sue is required to answer your starting papers. There are several ways to answer. The answering party may simply admit or deny the allegations in your papers. The answering party may also state that he does not know if your statements are true. This is the equivalent of a denial.[5] If the party you have sued answers without replying to one of your factual allegations, the court will conclude that he has admitted that your allegation is true.[6]

Another option that the defendant has is to attack the sufficiency of your starting papers by raising certain defenses.[7] The opposing party will typically raise these types of defenses in a motion to dismiss your complaint. If the opposing party wins such a motion, the court has the option of either dismissing your case or granting you the opportunity to amend your complaint and correct the errors. If you are given an opportunity to amend your complaint, you should think of the amended complaint as new starting papers, which your opponent needs to answer.

An example of an answer that would attack the sufficiency of your starting papers is a "motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim." By filing this motion, your opponent argues you have no legal claim.[8] For example, you might want to sue a prison official because you feel you do not get to spend enough time outside each day. But if there is no law requiring prison officials to allow prisoners to be outdoors for a certain number of hours each day, your claim could be dismissed upon the prison official's motion because no matter what the facts were, you could not show the official violated a law. In this example, the judge would look at the pleadings (the papers you filed to start the case and your opponent's motion to dismiss), and would dismiss your case because there would be no basis for the court to give any relief for that claim.

Another type of answer that your opponent can submit is a "motion for summary judgment." In a summary judgment motion, the opposing party states that there are no facts in dispute (as opposed to legal issues in dispute) and argues that there is no way that you can introduce facts to prove your claim. Therefore, he is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.[9] This means that a judge may decide the case without the case ever going before a jury. For example, you might bring a Section 1983 action[10] claiming that your constitutional right under the Eighth Amendment to be protected against "cruel and unusual punishment" was violated because a prison guard hit you. The opposing party might file a summary judgment motion claiming one violent incident does not establish "cruel and unusual punishment" within the meaning of the Eighth Amendment.[11] The judge will read the legal papers and consider the facts in the light most favorable to the non-moving party (the party that opposes the summary judgment motion). This means that the judge will give the benefit of the doubt to the party opposing summary judgment. If the judge believes that there is no way you can demonstrate that the single incident violated the Eighth Amendment,

---

4. Under the Prison Litigation Reform Act ("PLRA"), prisoners filing claims in court are required to pay full court filing fees. The full fee will gradually be deducted from your prison account. For a fuller discussion of the PLRA and how it affects your rights, see JLM, Chapter 14.

5. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(b) (rule on defenses and forms of denials for actions in federal court); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3018(a) (McKinney 1991) (rule for denials and defenses in New York State courts).

6. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(d) (federal rule regarding the effect of a party's failure to deny allegations); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3018(a) (McKinney 1991) (rule regarding the effect of a party's failure to deny allegations in New York State courts).

7. For a list of the seven defenses that may be made by motion under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, see Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b). For a list of comparable grounds on which a motion may be made in New York courts, see N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3211(a) (McKinney 2005). You must check the court rules for your particular state or federal court for a complete list of defenses.

8. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3211(a)(7) (McKinney 2005).

9. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 (the federal rule for summary judgment); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3212 (McKinney 2005) (the New York rule for summary judgment).

10. See Chapter 16 of the JLM for a discussion of 42 U.S.C. § 1983.

11. See Chapter 24 of the JLM for an explanation of Eighth Amendment protections in assault cases.

the motion for summary judgment will be granted. If the judge thinks that a reasonable jury could find in your favor, however, then he will deny summary judgment, and your case will move forward toward trial.

Summary judgment is different than a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. In a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, the judge only relies on the pleadings (allegations submitted to the court) to make a decision. However, when your opponent files a motion for summary judgment, the judge decides the motion based on affidavits submitted by both sides. This means that if your opponent submits an affidavit in support of a summary judgment motion, you have the right to introduce affidavits to support your claim and oppose the motion.[12] When you are opposing a motion for summary judgment, you should demonstrate in an affidavit that there are disputed facts that, if considered by a reasonable person (like someone on a jury), would tend to support your claim. If possible, you should seek to amend your complaint (or other introductory papers) to correct any possible defects.

In addition to attempts to have your case dismissed, your opponent may choose to file answering papers that require you to file more papers. These types of answers may include a "motion for a more definite statement" because your complaint was not specific enough.[13] This type of motion may be granted in order to give the party being sued a chance to understand and answer the charges made. It may also simply be a delaying device used by your opponent to buy more time. If this motion is granted, you will have to amend your complaint to explain your claims in more detail. An answering party may also file a counterclaim against you.[14] If a counterclaim is brought against you, this means that the opposing party is alleging that you did some harm to him. For example, if you sue a prison guard for assaulting you, the prison guard may answer in turn with a claim that you injured him instead. If a counterclaim is filed, you must file a reply stating your version of the events.[15]

Finally, the party you sued may not be able to respond to your charges within the time limits given to answer. If this happens, he will probably request an extension from the court.[16] Courts usually grant these requests. If, however, the opposing party does not file (1) an answer to your charges; (2) a motion attacking the validity of your charges; or, (3) a motion for an extension of time, you have the right to request that the judge enter a default judgment, which is a judgment in your favor.[17] A default judgment assumes that your charges are true because the party you sued did not respond to them. To get a default judgment, you must file a request that a default judgment be entered with the clerk of the court. You will later request the same court to order the relief you requested in your starting papers.

5. Your Reply to the Opposing Party's Answer

Once you receive the opposing party's answer, you should read it closely. Carefully reading your opponent's answering papers will help you determine the arguments he will make as the case progresses. For example, an opponent might raise an affirmative defense in the answer, such as a claim of contributory negligence.[18] Once you know what facts and arguments your opponent will use to prove a claim, you will be able to counter them effectively. (You should also note that an affirmative defense may not be used at trial if it was not raised in the answer to the complaint,[19] although a court will usually grant the defendant permission to amend an answer to add an affirmative defense).

In some instances, such as when the opposing party files a counterclaim in his or her answer, you may be required to respond to the charges. If a reply is required by the court and you do not file, everything in the

---

12. If you would like to introduce any documents to support your opposition to the motion, these must be "authenticated" by an affidavit unless they are already in the court's record. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e)(1); Canada v. Blain's Helicopters, Inc., 831 F.2d 920, 925 (9th Cir. 1987). This means you should have someone who has knowledge swear that the documents are genuine and reliable. A person has the requisite knowledge to authenticate a document in an affidavit if he could authenticate a document during trial under the evidence rules. See, e.g., Fed. R. Evid. 901. Also note that some documents, such as public records and newspapers, are "self-authenticating," which means that they are considered so trustworthy that they do not need to be sworn to in an affidavit. See Fed. R. Evid. 902.

13. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(e); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3024(a) (McKinney 1991).

14. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 13; N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3019(a) (McKinney 1991).

15. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 7(a); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3011 (McKinney 1991).

16. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 6(b); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 2004 (McKinney 1997).

17. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 55; N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3215 (McKinney 2005).

18. This means that the other side will say that your carelessness somehow helped cause the injury and therefore they are not (fully) responsible.

19. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(d); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3211(e) (McKinney 2005).

answer will be accepted as true by the judge and you will lose your lawsuit. Even if you are not required to reply to the opposing party's answer, but the court allows you to do so, you should go ahead and prepare a well-reasoned reply to the statements that your opponent makes. It is in your best interest to file and serve a written reply whenever it is possible to do so.

Chapters 9–13, 15–17, and 20–22 explain in detail the types of claims you can bring and the kinds of documents you will need to maintain such actions. In each Chapter, there are examples of the papers you need to file. The table in Appendix A will help you to familiarize yourself with the names of the papers each suit requires.

C. Conclusion

If you are thinking about taking legal action, you should take the following steps:

(1) identify the law that has been broken;
(2) determine the type of lawsuit you need to file; and
(3) gather the necessary documents.

Appendix A of this Chapter lists types of lawsuits and forms the court requires for each type of suit.

If you file a lawsuit, you will need:

(1) papers to start a lawsuit;
(2) papers supporting your lawsuit; and
(3) other important papers required by the court.

After you have filed your lawsuit, the opposing party should respond to your claim. If the opposing party responds, you should reply. If the opposing party does not respond, you should file papers with the court requesting a default judgment.

APPENDIX A

LEGAL DOCUMENTS TABLE

Type of Suit	Papers to Start Suit	Supporting Papers	Miscellaneous Papers	Answers	Replies
Criminal Appeal	• Notice of Appeal	• Papers to Perfect Appeal	• Poor Person's Papers • Bail Request Papers • Papers for Requesting Extension of Time	• Opposing Brief	• Reply Brief
Article 440	• Notice of Motion to Vacate Judgment • Notice of Motion to Set Aside Sentence	• Affidavits	• Poor Person's Papers	• Answer
Federal Habeas Corpus	• Petition	• Affidavits	• Motion for Appointment of Counsel	• Answer	• Traverse
State Habeas Corpus	• Petition	• Check requirements of your state	• Notice of Time and Place of Hearing • Poor Person's Papers	• Return	• Reply
42 U.S.C. § 1983	• Summons • Complaint • Order to Show Cause and Temporary Restraining Order	• Affidavit	• Poor Person's Papers	• Answer • Motion to Dismiss	• Reply
Tort Action	• Notice of Intention to File Claim • Notice for Permission to File Late Claim • Verified Tort Claim	• Affidavits	• Affidavit to Request Reduction of Filing Fees • Notice of Appeal	• Demand for Bill of Particulars	• Bill of Particulars
Article 78	• Order to Show Cause • Notice of Petition • Verified Petition • Request for Judicial Intervention • Application for an Index Number	• Affidavits	• Affidavit to Request Reduction or Waiver of Filing Fees	• Answer	• Reply

APPENDIX B

SAMPLE MEMORANDUM OF LAW[20]

This Appendix contains an example of a memorandum of law, or a brief. This particular memorandum was submitted to a federal district court in opposition to defendants' motion for summary judgment on a Section 1983 claim for excessive force in violation of the Eighth Amendment.[21] We are including this in the JLM so you may study the form and style of a brief. The names of all parties and witnesses and facts have been changed. The footnotes have been added to clarify and explain things to you but should not go in your memorandum. In addition, you should not use the cases cited in this sample without verifying they are still good law. See JLM, Chapter 2, for information on legal research.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

Robert K. Simms, Petitioner, - against - Corrections Officer William D. Bennett, New York State Penitentiary, and Sergeant Paul J. Wright, Respondents.	:	97 Civ No._____

PLAINTIFF'S MEMORANDUM OF LAW IN OPPOSITION TO DEFENDANTS' MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Plaintiff Robert K. Simms ("Simms") respectfully submits this Memorandum of Law in Opposition to Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment.

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

On January 17, 1990, defendant William D. Bennett ("Bennett"), a corrections officer at the New York State Penitentiary ("Penitentiary"), physically assaulted and threatened to beat and kill Robert Simms, an inmate awaiting processing. Defendant Paul J. Wright ("Wright"), Bennett's supervisor, knew of the attack and death threats, yet did nothing to intervene and protect Robert Simms. Simms brings this lawsuit under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 against Officer Bennett for his malicious and sadistic use of excessive force and against Sergeant Wright for his deliberate indifference to the attack and threats of beating and death.

Defendants have moved for summary judgment arguing (i) Simms suffered de minimis physical injuries and unactionable psychological pain; (ii) the force used by Bennett, if any, was reasonable and necessary; and (iii) Wright did not act with deliberate indifference because he did not witness the physical attack and threats of beating and death. Defendants are wrong on both the law and the facts.

First, the use of force here was more than de minimis. Bennett shoved Simms, pushed him into a wall, swung him around the search room, and punched him in the arms, legs, and face, while simultaneously screaming that he should shoot, stab, and beat him. As a result of the attack, Simms suffered more than de minimis physical and mental pain, sustaining not only bruises to his arms, legs, and face, but also serious and extensive mental pain lasting to the present.

---

20. This memorandum of law is based on a submission drafted by Daniel M. Abuhoff and Nicole A. Ortsman-Dauer at Debevoise & Plimpton LLP.

21. For more information on how to bring a claim under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, see Chapter 16 of the JLM. Chapter 24 of the JLM discusses the law that applies to your right to be free from assault in prison.

The Eighth Amendment's prohibition on the unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain encompasses both physical and mental pain.

Second, the evidence demonstrates that there was no need for force. Simms provoked no attack. He was not violent. He did not refuse to follow Officer Bennett's instructions. As indicated by the content of Bennett's threats, the attack—fueled by Bennett's personal feelings of hatred and disgust—was malicious, sadistic, and for the very purpose of causing Simms harm.

Finally, the supervising officer, Sergeant Wright, was deliberately indifferent to Simms's plight. Wright admits to hearing noise from the search room. Indeed, Wright was told by Simms what was going on. Yet, Wright chose to do nothing to stop the attack.

Defendants' motion for summary judgment should be denied.

1. STATEMENT OF FACTS

(a) Robert Simms' Child Pornography Convictions

Plaintiff Robert Simms, a black male in his late forties, is a convicted child pornographer. The last conviction took place on January 10, 1990. As a result of that conviction, Simms was sentenced to five years imprisonment, which he served at the New York State Penitentiary from January 17, 1990 to January 16, 1995. (Simms Aff. ¶ 3).[22]

(b) Officer Bennett Attacks Robert Simms and Sergeant Wright Does Nothing

Simms arrived at the Penitentiary at approximately 9:30 a.m. on January 17, 1990. He was led into the bullpen holding cell and sat on a bench as he waited to be processed. In addition to Simms, there was only one other person in the bullpen. (Simms Aff. ¶ 5; Simms Dep. 20:12–13).

On the morning of January 17, 1990, defendant Officer Bennett and Officer Howard Lewis ("Lewis") worked the 8:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. shift in the search area of the Penitentiary. (Bennett Dep. 35:25–27; Lewis Dep. 24:8–10). Sergeant Wright, working the same shift, was the supervisor on duty. (Wright Dep. 22:36–24:5).

Corrections officers at the Penitentiary all have the opportunity to learn incoming inmates' charges. Not only do corrections officers discuss, on occasion, inmates' charges, but officers working in the booking and search areas have access to that information. (Bennett Dep. 43:15–19, 52:9–55:12, 62:24–64:14; Lewis Dep. 27:7–15, 36:24–37:5). Simms sat on the bullpen bench for approximately one hour when he heard Officer Bennett shouting from inside the search room, located a few yards from the bullpen: "He's pond scum. That low-life piece of trash kiddie porn lover deserves to be killed. Someone should kill him." (Simms Aff. ¶ 12; Simms Dep. 21:15–24:7; Compl. Pt. II at 1).

In order to determine the source of and reason for the threats, Simms stood up from the bullpen bench and approached the bullpen bars. Bennett approached the bullpen, stood very close to Simms, and screamed: "You revolting cradle robber. Get the hell out of my face, you pedophile. You nauseate me! Get the hell away from the bars before I beat you senseless." Simms was terrified and did not know how to respond. He had done nothing to provoke the threats. (Simms Aff. ¶ 12; Compl. Pt. II at 1).

Officer Bennett, becoming even more aggressive, continued his verbal attack for the next half hour. He screamed: "If I had a knife, I'd stab you in your chest right now. Get away from the bars you disgusting pond scum pervert!" Simms became very anxious. He thought he was going to be killed by Officer Bennett or by other inmates to whom Bennett would reveal his charges. (Simms Aff. ¶ 13; Simms Dep. 24:7–13; Compl. Pt. II at 1–2).

A few minutes later, Simms was retrieved from the bullpen and escorted to the search room where Officer Bennett stood, glaring at him. (Simms Aff. ¶ 14; Simms Dep. 26:14–25; Compl. Pt. II at 6). Officer Lewis and approximately four to six other corrections officers—including Officer Felding, who booked Simms that morning and prepared his booking sheet containing his child pornography charges—also stood in the room, all staring at Simms and Bennett with expressions of expectation. (Simms Aff. ¶ 15; Compl. Pt. II at 4).

Officer Bennett slammed shut the search room door and pushed Simms from behind with two hands, towards the wall where the other officers stood. He pushed Simms approximately ten times and swung him around the room. Bennett slapped Simms' face and body and again began to scream threats of beating and death at Simms. Bennett next shoved Simms into the wall next to the corrections officers while screaming: "You vile scumbag. I should kill you. If I had

---

22. Citations to "Simms Aff. ¶ __" refer to the Affidavit of Robert K. Simms, dated August 15, 1998. Citations to "___ Dep." refer to the transcript of the deposition for the individual specified. Citations to "Compl." refer to Simms' Complaint. Citations to "Def. Mem." refer to the Defendants' Memorandum of Law. The symbol "¶" refers to a particular paragraph in that document. A citation that reads 20:12-13 indicates that the cited information can be found on page 20, lines 12 through 13 of the referenced document.

my knife, I'd carve you up. If I had my revolver, I'd blow you to shreds. You are a sick maggot." Simms was terrified and kept still. (Simms Aff. ¶ 16; Simms Dep. 28:12–30:25; Compl. Pt. II at 3–4).

Officer Bennett continued to push Simms into the wall while yelling that he could not stand the sight of Simms. Simms finally asked Bennett what he had done to deserve this attack and reminded Bennett he did not know the details of Simms' case. Bennett responded by yelling that he did not give "two hoots" about the circumstances of Simms' case; he was going to carve him up anyway. Bennett pushed Simms. Simms ricocheted off the wall, and Bennett continued to scream obscenities and threats of beating and death. Officer Lewis and the others in the search room looked on with amusement. (Simms Aff. ¶ 17; Simms Dep. 29:15–30:10; Compl. Pt. II at 6–7).

At some point, Officer Bennett demanded that Simms stand in a particular spot in the search room. Each time Simms moved to the requested spot, Bennett taunted him and screamed, "No, this way!," pointing to a different spot. He then swung Simms around the room, grabbing his arm and launching him off. Bennett repeated this several times. (Simms Aff. ¶ 18; Simms Dep. 28:7–29:6).

Eventually, Bennett screamed that Simms should strip. Simms complied and removed his shirt. He never refused or questioned Bennett's order. When Simms put his shirt on an empty chair in the room, however, Bennett flew into a rage. He whipped Simms' shirt around in the air above his head, screaming that Simms was a repulsive child pornographer. Bennett prepared to punch Simms again. Simms turned his body to avoid being hit and called out for the sergeant. (Simms Aff. ¶ 16; Simms Dep. 28:9–30:12, 33:14–20, 35:8–29).

Sergeant Wright heard "loud screaming" coming from the search room and went to investigate. (Wright Dep. 28:7–9, 30:22–25, 50:7–25). As Wright appeared at the door, Bennett acted as if nothing were wrong. Simms told Wright that he was glad Wright had arrived and that he needed Wright's help. Wright cut Simms off and told him to "shut the hell up and take off your clothes," to which Simms replied, "You're in this too! This is unbelievable." Simms did not question Wright's order to strip. Rather, he took off his pants. Bennett strip-searched him. (Simms Aff. ¶ 20; Simms Dep. 30:21–32:12, 39:8–40:2; Compl. Pt. II at 8; Wright Dep. 32:20–23, 52:19–21; Bennett Dep. 49:4–20).

Once the strip search was completed, Simms told Wright that Bennett had physically assaulted him and threatened to beat, stab, and kill him. Wright responded, "Well, this is jail!" and walked out of the search room, leaving Simms alone with Bennett and the other officers. (Simms Aff. ¶ 4; Davis Dep. 28:7–29:15; Wright Dep. 15:02–16:20 (testifying that Davis had a complaint about the officers)).

Once Sergeant Wright left the search room, Simms dressed and Bennett resumed threatening him. Bennett again shoved Simms, sending him flying across the search room. Bennett screamed, "You are a piece of crap! You are a disgusting kiddie porn loving animal who deserves to die. I am going to make sure someone's going to kill you. Your days are numbered." (Simms Aff. ¶ 18; Simms Dep. 40:15–42:30; Compl. Pt. II at 8). Bennett then led Simms out of the search room and screamed, "Send him to protective custody and get him out of my face. He gets off on little girls!" (Simms Aff. ¶ 20; Simms Dep. 41:18–22; Compl. Pt. II at 9). After spending approximately forty-five minutes in the search room, Simms was taken to a cell in protective custody where inmates are kept alone in separate cells that are kept locked for most of the day. Simms did not want to be housed in protective custody after the assault. He feared he would be more vulnerable to attack by defendants or others because there would be no witnesses. (Simms Aff. ¶ 22; Simms Dep. 35:3–23, 40:21–42:3, 56:15–58:4; Compl. Pt. II at 10).

(c) Robert Simms' Physical and Mental Pain Resulting from the Attack

As a result of the attack, Simms sustained bruises on his arms, legs, and face. He requested medical attention the day after the incident. By the time Simms saw a doctor—a week later—these injuries were no longer visible. (Simms Aff. ¶ 24; Simms Dep. 44:12–18, 48:23–50:2; Compl. Pt. II at 5).

In addition to the physical injuries, Simms suffered extreme and extensive mental pain. Not only was he humiliated and shocked by the search, but for the entire time he was housed at the Penitentiary, he was anxious and terrified that Bennett, Lewis, and Wright were going to beat or kill him—either by themselves or by encouraging other inmates—and cover it up. Simms felt hopeless. He became depressed and contemplated suicide. To this day, Simms suffers from nightmares about the attack. (Simms Aff. ¶ 29; Simms Dep. 49:15–51:12, 52:14–15; Compl. Pt. II at 5).

On January 18 and 19, Simms made several visits to the Mental Health Clinic. He was depressed, aggravated, and in despair. He did not want to be housed in protective custody where no one could witness any further attack. (Mental Health Evaluation Sheet, dated January 18, 1990). One nurse specifically noted that the "Problem" was that Simms was harassed by corrections officers because of his charge. (Id.)[23]. Simms also received help for his psychological pain from Mark Denby, a Muslim mullah (religious leader) in Simms' community, and Dr. Margaret Phillips, Simms' therapist.

23. "Id" means that the author is citing to the same source that the author cited to immediately prior. In this case, "Id" refers to the Mental Health Evaluation Sheet, dated January 18, 1990.

These individuals visited Simms on numerous occasions while he was at the Penitentiary. After Simms finished serving his sentence in 1995, he continued to meet with Dr. Phillips, with whom he often spoke about the assault. (Simms Aff. ¶ 26; Simms Dep. 44:16–17, 53:18–19, 57:14–28; Compl. Pt II at 5–7).

(d) Robert Simms' Complaint and the "Investigation"

On January 19, two days after the attack, Simms wrote a letter to Warden Frank Boston detailing the physical abuse and death threats prompted by his child pornography charges. He also noted Sergeant Wright's unconcerned reaction. (Simms Aff. ¶ 28). Captain Sharon Grant conducted an investigation, then wrote a report to Warden Boston on January 26. Of course, Grant concluded that there was no merit to Simms' Claim. (Grant Report).

2. ARGUMENT

The standards for summary judgment[24] are well settled. The moving party[25] bears the burden of establishing that there are no genuine issues of material fact in dispute[26]. See, e.g., Consarc Corp. v. Marine Midland Bank, N.A., 996 F.2d 568, 572 (2d Cir. 1993). This standard bars the court from resolving disputed issues of fact. If there are material factual issues, the court must deny summary judgment. See, e.g., Knight v. U.S. Fire Ins. Co., 804 F.2d 9, 11 (2d Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 480 U.S. 932 (1987). In evaluating whether there are factual issues, the court is to view the evidence in the light most favorable to the non-moving party[27] and draw all permissible inferences[28] in the non-moving party's favor. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 247 (1986). However, assessments of credibility, conflicting versions of events, and the weight to be assigned to evidence are for the jury, not the court. See id. at 255.

A. Officer Bennett's Attack On Robert Simms Violated The Eighth Amendment

The Eighth Amendment prohibits the "unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain"[29] and is the source of claims for excessive force under Section 1983. Whitley v. Albers, 475 U.S. 312, 319 (1986). Analysis of an excessive force claim contains both objective and subjective inquiries.[30] An official's conduct violates the Eighth Amendment when (i) the conduct is "objectively, sufficiently serious," and (ii) the prison official acts with a "sufficiently culpable [guilty] state of mind." Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 834 (1994) (internal quotation marks omitted).

(a) Officer Bennett's Conduct Was Sufficiently Serious.

Defendants argue that summary judgment should be granted because (i) Simms' physical injuries, if any, were de minimis,[31] and (ii) Simms' psychological injuries are not serious enough to justify continuing this Section 1983 case. As demonstrated below, however, the physical injuries and psychological pain suffered by Robert Simms were sufficiently serious to satisfy the Eight Amendment standard.

(i) The Use of Force Was More Than De Minimis

The objective component of a claim for excessive force under the Eighth Amendment is satisfied if the injury suffered results from something more than a de minimis use of force. See Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 9–10 (1992);

---

24. "Summary judgment" is a legal term which means that a judge can decide the case in one party's favor without the case ever going to a jury because the facts are not in dispute and the judge can make a ruling on the law.

25. The "moving party" is the person who made the motion to the court asking the court to do something. In this case, the moving party is Officer Bennett, who is asking the court to decide the case in his favor at the summary judgment stage instead of going forward to a trial.

26. When a party claims that there are "no genuine issues of material fact in dispute," that means that all the parties agree about the facts, or a neutral third party would have to say that the facts seem to heavily favor one party's story over the other's as the real version of events.

27. The "non-moving party" is the person who did not make the motion to the court. Here, the non-moving party is Simms, who is opposing Officer Bennett's motion for summary judgment. Simms wants the case to go forward to a trial, instead of being decided in Officer Bennett's favor by a judge.

28. To "draw all permissible inferences" means that the court should take the facts and make any and all favorable assumptions that the facts can support which would favor the non-moving party, Simms. Because a judge ruling on summary judgment is ending the case before it goes to trial, the judge must give "the benefit of the doubt" to the party opposing summary judgment.

29. "Wanton infliction of pain" means excessive, cruel, or immoral infliction of pain.

30. "Objective" means as viewed by an outsider, sometimes referred to as the ordinary "reasonable person." "Subjective" means how a specific person viewed the incident.

31. "De minimis" is a legal term that means something has occurred in such a small quantity that it is not significant, and there is thus no legal remedy. Here, Officer Bennett is arguing that Simms' physical injuries were de minimis. This means Officer Bennett is trying to claim that Simms was not hurt badly enough for the law to take notice of his injuries.

Davidson v. Flynn, 32 F.3d 27, 29 (2d Cir. 1994). Significant injury, that is "injury that requires medical attention or leaves permanent marks," is not required. Hudson, 503 U.S. at 7–8, 13 ("The absence of serious injury is .†.†. relevant to the Eighth Amendment inquiry but does not end it.").

As an initial matter, defendants contend that Officer Bennett never used force against Robert Simms or even had any physical contact with him. (Def. Mem. 7). This argument, however, is hotly disputed and thus summary judgment must be denied. See, e.g., Allah v. Cox, No. 96-CV-1225, 1998 WL 725939, at *2 n.2 (N.D.N.Y. Oct. 9, 1998) (summary judgment denied where corrections officer's version of events is expressly contradicted by inmate).

Alternatively, defendants contend that the force used by Bennett—which defendants dismiss as mere grabbing and pulling—was de minimis. (Def. Mem. 5–7). But the evidence shows that Simms was shoved, pushed into a wall, swung around the search room, and punched—all while being threatened with further beatings and death for approximately forty-five minutes in the search room. (Simms Aff. ¶¶ 12–13; Simms Dep. 25:24–26:16, 32:2–3; Simms Stmt., dated January 19, 1990).

Defendants cite a number of cases to support their argument that the use of force against Simms was de minimis as a matter of law. None of these cases is on point. They are either decided on grounds other than the use of force or involve momentary uses of force dramatically different from the repeated and continuous physical assault and death threats inflicted on Robert Simms. See Reyes v. Koehler, 815 F. Supp. 109, 114 (S.D.N.Y. 1993) (summary judgment granted for defendant where inmate did not allege malice or intent to cause harm and where defendant's pushing plaintiff against wall was "a momentary act, of such limited duration as to belie any inference of malicious or sadistic intent to cause harm") (internal quotation marks omitted); Harris v. Keane, 962 F. Supp. 397, 408 n.12 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) (squeezing inmate's finger once is de minimis) (emphasis added); Candelaria v. Coughlin, 787 F. Supp. 368, 374–75 (S.D.N.Y. 1992) (use of force de minimis where inmate did not allege any "repeated or continuous grabbing" or any physical injury), aff'd, 979 F.2d 845 (2d Cir. 1992).

Simms suffered bruises to his arms, legs, and face. (Simms Aff. ¶ 20; Simms Dep. 54:10–24). Such visible injuries are more than sufficient to sustain an Eighth Amendment action. See, e.g., Griffin v. Crippen, 193 F.3d 89, 91–92 (2d Cir. 1999) (reversing district court's determination that inmate's bruised shin and swelling over left knee were de minimis as a matter of law); Smith v. Marcellus, 917 F. Supp. 168, 171–73 (W.D.N.Y. 1995) (abrasion under left eye, small laceration near right ear, four superficial skin tears on upper calf, and slightly swollen wrist, resulting from attack by corrections officers, constitutes sufficient injury).

Defendants make much of the fact that plaintiff was not given medical treatment for his bruises. (Def. Mem. 7–8). However, Simms asked for treatment. (Simms Aff. ¶ 1). Defendants cannot be relieved of responsibility for the physical abuse of Robert Simms because they refused him medical treatment for at least a week after abusing him. The provision of medical treatment, in any event, is merely one fact to be weighed by the jury in assessing whether the physical force was more than de minimis. See Robison v. Via, 821 F.2d 913, 924 (2d Cir. 1987) (plaintiff's failure to seek medical treatment for injuries not fatal to Section 1983 claim).

(ii) Simms Can Recover for His Psychological Pain

Were there any question as to Bennett's use of more than de minimis physical force on Simms—and there should be none—Simms' psychological pain provides a separate basis for recovery. The intentional infliction of psychological pain can form the basis of a Section 1983 claim where the pain suffered is more than de minimis. The Supreme Court has stated:

[T]he Eighth Amendment prohibits the unnecessary and wanton infliction of "pain," rather than "injury." "Pain" in its ordinary meaning surely includes a notion of psychological harm. I am unaware of any precedent of this Court to the effect that psychological pain is not cognizable[32] for constitutional purposes.

Hudson, 503 U.S. at 16 (Blackmun, J., concurring) (internal citation omitted); see also St. Germain v. Goord, No. 96-CV-1560 (RSP/DRH), 1997 WL 627552, at *3–4 (N.D.N.Y. Oct. 8, 1997) (inmate's misery, anguish, psychological pain, and fear found actionable).

Defendants argue that verbal threats alone are not enough to bring a claim under Section 1983. But this is not a case about a verbal argument. Simms was threatened while he was being assaulted. Verbal threats, accompanied by some physical force or injury, can violate the Eighth Amendment. As the case law makes clear, when threats are accompanied by conduct that increases the credibility of the threats, an inmate's constitutional rights are violated. See Northington v. Jackson, 973 F.2d 1518, 1522–24 (10th Cir. 1992) (alleged psychological injury resulting from sheriff's placement of revolver to inmate's head, accompanied by threats to shoot, held more than de minimis); Burton v. Livingston, 791 F.2d 97, 100–01 (8th Cir. 1986) (guard drawing weapon and threatening to shoot while using racially offensive language held more than de minimis use of force); Douglas v. Marino, 684 F. Supp. 395, 397–98 (D.N.J. 1988) (allegation that prison employee brandished knife while threatening to stab prisoner stated Section 1983 claim).

32. "Cognizable" means that a court can recognize or identify something. Here, when the Court declares that psychological pain is cognizable for constitutional purposes, the Court means that psychological pain is something that the Court can take into account when considering a case alleging a constitutional violation has taken place.

It is clear even from the cases on which defendants rely that threats accompanied by physical conduct violate the Eighth Amendment. In Jermosen v. Coughlin, for example, the court held that verbal threats do not amount to a constitutional violation "unless accompanied by physical force or the present ability to effectuate the threat." 878 F. Supp. 444, 449 (N.D.N.Y. 1995) (emphasis added). Similarly, in McFadden v. Lucas, the court stated, "mere threatening language" is not a constitutional violation where the "plaintiff has nowhere alleged that he was physically assaulted [or that] any touching of his person occurred at all." 713 F.2d 143, 146 (5th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 998 (1983) (emphasis added); see also Harris v. Keane, 962 F. Supp. 397, 406 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) ("Allegations of threats, verbal harassment or profanity, without any injury or damage, do not state a claim under Section 1983.") (emphasis added).

Unlike the cases cited by defendants—where the threats were unaccompanied by other conduct or the plaintiff was not physically abused—Robert Simms was threatened with beatings and death even as he was physically attacked. (Simms Aff. ¶ 12–13). The lack of any justification for these threats indicates that their purpose was to inflict psychological harm. See infra Part B. Simms' placement in protective custody, where he might be assaulted without witnesses, only bolstered the threats' credibility. See Hudspeth v. Figins, 584 F.2d 1345, 1347–48 (4th Cir. 1978) (guard's threat that inmate would be shot supported by subsequent transfer to work detail supervised by armed guards).

Simms' psychological pain was not de minimis. During the search process, he experienced humiliation, anxiety, and the terror of death or severe injury. Afterwards, fearing that Bennett, Lewis, and Wright were going to beat or kill him, Simms sank into a deep depression and contemplated suicide. Defendants' argument that Simms' suicidal thoughts should be disregarded because he could not actually kill himself misses the point that he suffered psychological pain. (Def. Mem. 6 n.1). He received psychological treatment from the Mental Health Clinic, which specifically noted that Simms had been harassed by corrections officers and that he was "depressed." (Mental Health Evaluation Sheets). Simms also received counseling from Mullah Mark Denby and Dr. Margaret Phillips. To date, he suffers from nightmares of the incident. (Simms Aff. ¶ 22; Simms Dep. 43:15–44:2, 49:18–51:18; Simms letter, dated January 24, 1990). Thus, Simms' mental pain is actionable.

Defendants characterize Simms' psychological pain as not "rational" because (i) the threats were conditional; (ii) an investigation was conducted; and (iii) the threats of beatings and killing were never effectuated. (Def. Mem. 11–13). None of these arguments withstands scrutiny [close examination]. First, defendants' suggestion that Simms' fear of beating and death would only be justifiable had Bennett phrased his threats in the present tense—"I'm going to kill you now"—and that Simms should have taken comfort from the use of the conditional perfect in Bennett's actual statement—"I should kill you"—assumes that Simms has a high-level understanding of grammar and an ability to identify different verb tenses under those circumstances.

Defendants' second point, that Simms' fear and terror during the assault on January 17, 1990, should have been ameliorated [made better] by defendants' investigation taking place on January 26, 1990, is similarly far-fetched. Even after the attack, Simms could have derived little comfort from an internal investigation, given his previous experience with Penitentiary personnel. As to the merits of the investigation, the quality of internal reports rests on credibility—a jury issue. See Payne v. Coughlin, No. 82 Civ. 2284 (CSH), 1987 WL 10739, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. May 6, 1987).

Finally, as discussed above, verbal threats are indeed actionable where accompanied by physical force. It is not necessary for Simms to have actually been beaten, shot, stabbed, or killed to maintain this lawsuit. See St. Germain, 1997 WL 627552, at *3–4 (holding actionable inmate's mental pain and fear resulting from corrections officers' threats to "beat the hell out of plaintiff" which never materialized). Defendants rely on Doe v. Welborn, 110 F.3d 520 (7th Cir. 1997), in arguing that Simms' fear of beating and death are not compensable since the threats never materialized. That reliance is misplaced. Doe is a conditions-of-confinement case; this is a case about excessive use of force. As Doe itself states: "What is necessary to show sufficient harm for purposes of the Cruel and Unusual Punishments Clause depends on the claim at issue." 110 F.3d at 524. Thus, while the psychological harm of the plaintiff in Doe did not rise to "the extreme deprivations" required to make out a conditions-of-confinement claim, Simms' psychological injury is actionable because "a plaintiff in an excessive force case need not allege significant injury in order to survive dismissal." Id. (internal citations and quotation marks omitted). Under the circumstances, the fear and other mental pain, which Simms suffered due to Bennett's threats of beating and death, accompanied by Bennett's aggressive physical actions, were clearly rational.

(b) Officer Bennett Acted Maliciously and Sadistically to Cause Harm

For claims of excessive force, the state of mind requirement turns on whether the prison official applied the force "'maliciously and sadistically to cause harm.'" Hudson, 503 U.S. at 6 (quoting Johnson v. Glick, 481 F.2d 1028, 1033 (2d Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 1033 (1973)). In making that determination, the trier of fact is to consider the following factors: (i) "the extent of the plaintiff's injuries;" (ii) "the need for the application of force;" (iii) "the correlation [relationship] between that need and amount of force used;" (iv) "the threat reasonably perceived by the defendants;" and (v) "any efforts made by the defendants to temper [decrease] the severity of a forceful response." Romano v. Howarth, 998 F.2d 101, 105 (2d Cir. 1993) (citing Hudson, 503 U.S. at 7).

(i) Plaintiff Simms Suffered Physical and Mental Harm

As a result of Bennett's use of excessive force and threats of beating and death, Simms suffered physical and mental injury. See supra Sections 1(b) and (c)

(ii) There Was No Need for Force or Death Threats

Where, as here, there is evidence that an attack by a corrections officer is unprovoked or without sufficient justification, courts generally will deny summary judgment. See, e.g., Corselli v. Coughlin, 842 F.2d 23, 27 (2d Cir. 1988) (reversing summary judgment where jury could find defendant initiated argument and struck inmate without justification); Moore v. Agosto, No. 93 civ. 4835, 1996 WL 125660, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 20, 1996) (summary judgment denied where plaintiff maintained defendants initiated the confrontation), aff'd, 164 F.3d 618 (2d Cir. 1998).

Defendants claim Bennett was justified in using force because of Simms' "admitted" refusal to follow defendants' instructions to submit to a strip-search, stand away from the bullpen bars, stand where directed in the search room, and place his clothing in the designated place. (Def. Mem. 6–8).

Defendants' arguments are undermined by the simple fact that Bennett attacked Simms prior to the issuance of any of these instructions. The threats of violence began as Simms sat in the bullpen, and the physical attack began as soon as Simms entered the search room. (Simms Aff. ¶¶ 8, 11; Simms Dep. 19:20–20:3, 24:25–25:9, 25:14–25:14). Moreover, when Simms was ordered to strip, he complied. (Simms Aff. ¶¶ 15, 18; Simms Dep. 32:15–21; Simms letter dated January 24, 1990).

The other so-called "instructions" illustrate the malice and sadism motivating Bennett's attack. For example, Bennett's alleged "instruction" to stand away from the bullpen bars was in fact stated as follows:

> You revolting cradle robber. Get the hell out of my face, you pedophile. You nauseate me! Get the hell away from the bars before I beat you senseless.

(Simms Aff. ¶ 9; Simms Dep. 21:2–15). In addition, the purported "instruction" to stand in a particular spot was nothing but a malicious taunt. Bennett indeed told Simms to stand in a particular spot. However, each time Simms moved to the place indicated, Bennett screamed, pointed to a different spot, grabbed Simms' arm, and swung him to the new location. (Simms Aff. ¶ 14; Simms Dep. 27:22–27:2).

The expressions of disgust and hatred, which continued throughout the beating and accompanied the death threats, were a product of Bennett's personal feelings, not a good faith effort to maintain discipline. The evidence is clear that Bennett knew Simms' charges prior to the attack:

(1) Felding, the booking officer who prepared the booking sheet stating Simms' charges, stood in the search room while Simms was assaulted and searched (Booking Sheet; Bennett Dep. 31:10–25, 41:20–42:3, 49:3–7, 52:8–53:8; Def. Interrog. Resp. No. 7);
(2) Bennett, Lewis, and Wright admitted to talking about inmates' charges (Bennett Dep. 56:17–25; Lewis Dep. 26:2–18; Wright Dep. 41:16–19);
(3) Bennett admitted that he had access to inmates' charges (Bennett Dep. 53:2–54:8; see also Lewis Dep. 26:2–18); and
(4) The threats are replete with references of Simms being a child pornographer (Simms Aff. ¶¶ 7, 8, 9, 11, 14, 18; Simms Dep. 19:14–25, 25:6–7).

The fact that malice motivated Bennett's acts against Simms are explained, in part, by Bennett's testimony that he finds sex offenses committed against minors more disgusting than other crimes committed by inmates. (Bennett Dep. 58:3–10). Moreover, Bennett was emboldened by his "amused" audience of corrections officers in the search room. (Simms Aff. ¶ 12; Simms Dep. 27:23–28:2; Def. Interrog. Resp. No. 7).

Defendants contend that the force used was necessary to avoid the "potential" security risks associated with a backlog of detainees waiting to be processed. (Def. Mem. 8). However, the "potential" risk could never have been a reality here. The morning of January 17, 1990, only Simms and one other detainee were waiting to be processed. (Simms Aff. ¶ 6).

(iii) The Amount and Type of Force Used Were Disproportionate to the Need

There is no correlation here between the need for force and the amount of force used. Given that Simms offered no physical or verbal resistance nor refused any orders, Bennett's pushing, shoving, swinging, punching, and simultaneous threatening with death and severe injury were clearly excessive.

Even assuming arguendo (for the sake of argument) that Simms did refuse to strip, the circumstances would not require the amount of physical force that Bennett used. Bennett himself admitted that Simms was not violent during the strip-search. (Bennett Dep. 48:14). See Martinez v. Rosado, 614 F.2d 829, 831–32 (2d Cir. 1980) (violation of prison rule and refusal to obey direct order do not alone justify physical assault without evidence of physical resistance by inmate or other indication that amount of force was proper); see also Corselli, 842 F.2d at 27 (even where there is evidence that inmate may have failed to follow an order, officer can still be found to have used excessive or gratuitous force). Moreover, it is hard to see how threatening to shoot, beat, and stab Simms would get Simms to perform the desired action of stripping. At a minimum, this is a question for the jury. See, e.g., Trice v. Strack, No. 94 Civ. 4470 (BSJ), 1998 WL 633807, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 14, 1998) (whether force was applied maliciously and sadistically left for jury where defendants struck, tackled, and kicked plaintiff who may have precipitated conduct by waving underwear in one defendant's face).

(iv) Bennett Could Not Reasonably Have Perceived Simms as a Threat.

It is clear that Bennett could not reasonably have seen Simms as a threat. On January 17, 1990, Simms was 5'4" and approximately 135 pounds, as compared to the taller, more muscular defendant Bennett. (Simms Aff. ¶ 8; Simms Dep. 19:6–9; Booking Sheet). In addition, while Bennett was accompanied by Lewis and four to six other corrections officers in the search room, Simms was the only inmate present. (Bennett Dep. 39:9–14, 48:3–11; Def. Interrog. Resp. Nos. 2, 7).

(v) Bennett Has Demonstrated No Effort to Temper His Response.

Finally, defendants have suggested no efforts by Bennett to temper the severity of the response. As noted above, Bennett assaulted and threatened Robert Simms prior to any peaceful request that Simms strip, and continued to do so for another 45 minutes.

B. DEFENDANT WRIGHT EVINCED DELIBERATE INDIFFERENCE WHEN HE FAILED TO PROTECT ROBERT SIMMS FROM BENNETT'S PHYSICAL ASSAULT AND ACCOMPANYING DEATH THREATS.

Defendants argue summary judgment should be granted for Sergeant Wright because (i) Wright did not participate in or witness the physical attack and death threats directed toward Simms, and (ii) Wright took adequate steps to ensure that Simms' constitutional rights were not violated. (Def. Mem. 5–6). However, summary judgment is not appropriate because Wright acted with deliberate indifference when he failed to protect Simms from Bennett's physical assault and death threats.

The legal standard is that a supervisor may be liable under Section 1983 for the actions of his supervisees where, as here, the supervisor exhibits "deliberate indifference" to an inmate's safety. There is no requirement of direct participation in the constitutional violation. See, e.g., Wright v. Smith, 21 F.3d 496, 501 (2d Cir. 1994). Deliberate indifference exists where (1) there is a substantial risk of serious harm to an inmate, and (2) the prison official knows of the risk and disregards it by failing to take steps to prevent harm to the inmate. See Farmer, 511 U.S. at 834; see also Hayes v. New York City Dept. of Corr., 84 F.3d 614, 620 (2d Cir. 1996).

(a) Robert Simms was at a substantial risk of serious harm.

Here, the first requirement for a finding of deliberate indifference, "substantial risk of serious harm," is clearly met. A violent assault perpetrated without justification and solely for the purpose of causing harm creates a substantial risk of serious harm. See supra I.B.

(b) Wright knew of and disregarded the harm to Simms by not acting to prevent it.

The second requirement of deliberate indifference, culpable intent, is also met. The evidence establishes Wright had knowledge that Robert Simms faced a substantial risk of serious harm on the morning of January 17, 1990, regardless of whether Wright actually witnessed the physical abuse and death threats. Specifically:

(1) Wright admitted in deposition that he proceeded into the search room after hearing "loud screaming" coming from that room. (Wright Dep. 26:23–28:23, 48:23–25, 54:4–6). Wright's Incident Report, stating that Wright "heard noise" coming from the search room, confirms this. (Incident Report of Sgt. Wright).
(2) Once the strip-search was completed, Simms told Wright that Bennett physically assaulted him and threatened him with his life. (Simms Aff. ¶ 16; Simms Dep. 37:13–22).
(3) Wright admitted in deposition that Simms had filed a complaint about Officer Bennett. (Wright Dep. 13:02–16:20).

The evidence further establishes that Wright disregarded the substantial risk of serious harm that he knew Simms faced. Even after hearing suspicious noises coming from the search room and being told that Bennett had attacked Simms, Wright did not immediately investigate the situation, reprimand (warn or punish) Bennett, or even stay in the search room until the booking and search process was complete. After Simms told Wright he needed Wright's help, Wright told Simms to "shut the hell up and take off your clothes." (Simms Dep. 38:18–20). Then, after specifically being informed of the abuse, Sergeant Wright merely told Simms, "Well, this is jail!" and walked out of the search room. (Simms Aff. ¶ 17; Simms Dep. 39:12–14; Simms letter, dated January 24, 1990). Given the evidence indicating that Wright had knowledge of the risk Simms faced, this indifferent response cannot be held reasonable as a matter of law.

That Wright failed to prevent any further harm to Simms is proven by the fact that Wright left Simms in the room with Bennett to suffer further abuse. Simms was indeed subjected to more abuse when Wright left the search room. Once Wright exited, Bennett shoved Simms, sending him reeling across the search room. Bennett screamed, "You are a piece of crap! You are a disgusting kiddie porn loving animal who deserves to die. I am going to make sure someone's going to kill you. Your days are numbered." (Simms Aff. ¶ 19; Simms Dep. 34:9–15; Compl. Pt. III at 6).

The failure to intervene to prevent harm to an inmate constitutes deliberate indifference, subjecting the supervisor to liability. See, e.g., Robins v. Meecham, 60 F.3d 1436, 1442 (9th Cir. 1995) (summary judgment denied where defendants were present but failed to intervene to prevent another prison official from firing a shotgun at inmate); Buckner v. Hollins, 983 F.2d 119, 122–23 (8th Cir. 1993) (where defendant failed to prevent prison official from beating plaintiff, jury could find deliberate indifference for defendant's failure to intervene); see also Hayes, 84 F.3d at 621 (reversing summary judgment for corrections officers where plaintiff advised officer he was in danger prior to attack, and record revealed no protective measures taken); Livingston v. Rivera, No. 94-CV-5319, 1999 WL 26902, at *3 (E.D.N.Y. Jan. 20, 1999) (officer's statement and other circumstances, suggesting defendant had knowledge that inmate was exposed to imminent serious harm, precluded summary judgment). Here, there is substantial evidence that Wright disregarded a clear and obvious risk of harm to Simms. As a result, Simms suffered further physical assault and threats of beating and death. Wright's failure to take any steps—much less any reasonable ones—to prevent this abuse makes him liable, and at minimum, precludes summary judgment in his favor.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment should be denied.

Dated: _____
<<date submitted>> <<City, State>>

Respectfully submitted,
<<Attorney Firm Name>>[33]
By:_____
Rachel A. Felder (RF-XXXX)[34]
<<Attorney's Address>> <<City, State>>
<<Phone number>>
Attorney for Plaintiff
Robert K. Simms

33. If you are submitting your memorandum of law pro se, you should put your name here.

34. If you are submitting your memorandum of law pro se, you should put your name, address, and contact information (including your inmate number, if applicable,) here.

A JAILHOUSE LAWYER'S MANUAL

Chapter 7:
Freedom of Information

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

CHAPTER 7

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION*

A. Introduction

This Chapter describes laws that allow you to request copies of government documents and files. There are several reasons why these documents might be useful to you: you may want to review copies of your files and rap sheets to make sure they are accurate and complete; you may want to get copies of internal memoranda and manuals that lay out procedures prison officials must follow; and, if you are preparing to sue the government, you can use a freedom of information request to gather support for your case.

All fifty states and the District of Columbia have passed some sort of state open records laws.[1] Many of these laws are modeled on the federal Freedom of Information Act. Only state freedom of information laws grant access to state and local government records; the federal Freedom of Information Act does not apply to state or municipal agencies, including state correctional systems.

There are specific procedures that you must follow depending on the type of information you are requesting. Each agency has a different procedure for accessing information. It would be impossible in this Chapter to outline the procedures for every agency. Instead, this Chapter will give you an overview as to the law itself and what rights you have under the Freedom of Information Act ("FOIA"), the Privacy Act ("PA"), and the New York Freedom of Information Law ("FOIL"). Be sure to check the specific procedures for your particular request before filing an information request.

Part B of this Chapter outlines the laws that allow you to get documents from the federal government. Part C discusses New York's Freedom of Information Law. Prisoners in other states should still read Part C to get an idea of the types of documents prisoners most often request, and look carefully at the provisions of their state's freedom of information statute. Part D contains an address for the Federal Citizen Information Center—if you need help figuring out which federal agency to contact, write or call the Federal Citizen Information Center for help. Appendix A contains a list of state freedom of information laws. Appendix B of this Chapter contains a form to use to request information from the Department of Justice ("DOJ") and other federal agencies. Appendix C contains sample letters for filing a FOIA/PA request and/or appeal. Appendix D lists addresses of organizations and federal governmental agencies that can provide more help.

B. The Federal Freedom of Information Act

1. Overview & History

Your right to access the files of the United States government is established by two federal laws: the Freedom of Information Act[2] and the Privacy Act.[3] These laws have been tremendously successful in enabling public access to government files. The Freedom of Information Act ("FOIA") allows you to request all public documents, including records that relate to you. The Privacy Act ("PA") deals only with personal files. It gives you the right not only to look at your own records, but to correct, change, or remove records that contain incorrect, irrelevant, or incomplete information about you. If your request is incorrectly denied or ignored, you can sue under both laws in federal court.

FOIA and the PA implement one of the basic principles of democracy—the public's right to know what its government is doing. As written, FOIA gives access to all government records unless they fall into one of nine categories of materials that agencies are allowed, but not required, to withhold.[4] In practice, however, there are often bureaucratic roadblocks to getting records, and you will probably not always get immediate access to everything you think you are entitled to.

---

* This Chapter was written by Benjamin Van Houten based in part on previous versions by Laura Burdick, Geraldine R. Eure, Susan Widule, and Saleemah Ahamed.

1. See Appendix A.
2. 5 U.S.C. § 552 (2008).
3. 5 U.S.C. § 552a (2008).
4. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b) (2008). These exemptions are discussed in Part B(3) of this Chapter.

2. What Agencies Are Covered & What Records Are Available

FOIA applies to documents held by agencies in the executive branch of the federal government. These agencies include:

- Military departments;
- Cabinet departments, including the Department of Justice (which controls both the Federal Bureau of Investigation ("FBI") and federal prisons;
- Departments of the Executive Branch (such as the Department of Defense);
- Independent federal agencies (such as the Environmental Protection Agency ("EPA"));
- Government-controlled corporations (such as the United States Postal Service ("USPS"));

FOIA does not apply to documents held by federal courts or by Congress.[5] FOIA also does not apply to documents held by "the President's immediate personal staff or units within the Executive Office whose sole function is to advise and assist the President."[6] FOIA does not apply to state or local governments, including state prison systems; these are usually covered by separate laws.[7]

FOIA allows you to look at almost all records under a federal agency's control.[8] The Supreme Court has defined an "agency record" as a document that is (1) either created or obtained by the agency, and (2) under control of the agency at the time of the FOIA request.[9] Agency records may include many different types of information, such as papers, reports, letters, films, computer tapes, photographs, and sound recordings in the possession, custody, or control of an agency. In 1996, Congress made clear that electronically stored information meets the definition of a "record" under FOIA.[10] In addition, the agency must provide you records in any form or format you request, as long as the document is "readily reproducible" by them in that form or format, and the agency must make reasonable efforts to meet your request.[11]

FOIA does not allow you to demand answers to questions. The information must already be contained in an existing agency record. An agency is not obligated to create a new record, collect information it does not have, or research or analyze data to meet your request. Your requests for records must "reasonably describe" the material you want.[12] This does not mean you need to know a specific document or file number, but your request should be specific enough that a government agency employee familiar with the subject area of your request can locate the records with a reasonable amount of effort. Also, a records request under FOIA and the PA must be in writing, and must include proper identification.

---

5. 5 U.S.C. §§ 551(1)(A)–(B) (2008).

6. Kissinger v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 445 U.S. 136, 156, 100 S. Ct. 960, 971, 63 L. Ed. 2d 267, 285 (1 980) (finding that telephone notes taken by Kissinger in his capacity as Assistant to the President did not constitute "agency records" under FOIA); see also Meyer v. Bush, 981 F.2d 1288, 1293 (D.C. Cir. 1993) (holding that the determination of whether an entity is an "agency" depends on how close operationally the group is to the President, the nature of its delegation from the President, and whether it has a self-contained structure); Sweetland v. Walters, 60 F.3d 852, 854 (D.C. Cir. 1995) (holding that the Executive Residence is not an agency under FOIA as it does not exercise independent authority).

7. State government records can be obtained using state freedom of information laws. The New York Freedom of Information Law is discussed in Part C of this Chapter. See Appendix A of this Chapter for a list of the freedom of information laws of all 50 states and the District of Columbia.

8. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3) (2008).

9. U.S. Dept. of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144–45, 109 S. Ct. 2841, 2848, 106 L. Ed. 2d 112, 125 (1989) (holding that court opinions in agency files are "agency records").

10. 5 U.S.C. § 552(f)(2) (2008) reads: "For purposes of this section, the term ... 'record' and any other term used in this section in reference to information includes any information that would be an agency record subject to the requirements of this section when maintained by an agency in any format, including an electronic format." This language includes computer disks, CD-ROMs, microfiche, microfilm, and all other digital or electronic media.

11. See Miller v. U.S. Dept. of State, 779 F.2d 1378, 1383 (8th Cir. 1985) (noting that a department must only make reasonable, but not exhaustive, efforts to respond to a FOIA request); Maynard v. CIA, 986 F.2d 547, 559 (1st Cir. 1993) (holding that when the diligence of an agency's attempt to respond to a FOIA request is at issue the agency should issue an affidavit which should describe how the search was conducted and how the agency's filing system would make further search difficult). The new statute rejects Dismukes v. Dept. of the Interior, where the court held that an agency "has no obligation under the FOIA to accommodate the plaintiff's preference." 603 F. Supp. 760, 763 (D.D.C. 1984).

12. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3)(A) (2008).

The PA grants you the power to look at any record within an agency's files that pertains to you.[13] Under the PA, as long as you are either a U.S. citizen or an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence ("LPR"), you may apply to look at any records about yourself that are kept in the executive branch of the federal government.[14] In other words, a U.S. citizen or LPR can look at any records that are filed according to his or her name, social security number, or some other personal identifier. Detailed information about how to access agency records can be found in Part B(4) of this Chapter, "How to Make Your Request."

3. Exemptions to Record Availability Under FOIA and the PA

FOIA exempts nine categories of materials; in other words, the government does not need to disclose material fitting into any one of these nine categories. However, an agency may not withhold an entire file or document just because part of it is exempt; the agency can only withhold those parts of the record falling within the exemption.[15] In addition, FOIA exemptions are not mandatory. Agency officials can choose to waive the exemptions and release the material(s) even if they fall within one of the nine categories, unless another statute specifically limits or prohibits disclosure of that kind of information.

The seven most common of the nine FOIA exemptions are:[16]

Records that are "properly classified" in the interests of national defense or foreign policy;

Documents "related solely to the internal personnel rules and practices of an agency." In practice, this is a very limited exemption because if a person outside the agency can show a legitimate interest in the records, the material cannot be of "solely" agency interest;[17]

Matters "specifically exempted from disclosure" by other federal statutes. In order for this claim of exemption to stand up in court, the agency must point to a statute that either (a) requires that the category of information must be withheld, or (b) establishes particular criteria for withholding information. The agency must also show that the material it is withholding falls under the statute.[18] This exemption is complicated by the fact that there is no complete list of statutes that meet these criteria and some statutes have their own provisions governing disclosure, disclosure procedures, and exemptions. However, you should always make your request for records under FOIA;

"Trade secrets and commercial or financial information" given to the government with the expectation that they would be kept secret;

"Inter-agency or intra-agency memorandum or letters." This exemption protects communications that are meant to be distributed only within the government and that contain advice, opinions, and recommendations that officials offer to each other. This exemption may not be used to withhold facts, agency decisions, or policies;

"Personnel and medical files and similar files" which could not be released to someone other than the subject of the file without resulting in an "unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." The files must contain information about someone so intimate that the person could claim an invasion of privacy. Such information includes marital status, legitimacy of children, welfare payments, family fights and reputation,[19] medical details and conditions,[20] "rap sheets,"[21] and the incarceration of United States citizens in foreign prisons.[22]

---

13. For exemptions, see 5 U.S.C. §§ 552a(j)–(k) (2008).

14. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(a)(2) (2008). This is different from FOIA, which gives access rights to "any person" regardless of citizenship status. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3) (2008).

15. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b) (2008).

16. 5 U.S.C. §§ 552(b)(1)–(7) (2008). The other two rarely used exceptions to FOIA concern government regulation of financial institutions and geological/geophysical information. Please refer to the statute, 5 U.S.C. §§ 552(b)(8)–(9) (2008), for more information.

17. See Dept. of Air Force v. Rose, 425 U.S. 352, 369–370, 96 S. Ct. 1592, 1603, 48 L. Ed. 2d 11, 26 (1976) (holding that Exemption 2 does not apply to matters of "genuine and significant public interest" and observing that Congress' purpose in enacting Exemption 2 was "to relieve agencies of the burden of assembling and maintaining for public inspection matter in which the public could not reasonably be expected to have an interest.").

18. See McDonnell v. United States, 4 F.3d 1227, 1249 (3d Cir. 1993) (noting that burden of showing a document falls within scope of statute rests on the government); see generally, Church of Scientology of California v. U.S. Dept. of Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1979) (observing that the burden of showing a document is exempt from disclosure falls on the agency resisting disclosure.).

19. See Rural Hous. Alliance v. U.S. Dept. of Agric., 498 F.2d 73, 76–77 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (holding that an investigation report containing detailed personal and medical information of persons allegedly discriminated against by

All "records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes." In addition to federal law enforcement, this exemption may also apply to records compiled to enforce state law.

Exemption 7 covers a good deal of records.[23] For example, law enforcement manuals satisfy the requirements of exemption 7 and may not be subject to disclosure. Other materials will fall under the Exemption if they might:

(a) "Interfere with [law] enforcement proceedings." This includes federal and state court proceedings. If release of records could, for example, reveal the government's evidence or strategy in a criminal case, then that release can be properly excluded;[24]
(b) Deprive a person of a fair trial;
(c) "Constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." The majority of courts have held the identities of law enforcement personnel are exempt unless you can show proven, significant misconduct on the part of the investigators;[25] in other words, the names of law enforcement personnel will usually not be revealed;
(d) "Disclose the identity of a confidential source, including a state, local, or foreign agency or authority or any private institution which furnished information on a confidential basis." Confidentiality includes any information supplied by a confidential source.[26] If the information is of a confidential nature, given to the agency by one source only, and collected in the course of a criminal investigation, agencies are permitted to withhold all of the information provided by that source;
(e) Disclose investigative techniques, procedures or guidelines for law enforcement investigations or prosecution. This exemption is limited to techniques, procedures or guidelines not generally known to the public, or not generally known by the public to be useful.[27] the Department of Agriculture were "within the class of similar files" and its disclosure depended on whether it would result in a "clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy").

---

20. See McDonnell v. United States, 4 F.3d 1227, 1254 (3d Cir. 1993) (noting that a "living individual" may have a "strong privacy interest in withholding his medical records" that outweighs a public request."); Rural Hous. Alliance v. U.S. Dept. of Agric., 498 F.2d 73, 77 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (holding that Exemption 6 of FOIA covered a USDA report that included, among other things, individual's medical condition and history); Brown v. FBI, 658 F.2d 71, 74–75 (2d Cir. 1981) (upholding denial of plaintiff's request for FBI files that included an individual's possible involvement with illegal drugs as information that falls within Exemption 6). CD

21. See U.S. Dept. of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749, 780, 109 S. Ct. 1468, 1485, 103 L. Ed. 2d 774, 800 (1989) (holding that a third-party request for an individual's rap sheet when the request does not seek "official information" about a government agency is an "unwarranted" invasion of privacy).

22. See Harbolt v. Dept. of State, 616 F.2d 772, 774 (5th Cir. 1980) (holding disclosure of names and addresses of U.S. citizens imprisoned in foreign countries on narcotics offenses would be an unwarranted invasion of their privacy).

23. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7) (2000); see U.S. Dept. of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749, 756 n.9, 109 S. Ct. 1468, 1473 n.9, 103 L. Ed. 2d 774, 785 n.9 (1989) (explaining that the shift from "the would constitute" standard to "the could reasonably be expected to constitute" standard "represents a considered congressional effort 'to ease considerably a federal law enforcement agency's burden in invoking [Exemption 7]'").

24. See Lynch v. Department of the Treasury, U.S. App. LEXIS 1392 (9th Cir. Cal. 2000) (stating that even though the agency that was party to the trial had closed its investigation, an ongoing interagency task force was sufficient reason for the Department of the Treasury to deny access to the information); Manna v. U.S. Dept. of Justice, 51 F.3d 1158, 1164–65 (3d Cir. 1995) (affirming a district court's finding that government records were properly denied under Exemptions (b)(7)(A) and (D) because disclosure of such information would interfere with future prosecutions and deny sources confidentiality that they were assured).

25. See, e.g., Sutton v. IRS, U.S. Dist. LEXIS 299 (N.D. Ill. 2007) (explaining the questions to ask to determine if the IRS must disclose documents. Fist are the documents compiled for a law enforcement purpose? The next question is whether disclosure of the information in the documents can reasonably be considered an unwarranted invasion of the personal privacy of a third parties or Service personnel. TO answer this question, the court is supposed to balance the public interest in disclosure against the interest Congress intends the exemption to protect.); Massey v. FBI, 3 F.3d 620, 624 (2d Cir. 1993) (holding that government employees have a privacy interest in concealing their identities); Anderson v. United States DOJ, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4731 (D.D.C. Mar. 31, 1999) (finding that the names of government witnesses clearly constitute information compiled for law enforcement purposes.)

26. Hale v. United States DOJ, 226 F.3d 1200 (10th Cir. 2000) (finding that the government could withhold information requested under the FOIA because they were protecting confidential government sources, sources that had a reasonable fear of retribution or to a special or a close relationship with defendant or the victim.)

27. Mayer Brown LLP v. IRS, 562 F.3d 1190 (D.C. Cir. 2009), 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 8104 (D.C. Cir. 2009), 2009-1 U.S. Tax Cas. (CCH) P50,338 (D.C. Cir. 2009), 103 A.F.T.R.2d (RIA) 1799 (D.C. Cir. 2009) (affirming that the IRS did not have to disclose documents if revealing them could reasonably be expected to risk someone breaking the law, there does not have to be certainty revealing the information would result in lawbreaking, just that it would risk someone breaking

(f) "Endanger the life or physical safety of any individual." This is the most frequently claimed exemption,[28] because while it is similar to (7)(c), it does not require the court to consider the public interest in its decision.[29]

While FOIA requesters are generally sent copies of the information they have requested, there may be instances when the agency may only allow you to see the documents. In Tax Analysts v. United States Department of Justice,[30] one court noted an agency need not respond to a FOIA request for copies of documents when the agency has provided an alternative way of accessing the same information.[31] For example, if an agency makes the requested information available in a public reading room, this is enough to satisfy that agency's obligation under FOIA.[32] Therefore, if an agency declines to send you copies of the requested information, it must provide you with an alternative form of access.[33]

The Privacy Act (PA) also has exemptions to disclosure. These exemptions are much broader than the FOIA exemptions. The nine PA exemptions are:[34]

(1) Material "maintained by the Central Intelligence Agency" ("CIA");[35]
(2) Material maintained by a law enforcement agency. This includes police, corrections, and prosecutors' offices.[36]
(3) Material that is "properly" secret in the interests of national defense or foreign policy;
(4) Material compiled for criminal investigative law enforcement purposes by agencies whose principal function is not law enforcement;[37]
(5) Material contained in Secret Service record systems, relating to protection of the President and others whom the Secret Service protects;[38]
(6) Material required by statute to be maintained and used solely as statistical records;[39]

---

the law or having someone who has already broken the law escape the legal consequences.)

28. See, e.g., Anderson v. United States DOJ, U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4731 (D.D.C. Mar. 31, 1999) (finding the prisoner could not obtain witness names from a police lineup because they were protected by FOIA and privacy act exemptions covering information compiled for law enforcement purposes and protecting witness safety and privacy.); Ferreira v. Drug Enforcement Admin., 874 F. Supp. 15, 17 (D.C. Cir. 1995) (holding that the DEA properly withheld the names and identities of agents when the disclosure could reasonably be expected to endanger their life or physical safety).

29. See, e.g., Anderson v. United States DOJ, U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4731 (D.D.C. Mar. 31, 1999)) (finding the prisoner could not obtain witness names from a police lineup because they were protected by FOIA and privacy act exemptions covering information compiled for law enforcement purposes and protecting witness safety and privacy.)

30. Tax Analysts v. U.S. Dept. of Justice, 845 F.2d 1060, 1067; 269 U.S. App. D.C. 315 (D.C. Cir. 1988) (holding an agency may not avoid producing its records in response to a FOIA request by directing the requester to a public source outside the agency that has the same information), aff'd, 492 U.S. 136, 109 S. Ct. 2841, 106 L. Ed. 2d 112 (1989).

31. Tax Analysts v. U.S. Dept. of Justice, 845 F.2d 1060, 1067 (D.C. Cir. 1988) (holding an agency may not avoid producing its records in response to a FOIA request by directing the requester to a public source outside the agency that has the same information), aff'd, 492 U.S. 136, 109 S. Ct. 2841, 106 L. Ed. 2d 112 (1989).

32. Tax Analysts v. U.S. Dept. of Justice, 845 F.2d 1060, 1067 (D.C. Cir. 1988) (holding an agency may not avoid producing its records in response to a FOIA request by directing the requester to a public source outside the agency that has the same information), aff'd, 492 U.S. 136, 109 S. Ct. 2841, 106 L. Ed. 2d 112 (1989); see also Oglesby v. U.S. Dept. of the Army, 920 F.2d 57, 70 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (finding an agency is not required to mail information in response to a FOIA request when that information has been made available to the public in another format); Grunfeld & Harrick v. U.S. Customs Serv., 709 F.2d 41, 42–43 (11th Cir. 1983) (holding an agency was not required to mail documents in response to a FOIA request when the documents were available for viewing and copying at the custom house in Puerto Rico).

33. Tax Analysts v. U.S. Dept. of Justice, 845 F.2d 1060, 1067 (D.C. Cir. 1988) (holding an agency may not avoid producing its records in response to a FOIA request by directing the requester to a public source outside the agency that has the same information).

34. 5 U.S.C. §§ 552a(j)–(k) (2000). See, e.g., Bassiouni v. FBI, 436 F.3d 712 (7th Cir. 2006) (where the FBI refused to amend a person's file, which contained 25 to 30-year-old memoranda pertaining to his activities concerning the Middle East, the district court properly granted the FBI summary judgment on the person's action under the Privacy Act because the memos were pertinent to the FBI's law enforcement activity.)

35. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(j)(1) (2008).

36. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(j)(2) To be exempt, the record by an agency under this section must consist of information compiled to identify individual criminal offenders and alleged offenders; information compiled for criminal investigation, including reports of informants and investigators; or reports identifiable to an individual that were compiled at any stage of the process of enforcement of the criminal laws.

37. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(k)(2) (2008).

38. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(k)(3) (2008).

39. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(k)(4) (2008).

(7) Material that identifies individuals whose identity was promised concealment when they provided information used in conducting background checks of job applicants to and employees of the federal government;[40]
(8) Material related to testing or examination used solely to determine individual qualifications for appointment or promotion in the federal service;[41] or
(9) Material that would identify individuals whose identity was promised concealment when they provided information used in promotion decisions for members of the armed forces.[42]

You should always request information under both FOIA and the PA. Agencies may not withhold information that is exempt under one statute but not exempt under the other.[43] In other words, "[I]f a FOIA exemption covers the documents, but a Privacy Act exemption does not, the documents must be released under the Privacy Act; if a Privacy Act exemption but not a FOIA exemption applies, the documents must be released under FOIA."[44]

Do not let the exemptions stop you from making requests, as the records may be available under an agency or court interpretation. In addition, agencies are not required to withhold information just because a particular exemption could be applied. Agency officials can choose to waive the exemptions and release the material(s) you requested. If information is withheld, you can challenge that decision by writing an administrative appeal letter or filing a lawsuit.

4. How to Make Your Request for Information from the Department of Justice

As noted above, every agency has a very specific procedure that must be followed in order for a FOIA or PA request to be granted. This Subsection will only describe the procedure that must be followed if you are seeking to request information from the Department of Justice ("DOJ"). For information from other agencies, or if you do not know which agency holds the information you want, you can consult any government directory or the "United States Government Manual."

To order a $27 copy of the "United States Government Manual," send requests to:

Superintendent of Documents
P.O. Box 371954
Pittsburgh, PA 15250-7954,

You can also call (202) 512-1800 or 1-866-512-1800, or access http://www.gpoaccess.gov/gmanual on the Internet to buy or download the manual.

In general, if you request information from the DOJ, you should try to send your request to the specific division that has the records you want.[45] If you are uncertain about which division to write, you can send your request to the DOJ's FOIA/PA Mail Referral Unit, and someone in that division will forward your letter to the division they think most likely to have the information you want. All requests should be in writing.

Send requests to:

FOIA/PA Mail Referral Unit, Justice Management Division
Department of Justice
Room 115
LOC Building
Washington, DC 20530-0001
(301) 583-7354
Fax (301) 341-0772 Attn: FOIA Request

The rest of this section addresses how to make a request for information from two divisions of the DOJ: the Federal Bureau of Prisons ("BOP") and the FBI. It discusses the fees that you will be charged for making

40. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(k)(5) (2008).
41. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(k)(6) (2008).
42. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(k)(7) (2008).
43. 5 U.S.C. §§ 552a(t)(1)–(2) (2008).
44. Martin v. Office of Special Counsel, 819 F.2d 1181, 1184–89 260 U.S. App. D.C. 382 (D.C. Cir. 1987) (denying disclosure of information requested by Appellee as such disclosure was exempted by both the PA and the FOIA).
45. See http://www.usdoj.gov/oip/attachmentbmay99.htm for more information about each division.

such requests, the types of responses you may receive from either the FBI or the BOP, and the appeals process, which may be useful if your request is denied.

(a) Requesting Information from the Federal Bureau of Prisons

The BOP maintains records on current and former prisoners of the federal penal and correctional institutions as well as records relating to the administration of the agency. This Subsection will describe (i) how to request information from your institution and (ii) how to request information from the BOP under FOIA and the PA.

(i) Requesting information from your institution[46]

If you would like access to your Inmate Central File, the BOP encourages you to request this information from your institution. Many records within the Inmate Central File can be disclosed without you filing a FOIA request. These include records relating to your sentence, detainer, participation in programs, classification data, parole information, mail, visits, property, conduct, work, release processing, and general correspondence. You can also request access to some medical records from your institution.

The Warden of your institution should have designated a staff member to receive requests for access to these records. In order to request access to your Inmate Central File or medical records, you should submit a request to this person, who must promptly schedule a time for you to review your file.

Staff members must tell you if there are documents in your Inmate Central File or medical records withheld from disclosure. If you would like access to these documents, you should make a FOIA request.

(ii) Requesting information from the BOP under the Privacy Act or FOIA

To file a request for information from the BOP under FOIA, including any information withheld from your review of your Inmate Central File or your medical records, or any other records, your request should:[47]

(1) Be in writing;
(2) Be clearly marked "Freedom of Information Act/Privacy Act Request" on the front of the letter and the envelope;
(3) Clearly describe the records you seek, including the approximate dates covered by the records;
(4) Include your full name, current address, date of birth, place of birth, and social security number (if you have one); and
(5) Include your Federal register number and institution where last housed

You must also verify your identity in one of the following ways:

(1) Complete and sign Form DOJ-361 (See Appendix B);
(2) Have the signature on the request witnessed by a notary; or
(3) Include the following statement before the signature on the requested letter: "I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct. Executed on [date]."

The DOJ has stated that "if you request information about yourself and do not follow one of the procedures [described above], your request cannot be processed."[48] If you are seeking personal information, make sure that you provide the necessary identification information.

If you are requesting information under the PA about someone other than yourself, the information will not be disclosed unless:

(1) You provide a statement by the other person specifically authorizing the release of information; the statement must be signed by that person and either witnessed by a notary or include a declaration made under penalty of perjury; or

---

46. All of the information regarding making requests from your institution can be found in Bureau of Prisons Program Statement 1351.05, issued on September 19, 2002, available at http://www.bop.gov/DataSource/execute/dsPolicyLoc by clicking on General Administration and Management and then by clicking on Document Name: "Release of Information."

47. Bureau of Prisons Program Statement 1351.05, issued on September 19, 2002, available at http://www.bop.gov/DataSource/execute/dsPolicyLoc (click on General Administration and Management; then click on Document Name: "Release of Information"); U.S. Dept. of Justice, "Freedom of Information Act Reference Guide," http://www.usdoj.gov/oip/04_3.html (last visited Sept. 17, 2008).

48. U.S. Dept. of Justice, "Freedom of Information Act Reference Guide," updated May 2006, http://www.usdoj.gov/04foia/referenceguidemay99.htm#how (last visited Mar. 9, 2008).

(2) You provide evidence that the subject of the request is deceased, such as a death certificate, or some comparable proof of death such as a newspaper obituary.

Having completed these steps, you may mail your request to:[49]

Chief, FOIA/PA Section
Office of General Counsel
Federal Bureau of Prisons
Department of Justice
Room 841, HOLC Building
Washington, D.C. 20534

If you have access to the Internet, you may also submit a request on-line through the BOP website. The website can be accessed at http://www.bop.gov/foia/submit.jsp. The FOIA Requester Service Center can be reached by telephone at (202) 616-7750, and the FOIA Public Liaison can be reached at (202) 514-6655.

(b) Requesting Information from the FBI

The FBI collects evidence in legal cases in which the United States is or may be an interested party and investigates violations of certain federal statutes.[50] Requests for information under FOIA and/or under the PA from the FBI should be addressed to:

Record/Information Dissemination Section
Federal Bureau of Investigation
Department of Justice
170 Marcel Drive
Winchester, VA 22602-4843

To request any information from the FBI, under either FOIA or the PA, your request must:

(1) Be in writing;
(2) Provide your full name;
(3) Provide your date and place of birth; and
(4) Either be notarized by a notary public, or include the following statement before the signature on the letter: "I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct. Executed on [date]."

Call FOIA Requester Service Center at (540) 868-4591 to access recorded information on how to submit a new FOIA/PA request to the FBI. Call (540) 868-4593 about the status of an existing FOIA/PA request to the FBI.

If you are requesting information about someone else and that person is alive, your request must include a waiver signed by that person and verified by a notary public. You must also include the person's full name and date and place of birth. If you are requesting information about someone who is deceased, you must provide the name of the deceased, and proof of death, either in the form of an obituary, death certificate, or published record that indicates the person is, in fact, dead.[51]

(c) Fees

Within a reasonable amount of time after your request, staff should provide you with copies of the disclosable documents from your Inmate Central File and/or medical records. Copies cost ten cents per page. In addition, you will be charged a fee for the search time required to process your request. The cost of search 49. U.S. Dept. of Justice, "Freedom of Information Act Reference Guide," updated June 2009, http://www.justice.gov/oip/foia_guide09.htm (last visited Feb. 10, 2010).

50. See 28 U.S.C. § 531–540(C) (2000) (describing various crimes that the FBI is authorized to investigate, for example, crimes involving government officers and employees and killing of state or local law enforcement officers).

51. Telephone Interview with staff member of the Federal Bureau of Investigations (Nov. 13, 2006).

time is $2.25 per fifteen minutes for clerical staff, $4.50 per fifteen minutes for professional staff, and $7.50 per fifteen minutes for managerial staff. You will not be charged for the first 100 pages of duplication or the first two hours of search time, and you will only be charged for fees that total above $8.00.[52]

When you file either a FOIA or PA request with the DOJ, the Department assumes that you are willing to pay fees up to $25. Most of the time, no fees are ever charged.[53] However, if you cannot pay $25, or you are not willing to, you should state how much you can pay in your request letter. If the DOJ estimates that your fees will be more than $25, they will let you make a cheaper request or ask you to agree to pay the estimated amount before they process your request. According to the DOJ website, "[y]ou ordinarily will not be required to actually pay the fees until the records have been processed and are ready to be sent to you."[54]

The DOJ charges for copies (ten cents per page), the cost of computer print-outs and tapes, and labor. The cost of labor is $4.00 per fifteen minutes for clerical staff, $7.00 per fifteen minutes for professional staff, and $10.25 per fifteen minutes for managerial staff. The DOJ will not charge you for the first two hours of search time or the first 100 pages of copies. If the total fee is less than $14, the DOJ will not charge any fee.

You can also request a fee waiver. To get a fee waiver, you must show you are requesting the information to benefit the public, not your own interests.[55] Inability to pay is not a basis for a fee waiver.[56] If you are entirely without a way to pay, you can attempt to request a fee waiver for that reason, but the DOJ usually denies such requests.

(d) Initial Response to Requests

Once a division of the DOJ has processed your request and any fee issues have been resolved, the division will send you a response. This response may either be (1) the information you requested, (2) some of the information you requested and a letter explaining why part of your request was denied, or (3) a letter explaining why your entire request was denied. If information is being withheld, the letter will tell you whether the information is being withheld because of one of the exemptions to the PA or FOIA.

The BOP should respond to your request within twenty business days, not counting Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays. The twenty-day period begins when the BOP's FOIA office receives your request. The BOP may extend the initial response time an additional ten business days when one of the following applies:

(1) Records must be collected from field offices;
(2) A "voluminous" (large) quantity of records must be located, compiled, and reviewed in response to the request; or
(3) The request requires that the BOP consult with another agency that has a substantial interest in the information, or among two or more other DOJ Divisions.[57]
(4) When the BOP needs more time to process your request, they will inform you in writing and give you the opportunity to modify your request.

5. What to Do if Your Request is Denied

If your initial request is denied, you should first file an administrative appeal with the agency from which you are requesting information. If your administrative appeal is also denied, you can file a lawsuit.

(a) Filing an Appeal

You should file an appeal if you are not satisfied with the response you have received to your FOIA request. Your appeal should be:

---

52. See U.S. Dept. of Justice Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 1351.05, (Sept.19, 2002), available at http://www.bop.gov/DataSource/execute/dsPolicyLoc (click on "General Administration and Management" and then on Document Name: "Release of Information," last visited Sept. 15, 2009).

53. U.S. Dept. of Justice, Freedom of Information Act Reference Guide, http://www.usdoj.gov/oip/referenceguide may99.htm#fees (last visited Sept. 15, 2009).

54. U.S. Dept. of Justice, Freedom of Information Act Reference Guide, http://www.usdoj.gov/oip/referenceguide may99.htm#fees (last visited Sept. 15, 2009).

41. .U.S. Dept. of Justice, Freedom of Information Act Reference Guide, http://www.usdoj.gov/oip/referenceguide may99.htm (last visited Sept. 15, 2009).

56. U.S. Dept. of Justice, Freedom of Information Act Reference Guide, http://www.usdoj.gov/oip/referenceguide may99.htm (last visited Sept. 15, 2009).

57. U.S. Dept. of Justice, Freedom of Information Act Reference Guide, http://www.usdoj.gov/oip/referenceguide may99.htm (last visited Sept. 15, 2009).

(1) In writing;
(2) Marked "Freedom of Information Act Appeal"—both on the front of the envelope and on the appeal itself;
(3) Received within sixty days of the date on the DOJ's initial letter; and
(4) Addressed to:

Office of Information Policy
United States Department of Justice
Suite 11050
1425 New York Avenue, N.W.
Washington, DC 20530-0001
Attn: Freedom of Information Act Appeal

Your appeal should include the name of the Component (office within the agency) that denied your request, the initial request number the Component assigned to the request, and the date of the BOP's action.[58] If no request number has been assigned, you should try to enclose a copy of the BOP's determination letter with your appeal. You should also explain your reasons for disagreeing with the BOP's denial of your request. Do not attach specific documents unless they are directly related to a point you are making in the appeal. Once your appeal has been received, it will be reviewed by an attorney in the Office of Information Policy ("OIP"). At that point, the OIP will either (1) affirm the BOP's decision, (2) affirm part of the BOP's decision and release other information requested, or (3) return or "remand" the request to the BOP to reprocess the request.[59]

(b) Filing a Lawsuit

If the appeal does not get you the information you requested, you can file a lawsuit to force the agency to release the documents. You technically have up to six years after the date on which your administrative appeal was denied to file a lawsuit,[60] but you should try to file as soon as possible to demonstrate to the court that you need the information.

Filing a FOIA complaint should be relatively inexpensive and simple.[61] Sometimes, as soon as the complaint is filed, the government will release the documents without further litigation. If you are denied documents that you think are clearly covered by FOIA, you may wish to draft and file your own short-form complaint. In addition, you should consider filing a "Motion for a Vaughn Index" using the sample Vaughn motion reproduced in Appendix C-5 at the end of this Chapter.[62] This is a routine motion under which the government agency will be required to give you an itemized index describing the documents it is withholding and the justification it claims for withholding each.

After you file your complaint, the burden is on the government to come forward and justify why it is withholding the information.

C. New York's Freedom of Information Law

1. Right of Access to Information

(a) Generally

The New York Freedom of Information Law[63] ("FOIL") grants New York state prisoners access to some of their prison records, and to statements and memoranda that lay out the Department of Correctional Services' policies. This law was patterned after the FOIA (the federal Freedom of Information Act) and was "designed to make available to the public all documents generated by, and in the possession of, the government unless a compelling reason requires their confidentiality."[64]

---

58. U.S. Dept. of Justice, Freedom of Information Act Reference Guide, http://www.usdoj.gov/oip/referenceguide may99.htm#appeals (last visited Sept. 15, 2009).

59. 28 C.F.R. § 16.9 (2009).

60. 28 U.S.C. § 2401(a) (2006).

61. Various resources are available to help jailhouse lawyers filing FOIA lawsuits. The names of several organizations that will advise, though usually not represent, FOIA litigants can be found in Appendix D of this Chapter.

62. This procedure was adopted in Vaughn v. Rosen, 484 F.2d 820, 157 U.S.App.D.C. 340 (D.C. Cir. 1973).

63. N.Y. Pub. Off. Law §§ 84–90 (McKinney 2008 & Supp. 2009).

64. Ralph J. Marino, The New York Freedom of Information Law, 43 Fordham L. Rev. 83, 83 (1974). Senator

FOIL provides that governmental agencies shall make rules and regulations enabling the public to access agency records.[65] The law also provides for certain exceptions to the general rule of public access, which closely follow the exceptions to the federal FOIA.[66] The FOIL exemptions are[67]

(1) Records that do not have to be disclosed under other state or federal statutes. For example, personnel records of corrections officers and police officers that are "used to evaluate performance toward continued employment or promotion" are protected from disclosure under N.Y. Civil Rights Law Section 50-a;[68]
(2) Records that, if disclosed, would unlawfully invade personal privacy under the provisions of subsection 89(2) of FOIL. Under Section 89, employment, medical or credit history, or personal information reported in confidence to an agency that is not relevant to the agency's ordinary work does not have to be disclosed under FOIL;[69]
(3) Records that, if disclosed, would interfere with agreements over contract awards that have been made or are about to be made, or negotiations over working conditions;
(4) "Trade secrets," or confidential information, submitted to an agency by a commercial business, or derived from information obtained from a commercial business, which would substantially hurt the position of the business if disclosed;
(5) Records made or gathered for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings. For example, evidence seized from a crime scene may be excluded from disclosure because the evidence may identify a confidential source or reveal "non-routine" techniques or procedures relating to a criminal investigation. Disclosure is also restricted where it would deny a person of the right to a fair trial;[70]
(6) Records that, if disclosed, would endanger the life or safety of any person, including another prisoner, prison official, or a member of the general public. For this reason, records that would jeopardize prison security, such as a list of correctional records and the location of such records, may be excluded from disclosure;[71]
(7) Inter-agency or intra-agency materials such as agency proposals, recommendations, deliberations, opinions, evaluations, or other agency materials that do not constitute factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy determinations, or external audits;[72]
(8) Examination questions or answers that are requested before the final administration of such questions;
(9) Records that, if disclosed, would place the security of an agency's information technology assets, including its computer systems at risk; and
(10) Records that are photographs, microphotographs, videotape or other recorded images prepared as allowed by Section 1111-a of the vehicle and traffic law.[73]

Marino was the Senate sponsor of the law; see also N.Y. Pub. Off. Law § 84 (McKinney 2008).

65. N.Y. Pub. Off. Law § 87(1)(b) (McKinney 2008 & Supp. 2009).
66. N.Y. Pub. Off. Law § 87(2) (McKinney 2008 & Supp. 2009).
67. N.Y. Pub. Off. Law § 87(2)(a) (McKinney 2008 & Supp. 2009).
68. N.Y. Civ. Rights Law § 50-a(1) (McKinney 1992).
69. N.Y. Pub. Off. Law § 89(2)(b)(i), (v) (McKinney 2008).
70. N.Y. Pub. Off. Law § 96(2)(d) (McKinney 2008).
71. See Fournier v. Fish, 83 A.D.2d 979, 979, 442 N.Y.S.2d 823, 824 (3d Dept. 1981) (holding that correctional facility had properly excluded from its subject matter lists of records kept by the Department of Correctional Services and records kept by the correctional facility, specifically information relating to the exact location in prison facility of documents requested, on basis that disclosure would jeopardize prison security); Lonski v. Kelly, 149 A.D.2d 977, 977–78, 540 N.Y.S.2d 114, 114 (4th Dept. 1989) (finding that a videotape showing a prisoner's transfer to a special housing unit could not be released because it revealed the geographical layout of the unit and disclosed identities of prisoners and offices, and therefore could "endanger the life or safety" of the people involved); Buffalo Broad. Co. v. N.Y. State Dept. of Corr. Servs., 155 A.D.2d 106, 112–13, 552 N.Y.S.2d 712, 715 (3d Dept. 1990) (holding that state correctional facilities could properly be required to disclose videotapes, but could, subject to judicial approval, delete parts to prevent interference with criminal prosecutions and personal privacy concerns, and to protect the safety of inmates and corrections staff).
72. See, e.g., Russo v. Nassau County Cmty. Coll., 81 N.Y.2d 690, 699, 623 N.E.2d 15, 19, 603 N.Y.S.2d 294, 298 (2d Dept. 1993) (finding "inter-agency or intra-agency materials" to mean communications exchanged for discussion purposes, but not communications constituting final policy decisions); see also Miracle Mile Assocs. v. Yudelson, 68 A.D.2d 176, 182-183, 417 N.Y.S.2d 142, 147 (4th Dept. 1979) (holding that developer seeking city documents was improperly denied access to materials that did not contain any advice or opinion which was part of an agency's deliberative process, but rather were materials stating or reflecting an agency's final determination).

The law also requires that certain records be kept. For example, each agency must keep a reasonably detailed list, by subject matter, of all records in its possession.[74] This requirement ensures that you will be able to find out what kinds of records exist so that you may decide if you need a copy of them.

(b) Freedom of Information and the Department of Correctional Services

The Department of Correctional Services ("DOCS") has issued regulations to comply with FOIL.[75] These regulations set forth the DOCS rules about what types of records you may obtain, as well as the procedures you can use to get those records. Where the DOCS regulations conflict with FOIL, FOIL applies. In other words, DOCS regulations cannot keep you from obtaining information that FOIL permits you to obtain.

Procedures for obtaining each type of record available under the DOCS regulations are described in more detail in Part C(3) of this Chapter.

2. General Procedure to Obtain Access to Records

Requests to obtain access to records must be in writing and must reasonably describe the record that you want. Whenever possible, the request should include the title, file number, and date of the record, as well as any other details that may help to locate and identify it. In Konigsberg v. Coughlin, the New York State Supreme Court held that a prisoner's request for "any and all files or records kept on me" was a reasonable description. In that case, however, the prisoner records coordinator collected around 2,300 pages of records.[76] Because you may be charged for the records you receive, it is in your best interest to be as specific as possible when describing the records you want. Always include your name, address, New York identification number, and inmate number in your request. Keep a copy of your request letter. If you are requesting records regarding a specific incident, include the exact date and location (address if possible) of the incident.[77] A sample FOIL request letter that you can use is included in Appendix C-3.

Within five business days after receiving a request for a DOCS record, the state must determine if the record is in state custody.[78] The custodian/records access officer should send you acknowledgment of receipt of your request and notification of the approximate date when your request will be granted or denied.[79] If the record is not found after a diligent (careful) search, the custodian must indicate that the record cannot be found, is in the custody of another specified agency, or does not exist.[80] If the agency you have written has the record, the custodian must either: (1) deny your request for access under the exemption(s) specified under FOIL Section 87(2); (2) produce the record for inspection at the agency office, and make and certify copies upon payment; (3) advise you that the record is in custody and make arrangements for copying and payment of fees at a later date; (4) mail you copies upon payment; or (5) provide you with the information in the record instead of making a copy if you so agree.[81] As a practical matter, it may take much longer than five business days before you receive a response to your request.

If the agency cannot locate the records you requested, then the agency must provide proof that it conducted a "diligent search" for the records.[82] You may ask the custodian for a written certification of that

---

73. N.Y. Veh. & Traf. Law § 1111-a (McKinney 2008 & Supp. 2009).

74. N.Y. Pub. Off. Law § 87(3)(c) (McKinney 2008 & Supp. 2009).

75. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, §§ 5 et seq. (2005). The N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. contains rules and regulations issued pursuant to laws passed by the Legislature. Title 7 covers the regulations issued by the Department of Correctional Services. See also N.Y. State Dept. of Corr. Servs. Directive # 2010, Nov. 18, 2003 (issuing the regulations found in Title 7). The New York State Division of Parole has issued similar regulations covering its parole records. These regulations can be found at N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, §§ 8000.5, 8008 (2009); see also Part C(3)(d) of this Chapter for a discussion of how to obtain parole records.

76. Konigsberg v. Coughlin, 68 N.Y.2d 245, 247, 501 N.E.2d 1, 2, 508 N.Y.S.2d 393, 394 (1986).

77. See Johnson Newspaper Corp. v. Stainkamp, 94 A.D.2d 825, 286, 463 N.Y.S.2d 122, 123 (3d Dept. 1983) (holding that the request must be "sufficiently detailed" to allow the governmental agency to locate the requested records).

78. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 5.35(a) (2005).

79. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 5.35(b) (2005).

80. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 5.35(c) (2005).

81. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 5.35(d) (2005).

82. See Key v. Hynes, 205 A.D.2d 779, 781, 613 N.Y.S.2d 926, 928 (2d Dept. 1994) (holding that the allegations made on information and belief that prosecutor's office did not have the report that prisoner had requested was insufficient, since entirely conclusory statements do not constitute evidentiary proof), overruled by Rattley v. New York City Police Dept., 96 N.Y.2d 873, 875, 756 N.E.2d 56, 58, 730 N.Y.S. 2d 768, 770 (2d Cir. 2001) (holding that Public proof. If any part of the records arrives deleted, or if your entire request is denied, the agency must provide you with a reason in writing and tell you that you have a right to appeal.[83]

While there are no fees for the agency's searching for the records or for making the records available for inspection, DOCS does charge fees for the photocopying of records. The current fee for photocopies of DOCS records is twenty-five cents ($.25) per page not exceeding nine inches by fourteen inches in size.[84] DOCS may, at its discretion, provide the records along with a bill for the fees due, require assurance of payment before the copies are delivered, or require payment before delivering the copies to you. Any fees you owe for photocopying may be waived at the discretion of the custodian of the records. You should consider asking in your request that you be notified before your request is filled if there will be fees (or to limit the request to within a specific dollar amount in fees). The sample FOIL request letter in Appendix C-3 contains wording like this which you can use to prevent being billed for unexpected fees.

If you are denied access to a record, you can appeal the denial to Counsel of the Department of Correctional Services.[85] The FOIL provides that you must appeal all denials within thirty days.[86] This appeal must be in writing and must contain your name and address, the date of your request, the specific record requested, the place of request if not DOCS, the date of the denial, and, if known, the person denying your request. A sample FOIL appeal letter that you can use is included in Appendix C-4. Send the appeal to:

Counsel, New York State Department of Correctional Services
1220 Washington Avenue, Building No. 2
State Campus
Albany, NY 12226
(518) 457–4951

The Counsel for the Department of Correctional Services has ten business days to review the issue after receiving your appeal. He must allow access to the record or explain in writing the reason for the denial. Again, as a practical matter, it may take much longer to receive a response. If you do not receive a response from Counsel, you may go directly to court for review of the denial.

You may bring a legal proceeding for review of such denial[87] under Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules.[88] JLM, Chapter 22 discusses how to file an Article 78 petition. You must, however, exhaust all administrative remedies before turning to the courts for relief. If your request for agency records is denied, follow the appeal procedure of that agency. For example, if your request for DOCS records is denied, you must appeal to DOCS Counsel before bringing your Article 78 petition to challenge the denial.[89]

3. Procedures to Obtain Copies of Indices, Medical Records, Administrative Records, Parole Records, Criminal History Records & Inmate Records

(a) The Index

The Department of Correctional Services must keep an index, which is a reasonably detailed, current list, organized by subject matter, of all records in its possession. The master index may enable you to determine the title or name of the record containing the information you want. Because all indices contain subject-matter references, the index may be helpful if you want a copy of an administrative memorandum but are unable to identify the particular record you want. To obtain a copy of the master index, write to:

Officers Law § 89(3) does not specify the manner in which an agency must certify that documents cannot be located, and therefore that the Police Department's statement that it had conducted a diligent search for the documents it could not locate met the certification requirement).

83. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 5.35(e) (2005).

84. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 5.36 (2005). As noted in the section on medical records, the fee for medical records is fifty cents per page.

85. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 5.45 (2005).

86. N.Y. Pub. Off. Law § 89(4)(a) (McKinney 2008 & Supp. 2009).

87. N.Y. Pub. Off. Law § 89(4)(b) (McKinney 2008 & Supp. 2009).

88. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7801 et seq. (McKinney 2008 & Supp. 2009).

89. See Sommer v. Jones, 96 A.D.2d 624, 624, 464 N.Y.S.2d 879, 880 (3d Dept. 1983) (holding that the administrative remedies provided under sections 5.20, 5.50, 5.51, and 5.52 of the New York Codes, Rules and Regulations must be exhausted before the prisoner can ask a court to review the case).

Deputy Commissioner for Administration
New York State Department of Correctional Services
1220 Washington Avenue, Building No. 2
State Campus
Albany, NY 12226–2050

Each prison is required to keep a master index of its documents. To obtain a copy of your prison's master index, you should write to the prison Superintendent or Director, or the prison "inmate records coordinator," if one has been designated. Note that no prison is required to keep an index of records on individual prisoners. If you want to obtain indices of records of an agency other than the DOCS (for example, you may want a city or county corrections department's index), you should call or write that agency's Freedom of Information Officer (sometimes called a "Records Access Officer") to request a copy.

The current fee for a copy of the index is twenty-five cents ($.25) per page for photocopies not larger than nine inches by fourteen inches in size.[90]

If you cannot pay to copy the index, you should say in your request that you are a prisoner and unable to pay the fee. Any custodian of records has the authority to excuse you from paying the fee or some portion of it. It has been the practice to allow prisoners to obtain copies of the master index free of charge. Once the fee is paid or waived, a copy of the index will be sent to you.

D. Medical/Health Records

You may wish to get a copy of your medical records (DOCS uses the term "health records"). DOCS has established a separate policy for prisoners to access their health records. This means that FOIL is not the way to acquire copies of these records. Instead, health records are handled by a different set of procedures that are described within this Subsection.[91] For more information about how to request your health records, you should consult the DOCS Division of Health Services' Health Services Policy Manual Section 4.10 or ask your institution's Nurse Administrator.

Health records are defined as any departmental records created or received by a health care provider, including information on an individual's past, present, or future physical health, mental health. This includes information received from other providers about prior examinations or treatment of a patient. Health records do not include substance or alcohol abuse records, or mental health records.

Generally, a New York State prisoner can obtain a copy of his medical records by submitting a request to the Nurse Administrator, designated as the "record access officer" for health records. If you are at a Regional Medical Unit, make the request to the Health Information Management Technician.[92] All requests must be in writing, signed and dated. Health record copies cost fifty cents per page; in addition, you may be charged for the labor it takes to find and copy the health record, at a cost of $3.25 for every fifteen minutes of labor.

Even if access to part of your health record is denied, the rest of the record must be provided. You will receive a written explanation for the denial, as well as notice about how to appeal the denial. According to the manual, where confidentiality and safety concerns prevent the release of your health record, the decision not to release this information is not reviewable.[93] However, other concerns that lead a health care provider to deny you information are reviewable. To appeal the denial, you should notify the Facility Health Services Director in writing. The Director will review the appeal and rule on it within thirty days.[94] Once a decision has been made, you will be notified in writing. If a decision is made to deny the appeal, you may make a complaint to the HIPAA Privacy Officer. If you have a complaint about your attempts to get access to, release of, or disclosure of your health records, you should contact the Nurse Administrator or file a grievance through the Inmate Grievance Program. Chapter 15 of the JLM has information about prisoner grievance procedures.

---

90. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 5.36 (2005).

91. FOIL is the proper way to request health services policies and documentation, but not to get copies of your health records. See N.Y.S. Dept. of Corr. Serv. Div. of Health Serv., Health Service Policy Manual § 4.10 (2003).

92. N.Y.S. Dept. of Corr. Servs. Div. of Health Serv., Health Service Policy Manual § 4.10 (2003).

93. N.Y.S. Dept. of Corr. Servs. Div. of Health Serv., Health Service Policy Manual § 4.10 (2003).

94. N.Y.S. Dept. of Corr. Servs. Div. of Health Serv., Health Service Policy Manual § 4.10 (2003).

E. Administrative Records

Administrative records are the memoranda and directives that describe DOCS policies. They may also include manuals and rulebooks for DOCS employees, as well as Inmate Grievance Committee decisions. To obtain a copy of the DOCS administrative records, send a written request describing the record or records sought, to:[95]

Records Access Officer
New York State Department of Correctional Services
1220 Washington Avenue, Building No. 2
Albany, NY 12226–2050

F. Parole Records

The New York State Division of Parole keeps records on every prisoner eligible for parole or parole release. If you are eligible for parole, your case record, maintained by your "street" parole officer, will contain a comprehensive set of the records the Division of Parole maintains about you.[96] Parole regulations provide that the Division of Parole will only grant you access to those records prior to (1) a scheduled appearance before the Board; (2) a scheduled appearance before an authorized hearing officer; or (3) the filing of an administrative appeal of a final decision of the Board.[97] Also, you will only be allowed to see the portions of the record that will be considered by the Board or hearing officer during your appearance or hearing.[98]

To make a request for those parts of your case record that you are allowed to see, write to the senior parole officer at your prison, or the area parole office that serves the area where your institution is located.[99] Your letter should include (1) your name and identification number; (2) whether you have a release interview, revocation hearing, or appeal pending; (3) the prison or jail in which you are confined; (4) and your signature.[100] Explain in the letter that in order to prepare for your upcoming hearing or appeal, you want to review all of the information in your file that will be considered by the Board of Parole. Your request must be received at least ten days before the scheduled date of a final revocation hearing or the final date to perfect an administrative appeal, and at most one day after receiving notice of the scheduled date of any other hearing.[101] The fee for copies of parole records is twenty-five cents ($.25) per page.[102]

For more information on parole records and procedures, refer to Chapter 32 of the JLM on Parole.

G. Criminal History Records[103]

A prisoner's criminal history record is filed with the Division of Criminal Justice Services ("DCJS"). The procedure for obtaining these records varies slightly from other records.[104] A written request for your criminal history data should include your name, any other name you have used or may be known by, your birth date, your DIN (Department of Corrections "Department Identification Number"), and, if you have it, your NYSID ("New York State Identification Number"). In addition, it is helpful to include your race, sex, and Social Security number. You must also state in your request how long you will be incarcerated. There

95. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 5.11 (2009).

96. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, §§ 8000.5(a)–(b) (2009). Your case record may contain the following information about you: a complete statement of the crime(s), the circumstances of each crime, all pre-sentence memoranda, the nature of the sentence, the sentencing court, the name of the judge and district attorney, probation reports, and reports as to your social, physical, mental, and psychiatric condition and history.

97. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, §§ 8000.5(c)(5)–(6) (2009).

98. Access is further restricted by content. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8000.5(c)(2)(i) (2009).

99. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8000.5(c)(3) (2009).

100. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8000.5(c)(8) (2009).

101. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8000.5(c)(3)(ii) (2009).

102. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8000.5(c)(7) (2009).

103. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 6050.1 (2009) (providing prisoners the right to review their own criminal history records and to challenge the accuracy or completeness of the record).

104. The information in this paragraph is drawn from the Legal Action Center's "How to Get and Clean Up Your New York State Rap Sheet," available online at http://lac.org/doc_library/lac/publications/NYS_Rap_Sheet_Final.pdf (7th ed. 2007) (last visited Sep. 18, 2009). The Legal Action Center also publishes versions of this guide for California, Illinois, Pennsylvania, and Virginia. These can be found at http://lac.org/index.php/lac/132 (last visited Sep. 18, 2009). Contact information for the Legal Action Center can be found in Appendix D-1.

may be forms available in your prison library that you can use instead of writing your own written request. Send your request to:

Record Review Unit
New York State Division of Criminal Justice Services
4 Tower Place
Albany, NY 12203–3764
(518) 485–7675

DCJS will only send you a copy of your record free of charge if you will be incarcerated for longer than forty-five days. If you are not currently incarcerated or if you will be incarcerated for less than forty-five days, you can receive a copy of your record by sending DCJS a form called Request for Record Review. You can obtain this form by writing to DCJS at the above address. The Record Review Packet includes directions to help you complete and submit a fingerprint card to DCJS. There is no fee for the application packet itself, but a fee of fifty dollars ($50) must be included when you complete the materials and return them to DCJS to obtain a copy of your record.

If, after reviewing your criminal history data, you find it is inaccurate or incomplete, you may challenge the errors.[105] To correct your file you must submit a "Statement of Challenge" to the DCJS, in which you must identify the specific information that you believe is incorrect and include any documentation or proof.[106] Also, be sure to list any other agencies that may have the erroneous data.[107] A blank Statement of Challenge form should be included with the copy of your criminal history record that you have received.

DCJS will review your file within a reasonable time period after receiving your Statement of Challenge form and any supporting documentation.[108] DCJS will check the errors you pointed out in your form against the records kept by the Director of the Bureau of Identification and Criminal History Operations ("BICHO"). If it finds that you are right about the errors, DCJS will make the necessary corrections to your file and will notify you in writing of those corrections.[109] DCJS also will forward the corrections to agencies listed on the Statement of Challenge form.[110] If it does not agree with your challenge after checking the BICHO records, DCJS will notify you in writing. You may appeal a negative finding by BICHO by notifying the Commissioner of DCJS in writing within a reasonable time period after receiving notification from DCJS. Within a reasonable time after receiving your request, the Commissioner will notify you of the result of your appeal and order any appropriate corrections to be made.[111]

H. Inmate Records

New York State prisoners can also gain limited access to their inmate records. An inmate record includes the documents in a prisoner's central office folder (or institutional folder); it does not include medical records.[112] The regulations give you access to your "personal history" and "correctional supervision history data."[113] Your personal history records contain information like your age, date of birth, birthplace, city of prior residence, occupation, physical description, correctional facilities in which you have been incarcerated, commitment information, and departmental actions about your sentence, and release or re-imprisonment.[114]

Your correctional supervision history data record contains records of disciplinary charges and dispositions, good behavior allowance reports, warrants and cancellations of warrants, legal papers, court orders, transportation orders, records of institutional transfers and changes in program assignments, reports of injury to prisoners, and property records, including the personal property list and postage account card.[115]

105. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, §§ 6050.2(a)–(b) (2009).
106. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 6050.2(a) (2009).
107. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 6050.2(c) (2009).
108. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 6050.2(b) (2009).
109. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 6050.2(b) (2009).
110. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 6050.2(c) (2009).
111. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 6050.3 (2009).
112. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 5.5(g) (2009).
113. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 5.5(g) (2009). For medical records, see Part (C)(3)(b) of this Chapter.
114. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 5.5(i) (2009).
115. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 5.5(a) (2009).

If you would like access to these records, you should request them from your assigned counselor, who serves as the "records access officer."[116] If you disagree with a decision not to release a part of your record, you may appeal to Counsel of the Department of Correctional Services. If the appeal is denied, you may then challenge it in court with an Article 78 petition. JLM, Chapter 22 tells you how to file an Article 78 petition.

It is often easier to get records than the regulations suggest. There is now a presumption that all records should be available for public inspection except those specifically excluded. Furthermore, the agency has the burden of proving that a record should be excluded.[117] The courts have held that public disclosure laws are to be read broadly,[118] and statutory exemptions from disclosure read narrowly, to allow maximum access.[119]

I. Correcting Errors in Your Personal History or Correctional Supervision History Records

If you notice anything incomplete or inaccurate in your records, you should tell the custodian of the records. This is the person from whom you received the records (if they were inmate records, then it should be your counselor).[120] You may only correct incorrect information that appears in your personal history or correctional supervision history.[121]

Once you have expressed an objection concerning your record, the custodian must, within a reasonable time, investigate the accuracy and completeness of the information, unless there are reasonable grounds to believe that your objection is frivolous.[122] If the custodian determines that the disputed information is incorrect or incomplete, she must make the changes in the record that are necessary. The custodian must also report the results of the investigation to you and tell you of any changes made to your record no later than forty-five days after being notified of your objection.[123]

If you still dispute the accuracy or completeness of the information after investigation and a determination by the custodian, you may appeal the custodian's determination to the Inspector General of the Department of Correctional Services.[124] This appeal must be in writing and sent to:

Inspector General
New York Department of Correctional Services
1220 Washington Avenue, Building No. 2
Albany, NY 12226–2050

The Inspector General can affirm, modify, or reverse the custodian's determination. He must notify you within thirty days of the decision in your case.[125] If the record is found to be incorrect and is then corrected, the Department must notify all those who were given the erroneous information and tell them about the corrected information.[126] You can request that you be given a list of all agencies, individuals, or organizations that were given the erroneous or incomplete information about you.[127] If the Inspector General decides against you, you may challenge his decision in court.

---

116. N.Y.S. Dept. of Corr. Servs., Directive No. 2010, Departmental Records 3 (rev. 2006), available at http://www.docs.state.ny.us/Directives/2010.pdf.

117. N.Y. Pub. Off. Law § 89(4)(b) (McKinney 2001 & Supp. 2007).

118. See, e.g., Burke v. Yudelson, 81 Misc. 2d 870, 878, 368 N.Y.S.2d 779, 787 (Sup. Ct. Monroe County 1975), aff'd, 51 A.D.2d 673, 673, 378 N.Y.S.2d 165, 166 (4th Dept. 1976) (noting that disclosure laws should be liberally construed, and that the burden of proving that release is not allowed falls on the agency seeking to deny the disclosure request).

119. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 21, § 1401.1(d) (2009) ("[C]onflicts among laws governing public access to records shall be construed in favor of the widest possible availability of public records.").

120. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 5.50 (2009). On amending your record, see N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, §§ 6.8–6.11 (2007).

121. See, e.g., Rowland D. v. Scully, 152 A.D.2d 570, 570, 543 N.Y.S.2d 497, 498 (2d Dept. 1989), aff'd, 76 N.Y.2d 725, 557 N.E.2d 112, 557 N.Y.S.2d 876 (holding that a prisoner was not entitled to examine forms in order to challenge their accuracy, unless the forms contained information relating to his correctional supervision or personal history).

122. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 5.51(a) (2009).

123. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 5.51(b) (2009).

124. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 5.52 (2009).

125. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 5.52 (2009).

126. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 5.54 (2009).

127. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 5.53 (2009).

1. The Committee on Open Government

If you have problems obtaining information under New York's FOIL, you may want to complain to the Committee on Open Government established by FOIL.[128] This committee is charged with monitoring the program that gives the public access to records. The committee tries to make sure that agencies have complied with the law, and can also furnish an advisory opinion to any person who wants one. The committee also has a staff that is responsible for answering any questions about the FOIL. Its address is:

Committee on Open Government
One Commerce Plaza, 99 Washington Avenue, Suite 650
Albany, NY 12231
(518) 474–2518

J. Federal Citizen Information Center

If you need help determining which federal agency to contact for your request, call the Federal Citizen Information Center for assistance.

Federal Citizen Information Center
Toll free number: (800) 333–4636 http://www.info.gov

K. Conclusion

If you would like access to information in government files, there are laws allowing you to ask for documents from federal and state agencies. If you want records from the federal government, you can file a FOIA request or a Privacy Act request. If you would like records from a New York state agency, you should file a request under New York's Freedom of Information Law ("FOIL"). Appendix A contains citations to other states' freedom of information laws. You should direct your request to the agency with the records you want. Appendix D lists the addresses of some government agencies. Remember: each agency has specific procedures, so it is important to check to see what information you need to provide in your request.

128. N.Y. Pub. Off. Law § 87(1)(a) (McKinney 2009).

APPENDIX A

STATE FREEDOM OF INFORMATION LAWS

Alabama	Ala. Code §§ 36-12-40 to 36-12-43 (LexisNexis 2001 & Supp. 2008).
Alaska	Alaska Stat. §§ 40.25.100 to 40.25.295 (Lexisnexis 2008).
Arizona	Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 39-121 to 39-128 (West 2001 & Supp. 2008).
Arkansas	Ark. Code Ann. §§ 25-19-101 to 25-19-109 (LexisNexis 2002 & Supp. 2007).
California	Cal. Gov't Code §§ 6250 to 6270 (West 2008 & Supp. 2009).
Colorado	Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 24-72-201 to 24-72-206 (West 2008 & Supp. 2008).
Connecticut	Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. §§ 1-200 to 1-242 (West 2007 & Supp. 2009).
Delaware	Del. Code Ann. tit. 29, §§ 10001 to 10005 (2003 & Supp. 2008).
Dist. of Columbia	D.C. Code Ann. §§ 2-531 to 2-540 (LexisNexis 2001 & Supp. 2009).
Florida	Fla. Stat. Ann. §§ 119.01 to 119.15 (West 2008 & Supp. 2009).
Georgia	Ga. Code Ann. §§ 50-18-70 to 50-18-77 (LexisNexis 2009).
Hawaii	Haw. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 92F-1 to 92F-42 (LexisNexis 2007 & Supp. 2008).
Idaho	Idaho Code Ann. §§ 9-337 to 9-350 (2004 & Supp. 2008).
Illinois	5 Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. §§ 140/1 to 140/11 (West 2005 & Supp. 2009).
Indiana	Ind. Code Ann. §§ 5-14-3-1 to 5-14-3-10 (LexisNexis 2006).
Iowa	Iowa Code Ann. §§ 22.1 (West 2001 & Supp. 2009).
Kansas	Kan. Stat. Ann. §§ 45-215 to 45-250 (2000 & Supp. 2008).
Kentucky	Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 61.870 to 61.884 (LexisNexis 2004 & Supp. 2008).
Louisiana	La. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 44:1 to 44:41 (West 2007 & Supp. 2009).
Maine	Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 1, §§ 401 to 412 (West 1989 & Supp. 2008).
Maryland	Md. Code Ann., State Gov't §§ 10-611 to 10-630 (LexisNexis 2004 & Supp. 2008).
Massachusetts	Mass. Ann. Laws ch. 4, § 7(26) (Lexis Nexis 1999) and ch. 66, § 10 (LexisNexis 2002 & Supp. 2009).
Michigan	Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. §§ 15.231 to 15.246 (West 2004 & Supp. 2009).
Minnesota	Minn. Stat. Ann. §§ 13.03 to 13.04 (West 2000) and 138.17 (West 2005 & Supp. 2009).
Mississippi	Miss. Code Ann. §§ 25-61-1 to 25-61-17 (LexisNexis 2006 & Supp. 2008).
Missouri	Mo. Ann. Stat. §§ 109.180 to 109.190 (West 1997 & Supp. 2009).
Montana	Mont. Code Ann. §§ 2-6-101 to 2-6-112 (2008).
Nebraska	Neb. Rev. Stat. §§ 84-712 to 84-712.09 (2008).
Nevada	Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 239.005 to 239.030 (LexisNexis 2005 & Supp. 2007).
New Hampshire	N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 91-A:1 to 91-A:9 (LexisNexis 2001 & Supp. 2008).
New Jersey	N.J. Stat. Ann. §§ 47:1A-1 to 47:1A-13 (West 2003 & Supp. 2009).
New Mexico	N.M. Stat. Ann. §§ 14-2-1 to 14-2-12 (2003 & Supp. 2008).
New York	N.Y. Pub. Off. Law §§ 84 to 90 (McKinney 2008 & Supp. 2009).
North Carolina	N.C. Gen. Stat. §§ 132-1 to 132-10 (LexisNexis 2007 & Supp. 2008).
North Dakota	N.D. Cent. Code §§ 44-04-18 to 44-04-19.2 (LexisNexis 2007).
Ohio	Ohio Rev. Code Ann. §§ 149.43 to 149.44 (West 2002 & Supp. 2009).
Oklahoma	Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 51, §§ 24A.1 to 24A.29 (West 2008).
Oregon	Or. Rev. Stat. §§ 192.410 to 192.505 (2007).
Pennsylvania	65 Pa. Cons. Stat. Ann. §§ 66.1 to 66.9 (West 2000 & Supp. 2009).
Rhode Island	R.I. Gen. Laws §§ 38-2-1 to 38-2-15 (1997 & Supp. 2008).
South Carolina	S.C. Code Ann §§ 30-4-10 to 30-4-165 (West 1976 & Supp. 2008).
South Dakota	S.D. Codified Laws §§ 1-27-1 to 1-27-33 (West 2004 & Supp. 2008).
Tennessee	Tenn. Code Ann. §§ 10-7-503 to 10-7-509 (LexisNexis 1999 & Supp. 2007).
Texas	Tex. Gov't Code Ann. §§ 552.001 to 552.029 (Vernon 2004 & Supp. 2008).
Utah	Utah Code Ann. §§ 63G-2-201 to 63G-2-405 (LexisNexis 2008 & Supp. 2008).
Vermont	Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 1, §§ 315 to 320 (LexisNexis 2003 & Supp. 2008).
Virginia	Va. Code Ann. §§ 2.2-3700 to 2.2-3714 (LexisNexis 2008).
Washington	Wash. Rev. Code Ann. §§ 42.56.001 to 42.56.904 (West 2006 & Supp. 2009).
West Virginia	W. Va. Code Ann. §§ 29B-1-1 to 29B-1-7 (LexisNexis 2007 & Supp. 2008).
Wisconsin	Wis. Stat. Ann. §§ 19.31 to 19.39 (West 2003 & Supp. 2008).
Wyoming	Wyo. Stat. Ann. §§ 16-4-201 to 16-4-205 (LexisNexis 2009).

APPENDIX B

SAMPLE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE CERTIFICATION OF IDENTITY FORM

U.S. Department of Justice Certification of Identity

Privacy Act Statement. In accordance with 28 CFR Section 166.41(d) personal data sufficient to identify the individuals submitting requests by mail under the Privacy Act of 1974, 5 U.S.C. Section 552a, is required. The purpose of this solicitation is to ensure that the records of individuals who are the subject of US Department of Justice systems of records are not wrongfully disclosed by the Department. Failure to furnish this information will result in no action being taken on the request. False information on this form may subject the requester to criminal penalties under 18 U.S.C. Section 1001 and/or 5 U.S.C. Section 552a(I)(3).

Public reporting burden for this collection of information is estimated to average 0.50 hours per response, including the time for reviewing instructions, searching existing data sources, gathering and maintaining the data needed, and completing and reviewing the collection of information. Suggestions for reducing this burden may be submitted to Director, Facilities and Administrative Services Staff, Justice Management Division, US Department of Justice, Washington, DC 20530 and the Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs, Office of Management and Budget, Public Use Reports Project (1103?0016), Washington, DC 20503.

Full Name of Requester _____

Current Address _____

Date of Birth _____ Place of Birth_____

Social Security Number _____

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the United States of America that the foregoing is true and correct, and that I am the person named above, and I understand that any falsification of this statement is punishable under the provisions of 18 U.S.C. Section 1001 by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment of not more than five years or both, and that requesting or obtaining any record(s) under false pretenses is punishable under the provisions of 5 U.S.C. 552a(i)(3) by a fine of not more than $5000.

Signature _____ Date_____

Optional: Authorization to Release Information to Another Person (or organization)
(This portion is also to be completed by a requester who is authorizing information relating to himself or herself to be released to another person or organization.)

Further, pursuant to 5 U.S.C. Section 552a(b), I authorize the U.S. Department of Justice to release any and all information relating to me to:

_____

Print or Type Name (and Organization, if applicable)

1. Name of individual who is the subject of the record sought.
2. Providing your social security number is voluntary. You are asked to provide your social security number only to facilitate the identification of records relating to you. Without your social security number, the Department may be unable to locate any or all records pertaining to you.
3. Signature of individual who is the subject of the record sought.

FORM DOJ-361,
USNCB Website
Version, Original form approved
OMB No. 1103-
0016

Last updated: 5/14/07
usdoj/usncb/lds

APPENDIX C

SAMPLE LETTERS

C-1. Sample FOIA Request Letter (Federal)

Return Address
Date

Freedom of Information Officer
Name of Agency
Address

Dear Sir or Madam:

This request is made under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. Section 552 [and the Privacy Act 5 U.S.C. Section 552a].

Please send me copies of the following documents: [describe the documents you want as clearly as possible includingnames, places, and period of time about which you are inquiring].

As you know, the Freedom of Information Act provides that if portions of a document are exempt from release, the remainder must be segregated and disclosed. Therefore, I will expect you to send me all nonexempt portions of the records which I have requested, and ask that you justify any deletions with reference to specific exemptions of FOIA. The information requested is not to be used for commercial benefit, so I do not expect to be charged fees for your review of the material to see if it falls within one of FOIA's exemptions.

[Option I]

I promise to pay reasonable search and duplication costs in connection with this request. However, please notify me ahead of time if you estimate that total fees will exceed $ _____ so I can approve the additional amount.

[Option II]

FOIA provides for the waiver or reduction of search and duplication fees where the "disclosure of the information is in the public interest because it is likely to contribute significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the government and is not primarily in the commercial interest of the requester." This request should be exempt from all fees because [here explain how you intend to distribute the information you receive, and how those to whom you distribute it will be better informed about the operations of the government]. If you deny this request, however, please notify me if fees will exceed $_____ so I can decide whether to pay the fees or appeal your denial of my request for a waiver.

Sincerely,
[Signature]

C-2. Sample FOIA Appeal Letter (Federal)

Return Address
Date

Administrator
Name of Agency
Address
To the Administrator:

This is an appeal under the Freedom of Information Act ("FOIA"), 5 U.S.C. Section 552. On [date] I made a FOIA request to your agency for [brief description of the materials sought]. On [date] your agency denied my request because [state the ground for denial cited by that agency] [or, if the agency has not to you within the legal limit of 20 days, say how long they have delayed your request.] Copies of the correspondence are attached.

Please be informed that I consider the requested material clearly releasable under FOIA and consider your agency's policy to be arbitrary and capricious.

[Here insert any arguments in favor of disclosure, if you wish.]

I expect that upon reconsideration, you will reverse the decision to deny my request. However, if you do deny this appeal, I intend to file a lawsuit to compel disclosure.

Sincerely,
[Signature]

C-3. Sample FOIL Request Letter (New York State)

Return Address
Date

Records Access Officer
Name of Agency
Address of Agency
City, NY ZIP code

Re: Freedom of Information Law Request

Records Access Officer:

Under the provisions of the New York Freedom of Information Law, Article 6 of the Public Officers Law, I hereby request records or portions thereof pertaining to _____ [identify the records in which you are interested as clearly as possible].

If there are any fees for copying the records requested, please inform me before filling the request [or: Please inform me if the fees associated with this request exceed $____.]

As you know, the Freedom of Information Law requires that an agency respond to a request within five business days of receipt of a request. Therefore, I would appreciate a response as soon as possible and look forward to hearing from you shortly. If for any reason any portion of my request is denied, please inform me of the reasons for the denial in writing and provide the name and address of the person or body to whom an appeal should be directed.

Sincerely,
[Signature]

C-4. Sample FOIL Appeal Letter (New York State)

Return Address
Date

Records Access Officer
Name of Agency Official Appeal Officer
Address of Agency
City, NY ZIP code

Re: Freedom of Information Law Appeal

Dear _____:

I hereby appeal the denial of access regarding my request, which was made on _____ [date] and sent to _____ [records access officer, name and address of agency].

The records that were denied include:_____ [list and describe the records that were denied].

As required by the Freedom of Information Law, the head or governing body of an agency, or whomever is designated to determine appeals, is required to respond within ten business days of the receipt of an appeal. If the records are denied on appeal, please explain the reasons for the denial fully in writing as required by law.

In addition, please be advised that the Freedom of Information Law directs that all appeals and the determinations that follow be sent to the Committee on Open Government, New York Department of State, One Commerce Plaza, 99 Washington Avenue, Suite 650, Albany, NY 12231.

Sincerely,
[Signature]

C-5. Sample Vaughn Motion[129]

[Use the proper court caption]

Motion Under Vaughn v. Rosen to Require Detailed Indexing, Justification, and Itemization

Plaintiff [your name] moves this Court for an order requiring Defendants [name of agency and agency head] to provide within 30 days of the filing of the Complaint in this action, a detailed justification for allegations contained in the Defendant's Answer and previous administrative denial that the requested documents are exempt from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552, including an itemization and index of the documents claimed to be exempt, correlating specific statements in such justification with actual portions of the requested documents. See Vaughn v. Rosen, 484 F.2d 820 (D.C. Cir. 1973), cert. den., 415 U.S. 977 (1974).

Respectfully Submitted,

[Name of plaintiff or plaintiff's attorney]
Address

Dated: [date] [city and state]

129. It is difficult to determine the proper federal court in which to file your Vaughn motion. To find out how to proceed, write or call the clerk of the federal district court that has jurisdiction over the agency from which you are trying to get information. Most federal agencies are headquartered in Washington, D.C. The address for the federal district court of D.C. is: Clerk's Office, United States District Court for the District of Columbia, 333 Constitution Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20001. The phone number is (202) 354-3000.

APPENDIX D

ADDRESSES

D-1. Additional Information & Assistance

American Civil Liberties Union ("ACLU")
125 Broad St., 18th Floor
New York, NY 10004
Phone: (212) 549–2500
ACLU chapters can give you information about FOIA or "open records" laws, like FOIL, if you are seeking state or local government records.

Freedom of Information Clearinghouse
1600 20th Street N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20009
Phone: (202) 588-1000
http://www.citizen.org/litigation/free_info
The Clearinghouse gives legal and technical assistance to public interest groups, journalists, and individual citizens using the laws granting access to information that is held by the government.

Legal Action Center
225 Varick Street
New York, NY 10014
Phone: (212) 243–1313 or
Toll free 1–800–223–4044;
Fax: (212) 675–0286
E-Mail: lacinfo@lac.org
http://www.lac.org
The Legal Action Center publishes the very useful "How to Get and Clean Up Your State Rap Sheet," with editions covering New York, California, Illinois, Pennsylvania, and Virginia.

ACLU National Prison Project
915 15th Street N.W.
7th Floor
Washington, D.C. 20005
Phone: (202) 393–4930
http://www.aclu.org/prison/index.html
The Prison Project will refer prisoners to local aid groups where requests for information from state authorities are addressed.

D-2. Federal Government Agencies

Remember, always mark the outside of the envelope, "Freedom of Information Act Request."

Divisions of the Department of Justice

Civil Rights Division
Chief, FOIA/PA Branch
Civil Rights Division
United States Department of Justice
950 Pennsylvania Avenue N.W.
NALC Building, Room 311
Washington, D.C. 20530
Phone: (202) 514–4209
Fax: (202) 514–6195

Criminal Division
Chief, FOIA/PA Unit
Criminal Division
Department of Justice
Keeney Building, Suite 1127
950 Pennsylvania Ave, NW
Washington, D.C. 20530–0001
Phone: (202) 616–0307

Drug Enforcement Administration
Drug Enforcement Administration
Freedom of Information Operations Unit
Department of Justice
700 Army Navy Drive
West Building, 6th Floor
Arlington, VA 22202
Phone: (202) 307–7596

Federal Bureau of Investigation
Record/Information Dissemination Section
Records Management Division
Federal Bureau of Investigation
Department of Justice
170 Marcel Drive
Winchester, VA 22602-4843
Phone: (540) 868-4593 (ask for Freedom of Information or FOI/PA)

United States Parole Commission
FOIA/PA Specialist
United States Parole Commission
Department of Justice
Suite 420, 5550 Friendship Boulevard
Chevy Chase, MD 20815
Phone: (301) 492–5959
Fax: (301) 492–5563

Immigration
Requests for the Board of Immigration Appeals ("BIA"), the Office of the Chief Immigration Judge, and the Office of the Chief Administrative Hearing Officer (OCAHO) should be addressed to:
U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement
800 North Capitol St. NW
5th floor, Suite 585
Washington, D.C. 20528
Phone: (202) 732-0300
Fax: (202) 732-0310

Office of the Attorney General
Requests should be addressed to:
Office of Information Policy
Department of Justice
1425 New York Avenue N.W.
Suite 11050,
Washington, D.C. 20530-0001
(202) 514–FOIA

Justice Management Division
Justice Management Division
FOIA Contact
Department of Justice
Room 1111 RFK
950 Pennsylvania Ave NW
Washington, D.C. 20530–0001
(301) 583–7354
The Justice Management Division can help you with questions regarding requests within the Justice Department, such as which division to write to, and how to write the request.

Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services (formerly INS)
U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services
National Records Center
FOIA/PA Office
P.O. Box 648010
Lee's Summit, MO 64064-8010
Phone: (816) 350-5570
Fax: (816) 350-5785

U.S. Commission on Civil Rights
U.S. Commission on Civil Rights
FOIA Officer
624 Ninth Street, N.W.
Suite 621
Washington, D.C. 20425
Phone: (202) 376–7796
Fax: (202) 376-1163

Equal Employment Opportunity Commission
Equal Employment Opportunity Commission
Legal Counsel/FOIA
131 M St. NE, Suite 5NW02E
Washington, D.C. 20507
Phone: (202) 663-4500 (FOIA Service Center) or (202) 663-4634
Fax: (202) 663-4639

Department of Health and Human Services
Department of Health and Human Services
Director, FOIA/Privacy Division
Room 5416, Mary E. Switzer Bldg
330 C St, SW
Washington, D.C. 20201
Phone: (202) 690–7453
Fax: (202) 690–8320

Internal Revenue Service
Internal Revenue Service
FOIA Disclosure Manager
Office of Disclosure
1111 Constitution Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20224
Phone: (202) 622–6200

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual

Chapter 8:
Obtaining Information To Prepare Your Case:
The Process of Discovery

Columbia Human Rights Law Review
8th Edition 2009

LEGAL DISCLAIMER

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

CHAPTER 8

OBTAINING INFORMATION TO PREPARE YOUR CASE: THE PROCESS OF DISCOVERY*

A. Introduction

This Chapter is an overview of the general rules of discovery. Discovery is the process that allows you to ask your opponent and other parties for information they possess that you need to present your case. Your opponent can also use the discovery process to get information from you. Discovery allows you to get information not only from your opponent but also from other sources, like co-defendants or other potential witnesses. Discovery usually takes place before the trial begins. In a civil action, the process starts after the legal papers that begin a suit have been filed. In a criminal action, it generally starts after the defendant has been arraigned (or brought before the court to plead to the charge brought against him).

Discovery is governed by a fairly complicated set of rules.[1] It is important to know the rules because they: (1) instruct you on how to get the information you need; and (2) inform you of what information you have to give an opponent to avoid the court penalizing you. The rules tell you how to get information and limit what information needs to be disclosed. The judge supervises the discovery process in each case.

Discovery rules differ depending on the type of case (civil or criminal) and the type of court (state or federal) in which you are appearing. Civil discovery is very broad and has relatively few restrictions. Criminal discovery, on the other hand, is quite different and relatively limited. Regardless of the depth of treatment given to a particular rule in this Chapter, you must always check the appropriate rule yourself, in addition to any cases interpreting the rule. You should also Shepardize (or update) the rules and the cases, since the rules change quite frequently. Chapter 2 of the JLM, "Introduction to Legal Research," explains Shepardizing and other methods of legal research.

There are two reasons to be aware of discovery procedures. First, you should use discovery to fully prepare your case for trial. Second, you must also know how to respond to your opponent's requests for information from you. Discovery is a privilege and a responsibility: when you file a suit, you have the right to information from your opponent but you also must respond to your opponent's requests for discovery. If you refuse to comply with proper discovery requests from the other side, your lawsuit may be dismissed.

Discovery is intended to:

(1) narrow and clarify the issues that will be presented to the court;
(2) find out the claims of each party;
(3) find out the important facts and details of your case and your opponent's case;
(4) obtain testimony from witnesses while their memory is fresh or before they might for some reason become unable to testify in court; and
(5) eliminate the delay and undue surprise that would occur if each party knew nothing about the other side's case until the trial itself.

Once you have completed the discovery process you will know much more about what you will have to prove and disprove to win your case. You will also know what information you still need to be successful.

---

* This Chapter was revised by Paula M. McManus and Roslyn R. Morrison based in part on previous versions by Colleen Romaka, David Lamoreaux, and members of the 1977–78 Columbia Human Rights Law Review.

1. In federal court, the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (Fed. R. Civ. P.) are used in civil cases, and the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure (Fed. R. Crim. P.) are used in criminal cases. New York state court uses the Civil Practice Law and Rules (N.Y. Civ. Prac. L. & R. or N.Y. C.P.L.R.) in civil cases and the Criminal Procedure Law (N.Y. Crim. Proc. L.) in criminal cases. N.Y. Crim. Proc. L. is also commonly referred to as C.P.L. Each set of rules contains discovery procedures for the appropriate type of case. For other states, you can find rules of civil and criminal procedure in the state's Annotated Code or Annotated General Statutes. Also, for most states, West or LexisNexis publishes a yearly volume for the state that contains current rules of civil and criminal procedure. West's publication is Rule of Court–State. (For example, if you are looking for information on Connecticut, look to West's 2007 Connecticut Rules of Court–State.) LexisNexis' publication is called Court Rules Annotated. (For example, if you are looking for information on New Hampshire, look to LexisNexis' 2007 New Hampshire Court Rules Annotated.) You can often request the volume you need through inter-library loan if your library does not carry it.

This Chapter gives you an overview of the discovery rules. Part B addresses the discovery rules for civil lawsuits, while Part C focuses on the discovery rules for criminal cases. Each of these Parts is further divided between discovery in federal cases and discovery in state cases.

B. Civil Discovery

C. Introduction

Specific rules of civil procedure govern the various tools of civil discovery.[2] They vary depending on whether you bring your case in federal or state court.[3] The federal rules governing civil discovery are discussed in Part B(2) of this Chapter; the New York State rules are discussed in Part B(3). Although the basic ideas are the same, it is important to know the specific rules of the court where you bring your claim. Otherwise, your case may be dismissed early. Also, individual courts and judges can set their own special procedural rules. These rules cannot conflict with the law, but you should try to find out if your judge has a special system you should follow. You can do this by writing to the clerk of the court. The addresses of the federal and state courts in New York are listed in Appendices I and II at the end of the JLM.

There is no required form for filing a discovery request, but you should state clearly the information you are seeking and the rule under which you are making your request. Many legal formbooks contain examples of the many different types of discovery requests.[4] Selected federal forms are provided in the Appendix at the end of this Chapter. Do not tear them out of the book; you must copy them on your own paper and insert the particular information that you need.

D. Federal Discovery Procedures

(a) Introduction

In a civil action in federal court, discovery is governed by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rules 26–37.[5] The rules are fairly straightforward and should be relatively easy to follow. There is one basic rule to keep in mind: you should show that any material you seek is reasonably relevant to your case. Courts will not look kindly on you if you deliberately harass the person you are suing with burdensome requests not important to the case and requiring him to spend a great deal of time or money answering. The judge may impose penalties on anyone who abuses the discovery process in this way.[6] At the same time, the discovery rules are usually applied liberally so that all sides may get the information they need to pursue their case.

(b) Scope of Discovery

In a civil action, only information not "privileged" may be discovered. Information that is privileged may be kept secret. In addition, information must be "relevant" to your case for it to be discoverable.

One category of privileged information is communication between certain people that the law, as a matter of public policy, wishes to protect by keeping private. Examples of privileged relationships are those existing between lawyer and client, doctor and patient, priest and confessor, and husband and wife. Any information given by one person to another within any of these relationships, and meant to be kept confidential or secret, is considered "privileged." This means, for example, that if your opponent requested copies of your personal correspondence, you would not have to give him letters that you wrote to your spouse, lawyer, etc. Of course, it also means that your opponent can withhold such privileged material from you.

Another category of privileged material, which is often the largest barrier to getting information, is trial preparation material, also called "attorney work product."[7] The work product rule is complicated and an in-

---

2. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26–37 (Depositions and Discovery) (federal courts); N.Y. C.P.L.R., art. 31 (Disclosure) (New York state courts). These rules of civil procedure also apply to attacks on a conviction after appeal, such as federal or state habeas corpus petitions, or Article 440 motions in New York. See JLM Chapters 13, 20, and 21 for information on habeas corpus and Article 440. Note: discovery in habeas proceedings is only available for "good cause." See Henard v. Newkirk, 987 F. Supp. 691, 694 (N.D. Ind. 1997) (directing prisoner to show good cause to authorize discovery).

3. Useful summaries of the law governing discovery in federal courts include Charles Alan Wright & Mary Kay Kane, Law of Federal Courts, 580–647 (6th ed. 2002) and 6, 7 James William Moore, Moore's Federal Practice 26–37A (3d ed. 2007).

4. See, e.g., James William Moore, Moore's Federal Practice 26–37A (3d ed. 2007).

5. Note that habeas corpus rules differ slightly from discovery rules. See Chapter 13 of the JLM, "Federal Habeas Corpus," and 28 U.S.C. §§ 2246, 2247 (2000).

6. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(4)(B). Sanctions are discussed in Part B(2)(f) of this Chapter.

7. The rule protecting attorney work product is also called the "Hickman-Taylor rule" because it is based upon the depth analysis of it is not included in this Chapter. Briefly, the rule covers information, analysis, arguments, and opinions prepared by attorneys for trial. Facts may be available if you can show "substantial need"[8]—that is, if you cannot get the information anywhere else and it would be unfair if you did not have it—but your opponent's lawyer's opinions and analysis are not available to you through discovery.[9]

If you feel your opponent has requested privileged material from you, it is your responsibility to show the court the privilege applies to you. If you refuse to respond to a discovery request because you think the information is privileged, you must give the reason for the privilege (without giving away the information), and you must respond to any other discovery requests not calling for privileged material. The court will then decide your claim of privilege and may order you to turn over the material if it decides it is not privileged.

A second requirement for discovery is that the material must be "relevant" to the case. Information is relevant when it supports the truth or denial of a point which either side is trying to prove. Imagine, for example, that you have filed a civil lawsuit for police misconduct at the time of your arrest.[10] In proving misconduct you would have to identify the officer who you feel was abusive. The arrest record directly supports your proof on this point because it would state the officer's name. The arrest record would then be relevant, and you could ask for it in discovery. On the other hand, if you asked for the officer's high school report card, that information would probably be irrelevant. If you asked for it and the other side objected, the judge would probably rule that the report card is not discoverable.

Information is also relevant when it may lead to other relevant information. Even though the information may be inadmissible at trial because it is "irrelevant" under the rules of evidence, it may still be discoverable. You may request information if there is any reasonable possibility that it will lead you to admissible evidence that you can present at trial.[11] Still using the police misconduct example above, assume that you have found out the officer's name. When suing the officer personally (you would probably also sue the police department), it would be helpful to know his background. You might then request the names and addresses of other members of the police department, for example, because these other officers might know whether the officer has a violent disposition. Since you might find important information showing the officer's abusive work practices, you should be able to find out these other officers' names and possibly depose them (depositions are discussed in Part B(2)(d)(i) of this Chapter below). Even though you might not find any useful information or information that is admissible in court, the discovery rules permit you to try to build your case by following leads that may provide you with relevant information.

(c) Mandatory Discovery: Rule 26

Rule 26 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure attempts to ensure a smooth and quick exchange of basic information between you and your adversary. The rule requires both an early meeting between you and your adversary and mandatory disclosure of certain information. Below is a brief overview of the rule's requirements. But, since the rule is fairly detailed, you should also read over that section of the Federal Rules if you are involved in a federal civil suit. Also, it is important to note that local courts have the option of suspending Rule 26 requirements. You should therefore always check with the clerk of the court in order to determine what your responsibilities are.

Under Rule 26(f), you and your adversary must meet "as soon as practicable" to discuss your case. The goal of this meeting is to see if there is any possibility of settling and therefore no need to have a trial. In addition, the Rule requires the parties to create a "discovery plan." This means you and your opponent need to make deadlines for discovery. Note that if you have a federal criminal case and are incarcerated, your attorney will usually draft a motion in which she requests all discovery materials. She will often discuss this discovery motion with you after your arraignment, either at the courthouse or at the prison facility.

Supreme Court case Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 67 S. Ct. 385, 91 L. Ed. 451 (1947).

8. See, e.g., In re Grand Jury Subpoena Dated July 6, 2005, 510 F.3d 180 (2d Cir. 2007) (finding "substantial need" for the documents requested because they were unique evidence and could not be obtained through other means).

9. You cannot, for example, ask your opponent to tell you in advance the argument that he will make at trial. Work product privilege is covered in Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(3), to which you should refer if work product protection becomes an issue in your case.

10. In Mercado v. Division of New York State Police, 989 F. Supp. 521, 523 (S.D.N.Y. 1998), the court held that N.Y. Civ. Rights L. § 50-a, which says a police officer's personnel files may only be turned over if the officer consents or if a judge issues an order requiring the release of these records, does not necessarily apply to discovery in federal litigation.

11. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(1).

Within fourteen days after the Rule 26(f) meeting, Rule 26(a)(1)(A) requires that you and your adversary exchange certain basic information such as the names, addresses, and phone numbers of any persons who may have discoverable information. Since your adversary is entitled to Rule 26(a)(1) information without making any particular request of you, you should read this rule carefully to determine what information you are required to send. Also, you should be familiar with the Rule's requirements in order to determine whether your adversary has given you all of the information to which you are entitled. If you or your adversary plans to call expert witnesses at trial, Rule 26(a)(2) makes such information discoverable and you should refer to this Rule for the exact information that may be discovered. In addition, Rule 26(a)(3) requires you and your adversary to inform each other of people you plan to call as witnesses in a trial and to exchange summaries of any evidence that you plan to introduce at a trial. The exchange of information under Rule 26(a)(3) must take place at least thirty days before trial.

Lastly, Rule 26(e) requires both parties to voluntarily supplement or correct any information already exchanged if they later obtain information which makes the initial information either incomplete or inaccurate. Under Rule 26(g), you must sign and write your address on all information that you supply to your adversary. By doing so, you indicate that to the best of your knowledge the information is complete and correct. Also, remember that Rule 26(g) requires you to tell the truth and disclose all information.

(d) Additional Methods of Obtaining Information

(i) Depositions: Rules 27, 28, 30, 31, and 32

In a deposition, a party or any other person who may have useful information is questioned. Depositions are usually conducted by the attorney for the party who is seeking the information.

Oral depositions take a similar form to the examination of witnesses at a trial. Basically, a meeting is set up by you or your lawyer with the person you want to depose (the defendant or a potential witness),[12] the opposing lawyer (the other side normally will have one), and a stenographer.[13] Under Rule 26(d), depositions (as well as any other forms of discovery) may be sought only after the initial mandatory meeting between the parties has taken place, unless the court gives permission.[14] Rule 30(a)(2)(A) limits the number of depositions each side may take to a maximum of ten. Nevertheless, if you feel that you need to take more depositions, you may seek the court's permission. To determine whether to grant your request for more depositions, the court will look at several factors, including (1) whether the information you are seeking is unreasonably cumulative or duplicative[15] or if it can be obtained more conveniently from another source; (2) whether you have already had and passed on the opportunity to get the information you are seeking; and (3) whether the burden or expense of the proposed discovery outweighs its likely benefit.[16]

At the deposition, you may ask a broad range of questions. Depositions are particularly useful because they give you the opportunity to obtain an uncoached, spontaneous response from the deponent (the person being questioned).[17] Depositions are often considered the most beneficial form of discovery because they provide the parties with face-to-face contact, unlike other discovery methods.

The problem with depositions, however, is that they tend to be time-consuming and expensive. If you depose someone, you must usually hire a stenographer and pay the costs of having the stenographer's notes typed out in readable form. Both sides, their attorneys, and the witness must arrange a suitable time and place for the deposition. Rule 29 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure can offer some relief by providing for the use of stipulations.[18] If you and your opponent agree, you can hold the deposition in a place convenient for you (such as the jail or prison), and you can tape record the deposition instead of hiring a stenographer.

---

12. The "defendant" (sometimes called "respondent") is the party being sued. The "plaintiff" (sometimes called "petitioner") is the party who filed the papers to bring the suit. The "deponent" is the person questioned in a deposition.

13. The "stenographer" is a professional secretary who types in shorthand everything said during the deposition.

14. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(d).

15. "Cumulative" refers to discovery requests so broad and including so much material they are difficult or impossible to fulfill within a reasonable time period. "Duplicative" means discovery requests repeating earlier discovery requests needlessly. These requests are often made with the goal of making it hard for the other side to meet requests.

16. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2)(C).

17. The deponent may not be as well prepared by his attorney as he will be at the trial, and the attorney will not have an opportunity to review the deponent's responses before you receive them.

18. A "stipulation" is a written agreement between the parties to a court proceeding which states that they agree to a certain fact, rule, or way of proceeding.

If your opponent is unwilling to stipulate to alternative methods of taking a deposition, you can also make a motion to the court to order him to cooperate.[19] Be prepared to show specific reasons for your request (for example, that you cannot afford a stenographer). Another option is to obtain written depositions. If you choose to use written depositions, you should refer to Rule 31 for the exact procedure. However, you should note that the use of written depositions does not allow you to get the face-to-face, un-coached answers which you can probably get with oral depositions.

(ii) Interrogatories: Rule 33

Interrogatories are written questions that must be answered in writing under oath. Only parties to a suit (you and your opponent) can be ordered by the court to respond to interrogatories. Unlike depositions, outside witnesses cannot be ordered to respond to interrogatories. Apart from this important limitation, interrogatories are a very useful device because they are inexpensive. Rule 33(a) limits the number of questions each party may ask to twenty-five. Nonetheless, if you feel you need to ask more than twenty-five questions, you may ask the court for special permission to do so. To determine whether your request should be granted, the court will consider whether the information you are seeking is unreasonably repetitive, whether you have already had the opportunity to obtain the information, and whether the burden or expense of the additional interrogatories would outweigh their likely benefit.[20] Interrogatories may be sent as soon as you and your opponent have attended the mandatory meeting under Rule 26(f). Note that many local courts and individual judges have their own special rules for handling interrogatories. If you are considering serving interrogatories, you should check with the clerk of the court to find out if special rules apply to you.

After sending the interrogatories to your opponent, he must answer within thirty days unless there is a court order stating otherwise, or you and your opponent agree that there should be more or less time allowed.[21] As with depositions, your questions must be relevant to the case, they cannot ask for privileged material, and they cannot be unduly or unreasonably burdensome to the other side. If you are suing a prison official for assault, for example, you might ask the following questions in your interrogatory:

(1) Were you on Block 8 at or around 8:00 P.M. on January 30, 1999?
(2) Why were you on Block 8 at 8:00 P.M. on January 30, 1999?
(3) At 8:00 P.M. on January 30, 1999, did you hear any noise coming from the east dayroom?
(4) Did you go inside the east dayroom shortly after 8:00 P.M. on January 30, 1999?

You will notice that in order to obtain specific answers, you will need to ask specific questions. You should be careful not to phrase your questions in a manner that allows only a "yes" or "no" answer if you want more information. Questions (1), (3) and (4) above are types of questions that would be answered with only a "yes" or "no." But question (2) cannot be answered by a "yes" or "no."

If you have trouble getting answers to your interrogatories and there is no legitimate reason for your opponent's failure to respond (such as a claim that you are seeking privileged or irrelevant information), then you can submit a motion for an order compelling discovery under Rule 37(a)(2)(B). However, in order for a court to grant your motion, you must be able to show that, before asking the court for help, you made every effort to get the answers from your opponent. If the judge does grant your motion, your opponent will be penalized by the court if he does not respond to your interrogatories. Some judges are reluctant to issue orders compelling discovery, so you should read the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure closely and prepare an argument to show why you need the information requested and that you have a right to receive it.

(iii) Production of Documents: Rule 34

Rule 34 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure enables you to obtain documents and other physical objects in your opponent's possession. Once again, you may only get those materials that are relevant to your case and are not privileged. Like other forms of discovery, permission of the court is not generally required and it is assumed by the Rule that the parties will cooperate in disclosing the needed material.

You can request materials after you have met with your opponent under Rule 26(f), or you can ask the court for permission to request materials sooner. As with interrogatories, there is a thirty-day period in which to respond. If your opponent refuses to cooperate with a reasonable request, you can file an order to compel discovery under Rule 37(a)(2)(B). If your opponent does not comply with the order, you can make a motion asking the court to sanction your opponent under Rule 37(b).[22]

19. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(c)(2).
20. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(2)(C).
21. Fed. R. Civ. P. 33(b)(3).

A request for production must describe the name and date of each document or object as specifically as possible. You should try to find out as much as you can about the documents or objects your opponent has that might be useful to you. Note: when prison officials provide documents in discovery, they often "redact," or blacken out, information they think is secret or sensitive. If you think your opponent is hiding information you need and are entitled to see, you can move for an order compelling discovery under Rule 37(a)(2)(B).

Remember that Rule 34 does not limit you to requesting documents that might be found in an official file; you can ask for books, accounts, memoranda, letters, photographs, charts, physical evidence, or any other object you can describe specifically. It is possible that you might request such a large volume of material that it is only feasible for your opponent to send you copies. In that case, you should be prepared to pay copying costs or ask the court to pay them under a poor person's order.[23]

(iv) Subpoenas: Rule 45

Rule 45 allows you to compel witnesses who are not parties to the suit to attend a deposition or trial. You can also ask the witness to bring with them documents or other discoverable materials that fall under Rule 34. A subpoena to a third party to produce such material is often called a subpoena duces tecum. If you serve a subpoena on a third party—either to testify or to produce documents—and the party refuses, the court may hold that party in contempt for failure to comply. In order to file a subpoena, you must obtain a form by writing to the clerk of the court.

(v) Admissions: Rule 36

Rule 36 is a convenient tool allowing you to serve a written "request for admission" to your opponent. You do not need the court's permission to serve this request but you must wait until after you attend the Rule 26(f) meeting with your opponent. The form of a request for admission is similar to an interrogatory, except that you must prepare a list of statements for your opponent to admit or deny. The court will consider the statements admitted unless your opponent submits a written denial within thirty days.

Here are some statements that you might include in a request for admission, using the prison assault example presented earlier in Section B(2) of this chapter:

(1) Admit that you were in Block 8 at 8:00 P.M. on January 30, 1999.
(2) Admit that you heard noises coming from the east dayroom at 8:00 P.M. on that evening.
(3) Admit that you went inside the east dayroom shortly after 8:00 P.M. on that evening.
(4) Admit that the attached copy of the incident report is a true and accurate copy of the original on file.

Note that in requests for admission, you cannot make open-ended information requests, like in question (2) of the interrogatory examples in Part B(2)(d)(ii) above.[24] Also, requests for admission under the Federal Rules are intended primarily to resolve issues that are preliminary, incidental, or without substantial disagreement. If you ask your opponent to admit a fact that presents a "genuine issue for trial," he must respond but may deny the matter until evidence is presented. But, Rule 37(c)(2) states if you prove a fact your opponent has refused to admit, your opponent may be required to pay some of your attorney's fees.

(e) Duty to Disclose

Both parties have the right to discover important information from the other side, and both parties have the responsibility to cooperate in making discoverable material available. If you believe, however, that your opponent has made an unreasonable discovery request of you—for example, one that asks for privileged information or that is meant to intimidate you or needlessly consume your time and money—you can move for a protective order under Rule 26(c) instead of preparing a response to the request.

In a motion for a protective order, you must give the judge a good reason why your opponent's request for information was improper or unreasonable. You must also show that you have made every effort to resolve

---

22. A sanction is a penalty or punitive measure that results from one's failure to comply with a law, rule, or order. See Black's Law Dictionary (8th ed. 2004). Usually, sanctions are monetary fines, but they can also be imprisonment or dismissal of a lawsuit.

23. A poor person's order is a statement signed under oath and submitted to the court that requests a waiver of court costs and states that the applicant is financially unable to pay.

24. "Why were you on Block 8 at 8:00 P.M. on January 30, 1999?"

this issue with your opponent before you sought help from the court (for example, you told your opponent that you thought his request was unreasonable and he refused to make any changes). If the judge grants a protective order, your opponent's request will either be thrown out (in which case you will not have to respond) or be limited (in which case you will only have to respond to part of the request).

(f) Sanctions: Rule 37

Rule 37 allows the court to issue sanctions (monetary fines) against any person who fails to comply with the rules of discovery. This provides a way for the court to enforce discovery rules.

If your opponent has not responded to your request for discovery and you have made every effort to get him to respond, you can move for an order compelling your opponent to comply with your request. If your motion is granted but your opponent still does not comply, the court may hold your opponent in contempt of court, and your opponent may face fines or even imprisonment. If the plaintiff refuses to comply with discovery requests, the court may dismiss the lawsuit. All of these punishments are available under Rule 37. Often, parties will be encouraged to comply with discovery requests if they find out that their opponent has moved for sanctions.

E. New York Discovery Procedure

Introduction

For the most part, the rules governing discovery procedures in civil suits brought in New York state courts are similar to the federal rules discussed above. The following is a brief description of the New York statutes, noting some of the differences between the federal and New York state rules. If you have a case in a New York state court, you will need to carefully examine both these rules and the cases that apply them. This Section should help you get started.[25]

New York statutes use the term "disclosure" instead of "discovery," but the procedures are basically the same. The statutes governing disclosure are contained in Article 31 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules ("N.Y. C.P.L.R.").

A major difference between New York disclosure and federal discovery is that under the New York rules, parties are not required to meet or give out information voluntarily.[26] As a result, you must request any information that you want from your opponent, and vice-versa. Also, you and your opponent do not need to wait until after you meet to begin making requests for information. Generally, information can be requested after a complaint is filed, but only after the defendant has responded or the time period for the defendant's response has expired, whichever comes sooner.

Another difference between the two systems of discovery lies in how to deal with difficulties that arise during the discovery process. Under N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3104, you may request that the court appoint a referee to oversee the process. This may be helpful if you have difficulty getting your opponent to cooperate. But if you make this request, the court has the option of requiring you to pay the referee's expenses. If you are thinking about this option, you may wish to write to the clerk of the court to see how your particular judge generally handles such situations. You should keep in mind the provisions for and costs of getting language translation. According to N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3114, if a witness does not understand English, translation must be provided to that person for all questions and answers. The cost of this translation must be paid by the party seeking the information. If you need information from a person who needs a translator but you cannot pay for this, you should check with the court to see if you have other options.

Methods of Obtaining Information

(i) Depositions

Depositions in New York state court require twenty days notice, unless the court orders otherwise.[27] A subpoena is required to depose someone who is not a party to the proceeding.[28] The federal rules do not

---

25. J. Weinstein et. al., New York Civil Practice Law and Rules Manual (2d ed. 1997), provides a great deal of information on New York civil procedure and disclosure. Its organization follows the structure of the N.Y. C.P.L.R., so you can simply consult the section of the Weinstein/Korn/Miller Manual that corresponds to the N.Y. C.P.L.R. section you want to research.

26. For the opposite federal rule, see Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a).

27. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3107 (McKinney 2005).

28. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3106(b) (McKinney 2005).

normally require advance notice or a subpoena. As with the federal rules, any material that is requested through disclosure in New York courts must be relevant and not privileged. If you are in a situation where you think information that you want to request, or information requested from you, may be "privileged," you should refer to N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3101, which details what types of information are privileged and what information may be requested through discovery.

Section 3106(c) of the N.Y. C.P.L.R. requires the court's permission before a deposition can be taken from a person in prison. This rule affects both parties: it applies if you need to depose a fellow prisoner and/or if your opponent wishes to depose you. If your opponent does depose you, Section 3116(a) requires that you read your statement (or have it read to you) after the deposition. At this point you are required to sign your deposition. However, before you sign, you should feel comfortable that everything in the deposition is true to the best of your knowledge. If you feel that a change needs to be made, you may write in the change at the end of the deposition. You must also state the reasons for making the change. Once your deposition is finished, Section 3101(e) states that you are allowed to keep a copy. It is always a good idea to request a copy so that you have a record of your testimony.

(ii) Interrogatories

The practice and form for interrogatories is similar to that used in the federal courts; however, some differences exist. Under New York law, without a court order, a plaintiff may not serve a defendant with an interrogatory until after the time limit for the defendant to answer the plaintiff's complaint has expired. On the other hand, a defendant can serve interrogatories on any other party whether or not he has answered the plaintiff's complaint. In other words, after receiving the complaint, the defendant may immediately serve an interrogatory.[29] Also in New York, the answering party has only twenty days to answer the interrogatory or to object to the questions.[30] Finally, unlike the Federal Rules, New York does not limit the number of interrogatories that may be requested.[31]

(iii) Requests for Production

In New York, requests for production of documents and other materials are similar to requests in federal court under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. New York also allows the discovery of materials in the custody and control of non-parties, if the court grants permission.[32]

New York courts require that requests for production are not unduly burdensome. This means you must know what you are seeking and it must be relevant to the case. Production requests used for "fishing expeditions" will be thrown out. For example, in Konrad v. 136 East 64th Street Corporation, a New York court ruled that even though N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3120(2) does not require requested documents to be "specifically" identified, an overbroad discovery request, without a clear target or focus, would be thrown out.[33] The court noted requests must be relevant and the documents sought described with "reasonable particularity," not impose an undue burden, and represent a "fishing expedition."[34] Returning to the prison assault example earlier in Section B(2)(d) of this chapter, an example of a "fishing expedition" would be a discovery request for the entire file of every police officer who worked in the precinct in which you were arrested.

(iv) Subpoenas

New York rules regarding subpoenas are very similar to the federal rules. Both allow the subpoena duces tecum (ordering the witness to appear and to bring specified items), which must be issued by a judge in certain proceedings.[35]

---

29. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3132 (McKinney 2005).
30. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3133(a) (McKinney 2005).
31. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3130(1) (McKinney 2005).
32. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3111, 3120(1) (McKinney 2005).
33. Konrad v. 136 East 64th Street Corp., 209 A.D.2d 228, 228, 618 N.Y.S.2d 632, 633 (1st Dept. 1994) (finding that an overbroad discovery request constituted an undue burden).
34. Konrad v. 136 East 64th Street Corp., 209 A.D.2d 228, 228, 618 N.Y.S.2d 632, 633 (1st Dept. 1994) (requiring that discovery requests be relevant).
35. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 2301–08 (McKinney 1991 & Supp. 2007).

(v) Admissions

With respect to admissions, the N.Y. C.P.L.R. follows the federal rules closely.[36] A request for an admission may be served by the plaintiff after the defendant has answered the complaint, but no later than twenty days before trial. The person receiving a request for admission has twenty days to admit or deny the allegation or give a detailed explanation of why he cannot admit or deny the allegation.[37]

(vi) Motions to Compel Disclosure and Sanctions

If you are having difficulty obtaining information to which you are entitled, you may move the court to compel disclosure under N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3124. If the court grants your motion and your opponent still does not provide you with the information, the court may impose penalties under N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3126. You should also keep in mind that N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3101(h) requires all persons to amend or supplement information they have submitted if at any time they obtain or remember new information that makes their initial statements incomplete or wrong. If this requirement is not followed, the court is authorized under N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3101(h) to make "whatever order may be just." In some instances, this may mean that the court will not allow into the trial any evidence concerning the subject matter that should have been supplemented.

Section 3103 of the N.Y. C.P.L.R. allows the court to issue orders "designed to prevent unreasonable annoyance, expense, embarrassment, disadvantage, or other prejudice to any person or the courts." If you feel your opponent obtained information improperly,[38] you may make a motion to the court under N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3103(c), and the court may keep that information from being used as evidence at trial.

This is only a brief overview of the New York Rules. Although they are generally similar to the Federal Rules, if you are suing in a New York state court, be sure to study the relevant sections of the N.Y. C.P.L.R. noted above before proceeding.

F. Criminal Discovery

The rules governing discovery in a criminal prosecution differ from those that govern a civil proceeding. In general, discovery in criminal cases is more restrictive and limited.

The following section, Part C(1), discusses criminal discovery in federal cases. It explains that the prosecution must turn over certain materials to the defendant in all criminal cases under the Sixth Amendment of the United States Constitution. Part C(2) presents an outline of the discovery rules that apply in New York criminal cases. Finally, there is a brief note about federal discovery procedures. The New York rules were modeled on the federal rules. Remember that this part does not treat criminal discovery rules in detail. If you are involved in a criminal case, you should refer to the applicable rule and research any cases that apply the rule.

Federal Constitutional Requirements

According to the rule laid down by the U.S. Supreme Court in Brady v. Maryland, a prosecutor may not refuse a request by the defendant for evidence that is favorable to him and is material either to guilt or to punishment.[39] Suppression of such "exculpatory" evidence (evidence which helps the defendant), even as a mistake, is unacceptable under Brady.

This does not mean that a prosecutor must disclose all evidence favorable to a defendant. The Brady rule only requires disclosure of favorable evidence that is crucial to the defendant's case. Any evidence that is crucial to proving your innocence must be disclosed as a matter of right. The prosecutor's failure to reveal

---

36. See N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3123 (McKinney 2005); Fed. R. Civ. P. 36.

37. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3123 (McKinney 2005). For a more detailed explanation of an admission, see Part B(2)(d)(v) of this Chapter.

38. For an example of information obtained in an "improper manner," see Juskowitz v. Hahn, 56 Misc. 2d 647, 648, 289 N.Y.S.2d 870, 871–72 (Sup. Ct. Nassau County 1968), where the defendant obtained evidence from the plaintiff without notifying the plaintiff's attorney. The court, while declining to make a judgment on whether the defendant's actions were unethical, decided that the circumstances were sufficient to warrant suppression of the evidence.

39. Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 87, 83 S. Ct. 1194, 1196–97, 10 L. Ed. 2d 215, 218 (1963). However, under Arizona v. Youngblood, if the police lose evidence that is potentially exculpatory, the defendant must show bad faith on the government's part in order to prevail in court. Arizona v. Youngblood, 488 U.S. 51, 57–58, 109 S. Ct. 333, 337, 102 L. Ed. 2d 281, 289 (1988).

such evidence may have a number of consequences, including a new trial or the striking of evidence offered by the prosecution.[40]

Federal courts have indicated several limitations to the Brady rule. First, the prosecution is only required to disclose evidence that helps the defendant ("exculpatory evidence") if it is "material"—that is, if it would affect the outcome of the trial.[41] Withholding "Brady information" may not result in a new trial if there is enough other evidence to convict the defendant. Furthermore, Brady does not require the prosecution to turn over evidence the defense knew existed or should have been able to take advantage of without the help of the prosecution.[42] An example of this rule, as applied in federal court, is a situation in which the prosecution does not give the defense a witness' pretrial statement, but instead suggests that the defense may want to interview the witness. Even though the prosecution withheld the statement, it cannot be said to have "suppressed" the evidence.[43]

Second, Brady imposes a duty upon the prosecution to turn over evidence that might help to show the defendant's innocence, but it does not give the defense "unsupervised authority to search through the [state's] files" in search of exculpatory material.[44] It is the state that decides which information must be disclosed. Unless defense counsel becomes aware that other exculpatory evidence was withheld and brings it to the court's attention, the prosecutor's decision not to disclose is final.[45]

Exculpatory evidence does not have to directly show that the defendant is innocent. It may simply weaken the prosecution's case. One example would be material that casts doubt on a witness' credibility. This material is called "impeachment evidence." The prosecution can be required to turn over a witness' pretrial statements if they are inconsistent with the witness' in-court testimony, because the defense can use the pretrial statement to weaken the witness' testimony.[46]

You should understand that Brady represents the minimum standard of discovery guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution in all criminal cases in the United States. Thus, the states are obligated to provide a criminal defendant with this material, as well. State discovery rules, such as those found in New York, may supplement this minimum standard and entitle you to more discovery. In a federal case, however, exculpatory material that must be disclosed under Brady is the only discovery material the government must provide to a criminal defendant.

G. New York Procedures

(a) Introduction

New York has been at the forefront of a movement to permit criminal defendants freer access to information. The results have been good. Though criminal defendants are still limited in obtaining information before trial, the New York legislature has passed a set of laws governing discovery, found under Article 240 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law (N.Y. Crim. Proc. L.).[47] Article 240 is patterned on Rule 16 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. So, if you run into a discovery problem and find federal cases

---

40. For specific examples of various applications of the Brady rule, see Marvin Waxner, New York Criminal Practice §17.03[8] (2d ed. 2005). See also Chapter 13 of the JLM, "Federal Habeas Corpus."

41. Pennsylvania v. Ritchie, 480 U.S. 39, 57, 107 S. Ct. 989, 1001, 94 L. Ed. 2d 40, 57 (1987)) (noting that "the government has an obligation to turn over evidence in its possession that is both favorable to the accused and material to guilt or punishment," and defining "material" to indicate that there is a "reasonable probability" that had that evidence been disclosed, the result of the proceeding would have been different (citing States v. Bagley, 473 U.S. 667, 678, 105 S. Ct. 3375, 3381, 87 L. Ed. 2d 481, 491 (1985)).

42. United States v. Grossman, 843 F.2d 78, 85 (2d Cir. 1988) (holding that the government was not required to provide allegedly exculpatory grand jury testimony when the defendant knew or should have known the essential facts).

43. See United States v. Salerno, 868 F.2d 524, 542 (2d Cir. 1989) (rejecting the defendant's argument that the government should have had to turn over grand jury testimony of a potential witness when the defendant knew that he might be interviewed). Note that in New York, witnesses' pretrial statements must generally be disclosed even if they are not Brady material. People v. Rosario, 9 N.Y.2d 286, 289, 173 N.E.2d 881, 883, 213 N.Y.S.2d 448, 450 (1961) (finding that justice entitles the defendant to see a witness' prior statement "as long as the statement relates to the subject matter of the witness' testimony and contains nothing that must be kept confidential").

44. Pennsylvania v. Ritchie, 480 U.S. 39, 59, 107 S. Ct. 989, 1002, 94 L. Ed. 2d 40, 58 (1987).

45. Pennsylvania v. Ritchie, 480 U.S. 39, 59, 107 S. Ct. 989, 1002, 94 L. Ed. 2d 40, 59 (1987).

46. Kyles v. Whitley, 514 U.S. 419, 433, 115 S. Ct. 1555, 1565, 131 L. Ed. 2d 490, 506 (1995) (noting, in discussing United States v. Bagley, 473 U.S. 667, 105 S. Ct. 3375, 87 L. Ed. 2d 481 (1985), that there is no difference between exculpatory and impeachment evidence for Brady purposes).

47. N.Y. Crim. Proc. L. §§ 240.10–240.90 (McKinney 2002).

interpreting Rule 16 in your favor, the New York state courts usually will consider the case as persuasive (that is, supportive of your case) for interpreting Article 240.[48]

A general overview of discovery rules found in Article 240 of the N.Y. Crim. Proc. L. follows. Specific problems that may arise will require you to refer to the statutory provisions themselves and any accompanying notes.[49]

(b) Scope of Discovery

a. Discovery Between the Accused and the Prosecutor

You may request a limited amount of information that is "material" to your case. Article 240 allows you to inspect, photograph, copy, or test certain types of "property,"[50] like police reports or recordings of statements.

One type of discoverable material that you may request is any written, recorded, or oral statement you made to the police or to persons acting under police direction "other than in the course of the criminal transaction."[51] You are also entitled to similar statements made by a co-defendant who will be tried jointly with you. This will generally apply where you or a co-defendant have made a statement following arrest. A statement made at the police station is an example. Notice that this does not cover statements made during "the criminal transaction". For example, ordinarily the prosecution is not obligated to turn over copies of conversations between you and an undercover officer during a drug transaction. An exception exists where the statement is recorded electronically; if a conversation is recorded on tape, you are entitled to it through discovery.[52] This can be very helpful in setting up certain defenses, such as entrapment. In an entrapment defense, you need to show that the police induced you to commit a crime you would not have committed if they had left you alone.

Discovery of any statement made before the criminal transaction began can also be important. Such evidence might be important in establishing whether you had the motive or intent to commit the crime. For instance, if you made a statement before a homicide was committed indicating that you hated the victim, it could be used to prove motive. It is important, then, that you discover any material of this sort if it exists.

Another type of discoverable "property" is a transcript of testimony you or a co-defendant made before a grand jury.[53] A transcript of your testimony could be helpful in revealing any weaknesses in your case because it could indicate whether you gave any damaging testimony. It might also help you to maintain a consistent version of your story. If, for instance, you make a statement at trial inconsistent with the testimony you gave before the grand jury, the prosecution could point this out. This inconsistency could weaken your credibility with the judge or the jury. You will want to anticipate and, if possible, prevent this.

Article 240 also allows you to discover scientific evidence,[54] such as a written report or document concerning a physical or mental examination; scientific test or experiment which relates to the crime for which you are charged; psychological reports; ballistics reports (scientific gun examination that can determine whether a bullet was fired from a particular gun); drug tests; semen tests; and blood-typing. Tape or electronic recordings constitute yet another type of discoverable property.[55] The prosecutor must disclose any tape or electronic recording that he intends to introduce at trial if you request such material.

You are also entitled to reports that reveal the approximate date, time, and place of the crime and of the arrest.[56] This information may be useful if you have an alibi. Also you may discover "any other property"

---

48. People v. Copicotto, 50 N.Y.2d 222, 226, 406 N.E.2d 465, 468, 428 N.Y.S.2d 649, 652 (1980) (stating that the criminal discovery procedure in Article 240 was adopted from Fed. R. Civ. P. 16).

49. Chapter 17 of Waxner's New York Criminal Practice also provides helpful information about New York criminal discovery. Marvin Waxner, New York Criminal Practice (2d. ed. 2005).

50. "Property" is defined as "any existing tangible personal or real property, including, but not limited to, books, records, reports, memoranda, papers, photographs, tapes or other electronic recordings, articles of clothing, fingerprints, blood samples, fingernail scrapings or handwriting specimens, but excluding attorneys' work product." N.Y. Crim. Proc. L. § 240.10(3) (McKinney 2002).

51. N.Y. Crim. Proc. L. § 240.20(1)(a) (McKinney 2002).

52. N.Y. Crim. Proc. L. § 240.20(1)(g) (McKinney 2002).

53. N.Y. Crim. Proc. L. § 240.20(1)(b) (McKinney 2002).

54. N.Y. Crim. Proc. L. § 240.20(1)(c) (McKinney 2002).

55. N.Y. Crim. Proc. L. § 240.20(1)(g) (McKinney 2002).

56. N.Y. Crim. Proc. L. § 240.20(1)(i) (McKinney 2002).

obtained from you or a co-defendant.[57] This might include weapons, clothing, drugs, tools, cars, or other items. Discovery of this type of property can help you in preparing your case since it gives you insight into what the prosecutor is going to present at trial as a means of linking you to the crime.

b. Discovery Between the Accused and Third Parties: Subpoena Duces Tecum

The subpoena duces tecum is a process whereby the court orders a witness to bring documents relevant to the court proceedings with them when they come to testify. It is frequently used when information is in the hands of third parties—parties other than the prosecutor (and his staff) and the defendant.[58] Article 240 does not allow the prosecutor or defendant to discover third party material by the usual means of a demand to produce or motion for discovery. Therefore, the subpoena duces tecum is the method used in seeking disclosure of this material.

In order to obtain a subpoena duces tecum for pretrial discovery purposes under N.Y. Crim. Proc. L. Section 610.20(3), in your motion you must show the following:[59]

(1) The materials are relevant and evidentiary;
(2) The request is specific;
(3) The materials are not otherwise reasonably obtainable before trial by the exercise of due diligence;
(4) You cannot properly prepare for trial without production and inspection of the material before the trial and the failure to procure the information may tend to unreasonably delay the trial; and
(5) The application is made in good faith and is not intended to be a general "fishing expedition."
(6) In addition, your motion for a subpoena duces tecum should indicate a specific time and place for inspection of the desired materials.

(c) Non-discoverable Material

The two types of material that are generally not discoverable under Article 240 are (1) attorney's work product, and (2) records of any statement made in the course of the criminal transaction, with the exception of any electronic recordings that the prosecutor intends to introduce at trial.[60] "Attorney's work product" is defined in the statute as "property to the extent that it contains the opinions, theories, or conclusions of the prosecutor, defense counsel or members of their legal staffs."[61] The prosecutor is not required to turn over memoranda, or other documents containing his legal theories or opinions. In the same manner, you are not required to produce yours if a prosecutor's demand is made. If you have, for instance, several notes laying out the defense of consent in a rape charge, you do not need to reveal the means by which you are going to attempt to show consent. This rule is very similar to the work product rule found in civil discovery.

(d) Procedures to Obtain Information

Under N.Y. Crim. Proc. L. Section 240.10(1), you may obtain access to any discoverable material before the trial begins by serving a "demand to produce" on the prosecutor.[62] A demand to produce is a written notice that you may serve on your adversary without first getting permission from the court. It will include information as to what "property" you want to inspect, and it must provide a reasonable notice of the time at which you desire to conduct the inspection. It is important to be fairly specific in making your demands. You are not permitted to go on a "fishing expedition" by requesting in very general terms to inspect property. For 57. N.Y. Crim. Proc. L. § 240.20(1)(f) (McKinney 2002).

---

58. See State ex rel. Everglades Cypress Co. v. Smith, 139 So. 794, 795, 104 Fla. 91, 93 (Fla. 1932) (stating that the process of subpoena duces tecum is applicable to witnesses other than the adverse party to the case).

59. People v. Price, 100 Misc. 2d 372, 379, 419 N.Y.S.2d 415, 420 (Sup. Ct. Bronx County 1979). The list cited above is not a direct quote from the case, but rather reflects clarifications of the case's meaning as subsequent case law has interpreted it.

60. See United States v. Grossman, 843 F.2d 78, 85 (2d Cir. 1988) (stating that a prosecuting party only has the duty to disclose exculpatory evidence which is known to the prosecution but unknown to the defense).

61. N.Y. Crim. Proc. L. § 240.10 (McKinney 2002). However, if any exculpatory Brady material exists, see Part C(1) of this Chapter, then a duty to disclose that particular evidence is imposed, despite the fact that the material might include some work product. See People v. Finkle, 103 Misc. 2d 985, 986, 427 N.Y.S.2d 374, 375 (Sup. Ct. Sullivan County 1980). Routine police records containing information required to be filed in the normal course of business are not exempt from discovery. People v. Simone, 92 Misc. 2d 306, 312–13, 401 N.Y.S.2d 130, 134 (Sup. Ct. Bronx County 1977).

62. See N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law §§§ 240.80, 240.90, and 255.20 (McKinney 2002) for information on filing a motion for an order of discovery.

example, it would be improper for you to demand inspection of any and all information in the prosecutor's files that might be material to the case.

According to N.Y. Crim. Proc. L. Section 240.80, a demand to produce must be filed within thirty days following your arraignment.[63] However, if you are not represented by counsel, the thirty-day period does not start until counsel initially appears on your behalf—provided you have requested an adjournment to obtain such assistance.

Discovery mechanisms are not limited to the defendant. The prosecutor, too, may take advantage of reciprocal discovery under N.Y. Crim. Proc. L. Section 240.30.[64] In addition to discovery, you may also be ordered to provide non-testimonial evidence, such as appearing in a line-up, providing a hand writing sample, fingerprinting, posing for photographs so long as they are not a re-enactment of the crime, or submitting to a reasonable physical or medical inspection.[65] As a defendant, you must respond to the prosecutor's demands to produce by either providing the desired information or filing a refusal of demand under N.Y. Crim. Proc. L. Section 240.35.

The discovery process does not end once the trial begins. Under N.Y. Crim. Proc. L. Section 240.45, certain materials can be discovered at the initial stages of the trial. These materials could prove to be very important to your case. After the jury has been sworn and before the prosecutor's opening address,[66] the prosecutor must turn over to you the following documents or information:

(1) Any statement (including testimony before a grand jury or a videotaped examination) made by a person the prosecutor plans to call as a witness that relates to the subject matter of the witness's testimony;[67]
(2) Any conviction record of a witness to be called at trial if the prosecutor is aware of the record; and
(3) Information concerning any pending criminal action against any witness the prosecution intends to call, if the prosecutor is aware of such action.
(4) You have the same duty to reveal such information before presenting your case.[68]

This information can be helpful because it may permit you to attack the credibility of prosecution witnesses. For instance, if you find out that a potential witness for the prosecution has been previously convicted of perjury, or lying under oath, you may use this information at trial to impeach the witness (that is, to attack his credibility). Revealing this fact to a jury may cast doubt on the truth of the witness' testimony. This could give you an advantage.

(e) Duty to Disclose

Throughout the entire discovery process, there is a duty to disclose properly requested information in the discovery process. This means that both the prosecutor and the defendant must hand over to the other side any important documents or information that the other side has requested. You must be careful not to ignore the prosecutor's demands for discoverable material. Otherwise, you could face court sanctions by the court.[69]

Despite the general duty to disclose, there are situations where a prosecutor or defendant may refuse to reveal requested information. The main requirement for refusing to disclose is that you must have a reasonable belief that the requested material is not discoverable. For example, material may not be discoverable where it is irrelevant, privileged, or subject to a protective order.[70] When refusing to comply with a demand, you must do so in writing and explain the reasons for your refusal.[71] This must be done within fifteen days from the time you are served with the demand unless you can show good cause why you

---

63. For an example of a demand form, see Marvin Waxner, New York Criminal Practice, Form No. 17:1 (2d. ed. 2005).

64. However, the prosecutor may only ask for material that is similar in kind and character to the material you are asking for from him.

65. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 240.40(2)(b) (McKinney 2002).

66. In the case of a non-jury trial, the information must be turned over prior to the offering of evidence.

67. This is commonly called Rosario material. See People v. Rosario, 9 N.Y.2d 286, 289, 173 N.E.2d 881, 882–83, 213 N.Y.S.2d 448, 450 (1961). In federal practice these documents are governed by the Jencks Act, 18 U.S.C. § 3500 (2000).

68. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 240.45(2) (McKinney 2002).

69. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 240.70 (McKinney 2002).

70. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 240.35 (McKinney 2002).

71. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 240.35 (McKinney 2002).

need more time.[72] Your refusal must be served upon the demanding party and a copy of it must be filed with the court.[73]

If the prosecutor demands information from you and you refuse, but your refusal is unjustified, the court may order you to disclose the material anyway.[74] Similarly, if the prosecutor refuses to provide information that you demand, but the court finds the prosecutor's refusal of your demand unjustified, it will order that the prosecutor give you the material you requested.[75] The court may also order discovery of any other materials the prosecutor intends to use at trial if you show that such property is material to your case and that the request is reasonable.[76]

If you feel there is good reason for refusing to turn over some of your material, you can apply for a protective order, which will deny or limit discovery. Likewise, if the prosecutor thinks there is a good reason not to turn over information to you, the prosecutor can apply for a protective order. Even other parties affected in your case can apply for a protective order if they think there is a good reason not to turn over information. The court can also issue a protective order on its own initiative.[77]

In order to be granted a protective order denying or limiting discovery by the other side, you must show good cause. Good cause includes constitutional limitations; danger that physical evidence may be destroyed or damaged; substantial risk of physical harm; the possibility of intimidation or bribery (usually a prosecutor's defense); a risk of unjustified annoyance or embarrassment to any person; any potential negative effects on the legitimate needs of law enforcement, such as protection of informants; or any other factor that outweighs the usefulness of discovery.[78] When filed, a motion for a protective order suspends discovery of the particular matter.[79] This means that you or (the prosecutor) won't be forced to hand over the disputed material until the judge makes a decision on your request for the protective order.

It is extremely important that you follow these rules. If you refuse to disclose information requested by the prosecutor, you must be sure to establish that you have a "good cause." If you do not, the court may order sanctions.[80] The court may, for example, prohibit the use of certain evidence or prohibit you from calling of certain witnesses at your trial. It may also take "any other appropriate action" that it thinks is reasonable to sanction you. Therefore, it is important that you pay special attention to the procedures involved, particularly to the time limits (deadlines for filing certain motions and requests) found throughout N.Y. Crim Proc. L. Section 240.

It is also important to remember that there is a continuing duty to disclose any additional information subject to discovery.[81] This means that if you have made a demand for material and the prosecutor later receives information that is covered by your original request, the prosecutor must turn it over that information to you. Similarly, you must turn over material that you later become aware of if it is covered by a prosecutor's earlier demand to produce.

(f) Summary

This description of various discoverable materials and information is meant only to give you a very general picture of the tools that are available to you in a criminal proceeding. Effective use of these tools requires a careful reading of Article 240 of the N.Y. Criminal Procedure Law and the particular sections relating to types of discoverable material. You must also look at the case law interpreting the various provisions, particularly if you are looking for the answer to a very specific question. Much of the case law can be found in the annotations to the New York statutes, which are listed directly after the statute provisions. Supplemental treatises (other articles) may also be helpful.

---

72. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 240.80(2) (McKinney 2002).
73. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 240.35 (McKinney 2002).
74. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 240.40(2)(a) (McKinney 2002).
75. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 240.40(1)(a) (McKinney 2002).
76. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 240.40(1)(c) (McKinney 2002).
77. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 240.50(1) (McKinney 2002).
78. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 240.50(1) (McKinney 2002).
79. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 240.50(3) (McKinney 2002)
80. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 240.70(1) (McKinney 2002).
81. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 240.60 (McKinney 2002).

H. Federal Discovery

If your criminal case is in federal court, you should refer to Rule 16 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure for the discovery rules. Since Article 240 of N.Y. Criminal Procedure Law is very similar to Rule 16 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, there are really no major differences in form. Federal Rule 16 provides for basically the same types of discoverable material,[82] and has similar rules for limiting the discovery process by protective orders.[83] There are also provisions for sanctions if a party does not follow the Rule[84] or violates the continuing duty to disclose.[85]

It is important to note, however, that although Federal Rule 16 is very similar in form to Article 240 of the N.Y. Crim. Proc. L., the federal rule is applied differently in practice. Discovery is harder to get in federal courts than in New York state courts, which makes it harder for you to get information that you want from the prosecutor. This is because federal courts allow the prosecutor to make more decisions about what he will and will not disclose to you. The courts will usually support those decisions.

When you make a specific request or motion, be sure to cite the relevant subsections of Rule 16 as authority for your specific requests and motions. If you need to subpoena a third party to produce documents or evidence (subpoena duces tecum), refer to Rule 17(c) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

I. Conclusion

Discovery is a process by which you and your opponent can find out important information from each other about your case. The rules of discovery govern when you may request information from your opponent and when you are required to disclose information to your opponent. These rules differ depending on whether your case is a civil or criminal matter and whether you are in state or federal court. It is important to find out the rules that apply to the court you are in, since failing to comply with the appropriate rules of discovery may result in the judge imposing penalties on you or even throwing your case out of court.

82. See Fed. R. Crim. P. 16(a) and (b).
83. See Fed. R. Crim. P. 16(d)(1).
84. See Fed. R. Crim. P. 16(d)(2).
85. See Fed. R. Crim. P. 16(c).

APPENDIX A

SAMPLE DISCOVERY DOCUMENTS

A-1 Sample Request For Production of Documents
A-2 Sample Request For Admission
A-3 Sample Notice of Interrogatory
A-4 Sample Notice of Motion for Order Compelling Discovery

Selected legal forms for conducting discovery in federal court follow. Do not tear these forms out of the book. You must copy them onto your own paper, filling in appropriate information that applies to you. You may be able to adapt these forms to state procedure if your state's discovery law is similar to that contained in the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. In that case, you should replace the federal rule cited with the applicable state law or rule. But, you should always consult a legal form book for your state if you are not sure that these forms conform to your state's procedure.

A-1. SAMPLE REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS[86]

[proper case caption][87]

Plaintiff [your name] requests defendant [defendant's name] to respond within [number] days to the following requests, namely that:

Defendant produce and permit plaintiff to inspect and to copy each of the following documents: [You should list the documents either individually (for example, minutes of a prison disciplinary hearing) or by category (for example, personnel files of one of the defendants) and describe each of them.]

[You should also state the time, place, and manner of making the inspection and of making the photocopies. You may wish to request that the defendants send copies of the documents to you at your prison facility. You should also request that the defendants send a list of all of the documents they are sending so that you make sure that none of the documents were lost in transit.]

Defendant produce and permit plaintiff to inspect and to photograph, test, or sample each of the following objects: [list the objects either individually (baton used by guard) or by category (blood and hair samples of the guard or the samples obtained from you during a medical examination).]

[Again, you should ask the defendants to send the evidence to you, unless you are concerned that the objects will be interfered with before they reach you at the prison. You may wish to request specifically that the objects are sent in sealed containers so that you can see if they are tampered with before they reach you. However, if they are tampered with before they reach you, you may have no remedy.]

Defendant permit plaintiff [or name someone that will get the information for you] to enter [describe property to be entered] and to inspect, photograph, test or sample [describe the portion of property and the objects to be inspected. Since you will not be able to leave your facility to visit a property, you should ask someone else to visit the cell block or other area where the incident that you are complaining about occurred.]

[You should also state the time, place, and manner of making the inspection and performance of any related acts.]

Dated:

[date] [city, state]

Signed,
[your name & address]
Plaintiff, pro se.

---

86. Adapted from Roger S. Haydock & David F. Herr, Discovery Practice app. B-26 (4th ed. 2004) (Form D-1).

87. Chapter 6 of the JLM, "An Introduction to Legal Documents," includes examples of what case captions look like.

A-2. SAMPLE REQUEST FOR ADMISSION[88]

[proper case caption]

Plaintiff [your name] requests defendant [defendant's name], within [number] days after service of this request, to make the following admissions for the purpose of this action only and subject to all pertinent objections to admissibility which may be interposed at the trial:

That each of the following documents, exhibited with this request, is genuine:

[Here list the documents and describe each document that you have so that the defendant will be able to verify that it is the actual document and not something that has been changed.]

That each of the following statements is true:

[Here list the statements that you would like the defendant to admit. If you believe that the defendant may not want to admit certain things, you may not want to include those things in a request for admission, but in an interrogatory.]

Dated:

[date] [city, state]

Signed,
[your name & address]
Plaintiff, pro se.

A-3. SAMPLE NOTICE OF INTERROGATORY[89]

[proper case caption]

To: [Each party and the attorney for each party]

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that pursuant to Rule 31, Fed. R. Civ. P., the following interrogatories are to be propounded on behalf of [party seeking answers] to [name and address of deponent] by [name and title of deposition officer] pursuant to notice served herewith.

[Set out interrogatories in numerical order.]

Dated:

[date] [city, state]

Signed,
[your name & address]
Plaintiff, pro se.

88. Adapted from Roger S. Haydock & David F. Herr, Discovery Practice app. B-30 (4th ed. 2004) (Form F-1).
89. Adapted from Roger S. Haydock & David F. Herr, Discovery Practice app. B-23 (4th ed. 2004) (Form B-9).

A-4. SAMPLE NOTICE OF MOTION FOR ORDER COMPELLING DISCOVERY[90]

Note: This motion seeks to compel production of documents. This form may also be used if your opponent has refused to comply with a different discovery request (for example, failing to respond to interrogatories). Simply change the language referring to a request for production of documents to indicate the type of discovery you are seeking.

[proper caption]

[Plaintiff/defendant] moves this court for an order pursuant to Rule 37 of Fed. R. Civ. P. [describe relief sought]. A copy of a proposed order is attached to this motion. The reasons supporting this motion include [explain reasons such as the defendant's failure to answer your interrogatories, to produce records, or to allow you to perform discovery in a way that was practical for you].

[Plaintiff/defendant] further moves the court for an order seeking reasonable attorney's fees and costs and expenses incurred in this proceeding. There exists substantial justification for seeking fees, costs and expenses, because [explain reasons why such as defendant's ignoring your requests or defendant's telling you that your case was worthless because you are a prisoner].

This motion is based upon the notice, pleadings, records, and files in this action, and the attached supporting affidavits [or: declarations] of [party, witness, attorney—persons who can state that they know that the defendant did not produce the documents or that you did not receive them] and the attached memorandum of law [if necessary or appropriate], and oral and documentary evidence to be presented at the hearing on the motion [if you think a hearing will be necessary].

Dated:

[date] [city, state]

Signed,
[your name & address]
Plaintiff, pro se.

90. Adapted from Roger S. Haydock & David F. Herr, Discovery Practice app. B-34 (4th ed. 2004) (Form G-1).

A JAILHOUSE LAWYER'S MANUAL

Chapter 9:
Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

CHAPTER 9

APPEALING YOUR CONVICTION OR SENTENCE*

A. Introduction

This Chapter explains how you can get your conviction undone or your sentence reduced if something was done incorrectly at your trial or hearing. To do so, you "appeal" to an "appellate court" which has the power to overrule a lower court's decision. As the "appellant," you argue that the trial court's judgment[1] against you was wrong because of harmful errors that occurred in your case.

This Chapter deals specifically with the law of New York State. If you have been convicted or sentenced in a federal court or in another state's court, your appeal will be governed by federal law or by the law of that other state and you should use your prison's law library to find information about the law that applies to your appeal. Even if New York law does not apply to your appeal, however, you may find it useful to read this Chapter for background information about appeals in general.

For your appeal, you should quickly get a lawyer to assist you. You should act quickly because there are time limits for starting an appeal. These time limits are strictly enforced. After they have expired, it may be impossible for an appellate court to consider your appeal, even if your appeal would otherwise have been successful. See Part B(1) for information about time limits. The Constitution guarantees that you can have a lawyer for your appeal, even if you can't pay for one.[2] You should make sure you have a lawyer because, among other reasons, many issues that could win your appeal are difficult to recognize by yourself. Because of the time limits, appealing by yourself is risky: you may lose the chance to raise an issue before you learn enough to even notice it. See Part C(1) for information on how you can get a lawyer.

Part A of this Chapter (the part you are reading now) is the introduction. Part B discusses limitations on your right to appeal, including time limits and restrictions that apply if you pleaded guilty. Part C describes what you can do before you appeal or while your appeal is pending, including how to get a lawyer and how to request release on bail. Part D explains what an appellate court can do when it considers your appeal. Part E explains how to actually file papers for your appeal. Part F discusses the possibility of continuing your appeal if the first appellate court decides against you.[3] Part G explains what you can do if your appellate lawyer is not providing "effective assistance of appellate counsel." Part H is a brief conclusion.

At the end of this Chapter, Appendix A helps you figure out where you should file your appeal. Appendix B provides sample papers for appeals, including papers needed to get a lawyer without cost, to get released on bail pending appeal, and to get an extension of time to file your appeal. These forms are samples only: you or your lawyer must write your own versions of these papers. Ideally, you should read the entire Chapter before you file any papers. If you file papers incorrectly or just tear these papers out of the book and send them to a court, the court may ignore them and you may lose your chance to appeal.

You should know that only a small proportion of criminal appeals are eventually granted, but in general, if you think something was done wrong in your case, there's no reason not to try an appeal.

---

* This Chapter was revised by Gregory K. Johnson based on previous versions by Douglas Shively, Sydney Bird, Miranda Berge, Peggy Cross, Joy Fuyuno, Deidra D. Dixon, Janet Ellis, and Amy Metzler. Special thanks to Lorca Morello of The Legal Aid Society of New York for her valuable comments.

1. A judgment means your conviction (the entry of a guilty plea or a guilty verdict) and your sentence. See N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 1.20(13)–(15) (McKinney 2010).

2. See Douglas v. California, 372 U.S. 353, 356–58, 83 S. Ct. 814, 816–17, 9 L. Ed. 2d 811, 814–15 (1963) (establishing that the Constitution requires the state to pay for a lawyer for a defendant who cannot afford one for his first appeal). See also Halbert v. Michigan, 545 U.S. 605, 605, 125 S. Ct. 2582, 2583, 162 L. Ed. 2d 552, 556 (2005) (explaining that, assuming state law allows for any criminal appeal at all, the Douglas right applies to a first appeal even if the appeal requires permission under state law, but does not apply to second appeals that require permission).

3. See Melvin Bressler et al., Appeals in Criminal Cases, in New York Criminal Practice Handbook 651, 651 (Lawrence N. Gray ed., 2d ed. 1998 & Supp. 2007). Bressler has been an important resource in the writing of this Chapter of the JLM. We strongly recommend it for a detailed, chronological discussion of the criminal appellate process in New York State.

B. Limits on Your Right to Appeal

When deciding whether you should appeal, you should first determine whether there are any limits on your right to do so. This is an important first step because you may have already lost all or part of your right to appeal. You could have waived (given up) or forfeited (lost) your right to appeal in several ways. For example, if you pleaded guilty, you might have agreed to waive your right to appeal as part of a plea bargain. Even if you did not waive your right to appeal, your right to appeal may be limited if you missed certain deadlines or failed to raise certain objections in trial court. Your right to appeal may also be subject to limitations as to which court can hear your appeal, based on which court convicted or sentenced you and what your conviction or sentence was.

This Part will help you to identify if there are any potential limits on your right to appeal. If limits on your right to appeal exist, this Part will also help you determine whether it is possible for you to get your right to appeal reinstated (to get it back).

If you're unsure whether an appeal is possible for you, you should promptly go ahead and file your notice of appeal and get a lawyer anyway. Your appeal may be denied in the end, or you or your appellate lawyer may choose not to continue the appeal, but you'll be no worse off—and if you are eligible to appeal, waiting may cause you to lose your chance.

1. Time Limits

The general rule is that you will lose your right to appeal if you wait too long to file a notice of appeal after you have been sentenced. To preserve your right to appeal, you must file two copies of a notice of appeal with the clerk of your trial court within thirty days of the date you were sentenced.[4] You must count thirty days from your original sentencing, even if you were re-sentenced later (except that if you were re-sentenced after the deadline to appeal, you may count from the new sentence if you want to appeal your new sentence).[5] Within the same thirty-day period, you must also serve a copy of the notice of appeal on the District Attorney of the county in which your trial was held.[6] See Part E for information on preparing and filing your papers. This thirty-day period is a critical period, and you have a constitutional right to counsel during this time.[7] THESE TIME LIMITS ARE EXTREMELY IMPORTANT.

If you don't file a notice of appeal within thirty days, you usually lose your right to appeal entirely, but you may be able to recover your right to appeal by filing a motion for a time extension.[8] This extension will be granted if you meet two requirements. First, you must make the motion for a time extension within one year of the original deadline for filing a notice of appeal.[9] Second, your failure to file on time must have been because of one of the following reasons:[10]

(1) A public servant behaved improperly (for example, if a prosecutor acted to prevent your good-faith efforts to file on time from succeeding[11]);

(2) Your lawyer behaved improperly, died, or became disabled (examples of improper conduct include your lawyer's failure to inform you in writing of your right to appeal,[12] failure to inform you of your

---

4. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.10(1)(a) (McKinney 2010).

5. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 450.30(3) (McKinney 2010).

6. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.10(1)(b) (McKinney 2010).

7. See People v. Montgomery, 24 N.Y.2d 130, 133, 247 N.E.2d 130, 132, 299 N.Y.S.2d 156, 159 (1969) ("It is apparent that the 30-day period in which an appeal must be docketed is a critical time for the defendant. It cannot be successfully argued that an indigent defendant does not have the right to counsel at this stage of his proceedings.").

8. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.30(1) (McKinney 2010). The extension may be for no more than 30 days, counting from the date of the decision to grant the extension.

9. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.30(1) (McKinney 2010). Although this one-year time limit for making a motion for an extension of time cannot be extended, an appellate court might decide not to enforce the one-year time limit in extremely rare circumstances. See People v. Thomas, 47 N.Y.2d 37, 389 N.E.2d 1094, 416 N.Y.S.2d 573 (1979) (holding that, in the interest of justice, the district attorney could not enforce the one-year time limit to file a 460.30 motion when the defendant had made an honest effort to appeal within the appropriate time limit and action by the district attorney had contributed to the failure of the defendant's timely attempt to appeal).

10. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.30(1) (McKinney 2010).

11. See, e.g., People v. Johnson, 69 N.Y.2d 339, 341, 506 N.E.2d 1177, 1178, 514 N.Y.S.2d 324, 325 (1987) (allowing an appeal after the deadline because defendant's prior, timely attempts to appeal had been prevented by actions of the state).

12. See People v. Nunez, 178 A.D.2d 1029, 1029, 578 N.Y.S.2d 780, 781 (4th Dept. 1991) (granting extension of right to apply for leave to appeal as a poor person,[13] and failure to start your appeal after being informed of your desire to appeal[14]); or

(3) You were unable to communicate with your lawyer about whether to appeal before the filing deadline had passed. To win an extension based on an inability to communicate with your lawyer, the inability to communicate must have been (a) because you were in prison and (b) through no fault of your attorney's or of your own (that is, not because you or your attorney made a mistake).[15]

If you do not satisfy both of these requirements—making your motion for an extension within one year after your original thirty days to appeal has passed and showing you missed your original deadline to appeal due to one or more of the three allowable factors—then you will not be granted a time extension. If more than a year and 30 days have passed and your claim involves your attorney's unreasonable failure to file an appeal, you can file a writ of error coram nobis with the Appellate Division to claim ineffective assistance of counsel, as described in Part G(3) of this Chapter.[16]

If you think that you can satisfy these requirements, then you should send your motion for a time extension to the appellate court to which you want to appeal.[17] See Form B-5 in Appendix B of this Chapter for an example of a motion for time extension, and see Appendix A of this Chapter to figure out which court you should send your motion to. The motion must be in writing and must contain a sworn statement of the facts that make you eligible for a time extension, and you must notify the District Attorney of your motion so that the District Attorney can file papers opposing your motion.[18]

If questions exist about the facts underlying your request for an extension—for example, whether you were really unable to communicate with your lawyer or simply didn't do so—the appellate court may order the trial court to hold a hearing on these issues.[19] Once the facts are clarified, or if there are no factual questions to begin with, the appellate court will grant or deny your motion for an extension.

If the appellate court grants you a time extension, it will give you no more than thirty days from the day of its decision to file your appeal.[20] If the appellate court denies your motion for an extension, you may appeal the denial only if both (a) a judge on the Court of Appeals gives you permission to appeal and (b) the intermediate appellate court states that it based its decision solely on the law without finding facts.[21] Additionally, you may not appeal a decision denying an extension if your appeal would always have required permission of the same court that denied the extension (that is, if the appeal was not rightful but rather required permission of the court).[22] time to appeal because defense counsel failed to provide defendant with written notice of right to appeal); N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 22, § 1022.11 (2010) ("[I]mmediately after the pronouncement of sentence … counsel shall advise the defendant in writing of his right to appeal.").

---

13. See People v. Lord, 181 A.D.2d 1076, 1076, 582 N.Y.S.2d 305, 305 (4th Dept. 1992) (granting extension of time to appeal where defense counsel, among other mistakes, gave defendant "improper advice concerning the manner of applying for leave to appeal as a poor person"); N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 22, § 1022.11 (2010) ("[I]mmediately after the pronouncement of sentence … counsel shall advise the defendant in writing of … the right of the person who is unable to pay the cost of an appeal to apply for leave to appeal as a poor person.").

14. See People v. Lord, 181 A.D.2d 1076, 1076, 582 N.Y.S.2d 305, 306 (4th Dept. 1992) (granting extension of time to appeal where defense counsel, among other mistakes, had failed to carry out defendant's request to appeal); N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 22, § 1022.11 (2010) ("[Trial] counsel shall also ascertain whether defendant wishes to appeal … and, if so, counsel shall serve the necessary notice of appeal or application for permission [on the opposing party] and shall file the necessary notice of appeal or application for permission.").

15. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.30(1) (McKinney 2010).

16. See Perich v. Mazzuca, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 62219, at *55 (E.D.N.Y. 2007) (finding that New York courts recognize this procedure where filing time has expired). See also People v. Perich, 15 A.D.3d 505, 505, 789 N.Y.S.2d 435, 435 (2d Dept. 2005) (implicitly recognizing this procedure where the filing time has expired); People v. Morales, 2003 N.Y. Misc. LEXIS 142, at *7–8 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County 2003) (explaining why coram nobis is the proper procedure).

17. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.30(1) (McKinney 2010). See Form B-5 in Appendix B of this Chapter for a sample notice of a motion for extension of time.

18. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.30(2) (McKinney 2010).

19. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.30(5) (McKinney 2010).

20. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.30(1) (McKinney 2010).

21. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.30(6) (McKinney 2010).

22. See People v. Nealy, 82 N.Y.2d 773, 773, 624 N.E.2d 175, 176, 603 N.Y.S.2d 991 (1993) (holding defendant may not appeal the appellate division's denial of an extension of time to request permission to appeal to that appellate division).

2. Plea Agreements

If you pleaded guilty, your right to appeal is limited in certain ways. If you pleaded guilty as part of a plea bargain or negotiated sentence, you automatically forfeited (lost) your right to appeal about certain matters. This is true even if your plea agreement does not say so. Moreover, many plea agreements contain terms in which you waive (give up) the right to appeal about even more matters, which would be listed in the agreement. The next two parts explain these limits on your right to appeal.

Be aware that if you successfully appeal from a guilty plea, you will still have to face all the original charges against you. If you then negotiate a new plea agreement, or if you go to trial and are convicted, your new sentence could actually be worse than the sentence you received under your earlier plea. Thus, unless you have already received the worst possible sentence, there is some risk involved in appealing a guilty plea.

(a) Rights Automatically Forfeited by Your Guilty Plea

If you pleaded guilty, you automatically forfeited the right to appeal many types of errors, even if your plea agreement does not specify them.[23] In general, by pleading guilty, you give up the right to argue the factual issue of guilt.[24] Additionally, you give up the right to raise problems with discovery or other pretrial matters.[25] You may not appeal the following issues if you pleaded guilty:

(1) The insufficiency of the evidence before the grand jury;[26]
(2) The insufficiency of instructions given to the grand jury;[27]
(3) The refusal of the trial court to try you separately from a co-defendant;[28]
(4) The denial of your right to a jury trial;[29]
(5) The denial of your right of confrontation;[30]
(6) The suppression of evidence, if you pleaded without obtaining an explicit ruling on this;[31]
(7) The limits on your privilege against self-incrimination;[32]
(8) The expiration of a statue of limitation (a time limit for bringing charges);[33]
(9) The lack of a factual basis for a plea to a lesser charge;[34]

---

23. See generally N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 220.10 (McKinney 2010); People v. Hansen, 95 N.Y.2d 227, 231 n.3, 738 N.E.2d 773, 776 n.3, 715 N.Y.S.2d 369, 372 n.3 (2000) (listing claims that are forfeited by guilty plea); People v. Gerber, 182 A.D.2d 252, 259–60, 589 N.Y.S.2d 171, 174 (2d Dept. 1992) (listing claims that are forfeited by guilty plea).

24. See People v. Garcia, 216 A.D.2d 36, 36–37, 627 N.Y.S.2d 666, 667 (1st Dept. 1995) ("By pleading guilty, the defendant has waived his right to litigate the issue of his guilt. ").

25. See People v. Berezansky, 229 A.D.2d 768, 771, 646 N.Y.S.2d 574, 577 (3d Dept. 1996) (holding that a defendant who waives indictment and pleads guilty "waives all discovery and all other pretrial and trial matters").

26. See People v. Caleca, 273 A.D.2d 476, 476, 711 N.Y.S.2d 743, 744 (2d Dept. 2000) ("By pleading guilty, the defendant waived his claim that the evidence submitted to the Grand Jury was not sufficient.").

27. See People v. Palo, 299 A.D.2d 871, 871, 749 N.Y.S.2d 452, 452 (4th Dept. 2002) ("The contention of defendant that the prosecutor improperly instructed the grand jury does not survive his plea of guilty.").

28. See People v. Sheppard, 177 A.D.2d 668, 668, 576 N.Y.S.2d 368, 369 (2d Dept. 1991) ("The defendant's plea of guilty constituted a waiver of the right to seek appellate review of the denial of his severance motion").

29. See People v. Walls, 129 A.D.2d 751, 751, 514 N.Y.S.2d 513, 513 (2d Dept. 1987*)* (holding that a guilty plea waives the right to appeal issues relating to both the right to a jury trial and the right to confront witnesses); see also People v. Taylor, 65 N.Y.2d 1, 5, 478 N.E.2d 755, 757, 489 N.Y.S.2d 152, 154 (1985) ("[A] guilty plea signals defendant's 'intention not to litigate the question of his guilt, and necessarily involves the surrender of certain constitutional rights, including … the right to trial by jury'") (quoting People v. Lynn, 28 N.Y.2d 196, 201–02, 269 N.E.2d 794, 797, 321 N.Y.S.2d 74, 78).

30. See People v. Taylor, 65 N.Y.2d 1, 5, 478 N.E.2d 755, 757, 489 N.Y.S.2d 152, 154 (1985) ("[A] guilty plea signals defendant's 'intention not to litigate the question of his guilt, and necessarily involves the surrender of certain constitutional rights, including the right to confrontation.'") (quoting People v. Lynn, 28 N.Y.2d 196, 201–02, 269 N.E.2d 794, 797, 321 N.Y.S.2d 74, 78).

31. See People v. Smith, 304 A.D.2d 677, 677, 757 N.Y.S.2d 491, 491 (2d Dept. 2003) ("By pleading guilty before making a motion to suppress evidence … the defendant waived her claim").

32. See People v. Taylor, 65 N.Y.2d 1, 5, 478 N.E.2d 755, 757, 489 N.Y.S.2d 152, 154 (1985) ("[A] guilty plea signals defendant's 'intention not to litigate the question of his guilt, and necessarily involves the surrender of certain constitutional rights, including … the privilege against self incrimination'") (quoting People v. Lynn, 28 N.Y.2d 196, 201–02, 269 N.E.2d 794, 797, 321 N.Y.S.2d 74, 78).

33. See People v. Parilla, 8 N.Y.3d 654, 659, 870 N.E.2d 142, 145, 838 N.Y.S.2d 824, 827 (2007) (holding that a statute of limitations defense is not among the rights that survive a guilty plea).

34. See People v. Clairborne, 29 N.Y.2d 950, 951, 280 N.E.2d 366, 367, 329 N.Y.S.2d 580, 581 (1972) ("A bargained guilty plea to a lesser crime makes unnecessary a factual basis for the particular crime confessed.").

(10) The absence of counsel during certain proceedings; and[35]

(11) Your statutory (as opposed to constitutional) right to a speedy trial.[36]

By pleading guilty, however, you did not forfeit your entire right to appeal. Generally, you still have the right to appeal about the following errors (and others[37]):

(1) You were denied your constitutional right to a speedy trial;[38]

(2) You were charged in violation of your constitutional right against double jeopardy;[39]

(3) You were not competent to stand trial;[40]

(4) The statute under which you were convicted is unconstitutional;[41]

(5) Your sentence was illegal;[42]

(6) Your plea was not voluntary or knowing;[43]

---

35. See People v. Reiblein, 200 A.D.2d 281, 283, 613 N.Y.S.2d 789, 790 (3d Dept. 1994), appeal denied, 84 N.Y.2d 831, 641 N.E.2d 172, 617 N.Y.S.2d 151 (3d Dept. 1994) (holding that, by pleading guilty, defendant waived right to appeal on the grounds that defense counsel was not present at psychiatric interview).

36. See People v. Smith, 272 A.D.2d 679, 681, 708 N.Y.S.2d 485, 487 (3d Dept. 2000) ("By pleading guilty, defendant waived appellate review of his statutory right to a speedy trial."); see generally N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 30.30 (McKinney 2010). A statutory right is a right created by an ordinary law. By contrast, a constitutional right is a right guaranteed by the state or federal constitution. Courts are generally less willing to decide that constitutional rights—which are often more fundamental and important—have been waived.

37. See N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 220.10 nn.221–83 (McKinney 2010), N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.15 n.18 (McKinney 2010), N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 710.70 n.59 (McKinney 2010). See also People v. Hansen, 95 N.Y.2d 227, 230–31, N.E.2d 773, 776, 715 N.Y.S.2d 369, 372 (2000) (describing the issues that survive a guilty plea).

38. See People v. Lopez, 6 N.Y.3d 248, 255, 844 N.E.2d 1145, 1148, 811 N.Y.S.2d 623, 626 (2006) (noting that a claim regarding constitutional right to a speedy trial cannot be waived by guilty plea and waiver of appeal); People v. Smith, 272 A.D.2d 679, 681, 708 N.Y.S.2d 485, 487 (3d Dept. 2000) ("[D]efendant's right to raise his constitutional right to a speedy trial survives both his guilty plea and the waiver of his right to appeal"); People v. Hansen, 95 N.Y.2d 227, 230–31 n.2, 738 N.E.2d 773, 776 n.2, 715 N.Y.S.2d 369, 372 n.2 (2000) (listing speedy trial right among constitutional claims that survive a guilty plea).

39. See Menna v. New York, 423 U.S. 61, 62–63, 96 S. Ct. 241, 242, 46 L. Ed. 195, 198 (1975) (holding that a guilty plea does not waive a claim that the charges amounted to unconstitutional double jeopardy); People v. Prescott, 66 N.Y.2d 216, 221, 486 N.E.2d 813, 815–16, 495 N.Y.S.2d 955, 958 (1985) (holding that a defendant's constitutional double jeopardy claim survives a guilty plea and may be raised for the first time on appeal). But you may not raise your statutory right against double jeopardy under § 40.20 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law if you have plead guilty. See People v. Prescott, 66 N.Y.2d 216, 220, 486 N.E.2d 813, 815, 495 N.Y.S.2d 955, 957 (1985) (holding that a guilty plea results in forfeiture of statutory double jeopardy claim, even if presented to the court prior to the plea); see also People v. Gray, 300 A.D.2d 696, 697, 752 N.Y.S.2d 731, 733 (2d Dept. 2002) (holding that a constitutional double jeopardy claim survives a guilty plea but that a statutory claim does not).

40. See People v. Lopez, 6 N.Y.3d 248, 257, 844 N.E.2d 1145, 1150, 811 N.Y.S.2d 623, 626 (2006) (noting that a "challenge to a defendant's competency" is not waived by pleading guilty and waiving the right to appeal); People v. Callahan, 80 N.Y.2d 273, 280, 590 N.Y.S. 46, 50, 604 N.E.2d 108, 112 (1992) (holding that a guilty plea accompanied by waiver of right to appeal does not waive the right to appeal about competency to stand trial); People v. Armlin, 37 N.Y.2d 167, 172, 332 N.E.2d 870, 874, 371 N.Y.S.2d 691, 697 (1975) (holding that a plea of guilty does not waive right to a mandated competency hearing); People v. Bennefield, 306 A.D.2d 911, 911, 761 N.Y.S.2d 906, 907 (4th Dept. 2003) (holding that "issues relating to defendant's competency survive" a guilty plea and a waiver of a right to appeal).

41. See Gesicki v. Oswald, 336 F. Supp. 371, 374 n.3 (S.D.N.Y. 1971), aff'd, 406 U.S. 913, 92 S. Ct. 1773, 32 L. Ed. 2d 113 (1972) (holding that a guilty plea does not waive the right to contest the constitutionality of the statute under which a defendant was convicted); see also People v. Lee, 58 N.Y.2d 491, 493, 448 N.E.2d 1328, 1329, 462 N.Y.S.2d 417, 418 (1983) ("A defendant by a plea of guilty does not forfeit the right … to challenge the constitutionality of the statute under which he was convicted.").

42. See People v. Lopez, 6 N.Y.3d 248, 255, 844 N.E.2d 1145, 1148, 811 N.Y.S.2d 623, 626 (2006) (finding that a claim challenging the legality of a sentence cannot be waived by a guilty plea but noting that an explicit waiver of the right to appeal does waive the right to appeal on the basis of harshness of agreed-upon sentence); People v. Seaberg, 74 N.Y.2d 1, 9, 541 N.E.2d 1022, 1025, 543 N.Y.S.2d 968, 972 (1989) (finding that a claim challenging the legality of the sentence cannot be waived by a guilty plea).

43. See People v. Catu, 4. N.Y.3d 242, 245, 825 N.E.2d 1081, 1082, 792 N.Y.S.2d 887, 888 (2005) (reversing conviction on the basis that guilty plea was not "voluntary and intelligent" since defendant was not told he would be subject to post-release supervision); People v. Gerber, 182 A.D.2d 252, 260–61, 589 N.Y.S.2d 171, 175–76 (2d Dept. 1992) ("[A] defendant who pleads guilty is entitled to raise appellate contentions regarding … the voluntary and knowing nature of his plea").

You can argue involuntariness on direct appeal if the involuntariness is apparent on the record and you moved to withdraw your plea before sentencing. See People v. Brown, 2010 N.Y. LEXIS 32, at *7–8 (2010). If you did not move to withdraw, courts may refuse to consider the issue as "unpreserved." See Part B(3) of this Chapter for more on the

(7) Jurisdiction was not proper in the trial court;[44]
(8) Your conviction was based entirely upon evidence the prosecutor knew was false;[45]
(9) You were improperly denied a motion to suppress evidence;[46] or
(10) The trial court based your sentence on an improper determination of your prior-felon status.[47]

Even if you have not automatically forfeited the right to appeal the above issues simply by pleading guilty, you still may have given up the right to appeal these issues by either specifically waiving your right to appeal in your plea agreement or by failing to preserve the issues at trial (that is, failing to object when errors occurred). Waiver and preservation are discussed in Part B(2)(b) and Part B(3) of this Chapter, respectively.

(b) Rights You Waive by Agreement

In addition to pleading guilty, you may also have agreed to waive your right to appeal as part of a plea bargain or negotiated sentence.[48] If your plea included an agreement to waive your right to appeal, you still have several options. First, you may claim your waiver was invalid. A waiver is considered invalid if you did not knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily agree to waive your right to appeal.[49]

Second, you can appeal certain types of claims that are considered so important to society that they can never be waived by plea agreement. This means that even if you waived your right to appeal in a plea agreement or as part of a negotiated sentence, you still have a right to appeal certain types of claims.[50] These claims include:

(1) a challenge to a death sentence;[51]
(2) a claim that you were denied your constitutional right to a speedy trial;[52]

---

preservation requirement. There is an important exception to this requirement: if something in the plea allocution shows that you did not understand what you were pleading guilty to, and the court did not ask any questions to make sure, you can argue on appeal that the plea was not knowing and voluntary, even though you did not move to withdraw it. People v. McNair, 13 N.Y.3d 821, 822–23, 920 N.E.2d 929, 930, 892 N.Y.S.2d 822, 823 (2009) (holding that trial court must ask further questions where defendant's remarks "cast significant doubt" on guilt). If the involuntariness has to do with matters outside the record, such as ineffectiveness of trial counsel, file a 440.10 motion instead of an appeal. For information on Article 440 appeals, see Chapter 20 of the JLM.

44. See People v. Taylor, 65 N.Y.2d 1, 5, 478 N.E.2d 755, 757, 489 N.Y.S.2d 152, 154 (1985) ("A guilty plea does not forfeit the right to raise a jurisdictional defect.").

45. See People v. Pelchat, 62 N.Y.2d 97, 108, 464 N.E.2d 447, 453, 476 N.Y.S.2d 79, 85 (1984) (finding that a defendant who pleaded guilty was allowed to challenge a conviction when the prosecutor knowingly based the charges on false evidence).

46. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 710.70(2) (McKinney 2010).

47. See People v. Lacend, 140 A.D.2d 243, 244, 528 N.Y.S.2d 832, 833 (1988) (modifying status of defendant, who had pleaded guilty, from predicate violent felon to predicate felon and remanding for re-sentencing).

48. A waiver generally covers any aspect of a case that does not fall within certain exceptions. For example, a waiver means that you give up the right to appeal your conviction on the grounds that your lawyer failed to raise certain defenses. See People v. Parilla, 8 N.Y.3d 654, 659, 870 N.E.2d 142, 145, 838 N.Y.S.2d 824 (2007) (holding that a waiver of the right to appeal as part of a plea agreement prevented the defendant from raising the issue of a statute of limitations defense on appeal). For information on how other states address the issue of waivers by agreement, see Robert K. Calhoun, Waiver of the Right to Appeal, 23 Hastings Const. L.Q. 127, 135–45 (1995).

49. People v. Seaberg, 74 N.Y.2d 1, 11, 541 N.E.2d 1022, 1026–27, 543 N.Y.S.2d 968, 972–73 (1989) ("A waiver, to be enforceable, must not only be voluntary but also knowing and intelligent."). A waiver is not voluntary, knowing, and intelligent (and therefore is not valid) if the trial record does not demonstrate that the trial court made certain that the defendant understood the meaning of the waiver before agreeing to it. See People v. Billingslea, 6 N.Y.3d 248, 257, 844 N.E.2d 1145, 1149, 811 N.Y.S.2d 623 (2006) (holding that trial court's statement that "when you plead guilty you waive your right of appeal" was not sufficient for the waiver to be knowing since the court did not explain that the defendant's was agreeing to waive rights beyond those that are automatically forfeited by any guilty plea). However, a waiver that is adequately explained in writing and signed by the defendant may be valid even if the trial court does not fully explain the terms of the waiver to the defendant. See People v. Ramos, 7 N.Y.3d 737, 738, 853 N.E.2d 222, 222, 819 N.Y.S.2d 853, 853 (2006) (holding that the trial record established that the "defendant knowingly, intelligently and voluntarily waived his right to appeal" based on a written waiver agreement, even though the trial court's explanation to the defendant was unclear).

50. See People v. Callahan, 80 N.Y.2d 273, 280, 604 N.E.2d 108, 112, 590 N.Y.S.2d 46, 50 (1992) (noting that there are "several categories of appellate claims that may not be waived because of a larger societal interest in their correct resolution"). See generally Preiser, Practice Commentaries, N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 450.10 (McKinney 2010).

51. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.30(2) (McKinney 2010) ("Whenever a sentence of death is imposed, the judgment and sentence shall be reviewed on the record by the court of appeals.").

(3) a challenge to the legality of court-imposed sentences;[53]
(4) a challenge to the constitutionality of the statute outlawing the conduct to which you pleaded guilty;[54]
(5) a claim regarding your competency to stand trial;[55] or
(6) a claim that ineffective assistance of counsel affected the voluntariness of your guilty plea.[56]

Keep in mind, though, that there may be other claims that society has a strong interest in, including double jeopardy, that can be waived.[57]

Finally, note that while you cannot waive your right to challenge an illegal sentence, you can waive your right to challenge your sentence as too harsh or excessive.[58] This is true even if your plea agreement did not contain the promise of a specific sentence as long as you were informed of the potential maximum sentence.[59]

3. Failure to Protest (the "Preservation Requirement")

Appellate courts generally aren't willing to decide questions that the trial court had no chance to consider. Therefore, an error usually must be "preserved" by pointing it out to the trial court at a time when the court had the opportunity to fix it. This applies whether you pleaded guilty or not. To preserve a legal error for review, you (or more likely your lawyer) generally must have objected to the mistake when it occurred or at a later time when the trial court still had the chance to correct the error.[60] In other words, you

---

52. See People v. Blakley, 34 N.Y.2d 311, 313, 313 N.E.2d 763, 764, 357 N.Y.S.2d 459, 461 (1974) (holding that a constitutional speedy trial claim may not be waived and that, where such a plea is attempted, the plea must be vacated); People v. Callahan, 80 N.Y.2d 273, 280, 604 N.E.2d 108, 112, 590 N.Y.S.2d 46, 50 (1992) (holding that a waiver of right to appeal does not prevent an appeal based on denial of defendant's constitutional speedy trial right).

53. See People v. Francabandera, 33 N.Y.2d 429, 434 n.2, 310 N.E.2d 292, 294 n.2, 354 N.Y.S.2d 609, 612 n.2 (1974) (upholding defendant's plea bargain as valid but noting that the legality of a sentence is always appealable); see also People v Callahan, 80 N.Y.2d 273, 280, 604 N.E.2d 108, 112, 590 N.Y.S.2d 46, 50 (1992) (listing the legality of a sentence as among the issues that remain appealable even where a defendant attempts waiver). The right to appeal the legality of a sentence includes the right to appeal an unreasonable delay in sentencing. People v. Campbell, 97 N.Y.2d 532, 533, 769 N.E.2d 1288, 1288, 743 N.Y.S.2d 396, 396 (2002) (holding that a general waiver of the right to appeal does not waive a claim of "unreasonable delay in sentencing" as the claim challenges the legality of the sentence).

54. See People v. Lee, 58 N.Y.2d 491, 493–94, 448 N.E.2d 1328, 1329, 462 N.Y.S.2d 417, 418 (1983) (overturning defendant's conviction on the ground that the statute to which defendant plead guilty of violating was unconstitutional); People v. Beaumont, 299 A.D.2d 657, 659, 749 N.Y.S.2d 612, 614 (3d Dept. 2002) (noting that the defendant's right to appeal the constitutionality of the statute under which he was convicted survived his valid waiver of his right to appeal but finding that the defendant did not preserve the issue by objecting at trial).

55. See People v. Armlin, 37 N.Y.2d 167, 168, 332 N.E.2d 870, 871, 371 N.Y.S.2d 691, 693 (1975) (holding that defendant's guilty plea could not prevent the defendant from raising on appeal the issue of competency to stand trial).

56. See People v. Johnson, 288 A.D.2d 501, 502, 732 N.Y.S.2d 137, 138 (3d Dept. 2001) (stating that "to the extent that a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel impacts on the voluntariness of a defendant's guilty plea, the claim survives a waiver of the right to appeal" but noting that the "claim must ordinarily be preserved by a motion to withdraw the plea or a motion to vacate the judgment of conviction.").

57. For example, in People v. Allen, the Court of Appeals held that a defendant may expressly waive the right to appeal a constitutional double jeopardy ruling in a plea bargain. The defendant in that case pleaded guilty just before the start of a second trial after a mistrial had been declared during the first trial. When he later attempted to appeal his conviction, the Court of Appeals ruled that he had validly waived the right to a double jeopardy defense in his plea bargain. The court determined that society's interest in the right to a double jeopardy defense was not as strong as, for example, its interest in the right to a speedy trial. Therefore, while you cannot waive the right to a speedy trial, you can waive the right to a double jeopardy defense if you agree to do so in your plea bargain. People v. Allen, 86 N.Y.2d 599, 603, 658 N.E.2d 1012, 1015, 635 N.Y.S.2d 139, 142 (1995); see also Preiser, Practice Commentaries, N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 220.10 (McKinney 2010). The Court of Appeals later held that the right to appeal a constitutional double jeopardy ruling may be waived as part of a general waiver of the right to appeal even if the waiver agreement does not specifically state that the right to appeal on the basis of double jeopardy is being waived. People v. Muniz, 91 N.Y.2d 570, 575, 696 N.E.2d 182, 186, 673 N.Y.S.2d 358, 362 (1998) (finding that there is "no principled basis upon which to conclude that a defendant cannot impliedly waive a claim of double jeopardy" when the waiver agreement allows the defendant to appeal from all waivable aspects of the case).

58. See People v. Espino, 279 A.D.2d 798, 799, 718 N.Y.S.2d 729, 730 (3d Dept. 2001) (noting a defendant may waive the right to appeal a sentence as harsh and excessive but never the right to appeal the legality of a sentence).

59. See People v. Hidalgo, 91 N.Y.2d 733, 737, 698 N.E.2d 46, 48, 675 N.Y.S.2d 327, 329 (1998) (finding that a defendant's general waiver of the right to appeal prevented her from appealing her sentence as harsh and excessive).

60. If you make no protest, the intermediate appellate court cannot review the error as a "question of law." N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.05(2) (McKinney 2010). But an appellate court nonetheless may decide to review the error "in the interest of justice." N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law. § 470.15(6)(a) (McKinney 2010). The "in the interest of justice" exception to the usually are not allowed to raise an issue for the first time on appeal. Instead, you must have raised the issue at the trial so that the trial court could have addressed it before it became a problem.

In general, you must have identified the specific legal basis for your objection at trial in order to preserve the error for appellate review.[61] That is, it is not enough to have objected without explaining at the time of the objection why you were objecting. However, an appellate court will also review an error on legal grounds that you did not specify at trial if the trial court expressly decided the particular issue in response to an objection by a party.[62] You may also have preserved errors for review on appeal through a request, rather than an objection.[63] This means that if you asked the judge for a particular ruling or instruction[64] but he refused, you may challenge the trial court's refusal even if you did not formally object. However, if you want to challenge an error in the ruling or instruction that the trial court gave, as opposed to challenging the refusal to use your particular instructions, you must have objected.[65] In any event, the issue must have been brought to the trial court's attention.[66]

(a) Errors Not Subject to the Preservation Requirement

If you did not object to an error at your trial and the court did not consider the specific issue, an appellate court will usually refuse to consider the error on appeal, but you may still be able to appeal if the error deals with a fundamental aspect of the fairness of your trial. Such errors fall into two categories: errors reviewed "in the interest of justice" and errors that disrupt the "mode of proceedings."

Any unpreserved error may be reviewed in the interest of justice by New York's Appellate Division courts (the intermediate appellate courts).[67] Thus, if something happened that was so unfair that it may have affected your conviction, but it was not objected to or otherwise preserved, you can still argue that the Appellate Division should consider it in the interest of justice. That is, even if the error you wish to appeal is generally subject to the preservation requirement, you may ask an Appellate Division court to consider your appeal.[68] Note that if you did not preserve an issue, an appellate court is not required to review it.[69] preservation requirement is discussed in Part (b) of this Subsection.

---

61. See People v. Hawkins, 11 N.Y.3d 484, 492, 900 N.E.2d 946, 950, 872 N.Y.S.2d 395, 399 (2008) (holding that a motion must be "specifically directed" at the error to preserve it); People v. Dien, 77 N.Y.2d 885, 886, 571 N.E.2d 69, 70, 568 N.Y.S.2d 899, 900 (1991) (holding that "defendant made only a general objection, thus failing to preserve his argument" for appellate review); People v. Rivera, 73 N.Y.2d 941, 942, 537 N.E.2d 618, 618, 540 N.Y.S.2d 233, 233 (1989) (holding that defendant's general objection did not preserve his argument for appellate review). But see People v. Vidal, 26 N.Y.2d 249, 254, 257 N.E.2d 886, 889, 309 N.Y.S.2d 336, 340 (1970) ("if the proffered evidence is inherently incompetent, that is, there appears, without more, no purpose whatever for which it could have been admissible, then a general objection, though overruled, will be deemed to be sufficient").

62. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.05(2) (McKinney 2010) (a question is preserved "if in reponse [sic] to a protest by a party, the [trial] court expressly decided the question raised on appeal"); see People v. Johnson, 144 A.D.2d 490, 491, 534 N.Y.S.2d 207, 209 (2d Dept. 1988) (holding that an issue was preserved even without objection because the trial court expressly decided the question); see generally Preiser, Practice Commentaries, N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.05 (McKinney 2010) (summarizing New York Criminal Procedure Law Section 470.05, which explains when an appeal will be allowed).

63. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.05(2) (McKinney 1994 & Supp. 2010); see also People v. Leisner, 73 N.Y.2d 140, 147, 535 N.E.2d 647, 650, 538 N.Y.S.2d 517, 520 (1989) (holding that a trial court's failure to give the jury the requested jury instruction was an error preserved for appellate review since there was no "clear intent" by the defense to abandon the request).

64. "Instruction" refers to what the judge tells the jury it should or should not consider as well as what questions the jury must answer when it is deciding the verdict in your case.

65. See People v. Narayan, 54 N.Y.2d 106, 112–13, 429 N.E.2d 123, 125, 444 N.Y.S.2d 604, 606 (1981) (holding that where defense requested to speak to his client on the second day of an order disallowing such conversation, but had not so requested on the first day, the request preserved for appeal only the refusal on the second day, not the order itself or its application to the first day). If the trial court grants the instruction that you (or your lawyer) requested but makes a mistake or otherwise gives an instruction different than the instruction that you requested, this error is not preserved for appeal unless you objected to it. See People v. Whalen, 59 N.Y.2d 273, 280, 451 N.E.2d 212, 215, 464 N.Y.S.2d 454, 457 (1983) ("Inasmuch as defendant's request was initially granted and his comments after the charge did not alert the [t]rial [j]udge to the error so as to afford an opportunity to correct himself, defendant must be deemed to have waived any objection to the alibi instruction.").

66. This requirement applies to appeals brought by the prosecution too.

67. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.15(3)(c), (6)(a) (McKinney 2010).

68. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.15(3)(c), (6)(a) (McKinney 2010).

69. Compare People v. Benton, 196 A.D.2d 755, 756, 601 N.Y.S.2d 918, 919 (1st Dept. 1993) (court used its judgment to review an incorrect decision which classified the defendant as a second violent felony offender), with People

The Court of Appeals (the highest court), by contrast, is limited by the New York State Constitution to only review "questions of law,"[70] which generally means that an issue must have been preserved by objection.[71] But errors that disrupt the organization of the court or the mode of proceedings are treated as questions of law even without preservation by objection.[72] Thus, if the error you wish to appeal falls into the limited class of errors that affect the organization of the court or the mode of proceedings, you can appeal even if you did not preserve the error or even if you agreed at trial to accept the error.[73] These errors are considered so fundamental that they are not subject to the preservation requirement at all.

In either situation, successful appeals are generally based on a derailing of trial procedure or a violation of your "fundamental constitutional rights."[74] Errors that can be raised for the first time on appeal include:

(1) You were tried twice for the same offense in violation of your rights against double jeopardy guaranteed by the New York State or U.S. Constitutions[75] (this protection does not apply to rights against double jeopardy provided by statute rather than a constitution[76]);

---

v. Walton, 309 A.D.2d 956, 957, 766 N.Y.S.2d 93, 94 (2d Dept. 2003) (court declined to review defendant's unpreserved claim that he had been wrongly deemed a second violent felony offender). See also People v. Gray, 86 N.Y.2d 10, 19, 652 N.E.2d 919, 921, 629 N.Y.S.2d 173, 175 (1995) (holding that a claim of legal insufficiency of the evidence must be preserved for review as a "question of law," but noting that an intermediate appellate court may decide to review such a claim "in the interest of justice" even if it was not preserved). See generally Preiser, Practice Commentaries, N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.05 (McKinney 2010).

If a court declines to hear your non-preserved claims, one strategy is to include them in an ineffective assistance claim. For guidance on how to make this type of claim, see JLM, Chapter 12, Part B(3).

70. N.Y. Const. art. VI, § 3(a) ("The jurisdiction of the court of appeals shall be limited to the review of questions of law [subject to certain exceptions].").

71. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.05(2) (McKinney 2010) ("For purposes of appeal, a question of law with respect to a ruling or instruction of a criminal court during a trial or proceeding is presented when a protest thereto was registered.").

72. See People v. Kelly, 5 N.Y.3d 116, 119–120, 832 N.E.2d 1179, 1181, 799 N.Y.S.2d 763, 765 (2005) (discussing the state constitutional limitation on the Court of Appeals and the "mode of proceedings" exception, as well as contrasting this exception with the Appellate Division's authority to review "in the interest of justice").

73. See People v. Mehmedi, 69 N.Y.2d 759, 760, 505 N.E.2d 610, 611, 513 N.Y.S.2d 100, 101 (1987) (holding that violation of defendant's right to be present at all material stages of the trial was automatically preserved for appeal, even though defendant did not make an objection at trial and "even though counsel may have consented to the procedure"); People v. Patterson, 39 N.Y.2d 288, 295, 347 N.E.2d 898, 903, 383 N.Y.S.2d 573, 577 (1976), aff'd, 432 U.S. 197, 97 S. Ct. 2319, 53 L. Ed. 2d 281 (1977) ("A defendant in a criminal case cannot waive, or even consent to, error that would affect the organization of the court or the mode of proceedings prescribed by law.").

74. The general rule is that even violations of constitutional rights must be preserved. See Ulster County Ct. v. Allen, 442 U.S. 140, 151 n.10, 99 S. Ct. 2213, 2221, n.10, 60 L. Ed. 2d 777, 788 n.10 (1979) ("[T]he New York Court of Appeals has developed an exception to the State's contemporaneous-objection policy that allows review of unobjected-to errors that affect 'a fundamental constitutional right'") (quoting People v. McLucas, 15 N.Y.2d 167, 172, 256 N.Y.S.2d 799, 204 N.E.2d 846, 848 (1965)); People v. Kelly, 5 N.Y.3d 116, 119–20, 832 N.E.2d 1179, 1181, 799 N.Y.S.2d 763, 765 (2005) ("in a very narrow category of cases, we have recognized so-called 'mode of proceedings' errors that go to the essential validity of the process and are so fundamental that the entire trial is irreparably tainted"); People v. Gray, 86 N.Y.2d 10, 19–22, 652 N.E.2d 919, 921–23, 629 N.Y.S.2d 173, 175–77 (1995) (holding that an objection is necessary for a constitutional error to be reviewed as a matter of law unless the error is among the very narrow class of "mode of proceedings" errors); People v. Voliton, 83 N.Y.2d 192, 195, 630 N.E.2d 641, 643, 608 N.Y.S.2d 945, 947 (1994) (declining to review on appeal a defendant's constitutional challenge to a seizure by the police because the issue was not preserved and did not "impair the essential validity of the criminal proceedings").

75. U.S. Const. amend. V; N.Y. Const. art. I, § 6; see People v. Prescott, 66 N.Y.2d 216, 218, 486 N.E.2d 813, 814, 495 N.Y.S.2d 955, 956 (1985) (holding that a claim of double jeopardy can be raised for the first time on appeal because it is a "fundamental principle of our legal system that a defendant may not be twice placed in jeopardy for the same offense"). However, a claim of double jeopardy cannot be raised on appeal if the circumstances surrounding the defendant's failure to object amounted to a waiver of the right to appeal on double jeopardy grounds, or if the defendant has waived the right to appeal by a waiver agreement. See People v. Michallow, 201 A.D.2d 915, 916, 607 N.Y.S.2d 781, 783 (1994) (noting that constitutional double jeopardy protections are "so fundamental that they are preserved despite the failure to raise them" by objecting, but holding that defendant's active participation was implied consent and thus acted as waiver of her constitutional right against double jeopardy); People v. Michael, 48 N.Y.2d 1, 7, 394 N.E.2d 1134, 1137, 420 N.Y.S.2d 371, 374 (1979) (holding that a defendant implicitly waived the right to challenge his retrial on double jeopardy grounds); People v. Muniz, 91 N.Y.2d 570, 574, 696 N.E.2d 182, 185, 673 N.Y.S.2d 358, 361 (1998) (a claim of constitutional double jeopardy may validly be waived). For a discussion on waiver of the right to appeal, including waiver of the right to appeal a claim of double jeopardy, see Part (B)(2) of this Chapter.

(2) You were deprived of your right to a lawyer;[77]
(3) You were deprived of your right to be present at an important stage of the trial[78] or other important court proceedings;[79]
(4) Your lawyer was not told of the contents of a note the judge received from the jury before the judge answered the jury's questions;[80]
(5) You were deprived of your right to have your trial supervised by a judge;[81] or
(6) Your sentence, or the way in which it was determined, was illegal.[82]

---

76. See People v. Biggs, 1 N.Y.3d 225, 231, 803 N.E.2d 370, 771 N.Y.S.2d 49, 53 (2003) (stating that unlike state and federal constitutional double jeopardy claims, which are reviewable even if not preserved at the trial court level, an unpreserved statutory double jeopardy claim is not reviewable).

77. See People v. Arthur, 22 N.Y.2d 325, 329, 239 N.E.2d 537, 539, 292 N.Y.S.2d 663, 666 (1968) ("The failure to object to the admissions on right to counsel grounds is not fatal since we are concerned with the deprivation of a fundamental constitutional right"); People v. Kinchen, 60 N.Y.2d 772, 773, 457 N.E.2d 786, 787, 469 N.Y.S.2d 680, 681 (1983) ("[A] claimed deprivation of the State constitutional right to counsel may be raised on appeal, notwithstanding that the issue was not preserved by having been specifically raised.").

78. See People v. Mehmedi, 69 N.Y.2d 759, 760, 505 N.E.2d 610, 611, 513 N.Y.S.2d 100, 101 (1987) (affirming reversal of defendant's conviction on the basis that instructions were given to the jury in defendant's absence, even though defendant's trial counsel did not object to defendant being absent); see also People v. Kelly, 11 A.D.3d 133, 142–43, 781 N.Y.S.2d 75, 84 (1st Dept. 2004), aff'd, 5 N.Y.3d 116, 832 N.E.2d 1179, 799 N.Y.S.2d 763 (2005) (acknowledging that a violation of the right of a defendant to be present at the material stages of the trial is preserved for appellate review even without an objection, but finding that defendant's right to be present had not been violated).

79. See People v. Antommarchi, 80 N.Y.2d 247, 250, 604 N.E.2d 95, 97, 590 N.Y.S.2d 33, 35 (1992) (holding that defendant has a right to be present at sidebar questioning of jurors when questioning explores prospective jurors' backgrounds and relates to their ability to weigh the evidence objectively, but not when questioning relates to physical impairment, family obligations, or work commitment); People v. Dokes, 79 N.Y.2d 656, 659, 595 N.E.2d 836, 838, 584 N.Y.S.2d 761, 763 (1992) (finding that a defendant's statutory right to be present at trial includes the right to be present during the selection of the jury, the introduction of evidence, the closing argument of counsel, and the court's charge to the jury); People v. McAdams, 22 A.D.3d 885, 885–86, 802 N.Y.S.2d 531, 532 (3d Dept. 2005) (finding that denial of right to be present at sidebar conferences with potential jurors, including one conference about possible juror bias, constitutes a denial of defendant's right to be present at a material stage of the proceeding and is reversible error on appeal even though defendant did not object at trial). You may, however, waive your right to be present if you knowingly, voluntarily, and intelligently make the waiver. See People v. Williams, 92 N.Y.2d 993, 996, 706 N.E.2d 1187, 1189, 684 N.Y.S.2d 163, 165 (1998) ("The right to be present during sidebar questioning of prospective jurors on matters of bias or prejudice may be waived by a voluntary, knowing, and intelligent choice."); People v. Keen, 94 N.Y.2d 533, 728 N.E.2d 979, 707 N.Y.S.2d 380 (2000) (holding that defendant's waiver of his right to be present for certain court proceedings was effective).

80. See People v. Tabb, 13 N.Y.3d 852, 853, 920 N.E.2d 90, 90, 891 N.Y.S.2d 686, 686 (2009) (reversing conviction because the absence of any record that the judge showed a jury note to the defense was a mode of proceedings error); People v. O'Rama, 78 N.Y.2d 270, 276–80, 579 N.E.2d 189, 192–94, 574 N.Y.S.2d 159, 162–64 (1991) (holding that court's failure to read a jury note to defense counsel before giving the jury a charge was reviewable by Court of Appeals "notwithstanding that defense counsel did not object to the court's procedure until after the supplementary charge had been given"); People v. Kisoon, 23 A.D.3d 18, 22–23, 801 N.Y.S.2d 69, 72 (2d Dept. 2005) (holding court's failure to give defendant's attorney a complete reading of jury's question was preserved for appellate review even without an objection at trial). But see People v. Williams, 38 A.D.3d 429, 430, 833 N.Y.S.2d 29, 30 (1st Dept. 2007) (holding that where judge talked to jury foreperson to tell her he would address her question when defendant, counsel, and jury were all present, this conversation was not significant and would not have required input from defense attorney, and thus that the error was not preserved since not objected to by the defense).

81. See People v. Ahmed, 66 N.Y.2d 307, 311–12, 487 N.E.2d 894, 896–97, 496 N.Y.S.2d 984, 986–87 (1985) (reversing defendant's conviction where trial judge had, with defendant's consent, been absent for part of the jury deliberations, leaving a law clerk to answer two questions from jurors).

82. See People v. Callahan, 80 N.Y.2d 273, 280–81, 604 N.E.2d 108, 112, 590 N.Y.S.2d 46 (1992) (noting that among the "appellate claims that may not be waived" are "challenges to the legality of court-imposed sentences"); People v. Samms, 95 N.Y.2d 52, 55–56, 731 N.E.2d 1118, 1120–21, 710 N.Y.S.2d 310, 312–13 (2000) (discussing which illegal sentence claims can be raised for the first time on appeal). Note, however, that this applies to sentences that are illegal (that is, not allowed by law) and not merely harsh or excessive (but within the legal sentence that the trial court was allowed to impose). See Part D(2) of this Chapter for a discussion of the difference between illegal and excessive sentences. Also, note that a claim that the verdict is against the "weight of the evidence" is a question of law that does not need to be preserved in order to be raised on appeal. See People v. Bleakley, 69 N.Y.2d 490, 493, 508 N.E.2d 672, 674, 515 N.Y.S.2d 761, 762 (1987) (describing "weight of the evidence" analysis); People v. Roman, 217 A.D.2d 431, 431, 629 N.Y.S.2d 744, 745 (1st Dept. 1995) (finding that an appellate claim that the verdict was against the weight of the evidence need not have been raised before the trial court because a trial court has no authority to make a decision on this type of claim).

4. Which Courts Will Consider Your Appeal

If you decide to appeal, you must submit your appeal to the correct court for it to be considered. There are two types of courts to which appeals can be made: (1) an intermediate appellate court[83] or (2) the Court of Appeals of the State of New York, which is the highest state court.[84] In most cases, you will need to file an appeal with an intermediate appellate court before the Court of Appeals will consider hearing your case. If you have been sentenced to death, however, you have the right to appeal directly to the Court of Appeals without having to go through an intermediate appellate court.[85]

Note that there are many intermediate appellate courts, so unless you are appealing directly to the Court of Appeals, you need to figure out which is the right intermediate appellate court for your case. This will depend on where you were convicted.[86] For example, if you were convicted of a felony in a New York supreme court, you must appeal to the appellate division of the department in which you were convicted.[87] Appendix A at the end of this Chapter can help you figure out where to file your appeal.

You will also need to figure out if you need permission to file your appeal. In general, you do not need permission if you are appealing: (1) the trial court's judgment against you,[88] (2) your sentence,[89] or (3) an order granting the District Attorney's motion under Article 440 to set aside your sentence to impose a longer sentence.[90] That is, New York law grants you the right to appeal these decisions to an intermediate appellate court.

For other challenges, however, you may first need to get permission before you file an appeal. For example, if you have already made a motion to vacate your judgment under Section 440.10 of the New York Criminal Penal Law or a motion to set aside your sentence under Section 440.20, and the court has denied your motion, you will need to ask the court for permission to appeal the court's denial.[91] Note that if you need to ask for permission to appeal, this means that a court does not have to consider your appeal, whereas a court must consider your appeal if you have the right to appeal on that issue.

---

83. See generally N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 450.60 (McKinney 2010). An intermediate appellate court means any court that hears appeals other than the Court of Appeals. There are two kinds of intermediate appellate court: the appellate division and the appellate term. For a diagram of New York's courts, see the inside back cover of the JLM.

84. See generally N.Y. Const. art. VI. New York is somewhat unusual in that its highest court is not called the "Supreme Court." (In fact, a "supreme court" is a type of trial court in New York!) For a diagram of New York's courts, see the inside back cover of the JLM.

85. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 450.70(1) (McKinney 2010).

86. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 450.60 (McKinney 2010).

87. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 450.60(1) (McKinney 2010).

88. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 450.10(1) (McKinney 2010). Though a trial court makes many orders and rulings during your trial, you generally cannot appeal these rulings until there is a final judgment. See, e.g., People v. Boyd, 91 A.D.2d 1045, 1046, 458 N.Y.S.2d 643, 644 (2d Dept. 1983) (holding that any objection to an intermediate order denying a motion to suppress evidence is reviewable only on an appeal from judgment); People v. Pollock, 67 A.D.2d 608, 608, 412 N.Y.S.2d 12, 12 (1st Dept. 1979), aff'd, 50 N.Y.2d 547, 407 N.E.2d 472, 429 N.Y.S.2d 628 (1980) (stating no separate appeal is available for an order denying a motion to set aside a verdict).

89. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 450.10(2) (McKinney 2010). Note that the statute says it excludes appeals of allegedly excessive sentences if you agreed to the sentence as part of a plea bargain. But the Court of Appeals decided this part of the statute is unconstitutional because the legislature does not have the power to prevent the appellate division from hearing these appeals. See People v. Pollenz, 67 N.Y.2d 264, 270, 493 N.E.2d 541, 543, 502 N.Y.S.2d 417, 419 (1986) (holding that the legislature could not prohibit the appellate division from hearing appeals based on excessive sentences). Section 450.10(2) of the New York Criminal Procedure Law may still be applicable in cases where the intermediate appellate court is an appellate term. See Preiser, Practice Commentaries, N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 450.10 (McKinney 2010). Note also, though the statute itself may not prevent an appeal of an allegedly excessive sentence, you may have voluntarily waived your right to appeal your sentence or conviction as part of a plea or negotiated sentence. For more information, see Part B(2) of this Chapter.

90. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 450.10(4) (McKinney 2010). For information on Article 440 appeals, see Chapter 20 of the JLM.

91. See N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 450.15 (McKinney 2010). If you obtain permission, you can appeal a sentence that you could not otherwise appeal under Section 450.10(1) and (2) of the New York Criminal Procedure Law. You can also appeal the denial of your Article 440 motion to vacate a judgment or set aside a sentence. See Form B-2 in Appendix B at the end of this Chapter for a sample application for permission to appeal. You may make only one such application, so do so carefully. The procedure for requesting leave to appeal under Section 460.15 varies depending on which intermediate court you are applying to. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.15(2) (McKinney 2010). See generally N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 22, §§ 600.8(d), 670.12(b), 800.3, 1000.13 (2010) (describing these procedures); Preiser, Practice Commentaries, N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.15 (McKinney 2010).

If an intermediate appellate court reviews your case and makes a decision, and you are unsatisfied with the decision, you may ask for permission to appeal the decision to the Court of Appeals. You do not, though, have a right to appeal an appellate court's decision to the Court of Appeals. Note that the Court of Appeals will only consider one application for permission to appeal per case, including applications addressed to a justice of the appellate division.[92] If the Court of Appeals decides to hear your case, it will issue a certificate of leave to appeal.[93] Part F explains this process in more detail.

Finally, keep in mind that filing an appeal is not the only way to challenge your conviction or your sentence. You may be able to file a motion to vacate the judgment against you[94] or a motion to set aside your sentence.[95] Such a motion, called an Article 440 motion, can be filed before, after, or simultaneously with an appeal. A motion differs from an appeal in that an appeal must be based only on matters already on the record—on things that were said in trial court or in papers previously given to the trial court. A motion, by contrast, involves matters not on the record, such as advice your attorney gave you or evidence that was never brought up in court. Thus, when the record from your trial does not contain the necessary facts for a court to decide the issue that you want to raise, you should file an Article 440 motion.[96] For a more detailed description of when you can file an Article 440 motion and which claims you may raise in an Article 440 motion, see Chapter 20 of the JLM.

C. What You Can Ask the Courts to Do Before Your Appeal is Heard

Before an appellate court hears your appeal, you can ask the court system to help you with several things, including getting a lawyer and a transcript of your trial. You can also ask the appellate court to stay your judgment and release you on bail. This Part discusses each of these things in more detail.

1. Getting a Lawyer

You have a constitutional right to a lawyer on direct appeal.[97] This means if you cannot afford a lawyer, the appellate court will upon request appoint a lawyer to represent you at no cost.[98] Your right to a lawyer applies when you or the government appeals a trial court's final judgment. It also applies when you or the government appeals other decisions the trial court made during the proceedings, including decisions about what evidence is allowed, decisions to set aside the jury's verdict, and denials of motions.[99] When you were sentenced, your lawyer at the trial level was supposed to advise you that you can appeal, explain how to appeal and how to get a new lawyer for your appeal, ask you if you wanted to appeal, and, if you did, to file the initial paperwork for you.[100] To get a lawyer for your appeal, you will need to show proof that you do not

---

92. See People v. Liner, 70 N.Y.2d 945, 945, 519 N.E.2d 619, 619, 524 N.Y.S.2d 673, 673 (1988) (dismissing appeal made by defendant's lawyer on ground that court could not hear appeal after defendant had already made pro se application for appeal to the appellate division); People v. Nelson, 55 N.Y.2d 743, 743, 431 N.E.2d 640, 640-41, 447 N.Y.S.2d 155, 156 (1981) (dismissing appellate division's grant of permission to appeal while prior application was pending in Court of Appeals).

93. See N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.20 (McKinney 2010); see also N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 450.90 (McKinney 2010) (providing for taking an appeal after a certificate granting leave to appeal has been issued). If you are appealing an appellate division's order, a judge from the same department of the appellate division may grant you a certificate of leave to appeal before the Court of Appeals. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.20(2)(a) (McKinney 2010).

94. See N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.10 (McKinney 2010).

95. See N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.20 (McKinney 2010).

96. See Preiser, Practice Commentaries, N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.10 (McKinney 2010).

97. Anders v. California, 386 U.S. 738, 741, 87 S. Ct. 1396, 1398; 18 L. Ed. 2d 493, 496 (1967) (holding that an indigent person has the right to appellate representation); Douglas v. California, 372 U.S. 353, 356–357, 83 S. Ct. 814, 815–16; 9 L. Ed. 2d 811, 813-14 (1963) (holding that the 14th Amendment requires states to provide indigent persons representation on their appeals as of right); People v. Garcia, 93 N.Y.2d 42, 46, 710 N.E.2d 247, 249, 687 N.Y.S.2d 601, 603 (1999) ("[O]n a People's appeal, a defendant has the right to appellate counsel of defendant's choice and the right to seek appointment of counsel upon proof of indigency.").

98. Usually the court will appoint a new lawyer on appeal. See People v. Garcia, 93 N.Y.2d 42, 46, 710 N.E.2d 247, 249, 687 N.Y.S.2d 601, 603 (1999) ("[O]n a People's appeal, a defendant has the right to appellate counsel of defendant's choice and the right to seek appointment of counsel upon proof of indigency.") If you want your assigned trial lawyer to continue to represent you, this may be possible depending on the rules of the court to which you are appealing. For example, the First Department's Appellate Division requires that your lawyer obtain your written consent and be a member of the Assigned Counsel Plan panel. N.Y. Ct. Rules § 600.8(g) (McKinney 2010).

99. See N.Y. Ct. Rules § 200.40 (McKinney 2010).

100. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 22, § 606.5(b) (West 2010).

have enough money to hire an attorney and pay the expenses of your appeal.[101] Appendix B provides samples of the papers you should file to make this request.

If you decide that you do not want a lawyer to represent you on appeal, you may be able to prepare your appeal and appear in court on your own, which is called appearing "pro se." Note, however, that you do not have a constitutional right to represent yourself on appeal—the court may choose to allow it or not.[102]

2. Requesting a Transcript

You can ask the trial court to provide you with a free transcript of your trial. In addition, you may ask for permission to appeal on "the original record," which you should do, assuming your appeal will be based on something that happened at trial or a hearing. If the trial court grants this request, it will give the appellate court and the prosecution copies of the record.[103]

3. Requesting a Stay

After filing and serving notice of your appeal, you can request a judge to "stay" your judgment. A stay delays or interrupts the execution of your sentence until after your appeal. If you are appealing a death sentence, or a judgment including a death sentence, the execution of your sentence is automatically stayed by filing a notice of appeal.[104] Note that you may file only one stay application after filing a notice of appeal, so prepare your application carefully.[105]

If you decide to apply for a stay, you will need to figure out which court you should ask for the stay. This will depend on which court tried and sentenced you and which court will hear your appeal. For example, if you are appealing to an appellate division from a judgment of a supreme court, you may apply for a stay from any appellate division or supreme court judge in the county where the judgment was entered. See Appendix A at the end of this Chapter for help selecting the right court.

4. Requesting Release from Jail

While you are waiting for your appeal to be heard, you can request a judge to release you on bail or on your own "recognizance." To be released on your own recognizance means that a court will permit you to leave jail, on the condition that you will appear at court whenever your attendance is required, and that you will comply with the orders and processes of the court.[106]

You do not have a right to bail or recognizance while waiting for appeal.[107] But, depending on your offense, a judge may be able to grant your request. In many cases, a judge has discretion to determine whether to release you. That is, the law does not require the judge to keep you in custody or release you, and you may not appeal the judge's decision on this matter.[108] But, in other cases, a judge does not have this discretion. This means the law determines whether you must be held in custody.[109] For example, if you were

---

101. See N.Y. Ct. Rules § 671.5 (McKinney 2010); see generally People v. West, 100 N.Y.2d 23, 789 N.E.2d 615, 759 N.Y.S.2d 437 (2003) (holding that "requiring a defendant to apply for legal representation and providing instructions on how to do so" is constitutionally acceptable without providing counsel to assist in that application).

102. See Martinez v. Court of Appeal of California, 528 U.S. 152, 163, 120 S. Ct. 684, 692, 145 L. Ed. 2d 597, 607, (2000) ("Courts, of course, may still exercise their discretion to allow a lay person to proceed pro se.").

103. See Appendix B-3 of this Chapter for sample papers to request free trial transcripts and copies of the record.

104. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.40(1) (McKinney 2010).

105. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.50(3) (McKinney 2010).

106. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law §§ 460.50(1), (2)(a) (McKinney 2010). To determine which court can grant your application for a stay, see N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.50(2) (McKinney 2010).

107. See, e.g., Gold v. Shapiro, 62 A.D.2d 62, 65, 403 N.Y.S.2d 906, 907 (2d Dept. 1978), aff'd, 45 N.Y.2d 849, 382 N.E.2d 767, 410 N.Y.S.2d 68 (1978) ("[T]here is no constitutional right to bail after conviction."). You do have the constitutional right that the court's discretion not be exercised unreasonably or arbitrarily, and that bail not be excessive. U.S. Const. amend. VIII; N.Y. Const. art. 1, § 5; see also Finetti v. Harris, 609 F.2d 594, 599–602 (2d Cir. 1979) ("Only if there is no rational basis in the record to support the denial of bail [pending appeal] may there be a violation of a state prisoner's constitutional rights.").

108. See generally Preiser, Practice Commentaries, N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.50 (McKinney 2010); see also United States ex rel. Siegal v. Follette, 290 F. Supp. 636, 638 (S.D.N.Y. 1968) (stating that New York law "permits [a judge] to grant or deny bail in his discretion after weighing the facts he considers significant"). Although an order denying bail is not appealable, it may be reviewed on habeas corpus grounds. For more information, see JLM, Chapter 21, "State Habeas Corpus."

109. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law §§ 510.30(1), 530.10 (McKinney 2010) (explaining when a court is required to order bail or recognizance and when it may do so at its discretion). Bail must not violate the 8th Amendment restrictions on convicted of a Class A felony, a judge may not release you because the law requires you to be held in custody.[110]

If your offense does not automatically require you to be held in custody, a judge will consider the following factors to decide whether to grant your request for release:[111]

(1) Your character, reputation, habits, and mental condition;
(2) Your employment and financial resources;
(3) Your family ties and length of residence in the community;
(4) Your criminal record, if any;
(5) Your previous record as a juvenile delinquent or youth offender, if any;
(6) Your previous record of responding to court appearances when required; and, above all,
(7) The likelihood that the judgment against you will be reversed on appeal.

A judge may refuse to release you on bail if he or she thinks an appellate court is unlikely to reverse your judgment.[112] Therefore, when you submit a request for bail, you should include a brief statement that explains your appellate claims and demonstrates that there is a reasonable possibility of reversal.

In general, you should petition for bail if there is any chance it will be granted. If you are released on bail, you will avoid the difficulty of preparing an appeal while in jail. Keep in mind, though, that the amount of bail may be more than you can afford, and that you will not receive credit for time served during the time that you are out on bail.

Note also that if you are released on bail while your appeal is pending, the order releasing you will expire if your appeal is not "perfected" within 120 days after the order is given.[113] Generally, to perfect an appeal you must deliver a specified number of copies of the trial record and your brief to the appellate court and the opposing party.[114] If your appeal is not perfected within 120 days, you should request a time extension to file an appeal, explicitly asking the court to extend the 120-day period.[115]

D. What You Can Ask the Court to Do in Your Appeal

In an appeal, you ask the appellate court to correct the trial court's judgment. The appellate court will make one of three decisions. First, it might "reverse" the trial court's judgment, which means it declares the entire judgment invalid. Second, it might "affirm" the trial court's judgment, which means it upholds the entire judgment. Finally, it might "modify" the trial court's judgment, which means it reverses part of the judgment and affirms another part of the judgment.[116] If the appellate court reverses or modifies the judgment, it will also take some action to correct the judgment, such as reducing your sentence or dismissing your indictment.[117]

Sometimes the appellate court might determine that it does not have enough information to decide your appeal right away. If this happens, the appellate court may suspend your appeal and send the matter to a lower court for additional proceedings.[118] This means that the appellate court will not decide whether to affirm, modify, or reverse the judgment until the lower court has held another hearing.

---

excessive bail. See People ex rel. Calloway v. Skinner, 33 N.Y.2d 23, 33, 300 N.E.2d 716, 720, 347 N.Y.S.2d 178, 184 (1973) ("Our State Constitution does not decree a right to bail, but merely proscribes 'excessive bail.'") (citing N.Y. Const., art. I, § 5; People ex rel. Shapiro v. Keeper of City Prison, 290 N.Y. 393, 398, 49 N.E.2d 498, 500).

110. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 530.50 (McKinney 2010).

111. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 510.30(2) (McKinney 2010).

112. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 510.30(2)(b) (McKinney 2010).

113. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.50(4) (McKinney 2010). Under this statute, an order granting release will expire if your appeal has "not been brought to argument in or submitted to the intermediate appellate court" within 120 days. Courts have interpreted this statute to mean that such an order will expire if your appeal is not perfected within 120 days. See, e.g., People v. Higgins, 177 A.D.2d 1052, 578 N.Y.S.2d 70 (4th Dept. 1991) (stating that defendant "bore the burden of surrendering himself after the 120-day stay expired before his appeal was perfected").

114. See Part E(3) of this Chapter for information on perfecting your appeal.

115. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.50(4) (McKinney 2010). The intermediate appellate court itself must grant the extension, regardless of who issued the order. See Preiser, Practice Commentaries, N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.50 (McKinney 2010).

116. See N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.15(2) (McKinney 2010).

117. See N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.20 (McKinney 2010).

118. This process is called "remitting." See, e.g., People v. Hasenflue, 24 A.D.3d 1017, 1018, 806 N.Y.S.2d 766, 768 (3d Dept. 2005) (withholding decision and sending matter back to trial court to look at the defendant's competency to stand trial); People v. Britt, 231 A.D.2d 581, 583, 647 N.Y.S.2d 527, 529 (2d Dept. 1996) (sending matter back for trial

An intermediate appellate court must base its decision to reverse or modify the trial court's judgment on one of three things (or some combination of them): the law, the facts, or the "interest of justice."[119]

1. Appealing Your Conviction

If you appeal your conviction "on the law," you will argue that legal errors in the trial deprived you of a fair trial or that the evidence used to convict you was legally insufficient. If you appeal your conviction "on the facts," you will argue that your conviction was against the weight of the evidence.

(a) "On the Law"

You can ask an appellate court to reverse the judgment "on the law" on the basis of: (1) legal errors that deprived you of a fair trial, or (2) legally insufficient evidence to support your conviction.[120]

You may seek reversal "on the law" on grounds of legal errors that deprived you of a fair trial. In order to seek a reversal "on the law" due to legal errors, you must have properly preserved these errors for review, unless the error you are appealing is one that is not subject to the preservation requirement, as explained above in Section B(3). Some examples of categories of legal errors that may support reversal include: (1) erroneous evidentiary rulings,[121] (2) prosecutor's misconduct,[122] (3) improper jury instructions,[123] or (4) improper influence on the jury.[124] Note that there are many other potential legal errors, and spotting them requires thorough familiarity with relevant bodies of law, including evidence law, criminal procedure, and state and federal constitutional law. It is not possible for this Chapter or the JLM to discuss every conceivable error. This is a big reason that you should get a lawyer for your appeal: even if you do legal research beyond the JLM, you will likely not be able to learn enough law in time to notice errors and present them to the court as well as an appellate lawyer could. See Section C(1) above for how to get a lawyer.

If the appellate court does reverse your judgment because of legal errors, the court must order a new trial on the counts of the original indictment.[125] You cannot be retried, however, on (1) counts dismissed on appeal or in a post-judgment order, or (2) counts or offenses of which you were effectively acquitted. For example, if you were charged with first-degree murder, but convicted only of second-degree murder, you will be considered acquitted of first-degree murder and can be retried only for second-degree murder.[126]

You may also seek reversal "on the law" on grounds of legal insufficiency. Legal insufficiency means that the evidence presented by the prosecution was not sufficient to prove all the necessary elements of the crime of which you were convicted. For example, in order to convict a defendant of driving while intoxicated, the prosecution must prove both that the defendant was drunk and that he was driving a car. If the prosecution court to make clear whether it followed the proper three-step procedure to find out if peremptory strikes, which are used to keep certain people off of a jury, were used to keep people off the jury because of their race).

---

119. See N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.15(3) (McKinney 2010).

120. Note, however, that "on the law" reversals need not be limited to these two instances. See N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.15(4) (McKinney 2010) (noting "on the law" determinations "include, but are not limited to," these bases).

121. See, e.g., People v. Boughton, 70 N.Y.2d 854, 854–55, 517 N.E.2d 1340, 1341, 523 N.Y.S.2d 454, 455 (1987) (reversing conviction because trial judge wrongly allowed prosecutor to introduce confession without giving sufficient notice); People v. Reilly, 19 A.D.3d 736, 737–38, 796 N.Y.S.2d 726, 727–28 (3d Dept. 2005) (ordering new trial because judge allowed evidence that was very prejudicial but not very probative, that is, not useful for deciding fairly).

122. See, e.g., People v. Collins, 12 A.D.3d 33, 784 N.Y.S.2d 489 (1st Dept. 2004) (ordering new trial because prosecutor's concluding remarks deprived defendant of a fair trial).

123. See, e.g., Griffin v. California, 380 U.S. 609, 612–13, 85 S. Ct. 1229, 1231–32, 14 L. Ed. 2d 106 (1965) (reversing conviction because judge improperly commented during jury instructions on defendant's decision not to testify); People v. Colon, 143 A.D.2d 105, 105, 531 N.Y.S.2d 355, 356 (2d Dept. 1988) (ordering reversal because court's instructions were excessively lengthy and improperly drew attention to defendant's decision not to testify).

124. See Parker v. Gladden, 385 U.S. 363, 364–65, 87 S. Ct. 468, 470, 17 L. Ed. 2d 420, 422–23 (1966) (reversing conviction where bailiff made statements to jurors including that defendant was a wicked and guilty person); People v. Stanley, 87 N.Y.2d 1000, 1001–02, 665 N.E.2d 190, 191, 642 N.Y.S.2d 620, 621 (1996) (reversing conviction because jurors visited crime scene to evaluate a witness' credibility and so became "unsworn witnesses" themselves); People v. Brown, 48 N.Y.2d 388, 395, 399 N.E.2d 51, 54, 423 N.Y.S.2d 461, 464 (1979) (reversing because juror conducted experiment to evaluate testimony and told jury she "could see that it was plausible").

125. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.20(1) (McKinney 2010).

126. See, e.g., People v. Graham, 36 N.Y.2d 633, 639, 331 N.E.2d 673, 677, 370 N.Y.S.2d 888, 894 (1975) (holding that defendant could not be retried for murder in the second degree after the appellate division reduced the conviction to manslaughter in the first degree).

did not introduce any evidence that the defendant was driving a car, the evidence would be insufficient.[127] In determining whether the evidence presented is legally sufficient, the appellate court will weigh whether any valid reasoning or inferences could lead a rational person to the conclusion that the jury reached, viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the prosecution.[128] Note that showing that evidence is legally insufficient is different from showing a verdict to be against the weight of the evidence, which is discussed in Subsection (b) below.

Like any legal error, a claim of legal insufficiency must be preserved for it to be reviewed on appeal[129] or else it may only be reviewed "in the interest of justice" by the Appellate Division.[130] (See Part B(3) of this Chapter for more on the preservation requirement.) If a court grants your appeal by finding legal insufficiency, the court must dismiss those counts of your indictment that the court determines to be supported by legally insufficient evidence.[131] The Double Jeopardy Clause of the Fifth Amendment[132] prohibits the prosecution from retrying any count that has been dismissed on the grounds of legal insufficiency.[133] Thus, if the appellate court reverses every count in your indictment for legal insufficiency, you will be set free. By contrast, if the reversal is due to an error in the trial, and not because of legal insufficiency, there is no issue of double jeopardy, and you may be retried for the same crime.[134]

An appellate court may modify a judgment by dismissing one or more counts based on legal insufficiency, but affirming other counts for which there was legally sufficient evidence. In this situation, the appellate court has two alternatives. It can either affirm the sentence that the trial court imposed for the counts that were not dismissed[135] or it can "remand" (send the case back to the trial court) for re-sentencing.[136]

An appellate court may also modify the judgment to change your conviction to a "lesser included offense."[137] A lesser included offense exists when no one could possibly commit the greater crime without, by the same conduct, committing the lesser offense.[138] Petit larceny, for example, is a lesser included offense of third-degree robbery because petit larceny is stealing property[139] and third-degree robbery is stealing property through the use of force[140] or threat of force.[141] Since both offenses require you to steal property,

---

127. See generally Preiser, Practice Commentaries, N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.15 (McKinney 2010).

128. See People v. Taylor, 94 N.Y.2d 910, 911–12, 729 N.E.2d 337, 337–38, 707 N.Y.S.2d 618, 618–19 (2000) (stating that "whether inferences of guilt could be rationally drawn" from the evidence is the standard for evaluating sufficiency of the evidence).

129. When the prosecution rested, the defense should have moved for a dismissal and stated exactly why the prosecution's case was legally insufficient. See People v. Hawkins, 11 N.Y.3d 484, 493, 900 N.E.2d 946, 951, 872 N.Y.S.2d 395, 400 (2008) (holding that a general objection that prosecution failed to prove its case does not preserve the issue of whether evidence was legally sufficient to support a particular element).

130. In fact, some courts have said that evaluating legal insufficiency is "necessarily" part of weighing evidence, which Appellate Division courts routinely do. Thus, a claim of legal insufficiency may succeed, even if the issue was not preserved, if the claim is presented as the verdict being against the weight of the evidence. See, e.g., People v. Scott, 67 A.D.3d 1052, 1054, 889 N.Y.S.2d 279, 281 (3d Dept. 2009) ("we will necessarily consider [legal insufficiency] in reviewing the weight of the evidence"); People v. Loomis, 56 A.D.3d 1046, 1046–47, 867 N.Y.S.2d 772, 773 (3d Dept. 2008) (considering sufficiency of evidence, although not preserved, while considering weight of evidence).

131. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law §§ 470.20(2), (3) (McKinney 2010).

132. U.S. Const. amend. V ("nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb").

133. See Burks v. United States, 437 U.S. 1, 18, 98 S. Ct. 2141, 2150–51, 57 L. Ed. 2d 1, 14 (1978) (holding that the Double Jeopardy Clause requires a judgment of acquittal if a court finds the evidence is legally insufficient).

134. See Lockhart v. Nelson, 488 U.S. 33, 40–42, 109 S. Ct. 285, 291, 10 L. Ed. 2d 265, 273–74 (1988) (holding that the Double Jeopardy Clause does not prohibit retrying a case overturned for improper sentencing unless the sum of the evidence was insufficient to sustain a guilty verdict); see generally Preiser, Practice Commentaries, N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.20 (McKinney 1994).

135. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.20(3) (McKinney 2010).

136. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.20(3) (McKinney 2010).

137. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.15(2)(a) (McKinney 2010).

138. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 1.20(37) (McKinney 2010).

139. N.Y. Penal Law § 155.25 (McKinney 2010).

140. N.Y. Penal Law § 160.05 (McKinney 2010).

141. See People v. Rychel, 284 A.D.2d 662, 663, 728 N.Y.S.2d 211, 213 (3d Dept. 2001) (holding evidence legally sufficient for third-degree robbery where evidence established that force was threatened); People v. Smith, 278 A.D. 2d 75, 75, 718 N.Y.S.2d 305, 305 (1st Dept. 2000) (holding evidence legally sufficient for third-degree robbery where evidence established that force was threatened through "relatively polite behavior").

you cannot commit third-degree robbery without also committing petit larceny. Thus, if an appellate court concludes that the prosecutor failed to prove that you used force (making your robbery conviction legally insufficient), the appellate court may change your conviction to petit larceny without holding a new trial, provided the prosecutor did prove that you stole property. If the appellate court determines that the evidence proved a lesser included offense, the court will send you back to the trial court for re-sentencing,[142] unless you have already served the maximum sentence possible for the lesser crime.[143]

(b) "On the Facts"

You can ask an appellate court for reversal "on the facts" by arguing your guilty verdict was against the weight of the evidence.[144] In evaluating the weight of the evidence, an intermediate appellate court must determine whether, based on the evidence, a jury could reasonably have acquitted you. If the appellate court concludes a jury could reasonably have acquitted you, the court must weigh the evidence submitted at trial to be sure the jury gave the evidence the weight it deserved. If the court decides the jury did not give the evidence proper weight, the court may set aside the jury's guilty verdict.[145] For instance, as you recall from the example above, evidence of drunk driving is legally insufficient if the prosecution did not introduce any evidence that the defendant was driving a car. If a prosecution witness had said she saw the defendant driving a car, but this was the only evidence and there were strong reasons for not believing the witness, then the verdict would likely be against the weight of the evidence—there is some evidence, but the jury weighed it wrong.

Only the Appellate Division can review a weight of the evidence claim. In doing so, it sits as "a thirteenth juror."[146] In contrast, neither the trial court nor the Court of Appeals can review weight of the evidence or make its own decision about whether a witness was credible.[147] A "weight of the evidence" claim does not need to have been preserved at trial,[148] but you should raise it clearly on appeal to be sure that the Appellate Division will consider it.

If the appellate court sets aside your verdict as "against the weight of the trial evidence," the appellate court must dismiss the charge against you.[149] According to New York law, you cannot be prosecuted again on the same charge.[150] Thus, if the court sets aside all of the charges against you as "against the weight of the evidence," the court will order you released from custody. If one or more, but not all, of the charges against you are dismissed as against the weight of the evidence, the court may modify the judgment as described above in Part D(1)(a).

---

142. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.20(4) (McKinney 2010).

143. See People v. McBride, 248 A.D.2d 641, 642, 669 N.Y.S.2d 952, 952 (2d Dept. 1998) (holding that there is no need to remand for re-sentencing since defendant had already served the maximum sentence for the reduced offense).

144. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.15(5) (McKinney 2010).

145. See People v. Bleakley, 69 N.Y.2d 490, 495, 508 N.E.2d 672, 674–75, 515 N.Y.S.2d 761, 763 (1987) (holding that the appellate division cannot find that a jury verdict is supported by sufficient evidence without first conducting a factual analysis of whether the jury determination was against the weight of the evidence).

146. People v. Danielson, 9 N.Y.3d 342, 348–49, 880 N.E.2d 1, 5, 849 N.Y.S.2d 480, 484 (2007).

147. There is a rare exception where a witness is "incredible as a matter of law." See, e.g., People v. Quinones, 61 A.D.2d 765, 765, 402 N.Y.S.2d 196, 197 (1st Dept. 1978) (rejecting as a matter of law police officer testimony that strongly appeared to have been fabricated to conceal constitutional violations).

148. See People v. Danielson, 9 N.Y.3d 342, 349–50, 880 N.E.2d 1, 5–6, 849 N.Y.S.2d 480, 484–85 (2007) (noting that a court must consider whether there is evidence that the elements of a crime have been satisfied when weighing the sufficiency of the evidence, even without the issue having been preserved at trial).

149. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.20(5) (McKinney 2010).

150. The prosecution cannot retry any count that was reversed because it was against the weight of the evidence. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law. § 470.20(5) (McKinney 2010). This is based solely upon New York statute and not on constitutional protection from double jeopardy. See Tibbs v. Florida, 457 U.S. 31, 32, 102 S. Ct. 2211, 2213, 72 L. Ed. 2d 652, 655 (1982) (holding that the Double Jeopardy Clause of the Constitution does not bar the retrial of an accused when an earlier conviction was reversed based on the weight, as opposed to the sufficiency, of the evidence); People v. Romero, 7 N.Y.3d 633, 644 n.2, 859 N.E.2d 902, 909 n.2, 826 N.Y.S.2d 163, 170 (2006) (explaining that, in New York, "our Legislature has erected a statutory bar preventing a defendant from being retried after a conviction is reversed based on the weight of the evidence").

2. Appealing Your Sentence

You can appeal your sentence on the ground that the sentence is either: (1) unlawful or (2) unduly harsh or excessive.[151]

(a) Unlawful Sentence

A sentence is invalid as a matter of law when its terms are not authorized by statute or when the sentencing court considers inappropriate factors, like whether you decided to exercise certain rights. For example, a sentence of thirty years for first-degree assault, a class B violent felony, is unlawful, since the maximum penalty allowed for a class B violent felony is twenty-five years.[152] A sentence may also be unlawful if it is based on an erroneous determination that you had a prior conviction,[153] or if your sentences were improperly ordered to run consecutively (one after the other), instead of concurrently (at the same time).[154] A sentence is also illegal if it constitutes "cruel and unusual" punishment.[155]

(b) Unduly Harsh or Excessive Sentence

A sentence is excessive if the sentence is allowed by the law, but is unfair based on the facts of your case.[156] An appellate court may take into account, for example, the circumstances of your crime, the probability of your rehabilitation, your background, and your criminal record.[157] You may appeal your sentence as unduly harsh if anything over the minimum legal sentence was imposed. A court may also consider whether the sentences you received are to run consecutively (one after the other) or concurrently (at the same time). Even if the appellate court rejects all of your arguments regarding errors that occurred during your trial, it may use its "in the interest of justice" discretion to order your sentences to run concurrently instead of consecutively.[158]

---

151. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 450.30(1) (McKinney 2010). You may be able to appeal your sentence on the ground that the sentence is unduly harsh or excessive even if you negotiated your sentence in exchange for a guilty plea. See People v. Pollenz, 67 N.Y.2d 264, 268, 493 N.E.2d 541, 542, 502 N.Y.S.2d 417, 418 (1986) (holding that Art. Six, § 4(k) of the New York Constitution prohibits the legislature from limiting the appellate division's jurisidicion by prohibiting appeals on the issue of excessive sentences); see also N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.15(6)(b) (McKinney 2010) (providing that an appellate court may use its discretion to reverse or modify a sentence as unduly harsh or severe). See Part B(2) of this Chapter for a discussion of possible waiver of your right to appeal the issue of whether your sentence was unduly harsh or excessive.

152. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.02(3)(a) (McKinney 2010).

153. See People ex rel. Furia v. Zelker, 70 Misc. 2d 167, 169, 332 N.Y.S.2d 310, 311 (Sup. Ct. Dutchess County 1971) (finding that where defendant's 1959 conviction had been set aside before he was convicted on this offense in 1966, the fact that he was convicted again in 1970 for the 1959 crime did not make him a "multiple felony offender" in 1966); People v. Foster, 57 N.Y.S.2d 737, 738 (Sup. Ct. Cayuga County 1945) (finding a sentence unlawful because it had been increased to reflect a prior felony, although no prior felony had been included in the indictment).

154. See, e.g., N.Y. Penal Law § 70.25(2)(g) (McKinney 2010) (requiring that certain sentences run concurrently). The Constitution does not prevent a trial judge (instead of a jury) from deciding whether facts exist that require a consecutive sentence. Oregon v. Ice, 555 U.S. 160, 129 S. Ct. 711, 714–15, 172 L. Ed. 2d 517, 522 (2009) (holding that Oregon's system—which, like New York's, generally requires concurrent sentences for multiple convictions at the same time unless certain factors exists—is constitutional although judges rather than juries decide whether those factors exist).

155. See U.S. Const. amend. VIII; People v. Diaz, 179 Misc. 2d 946, 956–57, 686 N.Y.S.2d 595, 601–02 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County 1999) (holding that defendant's sentence of 15 years to life was "grossly disproportionate" as applied to him and therefore constituted "cruel and unusual punishment," and re-sentencing defendant to 10 years to life).

156. When an appellate court decides whether a sentence is excessive or unduly harsh, it is said to be exercising its "in the interest of justice" jurisdiction. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.15(6)(b) (McKinney 2010). See Part B(3)(a) of this Chapter for a discussion of "in the interest of justice" jurisdiction.

157. See, e.g., People v. Bankowski, 204 A.D.2d 802, 803, 611 N.Y.S.2d 712, 713B14 (3d Dept. 1994) (holding that the harshest available sentence for manslaughter and drunk driving was not excessive where the defendant had a prior conviction for drunk driving); People v. Pugh, 194 A.D.2d 863, 865, 599 N.Y.S.2d 317, 318 (3d Dept. 1993) (holding that the defendant's full and intentional participation in brutally violent crimes made the sentence appropriate, even though the defendant was young and did not have any previous criminal record).

158. See, e.g., People v. Evans, 212 A.D.2d 626, 627, 623 N.Y.S.2d 4, 6 (2d Dept. 1995) (modifying a sentence in which the defendant would serve four terms of "25 years to life" consecutively to a sentence in which the defendant could serve the four terms concurrently); People v. Quinitchett, 210 A.D.2d 438, 439, 620 N.Y.S.2d 430, 431 (2d Dept. 1994) (modifying a sentence in which the defendant would serve three terms of "25 years to life" consecutively to a sentence in which the defendant could serve the three terms concurrently).

An intermediate appellate court may substitute its own discretion for that of the trial court in reviewing and modifying your sentence.[159] If an intermediate appellate court decides to change your sentence because it is unduly harsh or excessive, then the court itself must impose some lawful lesser sentence.[160] If this happens, the court changes only your sentence and the rest of the judgment (your conviction) is otherwise affirmed.[161]

In a death sentence appeal, the Court of Appeals must focus upon the individual circumstances of your case in determining whether your sentence is unjust.[162] Under New York law, the Court of Appeals is required to consider the potential influence of passion or prejudice (including race-based prejudice) upon your sentence, the penalty imposed in similar cases, and the weight of the evidence in support of your sentence.[163] An appellate court has three options when it reviews a death penalty sentence: (1) it can affirm the death sentence, (2) it can remand the case for re-sentencing with the possibility of the death sentence, or (3) it can remand the case for re-sentencing without the possibility of a death sentence.[164]

Although these appellate procedures for death penalty cases are still valid, there is currently no constitutionally valid death penalty statute on the books in New York.[165] This means that there will not be any death penalty appeals in New York in the near future.

3. Types of Errors

When appealing your conviction (see Part D(1)) or your sentence (see Part D(2)), you argue that the trial court allowed errors to take place. Some errors are considered so serious that they are always enough to justify the reversal of your judgment without needing to prove how it was that they harmed you. Other errors have the potential to be serious enough to warrant reversal, but they do not necessarily justify reversal. The court analyzes such errors under the "harmless error test." The court decides an error is harmless if it believes you would have received the same conviction and/or sentence even if the error had not occurred. The court will not reverse or modify a judgment based on a harmless error.

Note that to appeal on the basis of most of these errors, even those that are always considered harmful when your appeal is evaluated, you must have preserved the error by objecting at trial. Some errors are not subject to this requirement, however. For information about the preservation requirement, see Part B(3).

(a) Errors That Are Always "Harmful"

Some errors are considered so harmful that their occurrence means you were denied a fair trial and are entitled to a new one. These errors have such a significant effect that they are themselves enough to justify reversal of your conviction.[166] For example, errors in which the court misstates the prosecution's burden of proof on an issue should result in reversal.[167] Other examples of errors justifying reversal include:

---

159. See People v. Delgado, 80 N.Y.2d 780, 783, 599 N.E.2d 675, 676, 587 N.Y.S.2d 271, 272 (1992) (noting that "[a]n intermediate appellate court has broad, plenary power to modify a sentence that is unduly harsh or severe" and that the court could exercise this power "if the interest of justice warrants, without deference to the sentencing court"); People v. Wiggins, 24 A.D.3d 263, 263, 806 N.Y.S.2d 496, 297 (1st Dept. 2005) (reducing sentence on appeal as a matter of discretion in the interest of justice); see also N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.15(6)(b) (McKinney 2010). But see People v. Hoyle, 211 A.D.2d 973, 975, 621 N.Y.S.2d 756, 759 (3d Dept. 1995) (refusing to modify the sentence because the lower court did not abuse its discretion in sentencing defendant).

160. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.20(6) (McKinney 2010).

161. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.15(2)(c) (McKinney 2010).

162. See Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 195, 96 S. Ct. 2909, 2936, 49 L. Ed. 859, 887 (1976) (observing that concerns that a court might impose the death penalty in an "arbitrary and capricious manner" are "best met by a system [in] which the sentencing authority is apprised of the information relevant to the imposition of sentence and provided with standards to guide its use of the information").

163. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.30(3) (McKinney 2010).

164. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.30(5) (McKinney 2010).

165. See People v. LaValle, 3 N.Y.3d 88, 99, 817 N.E.2d 341, 344, 783 N.Y.S.2d, 485, 488 (2004) (holding that the current New York death penalty statute is unconstitutional); see also People v. Taylor, 9 N.Y.3d 129, 155–56, 878 N.E.2d 969, 984, 848 N.Y.S.2d 554 (2007) (vacating the sentence of the last prisoner on death row in New York).

166. See generally Preiser, Practice Commentaries, N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.05 (McKinney 2010).

167. See People v. McLaughlin, 80 N.Y.2d 466, 472, 606 N.E.2d 1357, 1360, 591 N.Y.S.2d 966, 969 (1992) (reversing convictions on counts for which the judge gave an erroneous charge to the jury).

(1) You were deprived of your right to counsel,[168] including if you were denied your right to a lawyer of your choosing,[169] or if you were represented only by a person pretending to be a lawyer;[170]
(2) You represented yourself at trial but the court failed to inform you of the dangers of proceeding without a lawyer;[171]
(3) You were denied your right to represent yourself;[172]
(4) Your judge was biased;[173]
(5) The judge gave an incorrect instruction about reasonable doubt to the jury, in violation of your Fifth and Sixth Amendment rights;[174]
(6) The judge gave an instruction to the jury that defined two alternative reasons for conviction, one which was legally erroneous, and the appellate court now cannot say with absolute certainty that the jury based its verdict on legally correct reason;[175]
(7) You were denied your right to be present at certain stages of the trial;[176]
(8) The prosecutor wrongly excluded potential jurors on the basis of their race or sex;[177]

---

168. See Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335, 339–43, 83 S. Ct. 792, 794–96, 9 L. Ed. 2d 799, 802–04, (1963) (reversing conviction because defendant was not appointed counsel); People v. Hilliard, 73 N.Y.2d 584, 586–87, 540 N.E.2d 702, 542 N.Y.S.2d 507, 507–08 (1989) (reversing conviction because trial court did not allow defendant to contact his attorney for thirty days prior to arraignment, and stating that it doesn't matter whether this affected the outcome). In contrast to denial of effective assistance of counsel at trial, harmless error analysis is applicable to denial of effective counsel at a pre-indictment preliminary hearing. See People v. Wicks, 76 N.Y.2d 128, 133–34, 556 N.E.2d 409, 411–12, 556 N.Y.S.2d 970, 972–73 (1990) (holding that the deprivation of a defendant's right to counsel at a hearing to determine whether the defendant could be held over for action by the grand jury is subject to harmless error analysis); People v. Wardlaw, 18 A.D.3d 106, 112, 794 N.Y.S.2d 524, 529 (4th Dept. 2005) (holding that the deprivation of a defendant's right to counsel at a pretrial suppression hearing is subject to constitutional harmless error analysis).

169. See Powell v. Alabama, 287 U.S. 45, 53, 53 S. Ct. 55, 58, 77 L. Ed. 158, 162 (1932) (reversing conviction because, among other reasons, defendants were appointed lawyers before being given an opportunity to hire their own); People v. Knowles, 88 N.Y.2d 763, 767, 673 N.E.2d 902, 905, 650 N.Y.S.2d 617, 620 (1996) (overturning conviction because second appointed lawyer was not permitted to take part in defense trial); People v. Arroyave, 49 N.Y.2d 264, 270–71, 401 N.E.2d 393, 396–97, 425 N.Y.S.2d 282, 285–86 (1980) (modifying judgment because, among other reasons, a letter from a potential lawyer for the defendant was not delivered to the defendant for five months).

170. See People v. Felder, 47 N.Y.2d 287, 294–96, 391 N.E.2d 1274, 1277–78, 418 N.Y.S.2d 295, 298–99 (1979) (reversing because defendant had been represented by a non-lawyer pretending to be a lawyer because such conviction "must be set aside without regard to whether [defendant] was individually prejudiced by such representation"). However, not every instance in which a person who is not licensed to practice law participates as a lawyer for the defendant will require automatic reversal. See People v. Jacobs, 6 N.Y.3d 188, 190, 844 N.E.2d 1126, 1127, 811 N.Y.S.2d 604, 605 (2005) (holding that where one of defendant's two-person defense team was a non-lawyer pretending to be a lawyer, reversal was not appropriate unless defendant was actually harmed); People v. Kieser, 79 N.Y.2d 936, 937, 591 N.E.2d 1174, 582 N.Y.S.2d 988, 988 (1992) (holding that where defendant is represented by a lawyer who is temporarily not entitled to practice law for some "technical" reason, such as failure to pay bar dues, reversal is not appropriate unless defendant was harmed).

171. See People v. Arroyo, 98 N.Y.2d 101, 103–04, 772 N.E.2d 1154, 1156, 745 N.Y.S.2d 796, 798 (2002) (reversing a conviction because the trial court allowed defendant to represent himself without adequate inquiry into defendant's understanding of the choice).

172. See Faretta v. California, 422 U.S. 806, 833–34, 95 S. Ct. 2525, 2540–41, 45 L. Ed. 2d 562, 580–81 (1975) (holding that refusal to let a "literate, competent, and understanding" defendant represent himself violated the 6th and 14th Amendments). However, the U.S. Supreme Court has held that a court has the discretion to deny the request if the defendant is found to lack competence to represent himself, and it can force an incompetent defendant to accept the aid of a lawyer. Indiana v. Edwards, 128 S. Ct. 2379, 2388, 171 L. Ed. 2d 345, 357 (2008) ("the Constitution permits States to insist upon representation by counsel for those competent enough to stand trial … but who still suffer from severe mental illness to the point where they are not competent to conduct trial proceedings by themselves").

173. See Tumey v. Ohio, 273 U.S. 510, 523, 47 S. Ct. 437, 441, 71 L. Ed. 749, 754 (1927) (holding that trial under a judge with a personal interest in conviction violated defendant's 14th Amendment rights).

174. See Sullivan v. Louisiana, 508 U.S. 275, 278, 113 S. Ct. 2078, 2081, 124 L. Ed. 2d 182, 188 (1993) (holding that constitutionally-deficient reasonable doubt instruction required reversal).

175. See United States v. Joseph, 542 F.3d 13, 18 (2d Cir. 2008) (reversing because erroneous jury instruction presented the possibility that jury had convicted on an improper basis); People v. Martinez, 83 N.Y.2d 26, 32, 628 N.E.2d 1320, 1323, 607 N.Y.S.2d 610, 613 (1993) (reversing because judge told the jury it could return a guilty verdict based on either of two theories, one of which was illegal, and the jury did not say which theory it used to reach the guilty verdict).

176. See, e.g., People v. Antommarchi, 80 N.Y.2d 247, 250, 604 N.E.2d 95, 97, 590 N.Y.S.2d 33, 35 (1992) (reversing because defendant was not present at bench conferences with jury candidates); People v. Dokes, 79 N.Y.2d 656, 661, 595 N.E.2d 836, 839–40, 584 N.Y.S.2d 761, 764–65 (1992) (reversing because defendant was not present at hearing about impeaching him with prior acts).

(9) A juror was improperly removed from the jury;[178]
(10) Your judge was absent during part of your trial;[179]
(11) During the selection of jurors, your judge improperly denied your claim that a juror should not be included in the jury, and this refusal was based on the judge's incorrect conclusion that you or your lawyer were discriminating on the basis of race or gender;[180] or
(12) During the selection of jurors, your judge improperly denied your claim that a juror should not be included because the juror expressed doubt about his or her ability to decide the case fairly, and you or your lawyer eventually used up all of your challenges to the jury composition.[181]

Note that the question of whether the harmless error test applies (as opposed to automatic reversal), and what standard to apply, are issues evolving on both the state and federal levels.[182]

(b) Errors That May be "Harmless"

If the error that occurred in your proceedings was not necessarily enough to warrant reversal of your judgment, the court will subject the error to the harmless error test. Once the court decides that the error occurred, it must decide if the error harmed you. In general, if the court finds your conviction (or plea) and your sentence would have been the same even if the error had not occurred, then it will find the error was harmless. The specific test that New York appellate courts apply to determine whether an error is harmless depends on whether the error is a constitutional or non-constitutional error.

A non-constitutional legal error does not violate rights guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution or the New York State Constitution. Rather, these types of errors generally violate rights guaranteed by state statutes or common law. A non-constitutional legal error is harmful if (1) there was not overwhelming proof of your guilt at trial (apart from any wrongly admitted evidence) and (2) there is a "significant probability" that the jury would have acquitted you had it not been for the error.[183]

For example, the trial judge may not improperly examine a witness (for instance, by asking a witness questions in a way that conveys to the jury an impression that the judge does not find the witness to be credible).[184] If the appellate court holds that the trial judge did indeed improperly examine a witness, it will use the harmless error test to determine if your judgment should be modified or reversed. In general, the 177. See Batson v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 79, 84, 106 S. Ct. 1712, 1716, 90 L. Ed. 2d. 69 (1986) (holding that challenging potential jurors on the basis of race violates the defendant's equal protection rights). The 14th Amendment prohibits discrimination in jury selection on the basis of gender as well as race. See J.E.B. v. Alabama, 511 U.S. 127, 129, 114 S. Ct. 1419, 1421, 128 L. Ed. 2d 89, 97 (1994) (stating that gender discrimination by the state violates Equal Protection Clause); see also Snyder v. Louisiana, 552 U.S. 472, 128 S. Ct. 1203, 170 L. Ed. 2d 175 (2008) (granting a new trial because the prosecutor had improperly excluded black jurors in a case where the defendant was black, and noting that a close examination of why the prosecutor excluded jurors was necessary where racial motives were not acknowledged). The law no longer requires that you be a member of the same group as the wrongfully excluded jurors for the error to be considered fundamental. Powers v. Ohio, 499 U.S. 400, 416, 111 S. Ct. 1364, 1374, 113 L. Ed. 2d 411, 429 (1991) (reversing conviction of white defendant because black jurors were improperly not selected for the jury).

---

178. See, e.g., People v. Jones, 210 A.D.2d 430, 431, 620 N.Y.S.2d 124, 125 (2d Dept. 1994) (reversing conviction because trial court did not conduct proper inquiry before discharging a juror, and noting that such an error is not subject to harmless error analysis).

179. See People v. Ahmed, 66 N.Y.2d 307, 311, 487 N.E. 2d 894, 896, 496 N.Y.S.2d 984, 986 (1985) (reversing conviction because absence of judge during jury deliberations violated defendant's right to jury trial).

180. See People v. Richie, 217 A.D.2d 84, 89, 635 N.Y.S.2d 263, 267 (2d Dept. 1995) (reversing conviction because trial court had used wrong standard to evaluate whether defendant's challenges to juror selection were based on race or gender).

181. See People v. Johnson, 94 N.Y.2d 600, 614–15, 730 N.E.2d 932, 940, 709 N.Y.S.2d 134, 142 (2000) (reversing conviction because trial court failed to either excuse or demand unconditional assurances from jurors who openly admitted that they doubted whether they could be fair in the case).

182. For example, in 1991, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that the harmless error test applies to the admission of coerced confessions. Arizona v. Fulminante, 499 U.S. 279, 312, 111 S. Ct. 1246, 1266, 113 L. Ed. 2d 302, 333 (1991). This was a change in the previous standard, in which admission of a coerced confession was always considered harmful. Payne v. Arkansas, 356 U.S. 560, 568, 78 S. Ct. 844, 850, 2 L. Ed. 2d 975, 981 (1958).

183. See People v. Ayala, 75 N.Y.2d 422, 431, 553 N.E.2d 960, 964, 554 N.Y.S.2d 412, 416 (1990) ("[T]he standard for nonconstitutional error, which is governed solely by State law, requires reversal if the properly admitted evidence was not 'overwhelming' and there is a 'significant probability that the jury would have acquitted the defendant had it not been for the error or errors which occurred.'") (citation omitted).

184. See People v. Mendez, 225 A.D.2d 1051, 1051–52, 639 N.Y.S.2d 219, 219–20 (4th Dept. 1996) (granting defendant a new trial because the trial judge skeptically questioned a defense witness).

stronger the evidence against you, the more likely a court will find a non-constitutional error harmless (and therefore affirm the judgment against you).

A constitutional error is a legal error that violates rights guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution or the New York State Constitution. Appellate courts apply a standard that is more favorable to the defendant when reviewing constitutional errors than they do when reviewing statutory errors. In general, a constitutional error is harmful unless there is no reasonable possibility that the error might have contributed to your conviction (as in the error is harmless beyond a reasonable doubt).[185]

E. Preparing Your Papers for Your Appeal

1. What and Where to File

This Part will help you determine what papers you need to file and how to file them.

If you have a right to appeal and are appealing "as a matter of right,"[186] you must file two copies of a written notice of appeal with the clerk of the court in which you were sentenced.[187] You must also serve a copy of your notice of appeal upon the District Attorney of the county where your trial court is located.[188] The notice of appeal should state the following information: (1) your name; (2) your desire to appeal; (3) the court to which you plan to appeal; (4) a description of the judgment, sentence, or order you wish to appeal; and (5) your indictment number or your docket number if your proceedings occurred in the criminal court.[189] If your notice of appeal contains mistakes in the description of the judgment, sentence, or order to be appealed, the appellate court may, in the interest of justice, excuse your mistakes and treat your notice as valid.[190] However, you should try to make your legal papers as correct as possible.

If you are challenging a decision for which there is no right to appeal without permission—for example a trial court's denial of your Article 440.10 or Article 440.20 motion—you must first seek permission to appeal. To do this, you must file an application for a certificate granting leave (permission) to appeal in the intermediate appellate court.[191] If you do not file the application and simply appeal without permission, the court will not consider your appeal, and by the time the problem comes to light it might be too late to get permission. If your application is granted, the court will issue you a certificate granting leave (permission) to appeal. You must file both this certificate and a notice of appeal with your trial court within fifteen days.[192] If the appeal is from a local criminal court and a court stenographer did not record your proceedings, you may submit an affidavit of errors in place of the notice of appeal. See Part F for more information on how to appeal to the Court of Appeals.

In either case, once you have filed a notice of appeal, you should order copies of the trial transcript from the court reporter. You will need copies of the transcript to "perfect your appeal."[193] If you cannot afford the transcripts, you may request that the appellate court give you a free transcript, or request to appeal on the 185. See Chapman v. California, 386 U.S. 18, 24, 87 S. Ct. 824, 828, 17 L. Ed. 2d 705, 710–11 (1967) (noting that on appeal the prosecution must "prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the error complained of did not contribute to the verdict obtained" for a conviction to be sustained despite a constitutional error); see also People v. Ayala, 75 N.Y.2d 422, 431, 553 N.E.2d 960, 964, 554 N.Y.S.2d 412, 416 (1990) ("Constitutional error … must lead to reversal unless there is no reasonable possibility that the error might have contributed to the conviction."). The harmless error test for constitutional errors in habeas corpus proceedings is different than the standard in direct appeals. See JLM, Chapter 13 on federal habeas corpus proceedings and JLM, Chapter 21 on New York State habeas corpus proceedings.

---

186. See Part B(4) of this Chapter, which explains when you have a right to appeal without asking permission.

187. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.10(1)(a) (McKinney 2010). This section applies to appeals as a matter of right to an intermediate appellate court or directly to the Court of Appeals. If there is no clerk of the trial court, you must file one copy of your notice of appeal with the judge of the trial court and a second copy with the clerk of the appellate court to which you plan to appeal. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.10(2) (McKinney 2010). If a transcript of your trial was not made because there was no court reporter at your trial, you may file an affidavit of errors with the trial court instead of a notice of appeal. If you file a notice of appeal, you must also file an affidavit of errors within thirty days of filing your notice of appeal. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.10(3) (McKinney 2010). See Part E(2) of this Chapter for deadlines for filing.

188. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.10(1)(b), (3)(b) (McKinney 2010).

189. See Forms B-1, B-2, and B-3 in Appendix B of this Chapter.

190. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.10(6) (McKinney 2010).

191. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.10(4)(a) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2008) (describing procedure for seeking leave to appeal). Also see Appendix B, Form B-2, for a sample application for a certificate granting leave to appeal. Note, each appellate division has its own rules for applying for a certificate. See JLM, Chapter 20 for information on 440 motions.

192. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.10(4)(b) (McKinney 2010).

193. See Part E(3) of this Chapter on how to perfect an appeal.

original record. To do either, you must send the appellate court: (1) a letter stating your request, and (2) an affidavit (a sworn statement witnessed by a notary public) setting forth your request, the amount and sources of your income, and facts showing that you are unable to pay the relevant expenses.[194] This affidavit to proceed as a poor person on appeal, or for partial poor person relief, is called an in forma pauperis affidavit. You should also send copies of the letter and affidavit to the district attorney of the county where your trial court is located. Appendix B of this Chapter explains exactly how to fill out poor person's papers. The same procedure can be used to ask the court to appoint a lawyer for you if you cannot afford one.

2. When to File

If your appeal is a matter of right, you must file and serve your notice of appeal within thirty days of your sentencing date.[195] If you want to appeal, you should file even if you are unsure of the details of your appeal. Filing does not force you to complete your appeal, but if you do not file you will probably lose your right to appeal when the deadline passes. You can get a lawyer to help you with the rest of your appeal. See Part C(1) above for how to get a lawyer.

If your appeal is a matter of right and you are appealing directly to the Court of Appeals, the deadline for filing your notice of appeal is the same as for an appeal as of right to an intermediate appellate court. Also, you must file and serve your jurisdictional statement within ten days of filing your notice of appeal.

If you must seek permission to appeal, an application for a certificate granting leave to appeal to an intermediate appellate court must be filed within thirty days after you or your lawyer at trial received a copy of the order or judgment you wish to appeal.[196] If the court gives you a certificate granting permission to appeal, you must file the certificate and notice of appeal within fifteen days from the time the court created the certificate.[197]

3. How to Perfect Your Appeal

In addition to filing a notice of appeal, you must "perfect" your appeal.[198] Generally, to perfect an appeal you must deliver a specified number of copies of the trial record and your brief to the appellate court and to the opposing party. The exact steps necessary to perfect an appeal vary in each appellate court. For details, you should consult the rules of the appellate division or appellate term to which you are appealing.[199]

4. How to Prepare for Your Appeal

Once you have properly taken your appeal, you or your lawyer will need to review the record and begin to prepare a brief. The brief is a memorandum of law, which is a paper that informs the appellate court of the facts of your case, identifies the trial court's errors, and explains why these errors require the appellate court to reverse or modify your conviction or sentence.[200] The brief is "served upon" or officially given to the 194. Under the rules of the four appellate divisions, the procedure for seeking relief as a poor person in criminal appeals is the same as that in civil cases. For an explanation of this procedure, see N.Y. Civ. Proc. Law §1101 (McKinney 2010). See also Anders v. California, 386 U.S. 738, 741, 87 S. Ct. 1396, 1398, 18 L. Ed. 2d 493, 496 (1967) (holding that an indigent person has the right to appellate representation equal to that of a nonindigent person); Douglas v California, 372 U.S. 353, 356–57, 83 S. Ct. 814. 815–16, 9 L. Ed. 2d 811, 813-814 (1963) (holding that the 14th Amendment requires states to provide indigent persons representation on their appeals as of right); People v. Garcia, 93 N.Y.2d 42, 46, 710 N.E.2d 247, 249, 687 N.Y.S.2d 601, 603 (1999) ("On a People's appeal, a defendant has the right to appellate counsel of defendant's choice and the right to seek appointment of counsel upon proof of indigency.").

---

195. See N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.10(1)(a) (McKinney 2010). If you file the notice, but fail to serve a copy on the district attorney within the 30-day period, the appellate court may allow you to serve the notice after the deadline, provided you have a good reason. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.10(6) (McKinney 2010).

196. See N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.10(4)(a) (McKinney 2010).

197. See N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.10(4)(b) (McKinney 2010).

198. See generally N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.70 (McKinney 2010).

199. See Appendix A of this Chapter to determine where you should direct your appeal. See generally N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 22, §§ 600.8, 600.11 (1st Dept. App. Div.) (2010); N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 22, §§ 640.3, 640.5, 640.6 (1st Dept. App. Term) (2010); N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 22, §§ 670.8, 670.10-a, 670.10-b, 670.10-c, 670.12 (2d Dept. App. Div.) (2010); N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 22, §§ 731.1, 731.2, 731.4 (2d Dept. App. Term) (2010); N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 22, § 800.14 (3d Dept. App. Div.) (2010); N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 22, § 1000.4 (4th Dept. App. Div.) (2010).

200. Part C of Chapter 6 of the JLM describes briefs and other legal papers in more detail.

court and your opponent (the respondent). If your lawyer prepares the brief, you should read a copy to be sure it contains all the arguments that you believe the appeals court should consider in deciding your case.

If you have been assigned a lawyer, you do not have the right to insist the lawyer include arguments in the brief that your lawyer believes should not be presented to the appellate court.[201] You may, however, request permission to file a pro se supplemental brief (an additional brief of your own) to raise issues your lawyer left out of the original brief. The appellate court will likely (but not necessarily) accept your pro se brief, provided you request to file it in a timely fashion, usually by writing for permission to the appellate court where your appeal will be heard, and provided you specifically identify in your request the issues that you intend to raise in the pro se brief. You must request this permission in writing within thirty days of the date your attorney files the brief. You should make sure your request is not too late or too general.[202] The rules for when you must file your request can be found in the rules of the court to which you are appealing.[203]

In response to your brief, your opponent (the prosecution) will almost certainly file a brief that argues that the trial court's judgment should stand. After the appellate court receives your opponent's brief, it will set a calendar date for oral argument.[204] After your opponent files his brief, you also have the right to file a reply brief within a few days. A reply brief gives you the opportunity to point out factual errors in the respondent's brief, or to mention relevant court decisions that have been issued since you submitted your initial brief. You are not allowed to raise new issues in your reply.[205]

In an oral argument, your lawyer has about fifteen minutes to discuss the merits of your appeal directly with the appellate court.[206] The purpose of the oral argument is to focus the judges' attention on important points of your case and answer any questions or doubts they have about your claims. You should discuss with your lawyer any particular points you would like emphasized in oral argument, since it is your lawyer's final chance to persuade the appellate court to rule in your favor. In some cases, you and your lawyer may decide it is best not to argue your case orally. For example, your lawyer may believe an oral argument will add little to the arguments presented in your written brief. Keep in mind there are risks involved in such a decision. In some cases, the court may consider waiving the oral argument as an admission that your case is weak. An oral argument also provides an important chance to clarify and expand on issues raised in your brief. You and your lawyer should consider the matter carefully before making a decision on how to proceed.

Appellate court judges will decide your case after they read the briefs and hear the oral argument. The court may or may not explain in writing the reasons for its decision.[207] Keep in mind that the whole process—from the time you file a notice of your appeal to the date the judges hand down their decision—is very time consuming and may be subject to delays. Despite the strict time limits for starting an appeal, the entire process can takes several years to conclude. Each step may take several months—including gathering the necessary documents, preparing the brief, obtaining the respondent's brief, getting a calendar date, and, finally, waiting for a decision.

Throughout your appeal, you should take an active role even if you have a lawyer. This includes communicating frequently with your lawyer, suggesting issues for your lawyer to include in your briefs, and requesting copies of documents relating to your appeal.

---

201. See Jones v. Barnes, 463 U.S. 745, 751, 103 S. Ct. 3308, 3312, 77 L. Ed. 2d 987, 993 (1983) (holding that a defendant does not have the right to insist that his lawyer raise every possible argument that has some merit); People v. White, 73 N.Y.2d 468, 479, 539 N.E.2d 577, 583, 541 N.Y.S.2d 749, 755 (1989) (same).

202. See People v. White, 73 N.Y.2d 468, 479, 539 N.E.2d 577, 583, 541 N.Y.S.2d 749, 755 (1989) (holding that while it would be "better practice" for appellate courts to accept timely supplemental pro se briefs, the denial of an application to accept a pro se brief is within the court's discretion).

203. In the second department of the appellate division, for example, if you want to file a pro se brief, you must do so within 30 days from the date your attorney filed her brief. For more information about the rules of the court to which you are applying, see JLM, Chapter 5.

204. Some appeals may take place without oral argument. Check the rules of the appellate court to which your appeal is directed. See N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.80 (McKinney 2010).

205. See Jonathan M. Purver & Lawrence E. Taylor, Handling Criminal Appeals § 128.12 506 (Supp. 2004).

206. The rules of the individual appellate courts set the amount of time allowed for oral argument. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.80 (McKinney 2010).

207. The practice of affirming a decision without a written explanation (known as "summary affirmance") has been criticized by lawyers, but appellate courts sometimes do it nonetheless.

F. Continuing Your Appeal

If your first appeal is not successful, you may be able to pursue your claim in a higher court or by an alternative procedure. This Part discusses how you can take an appeal that has been denied by an intermediate appellate court to the Court of Appeals. It also discusses alternatives that you may consider if the Court of Appeals denies your appeal.

If the intermediate appellate court denies your appeal, you may continue pursuing your claim by appealing the intermediate appellate court's order to New York's highest court, the Court of Appeals. You can appeal an intermediate appellate court decision affirming or modifying a trial court decision against you only if: (1) the decision is based on the law alone or (2) the remedy ordered is illegal. Unlike the intermediate appellate courts, the Court of Appeals cannot vacate a conviction solely on the basis that the evidence does not sufficiently support the facts. In addition, the Court of Appeals cannot review a determination made by an intermediate appellate court based upon its "in the interest of justice" discretion.[208]

Keep in mind that you do not have a right to appeal an intermediate appellate court decision to the Court of Appeals; you may do so only if you obtain a certificate granting leave (permission) to appeal.[209] You must apply for this certificate within thirty days after you are served with the appellate court order that you wish to appeal.[210] THIS TIME LIMIT IS EXTREMELY IMPORTANT. You may seek permission to continue your appeal if the appellate court affirms the trial court judgment, sentence, or order against you, or if you are dissatisfied with the appellate court's modification of the judgment, sentence, or order.[211]

When you are appealing from an unrecorded proceeding, you must file either a notice of appeal or an affidavit of errors within thirty days after the judgment, sentence, or order was entered or imposed.[212] If you first file a notice of appeal, you have thirty days from the date of such filing to file an affidavit of errors.[213] You must serve a copy of the affidavit of errors to the District Attorney within three days of filing the affidavit with the court.[214]

The specific procedure for obtaining permission to appeal depends upon the particular intermediate appellate court from which you are appealing. If you are appealing from any court other than the appellate division, you must seek permission from a judge of the Court of Appeals. However, if you are appealing from a decision of the appellate division, you may request a certificate of leave to appeal from either a judge of the Court of Appeals or a justice of the appellate division in the same department that handed down the decision that you are appealing.[215] Many appellate division judges are hesitant to grant leave to appeal, however, because they know that the Court of Appeals likes to decide for itself what cases it will hear. You can file only one application, so you may wish to seek a certificate directly from the Court of Appeals. However, if an appellate division judge dissented from the majority in your case, you may decide to apply to that judge for a certificate of leave to appeal instead of going directly to a judge of the Court of Appeals.

To request a certificate from a judge of the Court of Appeals, you must send an application to the clerk of the Court of Appeals. The application should be addressed to the chief judge, who will appoint one judge of the Court of Appeals to consider your application.[216] Your application must include copies of the briefs and the appellate division decision along with a letter explaining why your case needs further review. You must also include relevant transcripts that demonstrate that your appeal is based on a question of law (which usually requires that you preserved the right to appeal when the error was made).[217] Further review might be considered appropriate if your case presents a novel issue of law (that is, an issue that the court has never decided before), if the lower court did not follow established precedent, or if the appellate divisions differ in

208. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 450.90 (McKinney 2010).

209. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 450.90 (McKinney 2010). Form B-2 in Appendix B is a sample application for a certificate granting leave to appeal.

210. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.10(5)(a) (McKinney 2010).

211. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 450.90(1) (McKinney 2010).

212. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.10(3)(a) (McKinney 2010).

213. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.10(3)(a) (McKinney 2010).

214. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.10(3)(b) (McKinney 2010).

215. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.20(2) (McKinney 2010). If you are appealing from the decision of an intermediate appellate court other than the appellate division (i.e. the appellate term), you must request the certificate from a judge of the Court of Appeals. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.20(2)(b) (McKinney 2010).

216. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.20(3)(b) (McKinney 2010).

217. See generally N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 22, § 500.20 (2010).

their approaches to the issue involved. For an example of an application to the Court of Appeals, see Form B-2 in Appendix B at the end of this Chapter. If the judge grants your application and issues a certificate, your appeal is taken. You may proceed to prepare your brief and oral argument.

A jurisdictional statement explains the issues to be raised and gives legal authority to assert that the Court of Appeals has the power to hear your claim. You will need to file two copies of the jurisdictional statement with the clerk of the Court of Appeals, and serve one copy on the District Attorney of the county where your trial court is located.[218]

If the Court of Appeals denies permission to appeal, you may request reconsideration of your application by filing an application for reconsideration with the clerk of the court within thirty days of the issuance of the certificate denying permission. Your application will be reassigned to the same judge who originally ruled on it.[219] Be aware that very few of cases heard at the intermediate level reach the Court of Appeals.[220]

If the Court of Appeals hears your appeal, it will affirm, reverse, or modify the intermediate appellate court order[221] and take or direct some appropriate corrective action.[222]

If the Court of Appeals does not hear your appeal, or if it hears your appeal but rules against you, you may still have other opportunities for relief. First, if your case involves issues of federal law,[223] you can apply for a writ of certiorari. This would allow you a final appeal on those federal issues to the United States Supreme Court, but the Supreme Court very rarely grants such permission. Second, in certain circumstances, you may seek to challenge your conviction or sentence through a different post-conviction proceeding, such as an Article 440 motion, a petition for state habeas corpus, or a petition for federal habeas corpus. See JLM, Chapters 20, 21, and 13, respectively, for explanations of these remedies.

G. Three Options for Dealing with Ineffective Assistance of Appellate Counsel

When you appeal your conviction, you have the right to effective assistance from your appellate lawyer.[224] This Part addresses what to do if you believe that your appointed attorney is not raising all the issues that should be pursued on appeal or is otherwise failing to represent you appropriately. Note that you also have a right to receive effective assistance from your trial lawyer, and if you did not receive effective assistance at your trial this could itself be grounds for appeal. For information about effective assistance from your trial lawyer, see JLM, Chapter 12.

This Part will discuss three particular strategies that may be valuable for you: (1) responding to an Anders brief submitted by your attorney, (2) filing supplemental briefs along with those of your attorney, and (3) applying for a writ of error coram nobis for relief from ineffective counsel.

1. Anders Briefs

You may encounter a situation in which the attorney appointed for your criminal appeal asks the court for permission to withdraw from your case by filing a motion known as an "Anders brief." An attorney files an Anders brief if she concludes, after reviewing your case, that there are no non-frivolous claims you could make on appeal. But, in the brief, your attorney must also identify, by references to the trial record, any issues with at least arguable merit, supported by legal authority.[225] After reviewing the Anders brief, a court

---

218. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 22, §§ 500.20, 500.21 (2010). Proof of service on the district attorney must also be filed with the clerk of the Court of Appeals.

219. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 22, § 500.20(2)(iii)(d) (2010).

220. In 2008, the Court of Appeals decided 53 criminal appeals. See Chief Administrator of the Courts, State of N.Y., The 31st Annual Report of the Chief Administrator of the Courts (2008), available at http://www.courts.state.ny.us/reports/annual/pdfs/UCSAnnualReport2008.pdf; see also Preiser, Practice Commentaries, N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 450.90 (McKinney 2010) (discussing appellant's hurdles to reaching appeals court).

221. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.35(3) (McKinney 2010).

222. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.40 (McKinney 2010).

223. Violations of the U.S. Constitution present issues of federal law. See 28 U.S.C. § 1331 (2006).

224. Evitts v. Lucey, 469 U.S. 387, 395–96, 105 S. Ct. 830, 835–36, 83 L. Ed. 2d 821, 829 (1985) (holding that fairness of the appellate process requires that a defendant receive more than nominal representation from counsel); Douglas v. California, 372 U.S. 353, 357, 83 S. Ct. 814, 816, 9 L. Ed. 2d 811, 815–16 (1963) (holding state requirement that defendants make preliminary showing of merit prior to assignment of appellate counsel was unconstitutional).

225. Anders v. California, 386 U.S. 738, 744, 87 S. Ct. 1396, 1400, 18 L. Ed. 2d 493, 498 (1967). But see Smith v. Robbins, 528 U.S. 259, 272, 120 S. Ct 746, 756–57, 145 L. Ed. 2d 756, 771–72 (2000) (holding that states may adopt procedures that differ from that described in Anders, so long as the underlying goal of adequate appellate review required by the 14th Amendment is met). However, the "procedures adopted by New York courts closely parallel and are will grant your attorney's request to withdraw from handling your appeal if it determines your attorney has fulfilled the obligation to thoroughly examine the trial record for arguably appealable issues. If the court agrees there are no non-frivolous claims you could make on appeal, it will affirm the judgment from which you seek to appeal and dismiss your appeal. But, if the court concludes there are non-frivolous claims on which you could base an appeal (whether or not it thinks you will actually prevail), the court will appoint you a new attorney to help with your appeal.[226]

The fact that your attorney files an Anders brief does not in itself constitute ineffective assistance of counsel.[227] However, your attorney's duty in the matter of your appeal is to be an "active advocate," and her Anders brief must be more than a simple assertion that there are no non-frivolous claims that you could make on appeal. It must show that your attorney made an independent and conscientious examination of the record for the purposes of your appeal.[228] You may disagree with your attorney over whether certain issues of your case should be appealed. Your attorney must raise all issues that, in his or her professional judgment, have arguable merit, but he or she is not obliged to raise every non-frivolous issue you request.[229]

If you believe that there are non-frivolous issues that should be pursued on appeal, but your attorney refuses to do so and instead files an Anders brief, you will generally have the opportunity to file a pro se supplemental brief on any issues you believe to be meritorious (deserving consideration by the court).[230] You should refer to the rules of the court to which you are appealing to determine whether you must first apply for permission to submit your brief and whether there are any criteria the court may have set out for the format of your brief. Your attorney is required to inform you of the fact that he has filed an Anders brief that will likely result in an affirmation of your conviction, and he must also inform you of your right to file a pro se supplemental brief.[231] Your attorney must also provide you with a copy of the brief.[232]

You should file a supplemental brief or else you may waive other rights unrelated to your direct appeal. If you don't file your own brief in response to your attorney's Anders brief, you could be prevented from successfully pursuing habeas relief on issues that could have been raised on appeal, including ineffective assistance of counsel. For example, to obtain federal habeas relief, a petitioner must exhaust state remedies and show his constitutional rights were violated.[233] If you do not raise issues in a pro se brief, a court may find you did not exhaust state remedies and bar you from bringing a federal habeas petition.[234] Further, clearly modeled upon the procedure set forth by the Supreme Court in Anders." People v. Stokes, 95 N.Y.2d 633, 637, 744 N.E.2d 1153, 1155, 722 N.Y.2d 217, 219 (2001) (describing the procedures for Anders briefs that New York courts have adopted and holding that the Anders brief filed by assigned counsel was insufficient because it did not adequately advocate available non-frivolous arguments on defendant's behalf).

---

226. Anders v. California, 386 U.S. 738, 744, 87 S. Ct. 1396, 1400, 18 L. Ed. 2d 493, 498 (1967) (describing appointed attorneys' duties to handle appeals); see also People v. Stokes, 95 N.Y.2d 633, 637, 744 N.E.2d 1153, 1155, 722 N.Y.2d 217, 219 (2001) (describing procedures New York courts have adopted for Anders briefs and holding Anders brief filed by assigned counsel was insufficient because it did not adequately present available non-frivolous arguments).

227. McCoy v. Court of Appeals of Wisconsin, 486 U.S. 429, 444, 108 S. Ct. 1895, 1905, 100 L. Ed. 2d 440, 456–57 (1988) (upholding constitutionality of a state requirement that when counsel filed a no-merit brief, he must include an explanation of why an issue lacked merit); see also Jorge v. United States, 818 F. Supp. 55, 57 (S.D.N.Y. 1993) (holding the "filing of an Anders brief does not in itself constitute ineffective assistance of counsel" and defendant must show that "appellate counsel's performance was unreasonably deficient" in order to prove ineffective assistance of counsel).

228. Anders v. California, 386 U.S. 738, 744, 87 S. Ct. 1386, 1400, 18 L. Ed. 2d. 493, 498 (1967).

229. Jones v. Barnes, 463 U.S. 745, 751–54, 103 S. Ct. 3308, 3312–14, 77 L. Ed. 2d 987, 993–95 (1983) (holding appellate counsel fulfilled duty of representing client to the best of his ability even though counsel did not raise every non-frivolous issue).

230. United States v. Gomez-Perez, 215 F.3d 315, 320 (2d Cir. 2000) (stating that "[i]f counsel subsequently determines that an Anders brief is appropriate and thereafter files such a brief, this Court must … afford the defendant an opportunity to raise pro se any issues he feels merit discussion.") (citing Anders v. California, 386 U.S. 738, 744, 87 S. Ct. 1396, 1400, 18 L. Ed. 2d 493, 498 (1967)).

231. United States v. Gomez-Perez, 215 F.3d 315, 321 n.2 (2d Cir. 2000) (stating that an attorney should "adhere to standard practice by including with his Anders brief an affidavit certifying" that he has informed his client of the filing of the brief, which will likely result in the affirmance of the client's conviction).

232. Anders v. California, 386 U.S. 738, 744, 87 S. Ct. 1396, 1400, 18 L. Ed. 2d 493, 498 (1967) (stating that "[a] copy of counsel's brief should be furnished" to the defendant).

233. See JLM, Chapter 13, "Federal Habeas Corpus," for more information on federal habeas and exhaustion.

234. See Jorge v. United States, 818 F. Supp. 55, 56 (S.D.N.Y. 1993) (stating that where "a defendant has failed to raise a claim on direct appeal, the claim is barred … unless the petitioner can demonstrate 'cause' for the default of normal appellate procedure and actual 'prejudice' from the alleged violation on which the claim is based.") (citing Campino v. United States, 968 F.2d 187 (2d Cir. 1992)); see also Jones v. Vacco, 126 F.3d 408, 413 (2d Cir. 1997) ("It is where your attorney has submitted an Anders brief rejecting issues in your supplemental brief as frivolous, New York courts may assign new counsel for your appeal.[235]

Finally, note that Anders is only binding law in federal court.[236] That being said, citing Anders in state appeals is persuasive since state courts must follow an Anders-like analysis to ensure that your Fourteenth Amendment rights are upheld and since New York's procedures "closely parallel" Anders.[237]

2. Filing Supplemental Briefs

Though you do not have an absolute right to file briefs to supplement the arguments made by your appeals attorney in his or her brief, many appellate courts allow you to do so.[238] You should first apply to the court to which you are appealing for permission to file. Permission will usually be granted if you request permission within thirty days of the date your appeals attorney has filed his or her brief AND you specifically identify the issues you intend to raise in the pro se brief. You should consult the specific Department's rules and regulations for what your request should include.[239] It is important to follow the timeliness and specificity requirements, because if you do not, the court will likely deny permission to file.

3. Applying for Writ of Error Coram Nobis

If you want to challenge an appellate court's affirmation of your conviction on the grounds that you received ineffective assistance of appellate counsel, you may do so by filing a writ of error coram nobis.[240] A writ of error coram nobis is a way to challenge a conviction as infirm (faulty) and to petition the court to correct errors of a fundamental nature. For example, you can use a writ of error coram nobis if your appellate lawyer failed to prosecute an appeal or raise all issues effectively.[241]

You should direct the petition to the appellate division "where the allegedly deficient representation occurred."[242] Note, if you wish to challenge your conviction's affirmance because of ineffective assistance of appellate counsel in New York state, the only way to do so is a writ of error coram nobis; you may not challenge it with a motion to vacate judgment under New York Criminal Procedure Law Section 440.10.[243] If your petition is granted, the appellate court may allow you (most likely with a new lawyer) to re-argue your original appeal.[244] If your petition is denied, you may appeal that decision to the Court of Appeals.[245] well settled that all state remedies must be exhausted before a federal court may consider a state prisoner's petition for a writ of habeas corpus."); Basnight v. Keane, No. 99-CV-4826 (FB), 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10940, at *9 (E.D.N.Y. Aug. 1, 2000) (unpublished) (stating that "a petitioner must exhaust all state remedies and show that his federal constitutional rights have been violated" to get federal habeas relief).

---

235. See, e.g., People v. Pertillar, 15 A.D.3d 679, 679–80, 789 N.Y.S.2d 921, 922 (2d Dept. 2005) (relieving attorney who had filed Anders brief and assigning new counsel to represent defendant on appeal).

236. Smith v. Robbins, 528 U.S. 259, 265, 120 S. Ct 746, 753, 145 L. Ed. 2d 756, 767 (2000) (holding that states may adopt procedures that differ from those described in Anders, so long as the underlying goal of adequate appellate review required by the 14th Amendment is met).

237. See People v. Stokes, 95 N.Y.2d 633, 637, 744 N.E.2d 1153, 1155, 722 N.Y.S.2d 217, 219 (2001) (noting that the "procedures adopted by New York courts closely parallel and are clearly modeled upon the procedure set forth by the Supreme Court in Anders").

238. See People v. White, 73 N.Y.2d 468, 479, 539 N.E.2d 577, 583, 541 N.Y.S.2d 749, 755 (1989) (finding while it would be "better practice" for appellate courts to accept timely supplemental pro se briefs, courts can decline to accept them).

239. For more information about the rules of the court to which you are applying, see JLM, Chapter 5.

240. People v. Bachert, 69 N.Y.2d 593, 594, 509 N.E.2d 318, 319, 516 N.Y.S.2d 623, 624 (1987) (holding claims of ineffective assistance of counsel in the intermediate appellate court will be determined through the writ of error coram nobis).

241. People v. Bachert, 69 N.Y.2d 593, 598, 509 N.E.2d 318, 321, 516 N.Y.S.2d 623, 626 (1987) ("a motion for a writ of error coram nobis lies where it was asserted that a court-appointed lawyer failed to prosecute an appeal.") (citing People v. De Renzzio, 14 N.Y.2d 732, 199 N.E.2d 172, 250 N.Y.S.2d 76 (1964)); People v. Adams, 12 N.Y.2d 417, 420, 190 N.E.2d 529, 531, 240 N.Y.S.2d 155, 157–58 (1963).

242. People v. Bachert, 69 N.Y.2d 593, 595–96, 509 N.E.2d 318, 322, 516 N.Y.S.2d 623, 627 (1987) ("the natural venue for coram nobis review of ineffective assistance of appellate counsel claims is in the appellate tribunal where the allegedly deficient representation occurred.").

243. People v. Bachert, 69 N.Y.2d 593, 595–96, 509 N.E.2d 318, 319, 516 N.Y.S.2d 623, 624 (1987) ("a common-law coram nobis proceeding brought in the proper appellate court is the only available and appropriate procedure and forum to review a claim of ineffective assistance of appellate counsel.").

244. People v. Walton, 40 A.D.3d 1258, 1259, 836 N.Y.S.2d 442, 443 (3d Dept. 2007) (granting coram nobis relief in part and reinstating defendant's appeal as to certain issues).

A form for writs of error coram nobis can be found in Appendix B-7. In the coram nobis brief, you must explain the particular actions your appellate counsel took and the actions you believe your attorney should have taken. Your statements—both of the facts and arguments—should be as clear and specific as possible. Also, be sure to consult the rules of the particular jurisdiction for additional deadlines and requirements that you must follow. Note that you also have the right to effective assistance from your trial lawyer. For information about how to challenge your trial lawyer's assistance, see JLM, Chapter 12.

H. Conclusion

If you believe a harmful error occurred at your hearing or trial, you may be able to appeal and have the error corrected. The first step in this process is determining whether your appeal is prevented by time, plea agreements, failure to protest, or various other reasons. If your appeal is not prevented and you are eligible to appeal, you should begin the process and get a lawyer. You have the right to a lawyer, and without one you risk making a mistake that will waste your limited opportunity to appeal. Next, your lawyer or you will need to decide the specific legal basis for your appeal and file the correct appeals papers at the proper times to the right court. The appeals process can feel overwhelming and complicated, but, by following the steps in this Chapter, you should be able to appeal your conviction.

245. People v. Stultz, 2 N.Y.3d 277, 281, 810 N.E.2d 883, 885–86, 778 N.Y.S.2d 431, 433–34 (2004) (explaining that an intermediate appellate court's decision regarding a petition for a writ of error coram nobis may be appealed to the Court of Appeals and defining the Court of Appeal's standard of review for such an appeal).

APPENDIX A

THE COURT TO WHICH YOU SHOULD APPEAL

Please also refer to the inside back cover of the JLM, which shows the structure of the New York court system.

Crime	Court Where You Were Convicted[246]	Court Where Appeal May be Heard
Misdemeanor	Local criminal court outside New York City	County court of the county where you were convicted; or the Appellate Term of the New York State Supreme Court in the Second, Third, or Fourth Departments, if the appellate division of that department so directs.[247]
Misdemeanor	New York City Criminal Court in New York or Bronx Counties	Appellate Term for the New York State Supreme Court of the First Department.
Misdemeanor	New York City Criminal Court in Kings, Queens, or Richmond Counties	Appellate Term for the New York State Supreme Court of the Second Judicial Department.
Misdemeanor	County court	Appellate division of the department where you were convicted; or the Appellate Term of the New York State Supreme Court in the Second, Third, or Fourth Departments, if the appellate division of the department so directs.
Felony	County court	Appellate division of the department where you were convicted.
Any Offense	New York State Supreme Court	Appellate division of the department where you were convicted.

246. This is also the court where you file your notice of appeal.

247. The Appellate Division of the Second Department does direct certain classes of cases to the appellate term. Rules of the Second Department that discuss this matter may be found in McKinney's New York Rules of Court. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 22, § 730.1 (2010).

APPENDIX B

SAMPLE PAPERS FOR A CRIMINAL APPEAL[248]

This Appendix contains the following materials:

B-1. Notice of Appeal as of Right to an Intermediate Appellate Court[249] from a Superior Court[250] Judgment, Sentence, Judgment and Sentence, or Order.
B-2. Notice of Application for a Certificate Granting Leave to Appeal to an Intermediate Appellate Court or to the Court of Appeals
B-3. Papers Needed to Obtain the Services of a Lawyer Without Cost on Appeal, or Other Poor Person Relief
  a. Notice of Motion to Proceed as a Poor Person
  b. Affidavit in Support of Motion to Proceed as a Poor Person on Appeal
B-4. Papers Needed to Get Release on Bail Pending Appeal
  a. Notice of Motion for Recognizance or Bail Pending Appeal
  b. Affidavit in Support of Motion for Recognizance or Bail Pending Appeal
B-5. Notice of Motion for Extension of Time in Which to Take an Appeal Pursuant to New York Criminal Procedure Law Section 460.30
B-6. Affidavit in Support of Motion for Extension of Time to Take Appeal
B-7 Petition for Writ of Error Coram Nobis

DO NOT TEAR THESE FORMS OUT OF THE JLM. If you simply tear these papers out of the JLM and send them to the court, the court will ignore the papers. Write your own versions of these forms, and fill them out according to the facts of your particular case. The endnotes following the sample documents tell you how to fill in the necessary information. Consult Parts A through F of this Chapter and Chapter 6 of the JLM, "An Introduction to Legal Documents," for assistance in preparing your case. The name and address of the court to which you should send these papers are contained in Appendices I and II of the JLM.

248. These forms are based in part upon McKinney's Forms, a useful resource providing sample forms for almost any action you may wish to bring. The samples we have provided are broad and general, while the McKinney's Forms are specific and correspond to the statute underlying your action. See generally 18B West's McKinney's Forms Criminal Procedure Law §§ 450–70 (2010).

249. New York law uses the term "intermediate appellate court" to refer to the appellate courts in each county that decide the defendant's first appeal. These courts are the appellate division and the appellate term.

250. New York law uses the general term "superior court" to include both the supreme court and certain county courts in different counties that have jurisdiction over both felonies and misdemeanors.

B-1. NOTICE OF APPEAL AS OF RIGHT TO AN INTERMEDIATE APPELLATE COURT FROM A SUPERIOR COURT JUDGMENT, SENTENCE, JUDGMENT AND SENTENCE, OR ORDER[1]

Supreme Court of the State of New York[2]
County of _____[3]
----------x

The People of the State of New York,	:
Plaintiffs,	:	Notice of Appeal
	:
- against -	:	Indictment No. _____[4]
	:
_____,[5]	:
Defendant.	:

----------x

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE, that defendant, _____, hereby appeals pursuant to section 450.10, subdivision (1), of the Criminal Procedure Law of the State of New York[6] to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, _____[7] Judicial Department, from the _____, _____[8] judgment made and entered by Hon. _____,[9] convicting [him/her] of the class ____[10] felony of _____[11] and that this appeal is taken from said judgment and from each and every part thereof and every intermediate order made therein.

Dated:_____,[12] New York
_____[13]

_____
Attorney for Defendant[14]

_____ Street
_____ New York
Telephone Number: _____

To: Hon. _____[15]
District Attorney |

_____ County
_____ Street
_____, New York
Clerk

Supreme Court of the State of New York

_____ County
_____ Street
_____ , New York

B-2. NOTICE OF APPLICATION FOR A CERTIFICATE GRANTING LEAVE TO APPEAL TO AN INTERMEDIATE APPELLATE COURT OR TO THE COURT OF APPEALS[16]

Court of Appeals of the State of New York

The People of the State of New York, Plaintiffs-Respondents,	:	Notice of Application
- against -	:	Indictment No. _____[17]
_____,[18] Defendant-Appellant.	:

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE, that upon the annexed affidavit, the above named defendant-appellant makes application to _____[19] to determine the application hereby made for a certificate,[20] pursuant to section 460.20 of the Criminal Procedure Law of the State of New York, certifying that this case involves a question of law that ought to be reviewed by the Court of Appeals and granting leave to appeal to the Court of Appeals from __[date]_____, _[year]_ order of the Appellate Division _____[21] Judicial Department which affirmed the ___[date]__, _[year]_, Supreme Court, _____ County, judgment convicting defendant of the class _____ felony of _____ and sentencing defendant to an indeterminate term of imprisonment at _____.[22]

Dated: _____

_____[23]

_____

Attorney for Defendant-Appellant
[Address and phone number][24]

To: Clerk
Court of Appeals of the State of New York
Court of Appeals Hall
20 Eagle Street
Albany, New York[25]

B-3. PAPERS NEEDED TO OBTAIN THE SERVICES OF A LAWYER WITHOUT COST ON APPEAL, OR OTHER POOR PERSON RELIEF

These papers will allow you to obtain a free copy of the trial transcript, as well as a lawyer. Remember that these papers (like all in this Chapter) are for an appeal under the law of New York State: they are not the correct papers to file if you are filing a poor person's action in federal court or in another state's court.

a. Notice of Motion to Proceed as a Poor Person

Supreme Court of the State of New York,
Appellate Division,[26]

_____[27] Judicial Department

The People of the State of New York, Plaintiffs-Respondents,	:	Notice of Motion to Proceed As a Poor Person Upon Appeal
- against -	:
	:	Indictment No. _____[28]
_____,[29] Defendant-Appellant.	:

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE, that upon the affidavit of _____, sworn to on the _____ day of _____, _____,[30] a motion will be made at a term of this court, for an order permitting defendant-appellant to prosecute this appeal from the judgment entered in this action on the _____ day of _____, _____[31] as a poor person, directing that [he/she] be furnished a copy of the stenographic transcript of the trial of this action without fee, and granting permission to appeal on the original record, upon the ground that said defendant-appellant has insufficient income and property to enable [him/her] to pay the costs, fees, and expenses to prosecute said appeal, and for such other and further relief as this Court may deem just and proper.

Dated: _____
_____[32] _____

_____[33]
Defendant-Appellant

To: _____
District Attorney
Address[34]

- or -

Clerk
Appellate Division, ____ Judicial Department
Address[35]

b. Affidavit in Support of Motion to Proceed as a Poor Person on Appeal

Supreme Court of the State of New York
Appellate Division,

_____ Judicial Department[36]

_____[37]	:
Defendant-Appellant,	:	Affidavit in Support of
	:	Motion to Proceed as a
- against -	:	Poor Person Upon Appeal
	:
The People of the State of New York	:	Indictment No. _____[38]
Plaintiffs-Respondent.	:

State of New York
County of _____[39]

_____,[40] being duly sworn, deposes and says:

1. I am the petitioner in the above-captioned case, and I make this affidavit in support of the attached motion to proceed in forma pauperis.

2. I am presently in the custody of the Superintendent of _____ at _____ pursuant to a judgment of the Supreme Court of the State of New York, _____ County, rendered on _____, _____, convicting me of _____, in the _____ degree, and sentencing me to _____ years imprisonment.[41]

3. I am unable because of my indigence to pay the costs, fees, and expenses necessary to prosecute this appeal. I am currently incarcerated and am earning $_____ per week in income and I own $_____ worth of property. No other person has a beneficial interest in the outcome of this appeal.

4. During the trial I was represented by _____.[42]

5. I believe in good faith that I am entitled to the relief that I am seeking in this case.

WHEREFORE, I respectfully ask for an order permitting me to prosecute this appeal as a poor person and that I be furnished with the stenographic transcript of this action without fee and that I be assigned an attorney to represent me on appeal and for such other and further relief as may be proper and equitable.

_____[43]
Defendant-Appellant

Sworn to before me
this _____ day of _____, _____

_____
Notary Public[44]

B-4. PAPERS NEEDED TO GET RELEASE ON BAIL PENDING APPEAL[45]

a. Notice of Motion for Recognizance or Bail Pending Appeal

Supreme Court of the State of New York

_____ Judicial Department[46]

The People of the State of New York	:
Plaintiffs-Respondents,	:	Motion for
	:	Recognizance or Bail
- against -	:
	:	Indictment No. _____[47]
_____[48]	:
Defendant-Appellant.	:

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE, that upon the annexed affidavit of _____ sworn to on the _____ day of _____, ____[49] and upon all proceedings in this case, a motion pursuant to section 510.20 of the Criminal Procedure Law of the State of New York is made to this Court for an order revoking the order committing _____[50] to the custody of the _____[51] and releasing me in my own recognizance or on bail, on the grounds set forth in the affidavit, and for such other and further relief as to the court may seem just and proper.

Dated:_____

_____ [52]

_____ [53]

Defendant-Appellant

To: _____

District Attorney

Address[54]

- or -

Clerk

Appellate Division, ____ Judicial Department

Address[55]

b. Affidavit in Support of Motion for Recognizance or Bail Pending Appeal

Supreme Court of the State of New York
_____ Judicial Department[56]

The People of the State of New York Plaintiffs-Respondents, - against - _____[57] Defendant-Appellant.	: : : : : : :	Affidavit in Support of Motion for Recognizance or Bail Pending Appeal Indictment No. _____[58]

State of New York
County of _____[59]

_____[60] being duly sworn, deposes and says:

1. I am the defendant-appellant above named and I make this affidavit in support of the annexed notice of motion.

2. On the _____ day of _____, _____, I was convicted of _____ in the _____ degree (Judge _____) and I am presently in the custody of the Superintendent of _____ at _____ pursuant to the judgment and sentence in the case.[61]

3. I am now appealing my conviction of _____, and I filed a Notice of Appeal on _____, _____.[62]

4. I believe that the facts of my case warrant the issuance of an order securing my release on bail in my own recognizance:
_____
_____.[63]

5. Deponent believes that the appeal herein has great merit and that there is a reasonable possibility of ultimate reversal of the judgment of conviction appealed from. The reasons why said judgment of conviction should be reversed are:
_____
_____.[64]

6. No previous application has been made for the relief sought herein.

WHEREFORE, I respectfully pray that an order be entered revoking the order committing me to the custody of _____[65] and releasing me in my own recognizance or on bail, together with such other and further relief as this court may deem proper and just.

_____[66]

Sworn to before me
this _____ day of _____, _____

_____
Notary Public[67]

B-5. NOTICE OF MOTION FOR EXTENSION OF TIME IN WHICH TO TAKE AN APPEAL PURSUANT TO NEW YORK CRIMINAL PROCEDURE LAW § 460.30[68]

Supreme Court of the State of New York
Appellate Division _____ Department[69]

The People of the State of New York	:
Plaintiffs-Respondents,	:	Notice of Motion For
	:	Extension of Time to
	:	Appeal Pursuant to
- against -	:	CPL § 460.30
	:
_____[70]	:	Indictment No. _____[71]
Defendant-Appellant.	:

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE, that upon the annexed affidavit of _____[72] sworn to on the _____ day of _____, _____,[73] and upon all the proceedings in this case, a motion pursuant to section 460.30 of the Criminal Procedure Law of the State of New York is made to this Court for an order reinstating the time for taking an appeal from the [judgment/sentence/order] imposed by the Supreme Court of the County of _____[74] rendered on the _____ day of _____, _____[75] upon conviction of the above named defendant of the crime of _____, in the _____ degree[76] upon the ground that said defendant's failure to file a notice of appeal in timely fashion resulted from _____ _____,[77] and for such other and further relief as the Court may deem just and proper.

Dated:_____
_____ [78]

_____[79]
Defendant-Appellant

To: Hon. _____
District Attorney
Address[80]

Clerk
_____ Appellate Division
_____ Judicial Department
Address[81]

B-6. AFFIDAVIT IN SUPPORT OF MOTION FOR EXTENSION OF TIME TO TAKE APPEAL

Supreme Court of the State of New York
Appellate Division _____ Department[82]

The People of the State of New York Plaintiffs-Respondents, - against - _____[83] Defendant-Appellant.	: : : : : : : :	Affidavit in Support of Motion for Extension of Time to Appeal Pursuant to CPL § 460.30 Indictment No. _____[84]

_____,[85] being duly sworn, deposes and says:

That I am the defendant herein and submit this affidavit in support of my application for leave to serve a notice of appeal within thirty days after the granting of an order permitting me to file pursuant to Section 460.30 of the Criminal Procedure Law of the State of New York.

On _____, _____, I was convicted of _____ in the _____ degree. (Trial Judge _____.) I received a sentence of _____ years on _____, _____. (Judge _____.)[86]

I failed to file my Notice of Appeal within thirty days because:

_____
_____.[87]

WHEREFORE, I respectfully urge this Court to extend the time within which a notice of appeal may be served and filed pursuant to section 460.30 of the Criminal Procedure Law of the State of New York and issue an order granting this application permitting me to serve and file a notice of appeal within thirty days from the date of said order and for such other relief as this Court may deem just and proper.

_____
Defendant-Appellant

Sworn to before me
this _____ day of _____, _____.
_____[88]
Notary Public

B-7. PETITION FOR WRIT OF ERROR CORAM NOBIS

Supreme Court of the State of New York
Appellate Division _____ Department[89]

----------x

The People of the State of New York,	:
Plaintiffs-Respondents,	:	Petition for Writ of Error Coram Nobis
	:
- against -	:	Indictment No. _____[90]
	:
_____,[91]	:
Defendant-Petitioner:

----------x

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that above-named defendant-petitioner hereby moves the court for an issuance of a writ of error coram nobis on the ground that defendant-petitioner was convicted of _____[92] in _____[93] on _____[94], and appealed to this court which affirmed his conviction and that the representation of _____[95], defendant-petitioner's attorney on appeal, was ineffective according to the standards of representation set out in the Sixth Amendment of the United States Constitution.

The representation afforded to defendant-petitioner was defective in the following ways: _____.[96]

This motion is made and based on this petition and the affidavit of defendant-petitioner, and on the appellate briefs and the Appellate Division decision,[97] copies of which are attached and served, and on the pleadings, papers, records, and files of this action.

Defendant-petitioner requests assignment of new appellate counsel for assistance in presentation of the writ moved for herein.[98]

Dated: _____ [99]

_____
Defendant-Appellant
[Address and phone number][100]

To:
Clerk
Supreme Court of the State of New York
Appellate Division, ___ Department[101]

Fill in the forms shown in Appendix B as follows:

---

1. See generally N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 450.10 (McKinney's 2010); 18B West's McKinney's Forms Criminal Procedure Law § 460 (2010).

2. Your Notice of Appeal is addressed to the court you were tried in, not the appeals court. This sample presumes you were tried in a supreme court. If you were tried in a county court, be sure to substitute this court for the supreme court at the top of the form.

3. Fill in the name of the county in which the trial court is located.

4. Your indictment number if you know it. Also, fill in the year in which you were indicted or arraigned.

5. Write your name in all the blanks referring to defendant.

6. You should cite "section 450.10, subdivision (1), of the Criminal Procedure Law of the State of New York" if you are either appealing only the judgment or if you are appealing both the judgment and sentence. If you wish to appeal only the sentence, you should replace the above citation with "section 450.10, subdivision (2), of the Criminal Procedure Law of the State of New York."

7. Insert the number of the department (First, Second, Third, or Fourth) in which you were tried. This is also the department in which your appeal will take place.

8. Fill in the date of the judgment against you.

9. Fill in the name of the trial judge.

10. Fill in the letter of the class of the felony you were convicted of (for example, class B felony).

11. Fill in the name of the felony (for example, robbery in the first degree).

12. Fill in the town from which you are sending the Notice.

13. Fill in the date on which you are signing the Notice.

14. If you are representing yourself, or if you have an attorney but wrote this Notice of Appeal yourself, sign your name, print or type your name below your signature, and fill in your address. If your attorney wrote the Notice, then he or she will sign his or her name and provide an address and phone number.

15. Fill in the name and address of the District Attorney of the county in which you were tried. Include this information on both the copy you are sending to the District Attorney and on the two copies you are sending to the trial court, so that the clerk of the trial court will know that you have notified the District Attorney See Appendix III of the JLM for a list of addresses of New York district attorneys.

16. See generally N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.20 18B West's McKinney's Forms Criminal Procedure Law § 460 (2010). This form can be used in any one of three situations: (i) if you need to obtain permission to appeal to the appellate division or appellate term; (ii) if your appeal to the appellate division or appellate term was unsuccessful, and you wish to apply to the court of appeals for permission to appeal it; or (iii) if your appeal to the appellate division was unsuccessful and you wish to apply to the appellate division for permission to appeal to the court of appeals. The first situation is explained in Part E of this Chapter; the last two situations are explained in Part F. If you are applying to the appellate division for permission to appeal to the Court of Appeals, you should replace the reference to the Court of Appeals at the top and bottom of the form with the full name of the appellate division from which you are seeking permission to appeal (for example, the Supreme Court of New York, Appellate Division, Third Department).

17. Your indictment number and the year in which you were indicted.

18. Your name.

19. If you are sending this Notice to a judge in the appellate division, fill in his or her name. If you are sending it to the court of appeals, write "the Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals to designate an Associate Judge of the Court." If your first appeal was denied by a court other than the appellate division, such as a county court or an appellate term, then you may send this application only to the court of appeals. See Part F of this Chapter.

20. If you want to apply for permission to appeal a denial of your Article 440 motion by the trial court, send your application to the proper appellate court and replace the material in the form after "for a certificate ..." with:

> pursuant to section 460.15 of the Criminal Procedure Law of the State of New York, certifying that this case involves a question of law or fact which ought to be reviewed by the Appellate Division [or Appellate Term or County Court] from the _____, ____order by the Supreme Court [or County court or Criminal Court] of _____ County which denied defendant's motion to vacate judgment pursuant to section 440.10 [or motion to set aside sentence pursuant to section 440.20] and affirmed the judgment convicting defendant of the class _____ felony of _____ and sentencing [him/her] to an indeterminate term of imprisonment at _____.

To determine to which appellate court you should apply, see Appendix A of this Chapter. Remember, you must submit an application along with this notice of application. In the application, you must explain why your Article 440 motion should be granted. Your application has a better chance of success if it is notarized as an affidavit. Most jails and prisons have several staff members who will notarize your documents.

21. Fill in the date of the appellate court's denial of your appeal, and the number of the judicial department.

22. Fill in the date of your conviction in the trial court, the county, the offense, as well as the prison to which you were sent.

23. Your address and the date.

24. If you are representing yourself, fill in your own name and address. If your lawyer is writing this notice, he or she will sign his or her own name and address.

25. If you are sending this to the court of appeals, address this Notice to the Clerk of the Court, and the clerk will give notice to the District Attorney in the county in which your first appeal was denied. If you are sending this to the appellate division, send two copies to the clerk of the appellate division and fill in the address. Also send a copy to the District Attorney of the county in which you were first convicted and fill in his or her name and address on the copy you send to the District Attorney. See Appendix III of the JLM for a list of addresses for New York district attorneys.

26. The different judicial departments have different rules as to whether to send this Notice to the clerk of the trial court or to the clerk of the appellate court. You will need to refer to these rules if they are available in the prison's library or ask your lawyer.

27. Fill in the county and the number of the judicial department of the appellate division. Appendix II of the JLM provides this information.

28. Your indictment or docket number and the year in which the proceedings against you began.

29. Your name.

30. Your name again, and the date of the affidavit.

31. The date of the conviction.

32. The date and your present location.

33. Your name.

34. Fill in the name and address of the District Attorney of the county in which you were tried. Include this information on both the copy that you are sending to the District Attorney and on the two copies that you are sending to the trial court, so that the clerk of the trial court will know that you have notified the District Attorney. See Appendix III of the JLM for a list of addresses for New York district attorneys.

35. If this is the copy to the appellate division, fill in the address of the court.

36. Fill in the number of the judicial department. See Appendix II of the JLM.

37. Your name.

38. Your indictment or docket number and the year it was handed down.

39. The county in which you are presently living.

40. Your name.

41. The name of the prison you are currently in, where it is located, the county you were convicted in, the date you were convicted, the crime and degree you were convicted of, and the number of years to which you were sentenced.

42. Your lawyer's name, address, and telephone number. If your lawyer was assigned, indicate this fact here.

43. Your signature. If your attorney is making the application on these papers, then an affirmation (a statement that the papers are true) by him or her may be substituted for the signature and seal of the notary. If you are signing the affidavit, you should do so in the presence of a notary public.

44. If your attorney does not make an affirmation, the notary public's date and seal are placed here.

45. See generally N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 510.20 (McKinney 2010); 18B West's McKinney's Forms Criminal Procedure Law § 510 (2010).

46. Fill in the county and the number of the judicial department of the trial court. See Appendix II of the JLM.

47. Your indictment or docket number and the year proceedings against you began.

48. Your name.

49. Your name and the date of the affidavit that you send along with this Notice (the affidavit is Form B-4(b)).

50. Your name.

51. If you are in a county jail, you are in the custody of a sheriff. If you are in a state prison, you are in the custody of the Department of Correctional Services. Therefore, write either "sheriff" or "Commissioner of the Department of Correctional Services," depending on your particular situation.

52. Your address and the date.

53. Your name.

54. Fill in the name and address of the District Attorney of the county in which you were tried. Include this information on both the copy that you are sending to the District Attorney and on the two copies that you are sending to the trial court, so that the clerk of the trial court will know that you have notified the District Attorney. See Appendix III of the JLM for a list of addresses for New York district attorneys.

55. If this is the copy to the appellate division, fill in the address of the court.

56. Number of the judicial department of the trial court.

57. Your name.

58. Indictment/docket number; year in which proceedings began.

59. City and county where affidavit was taken.

60. Your name.

61. The date of your conviction, the crime and degree, the trial judge, the name of your prison and its location.

62. State exactly what you are appealing. If you are appealing your sentence, add "and sentence." If you are appealing an order, add "and order." Also fill in the date on which you filed the Notice of Appeal.

63. Set forth the facts and reasons why you should be released on bail pending your appeal (for instance, the lack of seriousness of the charges, why you are not a threat to the community if you are out on bail, your previous good record in making court appearances, and why you are likely to successfully overturn your conviction or sentence on appeal).

64. Explain why the judgment should be reversed, supporting your argument with facts from the record.

65. Fill in the name of the prison in which you are incarcerated.

66. Your signature and typed or printed name below. Do not sign until the notary is present.

67. Notary's signature, the date and seal. If your attorney is making an application on papers submitted by him or her personally, then an affirmation as to the truth of the papers may be substituted for the notary's signature and seal.

68. See generally N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.30 (McKinney 2010); 18B West's McKinney's Forms Criminal Procedure Law § 460 (2010). If you did not file a Notice of Appeal within the thirty-day deadline, and you believe that you missed the deadline for a valid reason, such as the inaction of your lawyer or a prison official, then you should file a motion for an extension pursuant to New York Criminal Procedure Law Section 460.30. If granted, the court will extend the time in which you must file a Notice of Appeal.

69. The county and the number of the department of the appellate division.

70. Your name.

71. Indictment or docket number and the year in which the indictment was handed down against you.

72. Your name.

73. The date of the affidavit.

74. The county in which the trial court was located.

75. The date of the judgment and/or sentence or order that you are appealing.

76. The crime and the degree of the felony or misdemeanor.

77. Explain here why you missed the deadline for filing a Notice of Appeal. For example, "the conduct of defendant's counsel in failing to file a notice of appeal as defendant had timely requested" (but of course do not claim that you missed the filing deadline due to your attorney's misconduct unless this is actually the case). Be as specific as possible. For example, if your claim is that your lawyer promised to file the appeal but didn't, say when you had this conversation and what was said. The more specific you are about the facts, the more convincing your claim. See Part B(1) of this Chapter for a discussion of acceptable reasons for missing the deadline.

78. Fill in your location and the date.

79. Your name.

80. District Attorney's name and address in the county in which you were tried. Include this on all copies. See Appendix III of the JLM for a list of addresses for New York district attorneys.

81. If this is the copy you are sending to the appellate court, fill in the address.

82. Number of the judicial department of the appellate division.

83. Your name.

84. Indictment number and year of the indictment.

85. Your name.

86. Fill in the date of conviction, the crime, the degree of the crime, the name of the trial judge, the length of the sentence, the date of the sentence, and the name of the sentencing judge.

87. In the remaining part of the affidavit, state the reasons why you failed to file the notice of appeal within the 30-day period—for example, because your attorney forgot that you wanted to appeal. Do not claim that you missed the filing deadline due to your attorney's mistake unless this is actually the case. See Part B(1) of this Chapter for a discussion of acceptable reasons for missing the deadline.

88. This is the place for the notary public's signature and the date. The notary has to watch you sign, so don't sign beforehand. If your attorney is making the application with these papers in person, then an affirmation as to the truth of the papers may be substituted for the signature and seal of the notary.

89. Fill in the information for the intermediate appellate court to which you are addressing this petition. You should address the petition to the court in which the ineffective assistance of appellate counsel that you are alleging took place.

90. Your indictment number and the year in which you were indicted.

91. Your name.

92. Charge for which you were convicted.

93. Trial court in which you were convicted.

94. Date on which you were convicted.

95. Name of your attorney on appeal. This is the attorney that you are alleging provided ineffective assistance.

96. In this section you need to list the particular actions your appellate counsel took and the actions you believe your attorney should have taken. Your statements—both of the facts and arguments—should be as clear and specific as possible. For example, you must state the specific appellate issues that you believe your lawyer failed to raise. Also, in your prison library, consult the rules of the court for additional deadlines or requirements that you must follow.

97. Include copies of the appellate briefs and the appellate division decision when you mail your petition.

98. You should request that a new lawyer be assigned to you if you do not currently have a lawyer to assist you.

99. Date.

100. If you are representing yourself, fill in your own name and address. If your lawyer is writing this petition, he or she will sign his or her own name and address.

101. Fill in the information for the intermediate appellate court to which you are addressing this petition. You should address the petition to the court in which you believe you had ineffective assistance of counsel. Make sure to include the court's street address.

A JAILHOUSE LAWYER'S MANUAL

Chapter 10: Applying for Re-Sentencing for Drug Offenses

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

CHAPTER 10

APPLYING FOR RE-SENTENCING FOR DRUG OFFENSES*

A. Introduction

Recent changes in both federal and New York law have made some prisoners who were convicted of drug crimes eligible to apply for re-sentencing. If you were convicted of a federal drug crime, you should read Part B of this Chapter to find out about federal re-sentencing for drug crimes. If you were convicted of a state drug crime in New York, you should refer to Part C of this Chapter for information on re-sentencing in New York. Appendix A contains sample forms that you may need to apply for re-sentencing for federal drug crimes. Appendix B contains forms that you may need to apply for re-sentencing in New York State.

B. Re-Sentencing for Federal Drug Crimes

1. Introduction

The Federal Sentencing Commission has recently made changes to the United States Sentencing Guidelines (hereinafter "the Guidelines") for various drug offenses. In particular, the Commission has issued amendments that lower the sentencing recommendations for offenses involving crack cocaine (also called cocaine base). The new crack sentencing Guidelines took effect on November 1, 2007,[1] and on December 11, 2007, the Commission voted to apply the new sentencing Guidelines retroactively. This means that some prisoners who were sentenced for certain federal drug offenses under the old, harsher Guidelines can apply for re-sentencing under the new Guidelines. So, if you were sentenced for a federal offense involving crack cocaine or one of a few other drug offenses (such as those involving Percocet or live marihuana plants), you might be eligible to apply for re-sentencing.

This Chapter describes who is allowed to apply for re-sentencing and explains the re-sentencing process. Section 2 explains which prisoners are eligible for re-sentencing and Section 3 explores the process of applying for re-sentencing and possible outcomes of your re-sentencing application. Appendix A at the end of the Chapter provides sample forms you can use if you decide to apply for re-sentencing.

2. Eligibility: Who is Allowed to Apply?

If you are currently serving time for a federal drug offense and wish to apply for re-sentencing, you must first determine whether you are eligible to do so. Not all prisoners serving time for federal drug offenses are eligible to apply for re-sentencing.

In general, changes in the law do not apply to people who were sentenced under the old version of the law. In order for changes in the Guidelines to apply to prisoners who were sentenced under the old Guidelines, the changes must be enacted retroactively. Section 1B1.10 of the Guidelines explains which changes in the law are retroactive.[2] Under Section 1B1.10, a federal prisoner is eligible for re-sentencing if the Guideline range applicable to that prisoner's offense has been lowered by one of the amendments listed in part c of the regulations.[3] The only amendments listed in Section 1B1.10(c) that apply to drug offenses are Amendments 126, 130, 484, 488, 499, 505, 516, 591, 657, and 706 as modified by 711 and 715.[4] In order to determine whether you are eligible for re-sentencing, you must first determine whether any of these amendments apply to the sentencing Guidelines for the offense for which you were convicted.

This chapter will focus on Amendment 706 as modified by Amendments 711 and 715. This Amendment changes the Guidelines for crack cocaine offenses. It also changes the procedure for calculating the base offense level for crimes involving possession of both crack cocaine and one or more other drugs. You should remember, however, that if any of the other Amendments listed above applies to your case and would lower the Guidelines for your offense, then you may also be eligible for re-sentencing. For example, Amendment 516 revises the Guidelines for cases involving more than fifty marihuana plants by reducing the amount of marihuana each plant is assumed to produce from one kilogram (KG) to 100 grams (G).[5] So, if you were

---

* This Chapter was revised by Susan Reid, based on a previous version written by Sydney Bird and revised by Nathan Piper. Special thanks to William Gibney of the New York Legal Aid Society for his valuable comments.

1. U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 2D1.1(c) (2008).
2. U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 1B1.10, policy statement (2008).
3. U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 1B1.10(a)(1), policy statement (2008).
4. U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual app. C. (2008).
5. U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual app. C, Amendment 516 (2008).

sentenced for an offense involving more than fifty marihuana plants before the enactment of Amendment 516, you might be eligible for re-sentencing. Similarly, Amendment 657 alters the way that the weight of the drug Oxycodone is calculated for sentencing purposes, usually resulting in shorter sentences for offenses involving Percocet and OxyContin pills.[6] So, if you were sentenced for an offense involving possession of Percocet or OxyContin, you should check to see if the new standards would lower your Guidelines range, making you eligible for re-sentencing.

(a) Determining Eligibility for Re-Sentencing for an Offense Involving Crack Cocaine

If you are currently serving time for an offense committed prior to November 1, 2007 involving only crack cocaine, it is likely that you will be eligible to apply for re-sentencing. Prior to 2007, the sentencing Guidelines stated that 150KG of powder cocaine was equivalent to 1.5KG of crack cocaine (cocaine base) for sentencing purposes.[7] This meant that if you were convicted of possessing a certain amount of crack cocaine, your sentence would be the same as if you were convicted of possessing 100 times as much powder cocaine. This was known as the "100:1 cocaine sentencing disparity." It is important to distinguish between changes to mandatory minimum laws, which are created by Congress, and changes to the Guidelines, which are created by the United States Sentencing Commission. The Guidelines provide recommended sentencing ranges for offenses based on drug quantity. At one time, the 100:1 disparity was embodied in both the Guidelines and the statutes establishing mandatory minimum sentences. This Chapter primarily focuses on the Guidelines because their amendments have been made retroactive, which means that even though you were sentenced under the old Guidelines, you may be able to apply for re-sentencing under the new ones.

The 100:1 disparity in the Guidelines and the mandatory minimum sentencing laws has received a lot of criticism. Many people in the legal community thought that it was unfair to impose such harsh sentences for crack cocaine while imposing much more lenient sentences for powder cocaine. Some judges even began taking the disparity into account when sentencing defendants for crack cocaine offenses, citing the unfair disparity as a reason for giving the defendants shorter sentences than the sentencing Guidelines called for.[8] In 2007, the United States Sentencing Commission issued a report to Congress calling for reform of the federal cocaine sentencing disparity.[9] The report declared that "[f]ederal cocaine sentencing policy, insofar as it provides substantially heightened penalties for crack cocaine offenses, continues to come under almost universal criticism from representatives of the Judiciary, criminal justice practitioners, academics, and community interest groups, and inaction in this area is of increasing concern to many, including the Commission."[10]

The Guidelines were amended in 2007, and these amendments were made retroactive. Amendment 706, which came into effect on November 1, 2007, reduces the disparity between sentences for crack and powder cocaine. The old version of Section 2D1.1(c)(1) stated that 150KG of powder cocaine was equivalent to 1.5KG of crack cocaine. Amendment 706 revised this equivalency calculation by changing Section 2D1.1(c)(1) so that 150KG of powder cocaine is equivalent to 4.5KG of crack cocaine. Although there is still a significant

---

6. U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual app. C, Amendment 657 (2008).

7. U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual app. C, Amendment 706 (2008).

8. See Kimbrough v. United States, 552 U.S. 85, 128 S. Ct. 558, 169 L. Ed. 2d 481 (2007) (holding that sentencing judges may properly take into account the disparity between sentences for powder and crack cocaine when deciding to depart from the sentence recommended by the Guidelines and impose a more lenient sentence); see also Gall v. United States, 552 U.S. 38, 128 S. Ct. 586, 169 L. Ed. 2d 445 (2007) (holding that appellate courts cannot require "extraordinary circumstances" in order to justify a downward departure from the Guidelines); United States v. Booker, 543 U.S. 220, 125 S. Ct. 738, 160 L. Ed. 2d. 621 (2005) (holding that the Guidelines are advisory rather than mandatory, that judges may use their discretion when deciding to depart from the Guidelines, and that sentencing decisions are subject only to a review for "abuse of discretion by appellate courts, regardless of whether or not the sentencing judge adhered to the Guidelines").

9. United States Sentencing Commission, 2007 Report to Congress: Cocaine and Federal Sentencing Policy 2 (May 2007).

10. The Commission has repeatedly recommended that Congress correct the disparity between mandatory minimum sentences for crack and powder cocaine. United States Sentencing Commission, 2007 Report to Congress: Cocaine and Federal Sentencing Policy 8–9 (May 2007). In 2010, Congress finally passed the Fair Drug Sentencing Act, which adjusted mandatory minimum sentences for crack cocaine, increasing the threshold quantity triggering a five-year mandatory minimum from 5G to 28G. This adjustment reduced the mandatory minimum sentencing disparity from 100:1 to approximately 18:1. However, the change has not been made retroactive, which means that as of now, this new legislation likely does not provide a basis for you to apply for re-sentencing. Fair Sentencing Act, Pub. L. No. 111– 20 (2010) (reducing the quantity thresholds triggering mandatory minimum sentences for crack cocaine and eliminating mandatory minimums for possession-only offenses).

disparity between sentences for crack and powder cocaine, this amendment has generally resulted in lower sentences for crack cocaine than under the old version of the Guidelines.

The following table illustrates the changes in Section 2D1.1(c) for calculating the base offense level for crack cocaine offenses. Level 38 is the most severe base level sentence that can be imposed for a drug offense (not taking into account sentencing enhancements).[11]

Base Offense Level	Amount of drug (pre-Amendment 706) [Old Guideline][12]	Amount of drug (post-Amendment 706) [New Guideline][13]
38	150KG or more of cocaine or 1.5 KG or more of cocaine base	150KG or more of cocaine or 4.5KG or more of cocaine base
36	50KG–150KG cocaine or 500G–1.5KG cocaine base	50KG–150KG cocaine or 1.5KG–4.5KG cocaine base
34	15KG–50KG cocaine or 150G–500G cocaine base	15KG–50KG cocaine or 500G–1.5KG cocaine base
32	5KG–15KG cocaine or 50G–150G cocaine base	5KG–15KG cocaine or 150G–500G cocaine base
30	3.5KG–5KG cocaine or 35G–50G cocaine base	3.5KG–5KG cocaine or 50G–150G cocaine base
28	2KG–3.5KG cocaine or 20G–35G cocaine base	2KG–3.5KG cocaine or 35G–50G cocaine base
26	500G–2KG cocaine or 5G–20G cocaine base	500G–2KG cocaine or 20G–35G cocaine base
24	400G–500G cocaine or 4G–5G cocaine base	400G–500G cocaine or 5G–20G cocaine base
22	300G–400G cocaine or 3G–4G cocaine base	300G–400G cocaine or 4G–5G cocaine base
20	200G–300G cocaine or 2G–3G cocaine base	200G–300G cocaine or 3G–4G cocaine base
18	100G–200G cocaine or 1G–2G cocaine base	100G–200G cocaine or 2G–3G cocaine base
16	50G–100G cocaine or 500MG–1G cocaine base	50G–100G cocaine or 1G–2G cocaine base
14	25G–50G cocaine or 250 miligrams (MG)–500MG cocaine base	25G–50G cocaine or 500MG–1G cocaine base
12	Less than 25G cocaine or less than 250MG cocaine base	Less than 25G cocaine or less than 500MG cocaine base

In general, sentences for crack cocaine under the new Guidelines are approximately two levels lower than sentences under the old Guidelines. This can mean that you might be eligible for a reduction in your sentence if you were convicted of a crack cocaine offense committed before the new Guidelines came into effect on November 1, 2007.

(b) Determining Eligibility for Re-Sentencing for an Offense Involving Crack Cocaine and At Least One Other Drug

Amendment 706, as modified by Amendments 711 and 715, changed the way that the base offense level is calculated for crimes involving crack cocaine and at least one other drug.[14] Under the old Guidelines, the base offense level for offenses involving more than one drug was calculated by converting all the drugs

11. U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual app. C, Amendment 505 (2008).
12. U.S. Sentencing Guidelines § 2D1.1(c) (2003).
13. U.S. Sentencing Guidelines § 2D1.1(c) (2008).
14. U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual app. C, Amendment 715 (2008).

involved to their equivalent amounts of marihuana using the "Drug Equivalency Tables,"[15] adding them together, and then finding the correct base offense level using the "Drug Quantity Table."[16]

This calculation can be a little confusing, so an example may be helpful: Imagine you were convicted of selling 80G of cocaine, 30G of cocaine base, and 1KG of marihuana. In order to calculate the base offense level, you would look at the Drug Equivalency Tables to determine that 1G of cocaine is equal to 200G of marihuana, and 1G of cocaine base is equal to 20KG of marihuana. So, the cocaine sold is equivalent to 16,000G (or 16KG) of marihuana (80G x 200G/1G = 16,000G). The cocaine base is equivalent to 600KG of marihuana (30G x 20KG/1G = 600KG). The total offense, therefore, involves the equivalent of 617KG of marihuana (16KG + 600KG + 1KG). Looking now at the Drug Quantity Table, we can see the 617KG of marihuana corresponds to a Level 28 base offense level.

Amendment 715 leaves unchanged the old method of calculating the base offense level for multiple-drug offenses, but states that whenever the offense involves crack cocaine and at least one other drug, the base offense level obtained using the method above should be reduced by two levels.[17] So, under the new Guidelines, your base offense level would be calculated exactly as it was under the old Guidelines (as demonstrated in the example above), BUT the base offense level would then be reduced by two levels. So, in the example above, the base offense level would actually be Level 26 (Level 28 – 2 levels = Level 26).

This means that if you were convicted of an offense involving crack cocaine and at least one other drug, it is likely that you are eligible to apply for re-sentencing because the new Guideline applicable to your offense is probably two levels lower than it was under the old Guidelines.[18] You should be aware, however, that Amendment 715 provides three exceptions to the two-level reduction in cases involving crack cocaine. First, the two-level reduction will not apply if your offense involved 4.5KG or more of crack cocaine. Second, the reduction will not apply if your offense involved less than 250MG of crack cocaine. And third, the two-level reduction will not apply if the base offense level after the two-level reduction would be less than the base offense level for the same offense involving only the other drugs and not the cocaine base.[19] If one of these three exceptions applies to your case, you probably will not be eligible for re-sentencing.

An example may be helpful to illustrate the third exception: Suppose a case involves 5G of cocaine base and 6KG of heroin. Under the Drug Equivalency Tables in subdivision (E) of this note, 5G of cocaine base converts to 100KG of marihuana (5G x 20KG/1G = 100KG), and 6KG of heroin converts to 6,000KG of marihuana (6KG x 1000KG/1G = 6,000KG), which, when added together results in a combined equivalent quantity of 6,100KG of marihuana. Under the Drug Quantity Table, 6,100KG of marihuana corresponds to a combined offense level of 34, which is reduced by two levels to 32. For the heroin, the 6,000KG of marihuana corresponds to an offense level 34 under the Drug Quantity Table. Because the combined offense level for the two drug types after the two-level reduction is less than the offense level for the heroin, the reduction will not apply and the combined offense level for the two drugs is still Level 34.[20]

(c) What if Your Original Sentencing Judge Already Gave You a Shorter Sentence than the Old Guidelines Recommended?

Even if you were originally sentenced to shorter time in prison than the Guidelines recommended, you may still be eligible for re-sentencing. Although there is very little case law yet in this area, it is possible that you can receive a further reduction on your sentence if the Sentencing Commission has subsequently lowered the Guidelines for your offense. Section 1B1.10(b)(2)(B) governs this situation, but its precise interpretation is still unclear.[21] For example, one circuit has held that when re-sentencing a defendant

---

15. The Drug Equivalency Tables can be found at the end of Note 10(D) of § 2D1.1 in both the 2003 and 2008 versions of the Sentencing Guidelines.

16. U.S. Sentencing Guidelines §2D1.1 cmt. n.10 (2003).

17. U.S. Sentencing Guidelines app. C, Amendment 715 (2008).

18. If you were convicted of a crime committed between Nov. 1, 2007, and May 1, 2008, your sentence may have been calculated using the method established by Amendment 711. If this is the case, you should calculate your base offense level using the criteria set out in Amendment 711 and compare this result to your base offense level using the current Guideline method explained in Part B(2)(a) of this Chapter.

18. U.S. Sentencing Guidelines app. C, Amendment 715 (2008).

20. U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 2D1.1, cmt. n.10(D)(iii)(II) (2008).

21. § 1B1.10(b)(2)(B) reads as follows: "Exception.—If the original term of imprisonment imposed was less than the term of imprisonment provided by the guideline range applicable to the defendant at the time of sentencing, a reduction comparably less than the amended guideline range determined under subdivision (1) of this subsection may be appropriate. However, if the original term of imprisonment constituted a non-guideline sentence determined pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a) and United States v. Booker, 543 U.S. 220 (2005), a further reduction generally would not be appropriate." U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 1B1.10(b)(2)(B), policy statement (2008).

pursuant to Section 3582(c)(2), a district court must treat the Guidelines, including Section 1B1.10, as advisory only.[22] You should conduct your own research to see whether courts in your area have re-sentenced prisoners who received downward departures on their original sentences.[23]

(d) Are You Eligible for Re-Sentencing Even if Your Current Sentence is the Result of a Binding Plea Agreement?

You may not be eligible for re-sentencing if your current sentence is the result of a binding plea agreement.[24] Many courts have held that if you were sentenced pursuant to a binding plea agreement, then you are automatically ineligible for re-sentencing.[25] However, not all courts agree.[26] Even in jurisdictions where sentences imposed pursuant to binding plea agreements may be eligible for re-sentencing, you may have to demonstrate that your plea agreement was based on the existing guideline recommendations.[27] Thus, if your sentence is the result of a binding plea agreement, you can file for re-sentencing, but you should be prepared to argue that your sentence was in fact based on the Guidelines. You should also be aware that a judge might find you ineligible for re-sentencing because you entered into a binding plea agreement.

(e) Are You Eligible for Re-Sentencing if You Were Originally Sentenced as a "Career Offender"?

If you were originally sentenced as a career offender under Section 4B1.1 of the Guidelines, you are probably not eligible to receive a sentence reduction under the amended Guidelines. This is because your sentence may not have been based upon any of the Guidelines affected by the amendments and thus would probably not be lower under the amended Guidelines. Recent decisions in a variety of circuits have rejected applications for re-sentencing made by career offenders.[28] However, if you were designated a career offender,

---

22. United States v. Hicks, 472 F.3d 1167 (9th Cir. 2007) (holding that a prisoner could be re-sentenced to a term lower than the new Guidelines recommendation based on the finding, in United States v. Booker, that the U.S. Sentencing Guidelines are always advisory); but see United States v. Fanfan, 558 F.3d 105 (1st Cir. 2009) (specifically rejecting the Ninth Circuit's interpretation of Booker in United States v. Hicks and holding that prisoners could not be re-sentenced below the current Guidelines).

23. See JLM, Chapter 2 for information on how to conduct legal research.

24. Federal Public & Community Defenders, Crack Retroactivity: Questions, Answers, Caselaw, Argument Outlines, at 7 (Feb. 18, 2008), available at http://www.fd.org/pdf_lib/Defender.Authority.Combined.FINAL.2.18.0819.pdf.

25. See, e.g., United States v. Rivera-Martinez, 607 F.3d 283, 287 (1st Cir. 2010); United States v. Green, 595 F.3d 432, 436 (2d Cir. 2010); United States v. Sanchez, 562 F.3d 275, 277–79 (3d Cir. 2009); United States v. Scurlark, 560 F.3d 839, 841 (8th Cir.); United States v. Peveler, 359 F.3d 369, 377–79 (6th Cir. 2004); United States v. Trujeque, 100 F.3d 869, 870–71 (10th Cir. 1996) (all holding that sentences obtained by binding plea agreements cannot be reduced under the revised crack cocaine sentencing Guidelines).

26. See United States v. Cobb, 584 F.3d 979, 985 (10th Cir. 2009) (holding that the court has broad discretion to re-sentence offenders under § 3582(c)(2) even where the original sentence was based on a binding plea agreement); United States v. Garcia, 606 F.3d 209, 214 (5th Cir. 2010) (per curiam) (holding that binding plea agreements could be eligible for re-sentencing if they could be fairly said to have been based on the Guidelines); United States v. Franklin, 600 F.3d 893, 896 (7th Cir. 2010) (holding that some binding plea agreements may be eligible for re-sentencing); United States v. Bride, 581 F.3d 888, 891 (9th Cir. 2009) (holding that where a binding plea agreement is based on the Guidelines, it does not render the offender ineligible for re-sentencing); United States v. Coleman, 594 F. Supp. 2d 164, 167 (D. Mass. 2009) (both holding that sentences obtained by binding plea agreements may be reduced under the revised sentencing Guidelines). Offenders sentenced pursuant to binding plea agreements may also be eligible for re-sentencing in the Fourth Circuit, although the state of the law is not entirely clear because the decision was vacated and is no longer the law. See United States v. Dews, 551 F. 3d 204, 209 (4th Cir. 2008), reh'n en banc granted (Feb 20, 2009), reh'n dismissed as moot (May 04, 2009), (holding that nothing in the federal rule regarding binding plea agreements "precludes a defendant pleading guilty under that rule from receiving the benefit of a later favorable retroactive amendment to the Guidelines, provided, of course, that the requirements of § 3582(c)(2) are met.").

27. See United States v. Garcia, 606 F.3d 209, 214 (5th Cir. 2010) (per curiam) (holding that "[t]he jurisdictional question is whether the sentence was "based on" the subsequently amended crack-offense Guidelines, and answering that question requires that we examine the nuances of both the plea agreement and the sentencing transcript in each particular case."); United States v. Franklin, 600 F.3d 893, 896 (7th Cir. 2010) (holding that some binding plea agreements may be eligible for re-sentencing if original sentence was based on the Guidelines); United States v. Bride, 581 F.3d 888, 891 (9th Cir. 2009) (holding that where a binding plea agreement is based on the Guidelines, it does not render the offender ineligible for re-sentencing).

28. See United States v. Sharkey, 543 F.3d 1236 (10th Cir. 2008) (holding that because Amendment 706 of the Sentencing Guidelines has no effect on the Guidelines for career offenders, prisoners sentenced as career offenders are not eligible for re-sentencing); United States v. Ayala-Pizarro, 551 F.3d 84, 85 (1st Cir. 2008) (holding that prisoners sentenced as career offenders are ineligible for re-sentencing); United States v. Caraballo, 552 F.3d 6, 10 (1st Cir. 2008)

but you were granted a departure so that you were ultimately sentenced based on the crack cocaine amount Guidelines, not the career offender Guidelines, you could be eligible.[29] Thus, it is still unclear whether prisoners sentenced as career offenders might be able to receive sentence reductions. If you were sentenced as a career offender, you may still want to apply for re-sentencing, but you should be aware that your request might be denied because you were sentenced as a career offender.

(f) Are You Eligible for Re-Sentencing if You Were Originally Sentenced to a Statutory Minimum Sentence?

If you were sentenced a statutory minimum sentence, for example sixty months for 5G or more of crack or 120 months for 50G or more of crack, it is likely that you are not eligible for re-sentencing. This is because the statutory minimum sentence overrides any reduction in the guideline range to a sentence below the minimum.[30]

3. Applying for Re-Sentencing

(a) How Do You Apply?

In order to apply for re-sentencing where the Sentencing Commission has lowered the Guidelines for your offense, you must file a motion under 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2)[31] in the district court where the original sentencing occurred. Section 3582(c)(2) permits courts to re-sentence defendants who were originally sentenced on the basis of a guideline that has subsequently been lowered and made retroactive by the Sentencing Commission.[32] You can find sample motions at the end of this Chapter.

Because it is still unclear whether you have a right to counsel if you wish to apply for re-sentencing,[33] you may need to create and file your application for re-sentencing on your own. This is called filing a motion pro se.

(i) How to File a Section 3582(c)(2) Motion Pro Se

In order to file a Section 3582(c)(2) motion pro se, you will need to prepare an application and submit it to the district court that handled your original sentencing. Before you begin your application, you should make sure you know some key facts about your own case: [34]

(1) Your criminal case number.
(2) Your base offense level—you can find this in the "Criminal Computation" section of your pre-sentence report or you can calculate it yourself.
(3) Your criminal history.
(4) The Sentencing Guideline range that was originally used in your sentencing.
(5) Your actual sentence.
(6) The new Sentencing Guideline range that would be applicable to your crime under the amended Guidelines.
(7) Whether you were sentenced pursuant to a binding plea agreement or as a career offender.
(8) Your disciplinary record and program participation during your incarceration.

Your application is a chance for you to argue that you are an ideal candidate for re-sentencing, but you should remember that the court will probably receive many of these kinds of motions from prisoners, so you

---

(holding that career offenders are not eligible for re-sentencing unless their sentence as a career offender would be lower under the amended Guidelines, which is highly unlikely).

29. United States v. McGee, 553 F.3d 225 (2d Cir. 2009) (holding that a prisoner who, despite his designation as a career offender, was actually sentenced based on the amount of crack cocaine in his possession, rather than the Guidelines for career offenders, was eligible for re-sentencing).

30. U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 1B1.10, cmt. n.1(A), § 5G1.1(b) (2008), a*vailable at* http://www.ussc.gov/2008guid/TABCON08.htm. The changes made to the mandatory minimum sentencing scheme in 2010 by the Fair Sentencing Act have not been made retroactive, which means the old mandatory minimums still apply to you if you were sentenced under them. See Part B(2)(a) of this Chapter for more on the Fair Sentencing Act.

31. 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2) (2006).

32. Office of Defender Services, Retroactivity of Crack Cocaine Amendments: Guidance to CJA Panel Attorneys, available at http://www.fd.org/odstb_CrackRetroactivity.htm (last visited September 25, 2009).

33. For more information on the right to counsel issue, see Part C(3) of this Chapter.

34. See Crack Amendment Guidelines, Pro Se Consultants, http://proseconsult.com/Prosemailnewsletteremailprint.aspx (last visited September 25, 2009); Office of Defender Services, Retroactivity of Crack Cocaine Amendments: Sample Motions and Orders, available at http://www.fd.org/odstb_CrackSampleMotions.htm. (last visited September 25, 2009).

may not want to make your application overly lengthy. Using the sample motions at the end of this chapter and filling in your own information is probably the simplest way to file an effective pro se motion.[35]

After you file your motion under Section 3582(c)(2), the judge may hold a re-sentencing hearing. At this hearing, the judge may consider factors set forth in 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a).[36] If you think that some of these factors might have an influence on your re-sentencing, you may want to try to explain them in your application. For example, you should mention any vocational or educational programs you have participated in while in prison, or other ways in which you can demonstrate your own rehabilitation. Better yet, if you have reason to think these factors will play an important role in your re-sentencing, you should apply to have an attorney appointed using the form in Appendix A of this Chapter.

(b) Are You Entitled to a Hearing?

Under the Sentencing Guidelines, you are entitled to a hearing whenever any important factor in the sentencing determination is "reasonably in dispute" or whenever a judge plans to consider facts not found at the original sentencing proceeding.[37] Typically, courts find that a hearing is appropriate whenever there is a legitimate question of fact. Some appellate courts have found abuse of discretion where the lower court refused to hold a Section 3582(c)(2) hearing and denied the prisoner's Section 3582(c)(2) motion for a sentence reduction.[38]

(c) Are You Entitled to be Represented by Counsel at a Section 3582(c)(2) Proceeding?

Because Section 1B1.10 of the Guidelines was recently amended, it is still unclear whether you are entitled to counsel at a Section 3582(c)(2) proceeding.[39] Section 1B1.10 was revised in May 2008 and now states that proceedings under Section 3582(c)(2) "do not constitute a full resentencing of the defendant."[40] Because of this, many courts have held that you do not have a right to counsel at a Section 3582(c)(2) proceeding.[41]

However, Section 1B1.10 calls for judges to reconsider factual circumstances surrounding the offense because it instructs them to consider the factors set forth in 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a).[42] Judges may also consider your post-sentencing conduct (such as your disciplinary record while incarcerated).[43] These kinds of factual determinations are characteristic of the kinds of proceedings where the Sixth Amendment[44] requires that defense counsel be available to defendants.[45] There are some cases suggesting that a prisoner might be

35. The Sample Document in Appendix B of this Chapter can serve as a template for your application.

36. These factors include the nature of the offense committed, the prior history and character of the prisoner, the need for the punishment to reflect the seriousness of the offense, the need to provide just punishment and protect the public, the need to avoid arbitrary sentencing differences among defendants with similar records who have been found guilty of similar conduct, and the need to provide restitution to victims.

37. U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 6A1.3 (2008) ("[w]hen any factor important to the sentencing determination is reasonably in dispute, the parties shall be given an adequate opportunity to present information to the court regarding that factor"); see also Federal Public & Community Defenders, Crack Retroactivity: Questions, Answers, Caselaw, Argument Outlines (Feb. 18, 2008), available at http://www.fd.org/pdf_lib/Defender.Authority.Combined.FINAL.2.18.0819.pdf (last visited September 25, 2009).

38. See United States v. Byfield, 391 F.3d 277, 280–81 (D.C. Cir. 2004) (finding that the lower court had abused its discretion by failing to hold an evidentiary hearing where prisoner's factual assertions in his § 3582(c)(2) motion raised "enough of a smidgeon to put the matter 'reasonably in dispute'") (citing U.S.S.G. § 6A1.3); United States v. Mueller, 168 F.3d 186, 189–90 (5th Cir. 1999) (holding that where a judge, in deciding a §3582(c)(2) motion, intends to consider evidence not presented in the defendant's pre-sentencing report, the judge must give notice to the prisoner and allow prisoner an opportunity to respond).

39. Memorandum from the Training Branch of the Office of Defender Services to Participants, National Sentencing Policy Institute on Appointment of Counsel in Crack Retroactivity Cases (Jun. 25, 2008), available at http://www.fd.org/pdf_lib/crack_appointment_of_counsel.pdf (last visited September 25, 2009).

40. U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 1B1.10(a)(3), p.s. (2008).

41. See, e.g., United States v. Webb, 565 F.3d 789, 794–95 (11th Cir. 2009) (holding that prisoners have no constitutional or statutory right to representation at § 3582(c)(2) proceedings); United States v. Harris, 568 F.3d 666, 668–69 (8th Cir. 2009) (same); United States v. Forman, 553 F.3d 585, 590 (7th Cir. 2009) (same); United States v. Legree, 205 F.3d 724, 730 (4th Cir. 2000) (same); United States v. Townsend, 98 F.3d 510, 512–13 (9th Cir.1996) (same); United States v. Reddick, 53 F.3d 462, 463–65 (2d Cir.1995) (same); United States v. Brown, 556 F.3d 1108, 1113 (10th Cir. 2009) (same).

42. U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 1B1.10, p.s., cmt. n.1(B)(i) (2008).

43. U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 1B1.10, p.s., cmt. n.1(B)(iii) (2008).

44. U.S. Const. amend. VI.

45. Federal Public & Community Defenders, Crack Retroactivity: Questions, Answers, Caselaw, Argument entitled to counsel at particular Section 3582(c)(2) hearings, but no court has found a general right to counsel during re-sentencing.[46]

If you wish to have an attorney represent you during the re-sentencing process and cannot afford to hire one, you can apply to have counsel appointed. The form at Appendix A-1 of this Chapter provides a template for your application to have an attorney appointed on your behalf.

(d) Are You Entitled to be Present at a Section 3582(c)(2) Hearing?

You are not generally entitled to be present at a Section 3582(c)(2) hearing. Under the Federal Rules of Evidence, proceedings under Section 3582(c) are exempt from the rule that a prisoner must be present at his sentencing.[47] You may also choose not to be present if your absence from prison would interfere with your housing, your work, or other obligations. However, if you have reason to believe that important facts relating to your case will be considered at the hearing, you can argue that you have a constitutional right to be present.[48]

(e) What Sentence Might You Receive if a Judge Grants Your Motion for Re-Sentencing?

Most likely, you will receive a sentence within the amended Guidelines. You may receive a sentence that is lower than the recommended sentence from the amended Guidelines if your original sentence was a downward departure from the sentence recommended by the old Guidelines.[49]

(f) May a Court Deny Your Motion for Re-Sentencing Even When the New Guidelines for Your Offense Have Been Lowered?

A court may deny your Section 3582(c)(2) motion even if it is clear that the Sentencing Commission has lowered the sentencing Guidelines for the offense for which you are serving time. A judge may choose not to re-sentence you if he finds that the factors listed in Section 3553(a), your post-conviction history, or concerns about public safety suggest that a reduction in your sentence would be inappropriate.[50]

Outlines (Feb. 18, 2008), available at http://www.fd.org/pdf_lib/Defender.Authority.Combined.FINAL.2.18.0819.pdf (last visited September 25, 2009).

46. See United States v. Robinson, 542 F.3d 1045, 1052 (5th Cir. 2008) (holding that where a prisoner convicted of selling crack cocaine moved for a sentence reduction by filing a §3582(c)(2) motion and requesting counsel, the interest of justice warranted appointment of counsel; the court refrained from definitively stating that all prisoners have a right to counsel at § 3582(c)(2) hearings); United States v. Reddick, 53 F.3d 462, 465 (2d Cir. 1995) (holding that appointment of counsel for § 3582(c)(2) application rests in the discretion of the district court); Mempa v. Rhay, 389 U.S. 128, 135, 88 S. Ct. 254, 257, 19 L. Ed. 2d. 336, 341 (1967) (holding that the 6th Amendment guarantees a right to counsel in a proceeding where a judge has to recommend a revised sentence to the parole board because "to the extent such recommendations are influential in determining the resulting sentence, the mitigating circumstances and in general aiding and assisting the defendant to present his case as to sentence is apparent."); Halbert v. Michigan, 545 U.S. 605, 610, 125 S. Ct. 2582, 2587, 162 L. Ed. 2d 552, 560 (2005) (finding that the Due Process and Equal Protection clauses of the Federal Constitution require that if an avenue for relief is provided by statute, the government may not "bolt the door to equal justice to indigent defendants."); Turnbow v. Estelle, 510 F.2d 127, 129 (5th Cir. 1975) (holding that there is a right to counsel whenever the judge can exercise some discretion and influence over the sentence imposed). See also Federal Public & Community Defenders, Crack Retroactivity: Questions, Answers, Caselaw, Argument Outlines (Feb. 18, 2008), available at http://www.fd.org/pdf_lib/Defender.Authority.Combined.FINAL.2.18.0819.pdf (last visited September 27, 2009) (arguing that prior case law finding no right to counsel under United States Sentencing Guidelines § 1B1.10 for § 3582(c)(2) proceedings is now obsolete because of the significant revisions of § 1B1.10 in 2008).

47. See Fed.R.Crim.P. 43(b)(4) (2009); United States v. Parrish, 427 F.3d 1345, 1347–48 (11th Cir. 2005) (holding a prisoner has no right to be present at a § 3582(c)(2) re-sentencing hearing and that Federal Rule of Procedure 43(b)(4) exempts proceedings under § 3582(c)(2) from the rule that a prisoner must be present at sentencing); United States v. Gainer, No. 08-12895, 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS (11th Cir. Dec. 17, 2008) (unpublished) (holding that a prisoner has no right to be present for a § 3582(c)(2) re-sentencing hearing); United States v. Jones, No. 08-1223-cr, 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 26029 (2d Dept. Oct. 29, 2008) (unpublished) (distinguishing United States v. DeMott and holding that prisoners who file § 3582(c)(2) motions for re-sentencing have no right to be present at a hearing). But see United States v. DeMott, 513 F.3d. 55 (2d Cir. 2008) (holding that defendant has a constitutional right to be present during re-sentencing, insofar as the proceeding is technically imposing a new sentence in place of the vacated sentence).

48. Federal Public & Community Defenders, Crack Retroactivity: Questions, Answers, Caselaw, Argument Outlines (Feb. 18, 2008), available at http://www.fd.org/pdf_lib/Defender.Authority.Combined.FINAL.2.18.0819.pdf (last visited September, 2009) (finding a possible constitutional right to be present at a re-sentencing hearing where important facts are in dispute).

49. Review Part B(2)(c) above.

50. U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 1B1.10, p.s., cmt. n.1(B) (2008).

4. Conclusion

In conclusion, the recent retroactive changes in the Federal Sentencing Guidelines for some drug offenses, especially those involving crack cocaine, make some prisoners currently serving sentences for federal drug convictions eligible to apply for sentence reductions under the new Guidelines. If the sentencing range for your offense has been lowered by the amendments, you may be eligible for re-sentencing. You should try to have an attorney appointed to your case or, if you are unable to get an attorney, you should file a re-sentencing application pro se.

C. Re-Sentencing For Drug Crimes in New York State

1. Introduction

In 2004, New York reformed the state's old Rockefeller drug laws by adopting the Drug Law Reform Act ("DLRA").[51] The DLRA took effect on January 13, 2005,[52] and changed sentencing ranges for drug offenses, generally by making sentences shorter. The new shorter sentence ranges automatically apply to anyone sentenced for a drug offense committed after January 13, 2005.[53] The DLRA also allows people currently serving sentences for A-I felony drug offenses under the old law to apply for re-sentencing under the new law.[54] A second law, which took effect on October 29, 2005, also allows some people serving sentences for A-II felony drug convictions to apply for re-sentencing under the new law.[55] The New York state legislature also adopted new re-sentencing policies in a public protection budget bill in April, 2009.[56] The bill created a new provision of the criminal procedure law that allows certain people currently serving sentences for Class B felony drug offenses to apply for re-sentencing.[57] This means that if you are serving a sentence for an A-I, A-II, or Class B felony drug offense, and you were sentenced under the old laws, you may be able to have your sentence reduced under the new laws. This Chapter describes who is allowed to apply for re-sentencing, which new sentences you could receive if you apply, and how to apply for re-sentencing. Section 2 of this Part describes who is eligible to apply for re-sentencing. Section 3 describes what happens if you decide to apply. Section 4 explains how to apply for re-sentencing. Appendix B at the end of the Chapter provides forms you will need to apply for re-sentencing.

2. Eligibility: Who Is Allowed to Apply?

If you are serving time for a felony drug offense, you must first determine whether you are eligible for re-sentencing. Re-sentencing is only available to people who were convicted of A-I, A-II, and Class B felony drug offenses and are currently serving time for those offenses in the custody of the New York State Department of Corrections. The A-I felony drug offenses are criminal possession of a controlled substance in the first degree,[58] criminal sale of a controlled substance in the first degree,[59] and operating as a major trafficker.[60] The A-II felony drug offenses are criminal possession of a controlled substance in the second degree[61] and criminal sale of a controlled substance in the second degree.[62] The Class B felony drug offenses are criminal possession of a controlled substance in the third degree,[63] criminal sale of a controlled substance in the third degree,[64] criminal sale of a controlled substance in or near school grounds,[65] criminal sale of a 51. 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 738 (A. 11895, S. 7802).

52. 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 738 (A. 11895, S. 7802).
53. People v. Nelson, 21 A.D.3d 861, 862, 804 N.Y.S.2d 1, 1 (1st Dept. 2005) (holding that new sentencing ranges under the DLRA do not apply to persons sentenced for offenses committed before January 13, 2005, even where sentencing takes place after January 13, 2005). New York's highest court, the New York Court of Appeals, upheld this decision in the consolidated appeals of three inmates in People v. Utsey, 7 N.Y.3d 398, 855 N.E.2d 791, 822 N.Y.S.2d 475 (2006).
54. 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 738 (A. 11895, S. 7802).
55. 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 643 (S. 5880).
56. 2009 N.Y. ALS 56 (Apr. 9, 2009), codified at N.Y. Crim. Pro. L. § 440.46.
57. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.46 (2010).
58. N.Y. Penal Law § 220.21 (2010).
59. N.Y. Penal Law § 220.43 (McKinney 2005).
60. N.Y. Penal Law § 220.77.
61. N.Y. Penal Law § 220.18 (2010).
62. N.Y. Penal Law § 220.41 (2010).
63. N.Y. Penal Law § 220.16 (2010).
64. N.Y. Penal Law § 220.39 (2010).
65. N.Y. Penal Law § 220.44 (2010).

controlled substance to a child,[66] and unlawful manufacture of methamphetamine in the first degree.[67] These offenses are all described in Section 220 of the New York Penal Law.[68] There are different re-sentencing eligibility requirements for people who are serving sentences for A-I, A-II, and Class B felony drug offenses.

(a) If You Are Serving a Sentence for an A-I Felony Drug Conviction

Generally, if you are serving an indeterminate sentence for an A-I felony drug offense and you were sentenced under the old law, you may apply for re-sentencing.[69] But there are some requirements: The law has been interpreted to mean that you must be "in the custody of the Department of Correctional Services" to qualify for re-sentencing.[70] A defendant who is incarcerated for a parole violation after being released from prison for his original A-I sentence is not considered to be "in the custody of the Department of Correctional Services" and cannot apply for re-sentencing under the Drug Reform Laws.[71]

To be eligible for A-I re-sentencing, you also must have been subjected to an indeterminate length of imprisonment of 15 or more years.[72] If you were sentenced to an A-I felony of 15 or more years, but then had your sentence commuted to less than 15 years, you might not be eligible for re-sentencing under an A-I felony drug offense.[73] However, you should look to Subsections (b) and (c) below to see whether you are eligible for re-sentencing under an A-II felony drug conviction or a Class B felony drug conviction, respectively.[74]

(b) If You Are Serving a Sentence for an A-II Felony Drug Conviction

If you are serving a sentence for an A-II felony drug offense and you were sentenced under the old law, you may apply for re-sentencing if you meet two further requirements.[75] The first requirement is the "Time to Parole Eligibility" requirement. This sets Guidelines on how long it must be until you are eligible for parole under your current sentence. The second requirement is the "Merit Time Eligibility" requirement. This concerns whether you are currently eligible for a merit time reduction. Both of these requirements are explained below. If you meet both of them, and you are serving a sentence for an A-II felony drug offense under the old law, then you may apply for re-sentencing.

(i) The Time to Parole Eligibility Requirement

The first requirement is that you must be a certain period of time away from being eligible for parole under your current sentence. This period has been determined by the New York courts to be three years, although the law itself does not clearly state how many years are required.[76] The law only says you must be "more than twelve months from being an eligible inmate as that term is defined in Subdivision 2 of Section 851 of the correction law."[77] An "eligible" person, according to Subdivision 2 of Section 851, is a prisoner "who is eligible for release on parole or who will become eligible for release on parole or conditional release within two years."[78] In practice, the courts have stated that this means that you must be three years away from parole eligibility.[79] But, since this meaning of "eligible" has two parts—"eligible for release on parole"

---

66. N.Y. Penal Law § 220.48 (2010).
67. N.Y. Penal Law § 220.75 (2010).
68. N.Y. Penal Law § 220 (2010).
69. 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 738 (A. 11895, S. 7802).
70. People v. Bagby, 11 Misc. 3d 882, 886, 816 N.Y.S.2d 302, 304 (Sup. Ct. Westchester County 2006) (holding (1) that defendant whose A-I felony sentence was commuted to eight and one third years to life was not eligible for re-sentencing for an A-I offense; (2) that a defendant who has been placed on parole for an A-I or A-II offense, violates that parole, and is then incarcerated as a result of his parole violation, is not eligible for re-sentencing; and (3) that only those defendants incarcerated on their original prison sentence have a mechanism for resentencing).
71. People v. Bagby, 11 Misc. 3d 882, 886, 816 N.Y.S.2d 302, 304 (Sup. Ct. Westchester County 2006). But see People v. Figueroa, 894 N.Y.S.2d 724, 732, 736–39 (Sup. Ct. New York County 2010) (holding that neither the Drug Law Reform Act of 2009 nor the Drug Law Reform Act of 2004 bars parole violators from resentencing).
72. People v. Bagby, 11 Misc. 3d 882, 890, 816 N.Y.S.2d 302, 309 (Sup. Ct. Westchester County 2006).
73. People v. Bagby, 11 Misc. 3d 882, 890, 816 N.Y.S.2d 302, 309 (Sup. Ct. Westchester County 2006).
74. People v. Bagby, 11 Misc. 3d 882, 890, 816 N.Y.S.2d 302, 309 (Sup. Ct. Westchester County 2006).
75. 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 643 (S. 5880).
76. See People v. Bautista, 26 A.D.3d 230, 230–31, 809 N.Y.S.2d 62, 63 (1st Dept. 2006) (holding that in order to be eligible for re-sentencing under the 2005 law, a prisoner serving time for an A-II drug felony must be at least three years away from his first possible parole date), appeal granted, 6 N.Y.3d 831, 847 N.E.2d 376, 814 N.Y.S.2d 79 (2006), appeal dismissed, People v. Bautista, 7 N.Y.3d 838, 857 N.E.2d 49, 823 N.Y.S.2d 754 (2006).ok
77. 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 643 (S. 5880).
78. N.Y. Correct. Law § 851(2) (McKinney 2005).
79. See People v. Thomas, 35 A.D.3d 895, 826 N.Y.S.2d 456 (3d Dept. 2006) (holding that defendant who was and "who will become eligible for release on parole or conditional release within two years"—there are two possible meanings of the time to parole eligibility requirement in the re-sentencing law. However, only the three-year requirement has been followed in New York.

(1) The Established Meaning of the Time to Parole Eligibility Requirement in New York

Basically, this requirement for re-sentencing means that you must be more than three years away from becoming eligible for release on parole or conditional release.[80] This was decided by the Appellate Division First Department in 2006.[81] The New York Court of Appeals (the state's highest court) agreed, denying appeal. The three-year requirement for eligibility has been followed by the Appellate Division in the Second, Third, and Fourth Departments in later cases.[82]

For example, if you will become eligible for release on parole or conditional release on December 1, 2014, you may apply for re-sentencing on or before November 30, 2011, but not on or after December 1, 2011. If you file your application with the court more than three years before your earliest possible release date under your current sentence, you will be eligible for re-sentencing.

You should be aware that if you have already become eligible for parole and have been denied parole, it is likely that you are not eligible for re-sentencing. Once you have been granted a parole hearing and your request has been denied, your next parole hearing will be scheduled within two years of your last hearing. So, once you have come up for parole and been denied, you are always "eligible for release on parole within two years" and are therefore ineligible for re-sentencing because you fail to meet the Time to Parole Eligibility Requirement.[83]

(2) Measuring Time to Parole Eligibility

Time to Parole Eligibility is measured from the date that the court receives your application for re-sentencing.[84] The day that you file the application with the court must be more than three years from your convicted of an A-II felony drug offense was not eligible for re-sentencing under the Drug Law Reform Act, because the defendant was eligible for parole within three years); People v. Parris, 35 A.D.3d 891, 828 N.Y.S.2d 429 (2d Dept. 2006) (holding that, since defendant was less than three years away from eligibility for parole, defendant could not seek re-sentencing under Chapter 643); People v. Nolasco, 37 A.D.3d 622, 831 N.Y.S.2d 197 (2d Dept. 2007) (holding that because defendant was less than three years from parole, he was an "eligible inmate" in the meaning of Chapter 643 and was not allowed to proceed with a motion for re-sentencing); People v. Perez, 44 A.D.3d 418, 843 N.Y.S.2d 68 (1st Dept. 2007) (holding that the Supreme Court was not required to assign counsel or conduct a hearing for a defendant who was less than three years from parole eligibility when he filed a motion for re-sentencing since defendant was ineligible for re-sentencing); People v. Corley, 45 A.D.3d 857, 847 N.Y.S.2d 148 (2d Dept. 2007) (holding that a defendant who had already been denied parole and whose motion for re-sentencing would always be less than three years away from the next parole hearing was not eligible for re-sentencing).

---

80. This determination is reached by adding the "more than twelve months" requirement to the "release within two years" requirement from the definition of "eligible" in Subdivision 2 of Section 851. N.Y. Correct. Law § 851(2) (McKinney 2005).

81. People v. Bautista, 26 A.D.3d 230, 809 N.Y.S.2d 62 (1st Dept. 2006).

82. See People v. Thomas, 35 A.D.3d 895, 896, 826 N.Y.S.2d 456, 457 (3d Dept. 2006) (holding that the two provisions of Subdivision 2 of Section 851 when read together require that in order to qualify for re-sentencing under the 2005 DLRA, a class A-II felony drug offender must not be eligible for parole within three years); People v. Parris, 35 A.D.3d 891, 892, 828 N.Y.S.2d 429, 430 (2d Dept. 2006) (holding that Chapter 643 does not apply to inmates who are three or fewer years from eligibility for parole); People v. Nolasco, 37 A.D.3d 622, 623, 831 N.Y.S.2d 197, 198 (2d Dept. 2007) (denying defendants motion for re-sentencing because he was fewer than three years from parole eligibility); People v. Corley, 45 A.D.3d 857, 858, 847 N.Y.S.2d 148, 149, (2d Dept. 2007) (holding that because "defendant's next parole hearing will always be less than three years away from any date he moves for resentencing in the future … chapter 643 does not and will not afford him the right to move for resentencing"); People v. Smith, 45 A.D.3d 1478, 1479, 846 N.Y.S.2d 520, 521 (4th Dept. 2007) (holding that the defendant could not be resentenced because she was eligible for parole within seven months); People v. Dunham, 46 A.D.3d 1416, 1417, 847 N.Y.S.2d 506, 506 (4th Dept. 2007) (denying application for re-sentencing because defendant was eligible for parole within two years); People v. Mills, 48 A.D.3d 1108, 1108, 849 N.Y.S.2d 855, 855 (4th Dept. 2008) (finding applicant ineligible for re-sentencing because he was scheduled to appear before the parole board within two years after his initial parole denial).

83. People v. Mills, No. 9854, slip op. at 7 (N.Y. Ct. App. Dec. 17, 2008) (holding that a prisoner who had been denied parole four times in eight years was not eligible for re-sentencing because he was necessarily within two years of his next parole hearing).

84. See, e.g., People v. Perez, 44 A.D.3d 418, 419, 843 N.Y.S.2d 68, 68 (1st Dept. 2007) (holding that a prisoner who was less than three years away from becoming eligible for parole at the time of his application was ineligible for re-sentencing); People v. Then, 47 A.D.3d 404, 405, 849 N.Y.S.2d 234, 235 (1st Dept. 2008) (stating that a prisoner must be more than three years away from becoming eligible for parole at the time of his application for re-sentencing); parole date. The three years should be counted from the day you file the application; the Appellate Division First Department noted in People v. Perez that, since the defendant "was less than three years from his parole eligibility date when he filed the motion," he was ineligible for re-sentencing.[85] The court looked at the date of the motion for re-sentencing to measure the time to parole, and denied it because the application was filed within three years of parole eligibility. Other courts in New York have followed the same procedure to determine whether prisoners were eligible for re-sentencing. Therefore, if possible, you should make sure you file your re-sentencing application with the court more than three years before your earliest possible release date.

A further issue under the 2005 DLRA is how to measure the three years from parole if you are serving cumulative sentences for an A-II felony along with other crimes. The government has argued that eligibility for re-sentencing should be based only on the time left in serving the A-II felony sentence. This would mean that if you have served two years of a four-year A-II sentence, but also have more than three years to serve for another sentence, you would not be eligible for re-sentencing. The Appellate Division, however, has not followed this argument. The First Department said that defendant's parole eligibility date was the date he would be eligible for parole on his cumulative sentence for both A-I and A-II felonies—not the date he would be eligible for parole if he was just serving his A-II felony.[86] The court stated that "[t]he pivotal measuring rod is not the time remaining on an A-II felony sentence, but the time before an inmate becomes an 'eligible inmate'"—in other words, when the inmate will actually be up for parole.[87] Therefore, you should file your application with the court more than three years before your earliest possible release date.

(ii) The Merit Time Eligibility Requirement

The second requirement is that you are eligible to receive a merit time reduction of your current sentence. As with the first requirement, the re-sentencing law states this requirement indirectly. Specifically, the re-sentencing law says that you must meet "the eligibility requirements of paragraph (d) of Subdivision 1 of Section 803 of the correction law."[88] In order to meet the merit time requirements for the purposes of the DLRA, you "must be serving a sentence of one year or more, be in the Correction Department's custody as of certain periods of time, not have been convicted of certain crimes, not have committed a 'serious disciplinary infraction' or commenced a frivolous civil lawsuit or other civil proceeding against a state agency, officer or employee, and have participated in certain programs."[89] The requirement that prisoners serving sentences for certain types of crimes are ineligible for merit time is found in Section 803(d)(1) of the New York Correction Law.[90] These crimes are listed below, in Subsection (1) of this Section. If you are serving time for one of the disqualifying offenses listed below, you do not meet the merit time eligibility requirement for re-sentencing, and you may not apply for re-sentencing.

(1) Eligibility for Merit Time Under New York Correction Law § 803(1)(d): Disqualifying Offenses

If you are serving time for certain types of offenses in addition to the A-II felony drug offense, you are not eligible for merit time under Section 803(1)(d) of the New York Correction Law, and therefore you are not eligible to apply for re-sentencing. The disqualifying offenses are:

(1) Any non-drug class A-I felony;
(2) Any violent felony offense as defined in Section 70.02 of the New York Penal Law;[91]
(3) Manslaughter in the second degree;
(4) Vehicular manslaughter in the first or second degree;
(5) Criminally negligent homicide
(6) Any sex offense defined in Article 130 of the New York Penal Law;[92]
(7) Incest;
(8) Any sexual performance by a child offense defined in Article 263 of the New York Penal Law;[93] and

---

Memorandum from Al O'Connor, New York State Defenders Association, to Chief Defenders at 3 (Oct. 5, 2005, revised Oct. 24, 2005), available at http://www.mcacp.org/Rockefeller_Memo_A2.pdf.

85. People v. Perez, 44 A.D.3d 418, 419, 843 N.Y.S.2d 68, 68 (1st Dept. 2007).
86. People v. Paniagua, 45 A.D.3d 98, 105, 841 N.Y.S.2d 506, 511 (1st Dept. 2007).
87. People v. Paniagua, 45 A.D.3d 98, 105, 841 N.Y.S.2d 506, 512 (1st Dept. 2007).
88. 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 643 (S. 5880).
89. People v. Paniagua, 45 A.D.3d 98, 106, 841 N.Y.S.2d 506, 513 (1st Dept. 2007).
90. N.Y. Correct. Law § 803(1)(d)(ii) (McKinney 2010).
91. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.02 (McKinney 2010).
92. N.Y. Penal Law §§ 130.00–130.96 (McKinney 2010).

(9) Aggravated harassment of an employee by a prisoner.[94]

A question arises over whether you are eligible for re-sentencing if you were sentenced for both a disqualifying offense and a drug offense, and you have arguably finished serving the sentence for the disqualifying offense. For example, if you were sentenced to two years' imprisonment for a disqualifying offense, to be served concurrently or consecutively with a longer prison term for an A-II felony drug offense, and you have already served four years, it appears that you are no longer serving time for the disqualifying offense. It is possible that you could apply for re-sentencing, but you need to argue in your application that you are no longer serving the sentence for the disqualifying offense. This argument will likely be unsuccessful because two recent cases indicate that a defendant whose sentence originally included a disqualifying offense will not be re-sentenced.[95] The first case is People v. Merejildo,[96] in which the defendant was serving a consecutive sentence of two to four years for a violent felony, and eight years to life for an A-II felony. After serving more than four years, the defendant sought re-sentencing under DLRA, and argued that he was no longer serving the disqualifying offense. The court said, though, that "[p]ursuant to Penal Law §70.30(1)(b), defendant's consecutive sentences are merged into a single aggregate sentence, with a term of ten years to life."[97] This meant that the defendant was still considered to be serving for the disqualifying violent felony and was not eligible for re-sentencing.

A similar argument was unsuccessful for a defendant serving a concurrent sentence in People v. Quiñones, a 2008 decision by the New York Appellate Division First Department.[98] In that case, a defendant was sentenced to a violent felony offense (a disqualifying offense) with a maximum sentence of seven years along with a concurrent life sentence for class A-II felony violations. After serving more than seven years, Quiñones applied for re-sentencing and argued that he had finished serving the disqualifying offense. The court disagreed and said that since his sentence was concurrent, Quiñones remained imprisoned for a sentence that included a disqualifying offense. The defendant was therefore ineligible for re-sentencing.

The decisions in Merejildo and Quiñones mean that if you were simultaneously sentenced for a disqualifying offense and an A-II offense, you will be unlikely to successfully argue that you have finished serving the disqualifying offense, and you will therefore not be re-sentenced under the DLRA.

You are also probably not eligible to apply for re-sentencing if you were on parole for any one of the disqualifying offenses at the time that you were charged with the A-II felony drug offense. If this is your situation, the time owed to parole on the first sentence was probably added to the A-II felony drug sentence. This would make you ineligible for merit time and therefore ineligible for re-sentencing under the new law.[99]

You probably meet the merit time eligibility requirement if you are not serving time for any of the disqualifying offenses listed above (or listed in Section 803(1)(d)(ii) of the New York Correction Law), and if you were not on parole for any of those offenses at the time that you were charged with the A-II felony drug offense.[100] However, the judge may also look at the other restrictions on granting merit time that are included in Correction Law Section 803(1)(d). These restrictions are discussed below, in Subsection (b).

(2) Other Restrictions on Merit Time Under New York Correction Law § 803(1)(d)

Courts have noted other restrictions that might apply to merit time allowances in re-sentencing under the DLRA, according to Section 803(1)(d). "[T]o obtain a merit time allowance a defendant must … not have been convicted of certain crimes, not have committed a 'serious disciplinary infraction' or commenced a frivolous civil lawsuit or other civil proceeding against a state agency, officer or employee, and have participated in certain programs."[101] This means that there is a possibility that a judge may decide that you

93. N.Y. Penal Law §§ 263.00–263.30 (McKinney 2010).

94. N.Y. Correct. Law § 803(1)(d)(ii) (McKinney 2010) (listing all of the disqualifying offenses).

95. People v. Merejildo, 45 A.D.3d 429, 430, 846 N.Y.S.2d 52, 53 (1st Dept. 2007); People v. Quiñones, 49 A.D.3d 323, 854 N.Y.S.2d 5 (1st Dept. 2008).

96. People v. Merejildo, 45 A.D.3d 429, 430, 846 N.Y.S.2d 52, 53 (1st Dept. 2007).

97. People v. Merejildo, 45 A.D.3d 429, 430, 846 N.Y.S.2d 52, 53 (1st Dept. 2007) (citing People v. Curley, 285 A.D.2d 274, 730 N.Y.S.2d 625 (4th Dept. 2001), lv. denied, 97 N.Y.2d 607, 738 N.Y.S.2d 290, 764 N.E.2d 394 (2001)).

98. People v. Quiñones, 49 A.D.3d 323, 854 N.Y.S.2d 5, 6 (1st Dept. 2008).

99. See Memorandum from Al O'Connor, New York State Defenders Association, to Chief Defenders at 2 (Oct. 5, 2005, revised Oct. 24, 2005), available at http://www.communityalternatives.org/pdf/A-II%20%20Resentencing%20Memo%20Revised%20NYSDA.pdf.

100. See Memorandum from Al O'Connor, New York State Defenders Association, to Chief Defenders at 2 (Oct. 5, 2005, revised Oct. 24, 2005), available at http://www.communityalternatives.org/pdf/A-II%20%20Resentencing%20Memo%20Revised%20NYSDA.pdf.

101. People v. Paniagua, 45 A.D.3d 98, 106, 841 N.Y.S.2d 506, 513 (1st Dept. 2007).

are ineligible for merit time—and therefore ineligible for re-sentencing—if you have a serious disciplinary infraction on your prison record or if, while you were in prison, you filed or proceeded with a lawsuit that was dismissed as frivolous.[102] This is the view expressed by the court in People v. Hill when describing the requirements: "To be eligible for re-sentencing under this legislation, a defendant must … meet the eligibility requirement of Correction Law § 803(1) (which requires a defendant be eligible to earn 'merit time,' which means the defendant cannot also be serving another sentence for which merit time is not available, such as certain sex offenses, all violent felony offenses, any homicide, or if the defendant has a poor disciplinary record, or has been found to have filed a frivolous lawsuit)."[103] In other words, even if you are not serving time for any of the disqualifying offenses, a judge might decide that you do not meet the merit time eligibility requirement for re-sentencing because, under Correction Law § 803(1)(d)(iv), you could not be granted merit time. This Section states that "allowance shall be withheld for any serious disciplinary infraction or upon a judicial determination that the person, while an inmate, commenced or continued a civil action, proceeding or claim that was found to be frivolous."[104]

However, in the way most courts apply the law, the re-sentencing law only requires that you be eligible for merit time under Correction Law § 803(1)(d), rather than requiring that you actually earned merit time under Correction Law § 803(1)(d). Therefore, a serious disciplinary infraction or a frivolous lawsuit or legal claim on your record does not necessarily prevent you from fulfilling the merit time eligibility requirement.[105] In December 2005, the Supreme Court of New York County held, in People v. Quiñones, that a serious disciplinary infraction does not hurt eligibility for re-sentencing under the new law.[106] That decision was endorsed by the Supreme Court, Appellate Division Second Department, in People v. Sanders.[107] The court stated, "the reference in the 2005 DLRA to the 'eligibility requirements' of Correction Law Section 803(1)(d), does not preclude a defendant from whom a merit time allowance has been withheld pursuant to Correction Law § 803(1)(d)(iv), from seeking re-sentencing under the 2005 DLRA."[108] This means that eligibility for re-sentencing under the Drug Reforms laws is different than under Section 803(1)(d) as a whole, and under the DLRA the only requirement that matters for merit time eligibility is that you are not serving time for a disqualifying offense.

However, the Supreme Court, Appellate Division First Department and the Supreme Court, Appellate Division Third Department both disagree. In People v. Paniagua, the First Department court held that the defendant was ineligible for merit time because he committed two serious disciplinary infractions. The court noted that a "'serious disciplinary infraction' is defined in the regulations of the Department of Correctional Services to include [actions resulting in the] 'receipt of disciplinary sanctions' that entail '60 or more days of SHU [Special Housing Unit] and/or keeplock time' [or] the 'receipt of any recommended loss of good time as a disciplinary sanction.'"[109] The defendant in People v. Paniagua argued that since he had not committed a disqualifying offense, such as a violent felony, he had met the eligibility requirements of "earning" a merit time allowance. He argued that this was all that was necessary to meet the merit time requirement for re-sentencing. The court here took a stricter view, holding that the defendant must have both earned and been granted merit time allowance in order to meet the requirement. The court stated:

---

102. See Memorandum from Al O'Connor, New York State Defenders Association, to Chief Defenders at 2 (Oct. 5, 2005, revised Oct. 24, 2005), available at http://www.communityalternatives.org/pdf/A-II%20%20Resentencing%20Memo%20Revised%20NYSDA.pdf.

103. People v. Hill, 11 Misc. 3d 1053(A), 814 N.Y.S.2d 892 (Sup. Ct. Kings County 2006) (holding that a prisoner who was serving time for an A-II felony and a violent felony was ineligible for re-sentencing because he failed to meet the merit time eligibility requirement).

104. N.Y. Correct. Law § 803(1)(d)(iv) (McKinney 2010).

105. See People v. Quiñones, 11 Misc. 3d 582, 597, 812 N.Y.S.2d 259, 270 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 2005) (holding that the merit time eligibility requirement of the A-II re-sentencing law only requires that a prisoner not be serving time for any of the disqualifying offenses listed in N.Y. Correct. Law § 803(1)(d)(ii), and not that the prisoner meet any of the other requirements for actual granting of merit time). See also Memorandum from Al O'Connor, New York State Defenders Association, to Chief Defenders at 4 (Oct. 5, 2005, revised Oct. 24, 2005) available at http://www.communityalternatives.org/pdf/A-II%20%20Resentencing%20Memo%20Revised%20NYSDA.pdf. But, note that the New York Department of Corrections, prior to the decision in Quiñones, has taken the position that prisoners with serious disciplinary infractions and prisoners found to have filed frivolous lawsuits while in prison do not meet the merit time eligibility requirement. Memorandum from Anthony J. Annucci, Deputy Commissioner and Counsel for N.Y. Dept. of Corr. Servs., to Criminal Justice Practitioners, at 2 (Sept. 20, 2005) (on file with the JLM).

106. People v. Quiñones, 11 Misc. 3d 582, 598, 812 N.Y.S.2d 259, 271 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 2005).

107. People v. Sanders, 36 A.D.3d 944, 829 N.Y.S.2d 187 (2d Dept. 2007).

108. People v. Sanders, 36 A.D.3d 944, 946, 829 N.Y.S.2d 187 (2d Dept. 2007).

109. People v. Paniagua, 45 A.D.3d 98, 107, 841 N.Y.S.2d 506, 513–14 (1st Dept. 2007) (citations omitted); N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 280.2(b)(3)–(4) (2006).

> Thus, the requirements set forth in § 803(1)(d)(iv), no less than those in § 803(1)(d)(i) and (ii), constitute the "eligibility" requirements for the grant of merit time. Nothing in the 2005 DLRA or § 803(1)(d) supports defendant's argument that the phrase "eligibility requirements" refers only to the requirements for earning a merit time allowance, and not also to those for being granted one.[110]

In 2008, the Third Department decided People v. Williams, finding that a prisoner who had incurred serious disciplinary infractions during his incarceration was not eligible for re-sentencing because he failed to meet the merit time eligibility requirement. The court specifically adopted the First Department's reasoning in People v. Paniagua and stated:

> Here, it is undisputed that defendant has been found to have committed numerous disciplinary infractions while incarcerated which resulted in sanctions being imposed that exceeded 60 days in the special housing unit and/or keeplock. As a result of these infractions, defendant is not eligible for a merit time allowance under the provisions of Correction Law § 803(1)(d) and, as such, is not eligible for resentencing under DLRA 2005.[111]

Thus, there is disagreement between the departments about whether being eligible for merit time requires 803(1)(d)(iv) (freedom from serious disciplinary infractions or frivolous lawsuits) in addition to 803(1)(d)(ii) (freedom from a disqualifying offense). In the First and Third Departments, the court may find that you are not eligible for re-sentencing if you have committed a "serious disciplinary infraction."[112] You will have to argue, consistent with the Second Department's reasoning in People v. Sanders. that Section 803(1)(d)(i) and (ii) are the only requirements for being "eligible for merit time." Additionally, you probably do not have to meet the work or program assignment requirement described in New York Correction Law Section 803(1)(d)(iv). This statute, effective until September 2011, also states that you may be granted merit time when you successfully obtain one of the following: your general equivalency diploma (GED), an alcohol and substance abuse treatment certificate, a vocational trade certificate after six months of vocational programming, or completion of 400 hours of community service as part of a community work crew.[113] In fact, the opinion in Paniagua suggests that participation in these programs is included under the eligibility requirements of the DLRA.[114] However, most courts adhere to the position taken by the Second Department in People v. Sanders, which does not require participation in the programs listed above; therefore, you probably do not need to participate in any of these programs in order to be considered eligible for merit time.[115]

(c) If You Are Serving a Sentence for a Class B Felony Drug Conviction

If you are serving an indeterminant sentence with a maximum term of more than three years for a Class B felony drug offense, committed before January 13, 2005, you may apply for re-sentencing.[116] Moreover, as part of the re-sentencing application, you may also move to be re-sentenced for Class C, D, or E felony drug offenses for which you received a sentence at the same time or in the same judicial order as the underlying

---

110. People v. Paniagua, 45 A.D.3d 98, 108, 841 N.Y.S.2d 506, 514 (1st Dept. 2007).

111. People v. Williams, 48 A.D.3d 858, 859–60, 850 N.Y.S. 2d 717, 718 (3rd Dept. 2008).

112. See People v. Paniagua, 45 A.D.3d 98, 108, 841 N.Y.S.2d 506, 514 (1st Dept. 2007) (finding a prisoner ineligible for merit time based on two serious disciplinary infractions while incarcerated); People v. Williams, 48 A.D.3d 858, 859–60, 850 N.Y.S. 2d 717, 718 (3d Dept. 2008) (concluding that inmate who committed serious disciplinary infractions was ineligible for merit time and therefore could not apply for resentencing under DLRA). See also N.Y. Correct. Law § 803(1)(a) (McKinney 2009) ("Such allowances may be granted for good behavior and efficient and willing performance of duties assigned or progress and achievement in an assigned treatment program, and may be withheld, forfeited or canceled in whole or in part for bad behavior, violation of institutional rules or failure to perform properly in the duties or program assigned."); N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 280.2(b) (2006).

113. N.Y. Correct. Law § 803(1)(d)(iv) (2010).

114. People v. Paniagua, 45 A.D.3d 98, 106, 108, 841 N.Y.S.2d 506, 513, 514 (1st Dept. 2007).

115. See, e.g., People v. Quiñones, 11 Misc.3d 582, 595–96, 812 N.Y.S.2d 259, 269 (Sup. Ct. 2005); see also New York State Senate Introducer's Memorandum in Support of Bill No. S. 5880, Governor's Bill Jacket, L 2005, ch 643, at 2 ("The law is intended to apply to those class A-II felony controlled substance offenders who are eligible to earn merit time, but is not intended to require that they have earned the merit time allowance before they may apply for resentencing pursuant to the provisions of this bill.").

116. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.46.1 (McKinney 2010).

Class B felony drug offense.[117] The applications for resentencing under this provision are governed by the provisions of the 2004 DLRA for A-II felony drug offenses, and courts are instructed to consider your disciplinary history and your participation or willingness to participate in treatment or other programming while serving your sentence when determining whether you are eligible for re-sentencing.[118]

However, you are ineligible to apply for re-sentencing under the 2009 DLRA if you committed a so-called "exclusion offense."[119] You are ineligible if you were convicted within the preceding ten years of a violent felony[120] or of a felony that makes you ineligible for merit-time allowance under Section 803(1)(d)(ii) (as

117. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.46.2 (McKinney 2010).
118. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.46.3 (McKinney 2010).
119. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.46.5 (McKinney 2010).
120. These include:
    (1) Class B violent felony offenses, which are:
        a. Attempted murder in the second degree
        b. Attempted kidnapping in the first degree
        c. Attempted arson in the first degree
        d. Manslaughter in the first degree
        e. Aggravated manslaughter in the first degree
        f. Rape in the first degree
        g. Criminal sexual act in the first degree
        h. Aggravated sexual abuse in the first degree
        i. Course of sexual conduct against a child in the first degree
        j. Assault in the first degree
        k. Kidnapping in the second degree
        l. Burglary in the first degree
        m. Arson in the second degree
        n. Robbery in the first degree
        o. Incest in the first degree
        p. Criminal possession of a weapon in the first degree
        q. Criminal use of a firearm in the first degree
        r. Criminal sale of a firearm in the first degree
        s. Aggravated assault upon a police officer or a peace officer
        t. Gang assault in the first degree
        u. Intimidating a victim or witness in the first degree
        v. Hindering prosecution of terrorism in the first degree
        w. Criminal possession of a chemical weapon or biological weapon in the second degree
        x. Criminal use of a chemical weapon or biological weapon in the third degree
    (2) Class C violent felony offenses, which are:
        a. Attempts to commit any of the class B felonies specified above
        b. Aggravated criminally negligent homicide
        c. Aggravated manslaughter in the second degree
        d. Aggravated sexual abuse in the second degree
        e. Assault on a peace officer, police officer, fireman or emergency medical services professional
        f. Gang assault in the second degree
        g. Strangulation in the first degree
        h. Burglary in the second degree
        i. Robbery in the second degree
        j. Criminal possession of a weapon in the second degree
        k. Criminal use of a firearm in the second degree
        l. Criminal sale of a firearm in the second degree
        m. Criminal sale of a firearm with the aid of a minor
        n. Soliciting or providing support for an act of terrorism in the first degree
        o. Hindering prosecution of terrorism in the second degree
        p. Criminal possession of a chemical weapon or biological weapon in the third degree
    (3) Class D violent felony offenses, which are:
        a. Attempts to commit any of the Class C felonies described above
        b. Reckless assault of a child
        c. Assault in the second degree
        d. Menacing a police officer or peace officer
        e. Stalking in the first degree
        f. Strangulation in the second degree
        g. Rape in the second degree
        h. Criminal sexual act in the second degree discussed above), or if you were ever adjudicated a second violent felony offender or a persistent violent felony offender.[121]

(i) The Meaning of "In Custody"

Courts have interpreted these eligibility requirements as stipulating that an applicant must be in the custody of the Department of Corrective Services (DOCS) at the time of the court's decision on re-sentencing, rather than at the time the application was filed.[122] In People v. Tavarez, for example, the court explicitly applied appellate court precedent under the 2004 and 2005 DLRAs finding defendants ineligible for re-sentencing once released on parole, even if they were subsequently returned to Department of Corrective Services custody.[123] The court held that this precedent applied to the 2009 DLRA to hold that "the fact that defendant was in NYSDOCS custody when the motion was filed ... does not determine his eligibility for re-sentencing at the time the motion is considered" such that a defendant released from the DOCS custody at the time the motion is considered is ineligible to be re-sentenced under the 2009 DLRA.[124] Additionally, in People v. Figueroa, the court explicitly stated that "[o]nce a defendant is released to parole and is thus no longer incarcerated, even if reincarcerated on the original sentence for a parole violation, the defendant is no longer entitled to the ameliorative provisions of the Drug Law Reform Acts."[125]

---

i. Sexual abuse in the first degree
j. Course of sexual conduct against a child in the second degree
k. Aggravated sexual abuse in the third degree
l. Facilitating a sex offense with a controlled substance
m. Criminal possession of a weapon in the third degree
n. Criminal sale of a firearm in the third degree
o. Intimidating a victim or witness in the second degree
p. Soliciting or providing support for an act of terrorism in the second degree
q. Making a terroristic threat
r. Falsely reporting an incident in the first degree
s. Placing a false bomb or hazardous substance in the first degree
t. Placing a false bomb or hazardous substance in a sports stadium or arena, mass transportation facility or enclosed shopping mall
u. Aggravated unpermitted use of indoor pyrotechnics in the first degree

(4) Class E violent felony offenses, which are:
a. Attempts to commit various forms of criminal possession of a weapon in the third degree
b. Persistent sexual abuse
c. Aggravated sexual abuse in the fourth degree
d. Falsely reporting an incident in the second degree
e. Placing a false bomb or hazardous substance in the second degree.

N.Y. Penal Law § 70.02(a–d) (McKinney2010).

121. N.Y. Penal Law § 440.46.5 (McKinney 2010); see also Memorandum from Al O'Connor, New York State Defenders Association, to Criminal Defense Attorneys, at 4 (Apr. 8, 2009), available at http://www.communityalternatives.org/publications/drugCases.html.

122. See, e.g., People v. Villalona, No. 02455, slip op. at 1 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. May 3, 2010) ("Because the defendant is no longer in the custody of the Department of Correctional Services, he is ... ineligible for re-sentencing.") (citing People v. Rodriguez, 68 A.D.3d 676 (1st Dept. 2009), a case pertaining to the 2005 DLRA); People v. Sherwood, Nos. 6512/2000 & 678/2001, slip op. at 3 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Apr. 7, 2010) (following lower court precedent of applying People v. Mills, 11 N.Y.3d 527 (2008), to the 2009 DLRA and finding that "[s]ince a re-incarcerated parole violator is not considered to be 'in custody' for re-sentencing purposes, then a fortiori, a parolee who is at liberty is not 'in custody' for such purpose."); People v. Young, No. 12215, slip op. at 2 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Apr. 7, 2010) (analogizing to the court's interpretation of the 2005 DLRA in People v. Mills, 11 N.Y.3d 527 (2008), to find that a defendant no longer in the custody of DOCS at the time of the court's consideration of his re-resentencing motion is not eligible for re-sentencing under the 2009 DLRA); People v. Wiggins, No. QN10727, slip op. at 2 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Mar. 30, 2010) (holding that defendant arrested for felony drug offense in 2004 and granted release to parole supervision in January 2010 was ineligible for re-sentencing under the 2009 DLRA because he was no longer in custody at the time of the court's consideration); People v. Suriel, No. 10325, slip op. at 3–4 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Nov. 13, 2009) (holding that defendant released from DOCS custody and deported by Immigration and Customs Enforcement officials after applying for re-sentencing was no longer eligible for re-sentencing because not currently in DOCS custody).

123. People v. Tavarez, Nos. 5241, 5261 & 1824, slip op. at 3–4 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Mar. 15, 2010) (citing People v. Mills, 11 N.Y.3d 527, 536–37 (2008), and People v. Rodriquez, 68 A.D.3d 676 (1st Dept. 2009)).

124. People v. Tavarez, Nos. 5241, 5261 & 1824, slip op. at 4–5 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Mar. 15, 2010).

125. People v. Figueroa, No. 2606, slip op. at 2 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Mar. 29, 2010) (applying appellate court precedent from 2004 and 2005 DLRAs to defendant's case under 2009 DLRA).

Two court decisions, however, have found a defendant eligible for re-sentencing even while out of custody at the time of the court's consideration of the application, provided that the application was filed when the defendant was still in custody. In People v. Cruz, the court approved the defendant's re-sentencing application and imposed a determinate sentence of two years, with one year of post-release supervision.[126] The defendant originally pled guilty to a felony drug offense in 2004 and failed to complete the mandated court-monitored treatment program such that he was sentenced to a jail alternative indeterminate sentence of two to six years in 2008. In 2009, the defendant filed a motion for re-sentencing under the 2009 DLRA, but in November of that year, he was released on parole.[127] The court was persuaded by the fact that defendant was a first time non-violent felony offender at the time of his original sentence, as well as the fact that the state opposed the application only on the grounds that he was presently at liberty in the community.[128]

In People v. Sanabria, the court found that a defendant released on parole several days after filing his application for re-sentencing was not ineligible for re-sentencing, because the "in custody" provision of the 2009 DLRA meant that a person had to be in DOCS custody on the day of filing the application.[129]

The decisions of the court in People v. Cruz and People v. Sanabria notwithstanding, the rule in most New York courts appears to be that the defendant must be in DOCS custody at the time the court considers the motion for re-sentencing. Thus, petitioners filing for re-sentencing under the 2009 DLRA are probably not eligible if they are out of custody at the time the court considers the motion.

(ii) The Meaning of the Ten-Year "Look Back"

The majority of New York courts have interpreted the ten-year "look back" for determining exclusion offenses to mean ten years from the date of filing the re-sentencing application, rather than ten years from the present felony drug offense or the effective date of the statute.[130] In People v. Danton, for example, the court found that, in light of the ameliorative (relieving) purpose of both the 2004 and 2005 DLRAs, as well as 126. People v. Cruz, No. 2939, slip op. at 1 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Jan. 22, 2010).

127. People v. Cruz, No. 2939, slip op. at 1 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Jan. 22, 2010).

128. People v. Cruz, No. 2939, slip op. at 1–2 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Jan. 22, 2010).

129. People v. Sanabria, No. 2316-92, slip op. at 2 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Mar. 29, 2010).

130. See People v. Arroyo, No. 4776-2003, slip op. at (N.Y. Sup. Ct. June 25, 2010) (basing its decision that the ten-year look back should be measured from the date of the re-sentencing application on the ameliorative purpose of the 2009 DLRA, the absence of any language similar to that in other Penal Law provisions specifying the date of commission of the instant felony as the starting point for the 10-year look back, and similar decisions by other lower courts); People v. Lee, No. 01408-2000, slip op. at 2 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. June 17, 2010) (following "the weight of authority at the trial court level ... that the preceding ten years [in the 2009 DLRA] refers to the ten year period immediately preceding the filing of the motion for resentence"); People v. Walltower, No. N10539/96, slip op. at 5 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Apr. 6, 2010) (holding that "in light of both the dearth of legislative guidance and the ameliorative purposes of the 2009 DLRA, the natural meaning of the term 'within the preceding ten years' ... is the ten-year period immediately preceding the date of filing of the application for resentencing"); People v. Lashley, No. N10596/04, slip op. at 4 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Apr. 5, 2010) (analogizing to interpretation of "other recidivist sentencing statutes" to find that "the plain meaning of the phrase 'within the preceding ten years,' unadorned as it is by any limiting language, appears intended to run from the time immediately preceding the [re-sentencing] application"); People v. Estela, Nos. 720/2004 & 4336/2004, slip op. at 4 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Mar. 24, 2010) (holding that "the relevant point in time from which the statutory 'preceding ten years' is to be measured is the date of the filing of the petition for re-sentence"); People v. Austin, No. 6738/02, slip op. at 4 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Mar. 22, 2010) (using the interpretation of "[n]umerous trial level courts" to find that the 10-year look back means "ten years from the date the application is filed"); People v. Murray, No. 121/03, slip op. at 3 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Mar. 22, 2010) (citing People v. Danton to hold that the 10-year look back "refer[s] to the ten years immediately preceding the application for resentence"); People v. Loftin, No. 2003-0035-1, slip op. at 2–3 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Mar. 2, 2010) (citing People v. Roman to "agree with an increasing number of other trial courts who have ruled that the statute, by its plain meaning, contemplates eligibility determinations from the present date ... and that the most natural construction of the law is to read the reference point as the date of a resentencing application") (internal citations omitted); People v. Stanley, No. 3242-04, slip op. at 5–6 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Mar. 1, 2010) (using the court's opinion in People v. Brown to hold that the 10-year look back is measured from the date of the re-sentencing application); People v. Brown, No. 4097/02, slip op. at 5–7 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Jan. 4, 2010) (citing People v. Roman to find that the 10 year period is "measured from the date of a violent felony conviction to the date of a resentencing application); People v. Roman, Nos. 4931/96 & 6894/96, slip op. at 2 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Dec. 4, 2009) (holding that "the statute by its plain meaning contemplates eligibility determinations from the present date," especially in light of the clear purpose of the 2004, 2005, and 2009 DLRAs to "ameliorate the lengthy sentences given to defendants for selling or possessing a small amount of drugs"). See also Center for Community Alternatives, "Resentencing Eligibility (2009): Calculating the 10 Year Look Back Simplified," available at http://www.communityalternatives.org/pdf/ClassBDrugOffense-10YearLookBack.pdf.

the similarly ameliorative provisions of the 2009 DLRA, the ten-year look back provision ought to mean the ten years immediately preceding the date of filing the re-sentencing application.[131]

But three court decisions found the ten-year "look back" should be measured from the commission of the present drug offense for which the defendant has been sentenced. In People v. Jimenez, the court found the defendant ineligible for re-sentencing because the time between the commission of the present drug offense and the date of the commission of the exclusion offense was approximately six years, meeting the ten-year look back stipulation of the 2009 DLRA.[132] In People v. Turner, the court similarly found the defendant ineligible based on an exclusion offense committed six years, five months and eleven days before the commission of the first of the present drug offenses.[133] Finally, in People v. Wallace, the court found the defendant ineligible for re-sentencing because he had a previous violent felony conviction, "which was committed within ten years prior to the date of the original sentencing date, with appropriate tolling."[134]

Despite these three decisions, the general outcome in the New York trial courts is that the ten-year look back is measured from the date of the re-sentencing application.[135] No appellate court has spoken on the matter to date.

(d) Conclusion

To sum up, you may apply for re-sentencing if, (1) you are serving a sentence for an A-I felony drug offense and you were sentenced under the old law, (2) you are serving a sentence for an A-II felony drug offense, you were sentenced under the old law, and you meet the time to parole eligibility and merit time eligibility requirements described above, or (3) you are serving a sentence for a Class B felony drug offense, you were sentenced under the old law, and you are not serving time for an "exclusion offense," meaning you were not convicted within the ten years preceding the re-sentencing application of a violent felony offense, an offense that renders you ineligible for merit time under Section 803(1)(d)(ii), a second violent felony offense, or a persistent violent felony offense. Sections 3 and 4 below will describe what happens if you apply for re-sentencing, and how to apply.

3. Re-Sentencing: What Happens If You Apply?

(a) The Re-Sentencing Process

The re-sentencing process is the same for A-I, A-II, and Class B felony drug offenses. When you apply, you should send your application to the court in which you were convicted, but you must also send a copy of your application to the District Attorney's office that prosecuted your conviction.[136] The application will be decided by the judge that gave you your original sentence if that judge still works in the same court.[137] Otherwise, the application will be decided by another judge in that court, chosen at random.[138] Or, if the original judge has moved to another court that has jurisdiction over your case, and if you and the District Attorney both agree, your application may be sent to the original judge at the new court.[139]

(b) How the Judge Will Make a Decision

If the judge finds that you meet the requirements for applying for re-sentencing, described in Part B above, the judge may consider any facts or circumstances that relate to whether you should be re-sentenced, including your prison record.[140] For Class B felony drug offenders, the judge is also instructed to consider your "participation in or willingness to participate in treatment or other programming while incarcerated"

---

131. People v. Danton, Nos. 5759/03, 620/04, 5394/98 & 7375/02, slip op. at 5–19 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Feb. 2, 2010) ("[V]iewing the re-sentencing provision generally, and its look-back provision particularly, in the context of the spirit and purpose underlying the legislation as a whole, it is appropriate to resolve any ambiguity in favor of the more ameliorative, rather than the more punitive, construction.").

132. People v. Jimenez, No. 2004-0073-1, slip op. (Onondaga Cty. Ct. Dec. 9, 2009).

133. People v. Turner, Nos. 2004-1159-1 & 2004-1084-1, slip op. at 3 (Onondaga Cty. Ct. Dec. 9, 2009).

134. People v. Wallace, No. 0763/92, slip op. (N.Y. Sup. Ct. May 17, 2010).

136. See footnote 130, above, for a list of many of these cases.

136. 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 738 § 220.21 (A. 11895, S. 7802); 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 643 § 1 (S. 5880); N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.46.3 (2010).

137. 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 738 § 220.21 (A. 11895, S. 7802); 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 643 § 1 (S. 5880) ; N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.46.3 (2010).

138. 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 738 § 220.21 (A. 11895, S. 7802); 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 643 § 1 (S. 5880) ; N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.46.3 (2010).

139. 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 738 § 220.21 (A. 11895, S. 7802); 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 643 § 1 (S. 5880); N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.46.3 (2010).

140. 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 738 § 220.21 (A. 11895, S. 7802); 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 643 § 1 (S. 5880).

and your disciplinary history, though an inability to participate in such a program won't count against you when making the determination.[141] It is up to you to give the facts and circumstances that you want the judge to consider.[142] Similarly, the District Attorney may submit the facts and circumstances that the prosecutor wants the judge to consider.[143] The judge may also consider your institutional record of confinement.[144] Furthermore, the judge may only consider information that relates to whether you should be re-sentenced, and may not consider information about whether or not you were correctly charged and convicted in the first place.[145]

If you are eligible to apply for re-sentencing, you have a right to have an attorney represent you on your application.[146] If you cannot pay for an attorney, you have a right to have one appointed by the court.[147] Part D of this Chapter, "How to Apply for Re-Sentencing," explains how to get an attorney appointed. You also have a right to a hearing on your re-sentencing application and to be present at that hearing.[148] The court may also order a hearing to determine whether you are actually eligible to apply for re-sentencing, or to decide any relevant factual issues that are in dispute.[149]

After reviewing the information submitted by you and the District Attorney, and after any necessary hearings, the judge will reach a decision. "[U]nless substantial justice dictates that [your] application should be denied," the judge must choose an appropriate new sentence from the current sentencing ranges, and tell you what that sentence is.[150] You will then have a choice of accepting the suggested new sentence, withdrawing your application, or appealing the suggested new sentence.[151] If you withdraw your application, you will keep serving your original sentence. If you do not take any action, the judge will vacate your original sentence and impose the new sentence.[152] All of the time you have served toward your old sentence will be counted towards your new sentence.[153] Whether the judge grants or denies your application, he must write an opinion explaining his findings of fact and legal reasoning.[154]

The success or failure of achieving re-sentencing often turns on whether "substantial justice dictates that the application should be denied." While the judge is not supposed to have discretion beyond applying the law in determining whether a defendant is eligible for re-sentencing—i.e. meeting the time to parole requirements, the merit time eligibility requirements, the ten-year look back—the judge does have some discretion in determining what substantial justice dictates. For example, courts have previously denied re-sentencing of cases because of substantial justice. Situations that may lead to a denial of re-sentencing due to substantial justice have included where the defendant is a high level drug offender,[155] where the drug

---

141. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.46.3 (McKinney 2010).

142. In other words, it is up to you to convince the judge that you deserve to be re-sentenced. 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 738 § 220.21 (A. 11895, S. 7802); 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws Ch. 643 § 1 (S. 5880); N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.46.3 (2010).

143. In other words, the District Attorney may try to convince the judge that you do not deserve to be re-sentenced. 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 738 § 220.21 (A. 11895, S. 7802); 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 643 § 1 (S. 5880); N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.46.3 (McKinney 2010).

144. 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 738 § 220.21 (A. 11895, S. 7802); 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 643 § 1 (S. 5880); N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.46.3 (McKinney 2010).

145. 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 738 § 220.21 (A. 11895, S. 7802); 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 643 § 1 (S. 5880); N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.46.3 (McKinney 2010).

146. 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 738 § 220.21 (A. 11895, S. 7802) (citing N.Y. County Law §§ 717.1, 722.4 (2010)); 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 643 § 1 (S. 5880); N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.46.4 (McKinney 2010).

147. 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 738 § 220.21 (A. 11895, S. 7802) (citing N.Y. County Law §§ 717.1, 722.4 (2010)); 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 643 § 1 (S. 5880); N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.46.4 (McKinney 2010).

148. 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 738 § 220.21 (A. 11895, S. 7802); 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 643 § 1 (S. 5880); N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.46.3 (McKinney 2010).

149. 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 738 § 220.21 (A. 11895, S. 7802); 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 643 § 1 (S. 5880); N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.46.3 (McKinney 2010).

150. 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 738 § 220.21 (A. 11895, S. 7802); 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 643 § 1 (S. 5880); N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.46.3 (McKinney 2010).

151. 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 738 § 220.21 (A. 11895, S. 7802); 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 643 § 1 (S. 5880); N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.46.3 (McKinney 2010).

152. 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 738 § 220.21 (A. 11895, S. 7802); 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 643 § 1 (S. 5880); N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.46.3 (2010).

153. 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 738 § 220.21 (A. 11895, S. 7802); 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 643 § 1 (S. 5880); N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.46.3 (McKinney 2010).

154. 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 738 § 220.21 (A. 11895, S. 7802); 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 643 § 1 (S. 5880); N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.46.3 (McKinney 2010).

155. People v. Perez, No. 5450/03, slip op. at 9–11 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Mar. 4, 2010) (denying re-sentencing application as a result of a long criminal record with convictions that were "not a single sale for a couple of dollars," but which included violent felony offenses and several severe infractions while in prison); People v. Morales, 46 A.D.3d 1395, 1396, trafficking operation that the defendant participated in was very extensive,[156] where the amount of drugs the defendant was convicted for was high,[157] where the defendant had disciplinary infractions while in prison and a long prior criminal history,[158] and where the defendant showed no remorse for his crime and continued to deny guilt after pleading guilty.[159]

Finally, you may also appeal a proposed, but not yet imposed, new sentence on the ground that it is harsh or excessive.[160] If you do so, you can still decide to withdraw your application after the appeal is decided and keep serving your original sentence.[161]

(c) Sentences: What Sentence Could You Receive?

While felony drug sentences imposed under the old law are indeterminate, the new sentencing laws require determinate sentences for drug felonies.[162] If you are re-sentenced, you will be given a determinate sentence.

A determinate sentence is a sentence for a fixed amount of time (eight years, for example). Under current law, you can receive good time or merit time reductions of a determinate sentence imposed for a drug offense.[163] These reductions are calculated and granted by the Department of Correctional Services. However, there is no parole from a determinate sentence, so the Parole Board has no say in when you are released.

---

848 N.Y.S.2d 486, 487 (4th Dept. 2007) (affirming the lower court's denial of re-sentencing application, under the "substantial justice" provision, because defendant's conviction involved a large amount of cocaine and defendant was therefore not a "low level offender"); People v. Montoya, 45 A.D.3d 496, 496, 847 N.Y.S.2d 41, 41 (1st Dept. 2007) (holding that "substantial justice" required denial of re-sentencing to a defendant who was a high-level participant in an international narcotics distribution ring).

156. People v. Estela, Nos 720/2004 & 4336/2004, slip op. at 4–5 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Mar. 24, 2010) (denying defendant's re-sentencing application because of "[t]he defendant's history [as] one of a drug seller, not an addict," given the fact that on one arrest "he was in possession of thirty-seven glassines of heroin and over one thousand dollars, and was observed selling four additional bags" and was later arrested "in possession of 200 glassines" while on parole); People v. Arana, 45 A.D.3d 311, 311, 844 N.Y.S.2d 696, 696–97 (1st Dept. 2007) (affirming lower court's denial of defendant's application for re-sentencing based on "substantial justice," since defendant had been a participant in "a very extensive drug trafficking enterprise"); People v. Montoya, 45 A.D.3d 496, 496, 847 N.Y.S.2d 41, 41 (1st Dept. 2007) (holding that "substantial justice" required denial of re-sentencing to a defendant who was a high-level participant in an international narcotics distribution ring).

157. People v. Montoya, 45 A.D.3d 496, 496, 847 N.Y.S.2d 41, 41 (1st Dept.2007) (denying re-sentencing for defendant who was "a high-level participant in an international narcotics distribution ring" and was arrested in possession of 50 kilograms of cocaine).

158. People v. Walltower, No. N10539/96, slip op. at 8 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Apr. 6, 2010) (denying defendant's application for re-sentencing under 2009 DLRA because of his "poor inmate disciplinary record, consisting of 32 infractions, 21 of which are of the more serious tier 3 level," as well as his "violent felony conviction"); People v. Rivers, 43 A.D.3d 1247, 1248, 842 N.Y.S.2d 611, 612 (3d Dept. 2007) (denying defendant's application for re-sentencing based on defendant's number of disciplinary violations while incarcerated and lengthy criminal record predating the conviction, even though defendant had achieved significant educational and vocational accomplishments while incarcerated); People v. Vega 40 A.D.3d 1020, 1020, 836 N.Y.S.2d 685, 686 (2d Dept. 2007) (denying defendant's application for re-sentencing after considering that defendant had a criminal history that included convictions for other controlled substances offenses and second-degree murder and that defendant's prison disciplinary record was not good); People v. Sanders, 36 A.D.3d 944, 946–47, 829 N.Y.S.2d 187, 189 (2d Dept. 2007) (denying defendant's application for re-sentencing after considering that defendant received disciplinary violation for which he was confined to a special housing unit for at least 60 days after only 11 months in prison); People v. Paniagua, 45 A.D.3d 98, 108–09, 841 N.Y.S.2d 506, 515 (1st Dept. 2007) ("[a]n inmate's … repeated commission of serious acts of insubordination while incarcerated[] can only be viewed adversely in considering his likelihood of re-adjusting to life outside of prison.").

159. People v. Rodriguez, No. 254/98, slip op. at 10–11 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. May 13, 2010) (noting that defendant had absconded prior to sentencing in two cases and subsequently was convicted for another drug felony); People v. Sanders, 36 A.D.3d 944, 946–47, 829 N.Y.S.2d 187, 189 (2d Dept. 2007) (noting that defendant showed no remorse and continued to deny his guilt of the crime for which he was convicted, even though he had plead guilty, at hearing on defendant's application for re-sentencing); People v. Rivers, 43 A.D.3d 1247, 1248, 842 N.Y.S.2d 611, 612 (3d Dept. 2007) (denying defendant's application for re-sentencing and noting that defendant did not freely admit guilt for either his criminal acts or his disciplinary violations).

160. 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 738 § 23 (A. 11895, S. 7802); 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 643 § 1 (S. 5880); N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.46.3 (McKinney 2010).

161. 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 738 § 23 (A. 11895, S. 7802); 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 643 § 1 (S. 5880); N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.46.3 (McKinney 2010).

162. N.Y. Penal Law §§ 70.70, 70.71 (McKinney 2010).

163. N.Y. Correct. Law §§ 803, 804 (McKinney 2010).

An indeterminate sentence consists of two terms: a minimum term and a maximum term (for example, five to ten years). The minimum term must be at least one year, and it is the amount of time you must serve before you can become eligible for parole. The maximum term must be at least three years, although it can be as much as life imprisonment. The maximum term is the amount of time you will have to spend in prison if there are no reductions made to your sentence and you are not paroled. Many prisoners serving indeterminate sentences for non-violent offenses can receive reductions for good time or merit time as well as parole.[164] This means that both the Department of Correctional Services and the Parole Board may have a say in when you will be released.

The new determinate sentencing ranges for A-I, A-II, and Class B felony drug offenses, effective January 13, 2005, are:

If Your Class A-I Drug Offense Is Your:	Determinate Sentence Range[165]
First Felony Offense	Between 8 and 20 years
Second Felony Offense (Prior Felony = Non-Violent)	Between 12 and 24 years
Second Felony Offense (Prior Felony = Violent)	Between 15 and 30 years

If Your Class A-II Drug Offense Is Your:	Determinate Sentence Range[166]
First Felony Offense	Between 3 and 10 years
Second Felony Offense (Prior Felony = Non-Violent)	Between 6 and 14 years
Second Felony Offense (Prior Felony = Violent)	Between 8 and 17 years

If Your Class B Drug Offense Is Your:	Determinate Sentence Range[167]
First Felony Offense	Between 1 and 9 years
Second Felony Offense (Prior Felony = Non-Violent)	Between 2 and 12 years
Second Felony Offense (Prior Felony = Violent)	Between 6 and 15 years

Each of these determinate sentences includes a five-year period of post-release supervision.[168]

If you are re-sentenced, you will receive a specific term of imprisonment, not a range. The term will fall within the appropriate determinate sentence range, depending on your felony record, shown in the tables above. Any time you have already served of your original sentence will be subtracted from the time you will have to serve under your new sentence. After your release, you will be subject to a five-year period of supervision.

When deciding whether to apply for re-sentencing and whether to accept a suggested new sentence, you will want to compare your earliest likely release date under your old sentence with your earliest likely release date under your new sentence. Keep in mind that, depending on your prison record, you may or may not receive reduction for good time and/or merit time. Also, consider whether the Parole Board is likely to grant you parole under your indeterminate sentence. It is possible that your earliest re-sentenced determinate date could be longer than your earliest possible release date under your current sentence. For example, in People v. Newton, the defendant was originally sentenced six years to life, and the proposed re-sentencing was eleven years, which on appeal was found to be neither harsh nor excessive.[169] Remember, though, that even if the minimum term of your indeterminate sentence is shorter than the determinate

164. See N.Y. Correct. Law §§ 803, 804 (McKinney 2010).
165. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.71 (McKinney 2010).
166. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.71 (McKinney 2010).
167. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.70 (McKinney 2010).
168. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.45 (McKinney 2010).
169. People v. Newton, 48 A.D.3d 115, 120, 847 N.Y.S.2d 645, 649 (2d Dept. 2007).

sentence you receive at re-sentencing, you may be better off in some cases with the determinate sentence if you think that the Parole Board is unlikely to grant you parole at an early date.[170]

4. How to Apply for Re-Sentencing

You have the right to an attorney to represent you in your application for re-sentencing. If you cannot afford one, you can have one appointed.[171] You can file an application to have an attorney appointed together with a notice of motion and basic application for re-sentencing. Once you are appointed an attorney, your attorney can prepare a more detailed and complete application for you. You can find a sample application for an appointed attorney, including a sample notice of motion and basic application for re-sentencing, attached to this Supplement as Appendix B.[172]

If you are applying for re-sentencing for an A-II felony drug offense and your earliest possible release date is not much more than three years away, it is important that your application for an appointed attorney include an application for re-sentencing. This is because you need to make sure your application is filed in time to meet the Time to Parole Eligibility requirement, explained above in Part C(2)(b)(i) of this Chapter. If you are applying for re-sentencing for a Class B felony drug offense, you need to make sure your application is not barred by the ten-year look back for exclusion offenses, explained above in Part (C)(2)(c)(ii) of this Chapter. You should try to exercise your right to have an attorney represent you in your re-sentencing application, and should only file a detailed application pro se if you have trouble getting an attorney.

(a) Filing a Pro Se Application

If you are applying for re-sentencing for an A-II felony drug offense under the alternate, one-year-to-parole-eligibility reading, you may have to prepare your own application because you may have trouble getting an attorney appointed.[173] You may also have trouble getting an attorney if you were also sentenced for a disqualifying offense at the time you were sentenced for the felony drug offense, even if you have clearly finished serving the sentence for the disqualifying offense, as described above in Part C(2)(b)(ii)(a).[174]

If you file your application pro se, you should explain in that application why you deserve a new sentence. You might want to include information about: your role in the offense, the nature of the offense, the judge's position at the original sentencing, your prior criminal history (or lack of), your health, your prison disciplinary record, favorable evaluations from correctional personnel, participation in educational, drug-treatment, or work programs while in prison, other attempts to rehabilitate yourself, and your plans for re-entry into your community, such as where you plan to live and how you plan to look for work when you are released.[175] You should provide as much documentation as possible—for example, you should include any certificates you received for program participation while in prison.[176]

If you think they will be helpful, you can try to request certain documents, including your medical file, your disciplinary file, your visit log, your education file, your guidance file, and your legal file from the prison records office. A sample document request letter is attached to this Chapter as Appendix B-4. However, some prisons refuse to cooperate with document requests from prisoners. It may be easier for a lawyer to request your records than for you to do it yourself—this is one reason that you should try to get a lawyer appointed instead of filing your application for re-sentencing pro se.

If you file your application pro se, you should submit a notice of motion and basic petition for re-sentencing (a sample is attached in Appendix B) along with a signed, written statement, or affirmation, in support of your application and any supporting documents you have collected. Your affirmation in support of your application should include: (1) a description of your original sentence, including the offense of which you were convicted, the term of the original sentence, the date it was imposed, how much of it you have

---

170. See "Understanding the A-II Resentencing Law," Memorandum from Al O'Connor, New York State Defenders Association, to Chief Defenders at 2 (Oct. 5, 2005, revised Oct. 24, 2005), available at http://communityalternatives.org/pdf/A-II Resentencing Memo Revised NYSDA.pdf.

171. 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 738 § 220.21 (A. 11895, S. 7802) (citing N.Y. County Law §§ 717.1, 722.4 (2010)); 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 643 § 1 (S. 5880); N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.46.4 (McKinney 2010).

172. The sample document in Appendix B is for a prisoner serving time for an A-II felony drug offense.

173. E-mail from William Gibney, The Legal Aid Society, to Sydney Bird, contributing author of this Chapter (Nov. 17, 2005) (on file with the JLM).

174. See e-mail from William Gibney, The Legal Aid Society, to Sydney Bird, contributing author of this Chapter (Nov. 17, 2005) (on file with the JLM).

175. Ctr for Cmty. Alternatives, Rockefeller Drug Law Reform: Mitigation and Re-entry Planning Tips (2005) (on file with the JLM).

176. Ctr. for Community Alternatives, Rockefeller Drug Law Reform: Mitigation and Re-entry Planning Tips (2005) (on file with the JLM).

served, and the judge who imposed it; (2) an explanation of why you are eligible for re-sentencing under the requirements of Chapter 738, Section 23 of the Laws of 2004 (for an A-I felony), Chapter 643 of the Laws of 2005 (for an A-II felony), or Section 440.46 of the Criminal Procedure Law (for a Class B felony); (3) what new sentence you think the judge should give you, according to the new sentencing law (for example, the minimum sentence allowed under the new law); (4) the reasons you deserve the suggested new sentence, including, for example, an explanation of your prison disciplinary record, your participation in any work or drug-rehabilitation programs while in prison, any serious health problems you may have, and your plans to find housing and employment once you leave prison.[177]

Remember that when you file your application for re-sentencing, you must send it to the District Attorney's office that prosecuted your conviction as well as to the court.[178] You must do this regardless of whether you are filing only a basic application or one combined with an application for an appointed attorney.

5. Conclusion

In conclusion, changes to the New York State drug laws, which went into effect in 2009, allow some prisoners serving time for drug offenses to apply for re-sentencing under the new, better sentencing framework. Prisoners serving time for A-I felony drug offenses are automatically eligible for re-sentencing,[179] while prisoners serving time for A-II and Class B felony drug offenses must meet additional requirements.[180] If you are serving time for an A-I, A-II, or Class B felony drug offense that occurred prior to January 13, 2005, you should consider whether you are eligible for re-sentencing, and whether re-sentencing is likely to give you an earlier release date. If you are eligible and think you might benefit from re-sentencing, you should try to get an attorney appointed to prepare your re-sentencing application, or, if you have trouble getting an attorney, file a re-sentencing application pro se.

D. Conclusion

Recent changes in the federal law and the law of New York have made some prisoners eligible to apply for re-sentencing. Because the changes in the laws are relatively recent, some aspects of the laws are still unclear. You should make sure to conduct your own research to find out as much as you can about how these new amendments are being applied to cases similar to your own. If you were convicted of a drug crime in either New York State or in federal court, you may be eligible for a reduction in your sentence, but you will need to make sure to apply for re-sentencing since your sentence will not simply be reduced automatically.

177. Sample Affirmation provided by William Gibney, The Legal Aid Society (2005) (on file with the JLM).

178. 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 738 § 23 (A. 11895, S. 7802); 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 643 § 1 (S. 5880); N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.46.3 (McKinney 2010).

179. 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 738 § 23 (A. 11895, S. 7802).

180. 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 643 § 1 (S. 5880); N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.46.1, 5 (McKinney 2010).

APPENDIX A: SAMPLE FORMS FOR APPLYING FOR FEDERAL RE-SENTENCING

A-1. SAMPLE EX-PARTE APPLICATION FOR APPOINTMENT OF COUNSEL[181]

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
DISTRICT OF _____ _____ DIVISION
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Plaintiff,_____ NO. CR_____
v.
Defendant._____ Ex Parte Application for Appointment of Counsel; Exhibits

Defendant hereby respectfully requests that this Court re-appoint his counsel under the Criminal Justice Act to assist him in preparing and filing a motion for reduction of sentence pursuant to 18 U.S.C.§ 3582(c).

This application is made pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 3006A, and is based on the attached memorandum of points and authorities, declaration of counsel, and exhibits; the files and records of this case; and any such further information as shall be made available to the Court.

Respectfully submitted,

DATED: February __, 2008 By_____

181. Adapted from an example from Office of Defender Services, Retroactivity of Crack Cocaine Amendments: Sample Motions and Orders, available at http://www.fd.org/odstb_CrackSampleMotions.htm. (last visited January 14, 2009).

Memorandum of Points and Authorities

_____ respectfully applies to this Court to appoint counsel for his proceeding under 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c). As set forth in the attached declaration, undersigned counsel was appointed to represent _____ in his criminal proceedings. He was convicted of _____ and sentenced by this Court to a term of _____ months' imprisonment. His case involved cocaine base. Based on a review of records and files in this case, as well as the law, counsel believes that _____ is likely eligible to file a motion for reduction of sentence, pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c).

This Court should appoint counsel. The amendments to USSG § 1B1.10, effective March 3, 2008, now invite the presentation of new facts and arguments in the context of § 3582(c) proceedings. See Amendment 712 to Guidelines. Moreover, in United States v. Hicks, 472 F.3d 1167 (9th Cir. 2007), the Ninth Circuit held that, when resentencing defendants pursuant to § 3582(c)(2), district courts must treat the Guidelines as advisory, as required by United States v. Booker, 543 U.S. 220 (2005). In view of these changes to § 3582(c) proceedings, _____ will be greatly assisted by the appointment of counsel. In addition, appointment of counsel will allow for negotiation with the Government, facilitate factual and legal presentation to the Court, and promote the efficient use of judicial resources.

_____ is still indigent. See Exhibit A. As the Court is aware, the Administrative Office of the United States Courts has established a new representation type for appointment of counsel in these cases. See Exhibit B.

For the foregoing reasons, _____ respectfully submits that appointment of counsel, as set forth in the proposed order, is appropriate.

Respectfully submitted,

DATED: February __, 2008 By_____

A-2. SAMPLE APPLICATION FOR RE-SENTENCING[182]

[DEFENDANT'S NAME]

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
 DISTRICT OF ***
 DIVISION

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Plaintiff,

v.
[DEFENDANT'S NAME],
Defendant.

NO. CR_____

NOTICE OF MOTION; MOTION FOR REDUCTION OF SENTENCE PURSUANT TO 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2); MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES
Hearing Date: [INSERT DATE]
Hearing Time: [INSERT TIME]

TO: UNITED STATES ATTORNEY , AND ASSISTANT UNITED STATES ATTORNEY [AUSA'S NAME]:

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that on [DATE], at [TIME], defendant, [NAME], will bring on for hearing the following motion:

MOTION

Defendant, [NAME], hereby moves this Honorable Court for a reduction in the sentence imposed in this case on [DATE]. This motion is made pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2) and is based upon the attached memorandum of points and authorities, all files and records in this case, and such further argument and evidence as may be presented at the hearing on this motion.

Respectfully submitted,

DATED: Month __, 20__ By_____

182. Adapted from an example from Office of Defender Services, Retroactivity of Crack Cocaine Amendments: Sample Motions and Orders, available at http://www.fd.org/odstb_CrackSampleMotions.htm (last visited January 14, 2009).

MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES

I. INTRODUCTION

On [DATE], [NAME] was sentenced for [TYPE OF CRACK OFFENSE, I.E., DISTRIBUTION, POSSESSION WITH INTENT TO DISTRIBUTE, CONSPIRACY, ETC.], to serve _____ months of imprisonment and _____ years of supervised release. The sentence was imposed under the sentencing Guidelines [QUALIFY THIS IF POST-BOOKER], with a base offense level computed under § 2D1.1 of the Guidelines for a crack cocaine quantity of [INSERT AMOUNT IN YOUR CASE] grams. That base offense level – under the Guidelines in effect at the time – was _____. Combined with other Guidelines factors, it produced a guideline range of _____. The sentence imposed by the Court was _____ months, [WHICH WAS THE LOW END/WHICH WAS THE HIGH END/WHICH WAS WITHIN THE RANGE/WHICH WAS BELOW THE RANGE/ABOVE THE RANGE, BASED ON A [DESCRIBE DEPARTURE IF ANY]].

Subsequent to [NAME]'s sentencing – on November 1, 2007 – an amendment to § 2D1.1 of the Guidelines took effect, which, generally, reduces base offense levels for most quantities of crack cocaine by two levels and, specifically, reduces the base offense level for the [INSERT AMOUNT IN YOUR CASE] gram quantity of crack cocaine in this case by two levels, to _____. See U.S.S.G. § 2D1.1. This amendment was adopted in response to studies that raise grave doubts about the fairness and rationale of the 100-to-1 crack/powder ratio incorporated into the sentencing Guidelines. See generally United States Sentencing Commission, Report to Congress: Cocaine and Federal Sentencing Policy (May 2007) (hereinafter Commission Report"); United States Sentencing Commission, Report to Congress: Cocaine and Federal Sentencing Policy (May 2002); United States Sentencing Commission, Special Report to Congress: Cocaine and Federal Sentencing Policy (April 1997); United States Sentencing Commission, Special Report to Congress: Cocaine and Federal Sentencing Policy (Feb. 1995). See also Kimbrough v. United States, 128 S. Ct. 558, 568-69 (2007) (discussing history of crack cocaine guideline and various Sentencing Commission reports). Yet the amendment is only a partial response, as the Sentencing Commission itself recognized. The Commission explained:

> The Commission, however, views the amendment only as a partial remedy to some of the problems associated with the 100-to- 1 drug quantity ratio. It is neither a permanent nor a complete solution to these problems. Any comprehensive solution requires appropriate legislative action by Congress. It is the Commission's firm desire that this report will facilitate prompt congressional action addressing the 100-to-1 drug quantity ratio. 2007 Sentencing Commission Report, supra, at 10.

Subsequent to the effective date of this amendment to § 2D1.1, the Sentencing Commission considered whether to make the amendment retroactive under the authority created by 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2). It took that action on December 11, 2007, by including this amendment in the list of retroactive amendments in § 1B1.10 of the Guidelines. See 73 Fed. Reg. 217-01 (2008). Based on this retroactivity, the statutory authority underlying it, and the Supreme Court's intervening [ONLY IF ALL OF FOLLOWING CASES WERE AFTER SENTENCING] decisions in United States v. Booker, 543 U.S. 220 (2005); Rita v. United States, 127 S. Ct. 2456 (2007); Gall v. United States, 128 S. Ct. 586 (2007); and Kimbrough v. United States, 128 S. Ct. 558 (2007), [NAME] brings this motion to reduce his sentence.

II. ARGUMENT

A. [NAME]'S OFFENSE LEVEL SHOULD BE REDUCED FROM _____ TO _____, AND THE GUIDELINE RANGE REDUCED FROM _____ TO _____ BASED ON THE AMENDMENT TO § 2D1.1.

18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2) provides as follows:

[I]n the case of a defendant who has been sentenced to a term of imprisonment based on a > sentencing range that has subsequently been lowered by the Sentencing Commission pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 994(o), upon motion of the defendant ... the court may reduce the term of imprisonment, after considering the factors set forth in section 3553(a) to the extent that they are applicable, if such a reduction is consistent with applicable policy statements issued by the Sentencing Commission.

Section 1B1.10 is the Guidelines policy statement which implements 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2). Subsection (c) of that policy statement lists amendments that are covered by the policy statement, and one of the amendments listed is amendment 711 to the Guidelines. Amendment 711 reduced the base offense level for crack cocaine offenses. See U.S.S.G., App. C, § 711. Application of this amendment to the crack cocaine guideline in the present case results in a decrease of the base offense level from _____ to _____, a decrease in the total offense level from _____ to _____, and a decrease in the resulting guideline range from _____ to _____. [THEN GO THROUGH CALCULATIONS TO ESTABLISH THIS AND ALSO DISCUSS ANY OTHER ISSUES THAT ARE RELEVANT SUCH AS MANDATORY MINIMUMS THAT LIMIT REDUCTION, WHETHER QUESTION OF SAFETY VALVE CAN BE REOPENED, ETC.].

B. THE COURT SHOULD REDUCE [NAME]'S SENTENCE [TO [INSERT SPECIFIC AMOUNT]/A SIGNIFICANT AMOUNT/SOME OTHER CHARACTERIZATION YOU CHOOSE].

Based on the amendment to § 2D1.1, the Court should significantly reduce [NAME]'s sentence. It follows from the discussion in the preceding section that the amendment alone justifies a reduction of [INSERT DIFFERENCE BETWEEN GUIDELINE RANGES] months.

[THIS PARAGRAPH ONLY IF ORIGINAL SENTENCING PRE-BOOKER, BUT CONSIDER ADAPTING HICKS AND KIMBROUGH DISCUSSION EVEN IF POST-BOOKER.] The Court should not stop there, however. At the time of [NAME]'s original sentence, the Court was required to treat the Guidelines as mandatory, under the controlling law at that time. Since then, the Supreme Court has held the Guidelines in their mandatory form are unconstitutional and – through severing 18 U.S.C. § 3553(b) – made them "effectively advisory." Booker, 543 U.S. at 245. Booker and subsequent Supreme Court cases clarifying it – namely, Rita v. United States, supra; Gall v. United States, supra; and Kimbrough v. United States, supra – have created a brave new world, in which the Guidelines are but one of several factors to be considered under § 3553(a). What the Supreme Court has described as the "overarching provision" in § 3553(a) is the requirement that courts "'impose a sentence sufficient, but not greater than necessary" to accomplish the goals of sentencing. Kimbrough, 128 S. Ct. at 570.

Moreover, Booker and its progeny apply to the imposition of a new sentence under 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2). The Ninth Circuit considered this question in United States v. Hicks, 472 F.3d 1167 (9th Cir. 2007) and held, put most succinctly, that "Booker applies to § 3582(c)(2) proceedings." Hicks, 472 F.3d at 1169. As the court explained in more depth:

> Booker explicitly stated that, "as by now should be clear, [a] mandatory system is no longer an open choice." Although the Court acknowledged that Congress had intended to create a mandatory guideline system, Booker stressed that this was not an option: "[W]e repeat, given today's constitutional holding, [a mandatory Guideline regime] is not a choice that remains open ... . [W]e have concluded that today's holding is fundamentally inconsistent with the judge-based sentencing system that Congress enacted into law." The Court never qualified this statement, and never suggested, explicitly or implicitly, that the mandatory Guideline regime survived in any context.
>
> In fact, the Court emphasized that the Guidelines could not be construed as mandatory in one context and advisory in another. When the government suggested, in Booker, that the Guidelines be considered advisory in certain, constitutionally-compelled cases, but mandatory in others, the Court quickly dismissed this notion, stating, "we do not see how it is possible to leave the Guidelines as binding in other cases... . [W]e believe that Congress would not have > authorized a mandatory system in some cases and a nonmandatory system in others, given the administrative complexities that such a system would create." In short, Booker expressly rejected the idea that the Guidelines might be advisory in certain contexts, but not in others, and Congress has done nothing to undermine this conclusion. Because the "mandatory system is no longer an open choice," district courts are necessarily endowed with the discretion to depart from the Guidelines when issuing new sentences under § 3582(c)(2). Hicks, 472 F.3d at 1170 (citations omitted).

Here, there are a number of non-Guidelines factors that justify a sentence below even the new guideline range. [EITHER HERE OR BELOW, INSERT ARGUMENT ABOUT ANY § 3553(a) FACTORS AND BOOKER/GALL/KIMBROUGH] [EITHER CONTINUATION OF LAST TEXT SENTENCE ABOVE OR NEW PARAGRAPH] One [OR ANOTHER?] consideration to which the Court should give particular weight is a consideration expressly recognized by the Supreme Court in Kimbrough v. United States, supra as a ground for not following the Guidelines – the questionable provenance of the crack/powder ratio. As the Government itself acknowledged in Kimbrough, "the Guidelines 'are now advisory' and ... , as a general matter, 'courts may vary [from Guidelines ranges] based solely on policy considerations, including disagreements with the Guidelines.'" Kimbrough, 128 S. Ct. at 570 (quoting Brief for United States 16). While the government then tried to distinguish policy disagreement with the 100-to-1 crack/powder ratio from other policy disagreements, the Supreme Court squarely rejected that argument. See Kimbrough, 128 S. Ct. at 570-74.

Indeed, the Court suggested that policy disagreement in this area was even more defensible than in other areas. It noted that "in the ordinary case, the Commission's recommendation of a sentence will 'reflect a rough approximation of sentences that might achieve § 3553(a)'s objectives,' id. at 574 (quoting Rita, 127 S. Ct. at 2465), and so "closer review may be in order when the sentencing judge varies from the Guidelines, based solely on the judge's view that the Guidelines range 'fails properly to reflect § 3553(a) considerations' even in a mine-run case." Kimbrough, 128 S. Ct. at 575. The Court then explained that this was not the case with the crack cocaine Guidelines, however.

> The crack cocaine Guidelines, however, present no occasion for elaborative discussion of this matter because those Guidelines do not exemplify the Commission's exercise of its characteristic institutional role. In formulating Guidelines ranges for crack cocaine offenses, as we earlier noted, the Commission looked to the mandatory minimum sentences set in the 1986 Act, and did not take account of "empirical data and national experience." Indeed, the Commission itself has reported that the crack/powder disparity produces disproportionately harsh sanctions, i.e., sentences for crack cocaine offenses "greater than the necessary" in light of the purposes of sentencing set forth in § 3553(a). Given all this, it would not be an abuse of discretion for a district court to conclude when sentencing a particular defendant that the crack/powder disparity yields a sentence "greater than necessary" to achieve § 3553(a)'s purposes, even in a mine-run case. Kimbrough, 128 S. Ct. at 574-75 (emphasis added) (citations omitted).

These concerns are only partially assuaged by the recent amendment reducing crack cocaine offense levels, moreover. This also was recognized by the Supreme Court in Kimbrough:

> This modest amendment yields sentences for crack offenses between two and five times longer than sentences for equal amounts of powder. (Citation and footnote omitted.) Describing the amendment as "only ... a partial remedy" for the problems generated by the crack/powder disparity, the Commission noted that "[\a]ny comprehensive solution requires appropriate legislative action by Congress." Kimbrough, 128 S. Ct. at 569 (quoting 2007 Sentencing Commission Report, supra pp. 3-4 at 10).

Kimbrough's rationale for varying from the crack Guidelines therefore remains even after the new guideline is applied. [CONSIDER APPLYING THIS KIMBROUGH ARGUMENT TO YOUR SPECIFIC CASE IN SOME WAY; FOR EXAMPLE, BY POINTING OUT WHAT YOUR SENTENCE WOULD HAVE BEEN IF IT WAS JUST POWDER]

[INSERT ANY ARGUMENT ABOUT ANY § 3553(a) FACTORS AND BOOKER/GALL/KIMBROUGH NOT ALREADY INSERTED ABOVE]

III. CONCLUSION

The Court should adjust [NAME]'s sentencing guideline range downward to _____. It should then [RECOMMEND SPECIFIC SENTENCE AND/OR MORE GENERAL URGING FOR LOWER SENTENCE, IF DON'T WANT TO RECOMMEND SPECIFIC SENTENCE].

Respectfully submitted,

DATED: MONTH DAY, YEAR By_____

APPENDIX B: SAMPLE APPLICATION FOR NY STATE RE-SENTENCING[183]

B-1. SAMPLE PETITION FOR RE-SENTENCE

SUPREME COURT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK[184]
_____ COUNTY CRIMINAL TERM

_____x
THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, Plaintiffs,	:
- against -	:	PETITION FOR RE-SENTENCE
_____, Defendant.	:	_____ County
_____x		Ind. No. _____

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that, upon the annexed affirmation of _____, and all the prior proceedings, the undersigned will move this Court, at 100 Centre Street, New York, New York, 10013, on _____, at the opening of Court on that day or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, for an order vacating the sentence imposed by the Court on _____(_____, J.); re-sentencing defendant pursuant to the Rockefeller Drug Law Reform Act of 2005 ("DLRA") [see 2005 Sess. Law of N.Y., Ch. 643 (S. 5880)]; and granting such other relief as the Court may deem proper.

Please also accept this as an application for appointment of counsel. I am indigent, currently incarcerated, and I cannot afford counsel to represent me in this application for re-sentence.

Dated: _____, New York
_____ , 20__

Yours,

_____

TO: Clerk of the Court
New York County Supreme Court
100 Centre Street
New York, New York 10013

Hon. Robert M. Morgenthau
New York County District Attorney
1 Hogan Place
New York, New York 10013
or
Hon. Bridget Brennan
Special Narcotics Prosecutor
80 Centre Street
New York, New York 10013

183. Adapted from New York Legal Aid Society sample document. This sample is tailored to a prisoner serving time for an A-II felony drug offense.

184. Your Notice of Appeal is addressed to the court you were tried in, not the Appeals Court. This sample presumes you were tried in a Supreme Court. If you were tried in a County Court, be sure to replace this court for the Supreme Court at the top of the form. Make sure to address the form to the correct individuals in the "To:" section.

B-2. SAMPLE AFFIRMATION

SUPREME COURT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK
_____ COUNTY CRIMINAL TERM

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, Plaintiffs,	:
	:	AFFIRMATION
- against -	:
	:	_____ County
Defendant.	:	Ind. No. _____

STATE OF NEW YORK)
) ss:
COUNTY OF NEW YORK)

Defendant _____, hereby affirms, under penalty of perjury, that the following statements are true.

1. I [pleaded guilty to] [was convicted after a trial of] second-degree criminal [possession] [sale] of a controlled substance (P.L. ' [possession: 220.18] [sale: 220.41]) and [list other counts, if any]. On_____, the court sentenced defendant to imprisonment for an indeterminate term of _____ years toon the second-degree [sale] [possession] count to run [concurrently with] [consecutively to] [note other sentences, if any].

2. I am presently incarcerated on an A-II drug conviction.

3. Defendant is more than 12 months from being an "eligible inmate" as that term is defined in Subdivision 2 of Section 851 of the Correction Law.

4. Defendant meets the statutory eligibility requirements for merit time under Correction Law Section 803(1)(d).

5. For the above-stated reasons, defendant believes that [he] [she] is eligible to be re-sentenced under the Drug Law Reform Act of 2005 ("DLRA") [see 2005 Sess. Law of N.Y., Ch. 643 (S. 5880)] and defendant, thus, moves for such relief.

6. Defendant has yet to receive [his] [her] program and disciplinary records from the Department of Corrections. Defendant is filing this motion now to protect [his] [her] rights under the DLRA. Nevertheless, defendant requests the opportunity to supplement this motion and to provide the Court with additional pertinent information when that information becomes available.

WHEREFORE, Defendant respectfully requests that the Court grant [his] [her] petition for re-sentence. Defendant further requests that the Court grant [him] [her] permission to supplement this application after additional information is obtained.

Dated: _____, New York
_____, 20__

_____
[Name of Defendant]

B-3. SAMPLE AFFIDAVIT OF SERVICE

SUPREME COURT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK
COUNTY OF _____

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, Plaintiffs,	:
- against -	:	AFFIDAVIT OF SERVICE
	:	_____ County
Defendant.	:
	x	Ind. No. _____

STATE OF NEW YORK)
) ss:
COUNTY OF NEW YORK)

_____ being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is over the age of eighteen years and is not a party in this proceeding; that on the _____ day of _____ 20___, deponent served the within Petition for Re-sentence upon _____ in this action, at _____, the address designated by _____ for that purpose by depositing a true copy of the same by mail, enclosed in a post-paid properly addressed wrapper, in _____ a post office _____official depository under the exclusive care and custody of the United States Post Office Department within the State of New York.

_____
Signature

Subscribed and sworn to before me this _____ day of ____ 20___

_____
Notary Public

APPENDIX B-4: SAMPLE DOCUMENT REQUEST LETTER[185]

_____ Correctional Facility
Attn: Inmate Records
Box ___
_____, NY _____

[Date]

Dear Sir/Madam,

I am writing to request a copy of my entire inmate record. My name is _____, my date of birth is __/__/__, and my NYSID No. is _____. Please include the following records:

(9) Complete copy of my legal file.
(10) Complete copy of my guidance file.
(11) Complete copy of my education file.
(12) Complete copy of my package room file.
(13) Complete copy of my medical file.
(14) Complete copy of my disciplinary and disposition file.
(15) Explanation of codes used in the inmate progress note sheets.
(16) Visit log.

Thank you for your attention to this matter.

Sincerely,

_____
[Your Name]

185. Adapted from New York Legal Aid Society sample document.

APPENDIX C: SAMPLE PRO SE APPLICATION[186]

C-1. SAMPLE PETITION FOR RE-SENTENCE

SUPREME COURT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK
_____ COUNTY CRIMINAL TERM

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, Plaintiffs,	:
- against -	:	PETITION FOR RE-SENTENCE
	:	_____ County
Defendant.	:	Ind. No. _____

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that, upon the annexed affirmation of _____, and all the prior proceedings, the undersigned will move this Court, at 100 Centre Street, New York, New York, 10013, on _____, at the opening of Court on that day or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, for an order vacating the sentence imposed by the Court on_ (__, J.); re-sentencing defendant pursuant to the Rockefeller Drug Law Reform Act of 2005 ("DLRA") [see 2005 Sess. Law of N.Y., Ch. 643 (S. 5880)]; and granting such other relief as the Court may deem proper.

Dated: _____, New York
_____, 20__

Yours,

_____

TO: Clerk of the Court
New York County Supreme Court
100 Centre Street
New York, New York 10013

Hon. Robert M. Morgenthau
New York County District Attorney
1 Hogan Place
New York, New York 10013
or
Hon. Bridget Brennan
Special Narcotics Prosecutor
80 Centre Street
New York, New York 10013

186. Adapted from New York Legal Aid Society sample document. This sample is tailored to a prisoner serving time for an A-II felony drug offense.

C-2. SAMPLE AFFIRMATION

SUPREME COURT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK
_____ COUNTY CRIMINAL TERM

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, Plaintiffs,	:
	:	AFFIRMATION
- against -	:
	:	_____ County
Defendant.	:	Ind. No. _____

STATE OF NEW YORK)
) ss:
COUNTY OF NEW YORK)

Defendant _____, hereby affirms, under penalty of perjury, that the following statements are true.

1. I [pleaded guilty to] [was convicted after a trial of] second-degree criminal [possession] [sale] of a controlled substance (P.L. [possession: 220.18] [sale: 220.41]) and [list other counts, if any]. On_____, the court sentenced defendant to imprisonment for an indeterminate term of years on the second-degree [sale] [possession] count to run [concurrently with] [consecutively to] [note other sentences, if any].

2. I am presently incarcerated on an A-II drug conviction.

3. Defendant is more than 12 months from being an "eligible inmate" as that term is defined in Subdivision 2 of Section 851 of the Correction Law.

5. Defendant meets the statutory eligibility requirements for merit time under Correction Law Section 803(1)(d).

6. For the above-stated reasons, defendant believes that [he] [she] is eligible to be re-sentenced under the Drug Law Reform Act of 2005 ("DLRA") [see 2005 Sess. Law of N.Y., Ch. 643 (S. 5880)] and defendant, thus, moves for such relief.

7. Defendant has yet to receive [his] [her] program and disciplinary records from the Department of Corrections. Defendant is filing this motion now to protect [his] [her] rights under the DLRA. Nevertheless, defendant requests the opportunity to supplement this motion and to provide the Court with additional pertinent information when that information becomes available.

WHEREFORE, Defendant respectfully requests that the Court grant [his] [her] petition for re-sentence. Defendant further requests that the Court grant [him] [her] permission to supplement this application after additional information is obtained.

Dated: _____, New York
_____, 20__

_____
[Name of Defendant]

C-3. SAMPLE AFFIDAVIT OF SERVICE

SUPREME COURT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK
COUNTY OF _____

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, Plaintiffs,	:
- against -	:	AFFIDAVIT OF SERVICE
	:	_____ County
Defendant.	:
	x	Ind. No. _____

STATE OF NEW YORK)
) ss:
COUNTY OF NEW YORK)

_____ being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is over the age of eighteen years and is not a party in this proceeding; that on the _____ day of _____ 20___, deponent served the within Petition for Re-sentence upon _____ in this action, at _____, the address designated by _____ for that purpose by depositing a true copy of the same by mail, enclosed in a post-paid properly addressed wrapper, in _____ a post office _____official depository under the exclusive care and custody of the United States Post Office Department within the State of New York.

_____
Signature

Subscribed and sworn to before me this _____ day of ____ 20__

_____
Notary Public

A JAILHOUSE LAWYER'S MANUAL

Chapter 11: Using Post-Conviction DNA Testing to Attack Your Conviction or Sentence

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

CHAPTER 11

USING POST-CONVICTION DNA TESTING TO ATTACK YOUR CONVICTION OR SENTENCE*

A. Introduction

As of September 27, 2009, 242 individuals have been exonerated in the United States through post-conviction DNA testing.[1] This is because DNA is uniquely capable of proving innocence in crimes where biological material was left by the perpetrator.[2] Many people in prison were convicted before DNA testing was possible, or before it was considered reliable, and they were not able to present evidence at their trial that might have helped prove their innocence. There are many organizations throughout the country that help prisoners recover DNA evidence and secure DNA testing. Because of the complexity of applying for testing, we strongly recommend that you contact one of these organizations rather than proceeding pro se (on your own).

If you do decide to litigate on your own, this Chapter can help you understand some legal issues involved in the process. This Chapter explains how you may be able to use DNA testing of physical evidence to challenge your conviction or sentence and how DNA testing is currently being used within the criminal justice system. Part B of this Chapter discusses some ways you can petition to reopen your case based on DNA testing. Part C explains how to seek assistance from a legal organization and Appendix A lists some legal organizations that might be able to help you obtain DNA testing.

B. Common Procedures Used to Obtain DNA Testing

In the past, methods of testing evidence found at crime scenes were crude, and identifications or exonerations based on crime scene evidence were often inaccurate. DNA testing is much more accurate than older methods. If you believe there might have been biological evidence (like blood, semen, hair, or sweat) collected at the scene of your crime of conviction, and if you think DNA tests of the evidence would exonerate you, you can make several motions to try to get this evidence tested and the results admitted in court.

Finding evidence is one of the biggest obstacles to getting DNA testing. A big part of finding evidence is understanding the difference between biological evidence that was introduced at your trial (for instance, a bloody shirt) and evidence that was collected during the investigation, but not introduced at your trial (for instance, a rape kit—the evidence collected from a rape victim when she was examined by a doctor). You do not need to actually locate the evidence you want tested. You only need to prove that it was either collected during the course of the investigation or introduced into evidence at your trial (or both). When filing a motion, you must be specific about what evidence you want to test, why that evidence is important, and the last known location of the evidence. It is very important to identify the last known location of the evidence.

1. Motion to Secure DNA Testing

Before filing a motion for a new trial based on newly discovered evidence (see Part B(2) for more information), you need to file a motion to secure DNA testing. How you will file your motion will depend on whether your state has a post-conviction DNA testing statute. Forty-seven states have some sort of post-conviction DNA testing statute.[3] If you are a state prisoner in one of these states, read Subsection (a) below on how to make your motion.

As of September 2009, states that do NOT have a post-conviction DNA statute are Alaska, Massachusetts, and Oklahoma.[4] If you are a prisoner in Alaska, Massachusetts, or Oklahoma which do not have post-conviction statutes, then you will need to file a Section 1983 action. See Subsection (b) below and

---

* This Chapter was revised by Susan Maples, based on previous versions by Kristin Jamberdino, Oluwashola Ajewole, and Sara Manaugh.

1. The Innocence Project, available at http://www.innocenceproject.org/Content/351.php (last visited Jan. 5, 2010).

2. DNA (which stands for "deoxyribonucleic acid") is a substance contained in every human cell. Each strand of DNA is encoded with information about the specific physical characteristics of the individual whom it comes from.

3. The Innocence Project, available at http://www.innocenceproject.org/Content/304.php (last visited Jan. 5, 2010).

4. The Innocence Project, available at http://www.innocenceproject.org/Content/304.php (last visited Jan. 5, 2010).

Chapter 16 of the JLM to learn about Section 1983 claims. If you are a federal prisoner, you should file your motion under the recently passed Justice for All Act. Subsection (c) below explains how this statute works.

(a) State Prisoners in States with a Post-Conviction DNA Testing Statute

As of September 2009, forty-seven U.S. states had enacted laws allowing post-conviction DNA testing. The U.S. Congress has also enacted legislation. State statutes vary greatly regarding the conditions under which you may request testing. For example, some only allow those convicted of certain felonies to petition.[5] Some impose strict due diligence requirements[6] or only grant requests if identity was an issue at trial.[7] Others provide strict time limits within which a petition may be filed.[8] You should carefully read the requirements and conditions for petitioning for post-conviction DNA testing in your state. Footnote sixteen lists the state statutes to help you do this research.

New York was the first state to allow for post-conviction DNA testing, and its provisions are some of the most flexible.[9] According to the provisions of that law, which are incorporated into Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law,[10] there is no express due diligence requirement,[11] identity does not need to have been an issue at your trial, and there is no time limit for filing a petition. In New York, the court will order testing if it determines that you have met the following requirements:

(1) Your Article 440 motion requests that a forensic test be performed on specific evidence, which you have clearly identified;
(2) The evidence you are requesting a DNA test on was obtained in connection with your trial (the trial which resulted in your conviction); and
(3) There is a "reasonable probability" that if the results of a DNA test had been admitted at the trial, the verdict would have been more favorable to you.[12]

The "reasonable probability" requirement is probably the most important. The court will not order a DNA test if it believes there is no "reasonable probability" that the verdict would have been different, even if you are right about whatever you are trying to prove with the DNA test.[13] This requirement does not mean

---

5. See, e.g., Ind. Code §§ 35-38-7-1, 35-38-7-3, 35-38-7-5 (LEXIS through 2009) (indicating that only those convicted of murder or a class A, B, or C felony may petition).

6. "Due diligence" means you should believe that the evidence you want tested will show that you are innocent and that you are pursuing the testing within the proper amount of time, usually the time determined by the statute.

7. "Identity at issue at trial" means that you or your attorney claimed that you did not commit the crime for which you were on trial. See, e.g., Ark. Code § 16-112-201 (LEXIS through 2009) (strict due diligence requirement); Fla. Stat. § 925.11 (LEXIS through 2009) (due diligence requirement); 725 Ill. Comp. Stat. 5/116-3 (LEXIS through 2009) (identity must have been an issue at trial); Mich. Comp. Laws § 770.16(3)(a)(iii) (LEXIS through 2009) (identity must have been an issue at trial); Mo. Stat. § 547.035 (LEXIS through 2009) (due diligence requirement, identity must have been an issue at trial); Tex. Code Crim. Proc. art. 64.03(a)(1)(B) (LEXIS through 2009) (identity must have been an issue at trial).

8. Md. Code Crim. Proc. § 8-201 (LEXIS through 2009) (only those incarcerated on or after October 1, 2001 may petition).

9. The text of the New York provision reads as follows:

> Where the defendant's motion requests the performance of a forensic DNA test on specified evidence, and upon the court's determination that any evidence containing deoxyribonucleic acid ("DNA") was secured in connection with the trial resulting in the judgment, the court shall grant the application for forensic DNA testing of such evidence upon its determination that if a DNA test had been conducted on such evidence, and if the results had been admitted in the trial resulting in the judgment, there exists a reasonable probability that the verdict would have been more favorable to the defendant.

N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.30(1-a(a)) (Consol. 2009).

10. For more information on Article 440, see JLM, Chapter 20, "Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence."

11. But see People v. Kellar, 218 A.D.2d 406, 410, 640 N.Y.S.2d 908, 910 (3d Dept. 1996) (finding that the legislature did not mean to eliminate the due diligence requirement for DNA testing: "We do not read CPL 440.30 (1-a) as granting a second opportunity to those who have failed to take advantage of available DNA testing prior to trial"); People v. Sterling, 6 Misc. 3d 712, 719, 787 N.Y.S.2d 846, 851 (Sup. Ct. Monroe County 2004) (noting "CPL 440.10 (1) (g), in fact, does contain the additional requirement that a motion based upon the ground of newly discovered evidence must be made with due diligence after its discovery.").

12. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.30 (1-a(a)) (Consol. 2005).

13. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.30 (1-a(a)) (Consol. 2005); see also People v. Tookes, 167 Misc. 2d 601, 604–06, 639 N.Y.S.2d 913, 915–16 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County 1996) (finding no reasonable probability where (1) there was no case for mistaken identity; (2) there was clear evidence of rape; and (3) available biological specimens were unlikely to have contributed to defendant's case, given the equivocal results of blood and saliva tests, the defendant's earlier failure to that the court must be certain that the evidence will prove you are innocent, but it does impose a significant burden on you. A court can legally deny your request for testing if it believes that your conviction was justifiable, regardless of what a DNA test might show.[14]

The New York law is unusual in that it allows you to request DNA testing as part of your Article 440 motion to vacate judgment (request a new trial).[15] Not all states allow you to combine the request for testing and motion for a new trial in the same motion, and you may find that the law in your state is more difficult to use. For instance, some states have different deadlines, called "statutes of limitations," for filing a motion for a new trial and for requesting post-conviction DNA testing. The deadline to request a new trial may have passed even though your opportunity to request DNA testing is still technically available. Furthermore, some states have stricter requirements for granting a request for testing than for granting a motion for a new trial (or vice versa).

Because there is such variation among state statutes, you must look carefully at your state's post-conviction DNA testing statute. When deciding whether to request post-conviction testing, consult both the statute governing motions for new trial and the case law, if any, governing post-conviction DNA testing.[16]

When filing your motion, it is important that you know which pieces of evidence you want tested, show that you understand your state's post-conviction DNA testing statute, and explain why you believe you meet every qualification set out by that statute. You should write out your state's entire post-conviction DNA testing statute in your motion, then go through each requirement of the statute separately and show how the facts of your case meet each qualification. By being as clear as possible about the pieces of evidence you want tested, why you are seeking post-conviction DNA testing, and how you meet all the requirements of your state's statute, your motion will have a better chance of succeeding.

---

pursue an enzyme analysis, and the indeterminate age of the recovered sperm).

14. See, e.g., People v. Smith, 245 A.D.2d 79, 79, 665 N.Y.S.2d 648, 649 (1st Dept. 1997) (finding that, in prosecution for first degree rape and related crimes, post-conviction DNA tests probably would not have resulted in more favorable verdict for defendant where (1) fact that defendant was not source of semen was consistent with victim's testimony that she had intercourse with her boyfriend shortly before rape and that she did not know whether defendant ejaculated; (2) evidence of guilt was overwhelming; and (3) there was no claim of mistaken identity); People v. De Oliveira, 223 A.D.2d 766, 767–68, 636 N.Y.S.2d 441, 443 (3d Dept. 1996) (finding defendant not entitled to DNA testing because it was improbable that results of DNA testing would have effect on his second degree murder conviction where it was undisputed that victim was sexually active about the time of her murder, there was no evidence that the killing was part of a sexual encounter, and there was no critical testimony that could be seriously impeached by test results).

15. For more information on Article 440, see JLM, Chapter 20, "Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence."

16. The following lists all the state laws governing post-conviction DNA testing, in alphabetical order of the states: Alabama: Ala. Code §§ 36-18-24 to 25 (2009); Arizona: Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 13-4240 (2001); Arkansas: Ark. Code Ann. § 16-112-201 to -208 (2006); California: Cal. Penal Code § 1405 (2006); Colorado: Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 18-1-411 to -416 (2004); Connecticut: Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 54-102kk (2007); Delaware: Del. Code Ann. tit. 11, § 4504 (2001); District of Columbia: D.C. Code Ann. § 22-4133 (2007); Florida: Fla. Stat. Ann. § 925.11 (2007); Fla. R. Crim. P. 3.853 (2009); Georgia: Ga. Code Ann. § 5-5-41 (2007); Hawaii: Haw. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 844D-121 to -133 (2007); Idaho: Idaho Code Ann. § 19-4902 (2004); Illinois: 725 Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. 5/116-3 (2007); Indiana: Ind. Code Ann. §§ 35-38-7-1 to -19 (2006); Iowa: Iowa Code Ann. § 81.10 (2007); Kansas: Kan. Stat. Ann. § 21-2512 (2006); Kentucky: Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 422.285, 422.287 (2007); Louisiana: La. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 926.1 (2007); Maine: Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 15, §§ 2136–2138 (2006); Maryland: Md. Code Ann., Crim. Proc. § 8-201 (2007); Michigan: Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 770.16 (2006); Minnesota: Minn. Stat. Ann. §§ 590.01–.06 (2007); Mississippi: Miss. Code §47-5-183 (2007); Missouri: Mo. Ann. Stat. § 547.035 (2002); Montana: Mont. Code Ann. § 46-21-110 (2007); Nebraska: Neb. Rev. Stat. §§ 29-2101, 29-4126 (2005); Nevada: Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 176.0917–.0919 (2006); New Hampshire: N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 651-D:1 to -D:4 (2005); New Jersey: N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2A:84A-32a (2007); New Mexico: N.M. Stat. § 31-1A-2 (2007); New York: N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.30 (2005); North Carolina: N.C. Gen. Stat. § 15A-269 (2005); North Dakota: N.D. Cent. Code § 29-32.1-15 (2006); Ohio: Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 2901.07 (2006); Oklahoma: Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 22, §§ 1360, 1371.1, 1371.2 (2008); Oregon: Or. Rev. Stat. Tit. 14, Ch. 138, Prec. 138.690 (2007). Pennsylvania: 42 Pa. Cons. Stat. Ann. § 9543.1 (2007); Rhode Island: R.I. Gen. Laws §§ 10-9.1-10 to 10-9.1-12 (2006); South Carolina: S.C. Code § 23-3-660 (2008); South Dakota: S.D. Cod. Laws §§ 23-5A-1 to 23-5A-32 (2009); Tennessee: Tenn. Code Ann. §§ 40-30-110, -301 to -313 (2005); Texas: Tex. Code Crim. Proc. arts. 64.01–.05 (2006); Utah: Utah Code Ann. §§ 78-35a-301 to -304 (2007); Vermont: 13 V.S.A. §§ 5561-70 (2009); Virginia: Va. Code Ann. § 19.2-327.1 (2003); Washington: Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 10.73.170 (2007); West Virginia: W. Va. Code Ann. § 15-2B-14 (2007); Wisconsin: Wis. Stat. Ann. §§ 974.02, .06, .07 (2006); Wyoming: Wyo. Stat. §§7-12-303 to 7-12-305 (2009). For information about statutes versus cases, see Chapter 2 of the JLM.

(b) Possible State Constitutional Rights

Until recently, it was unclear whether there was a federal constitutional right to DNA testing. However, in District Attorney's Office for Third Judicial Dist. v. Osborne, the Supreme Court held that there is no constitutional right to have post-conviction access to DNA testing.[17] The Court stated that allowing prisoners access to DNA testing was a decision best left in the hands of the legislature.[18] If you are a prisoner in one of the few remaining states without a DNA testing statute, you can argue that DNA testing access is required under your state constitution.

The five main arguments most often used to support the right to post-conviction DNA testing are (1) the procedural due process right to exculpatory evidence under the doctrine of Brady v. Maryland;[19] (2) the substantive due process right to be free from arbitrary government restrictions on life, liberty, or property; (3) the right to access the courts and to petition the government; (4) the unconstitutionality of continued confinement of an actually innocent person; and (5) the right a person has to seek executive clemency (for example, to ask the governor of a state to release a prisoner even without a new trial).

(c) Federal Prisoners: Filing Under the Federal Post-Conviction DNA Testing Statute: The Justice for All Act of 2004

On October 30, 2004, the Justice for All Act was signed into federal law. Because it is a relatively new law, there might not be much case law about it yet in your jurisdiction. This law gives prisoners the right to request post-conviction DNA testing, but it applies only to federal prisoners.[20] If you are a state prisoner, you must use your state's post-conviction DNA testing statute listed in footnote sixteen (see part B(1)(a)). If your state does not have a statute, then file a Section 1983 action (see part B(1)(b)).

The Justice for All Act works exactly like a state post-conviction DNA statute if you are serving time for a federal crime. It lays out the standards states should have for post-conviction DNA testing, and it provides the rules and procedures for federal prisoners who are serving a prison or death sentence and applying for DNA testing.[21] The Act requires that:

(1) The applicant must assert under penalty of perjury that he is "actually innocent" of the federal offense he is imprisoned or on death row for; or
(2) In death penalty cases, that he is "actually innocent" of another federal or state offense, if being exonerated of this offense would give him the right to a reduced sentence or a new sentencing hearing; and
(3) The specific evidence to be tested must not have been previously tested, except that testing using a newer and more reliable method of testing may be requested; and
(4) The proposed DNA testing may produce new evidence raising a reasonable probability that the applicant did not commit the offense; and
(5) The applicant must provide a current DNA sample for comparison with existing evidence.[22]

You should file for DNA testing within three years of your conviction. If you do not, your motion will be considered late, and you will have to show a specified reason or "good cause," in other words, a very good reason you did not file in time.[23]

---

17. 129 S. Ct. 2308, 2323, 174 L. Ed. 2d 38 (2009).

18. District Attorney's Office for Third Judicial Dist. v. Osborne, 129 S. Ct. 2308, 2316, 174 L. Ed. 2d 38 (2009) (figuring out the best way to use DNA testing is a task that "belongs primarily to the legislature").

19. Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 83 S. Ct. 1194, 10 L. Ed. 2d 215 (1961) (holding that the prosecution's suppression of evidence favorable to the accused upon request was a due process violation).

20. 18 U.S.C. § 3600 (2004).

21. 18 U.S.C. § 3600 (2004).

22. 18 U.S.C. § 3600(a)(1)(A-B), (a)(3)(A), (a)(8-9) (2004); available at the Death Penalty Information Center, http://www.deathpenaltyinfo.org/article.php?scid=40&did=1234#subA (last visited Sept. 27, 2009).

23. 18 U.S.C. § 3600(a)(10)(A-B) (2004). If you do not file within three years of your conviction, there is a presumption that your motion is not timely. That presumption can be rebutted by showing (1) that you were incompetent and that the incompetence was the reason that you did not file in a timely manner; (2) that the evidence to be tested is newly discovered DNA evidence; (3) that you are not appealing to assert your innocence but that to deny the appeal would lead to a manifest injustice, or that you have "good cause" for filing your motion late. See also the Death Penalty Information Center, available at http://www.deathpenaltyinfo.org/article.php?scid=40&did=1234#subA (last visited March 4, 2008).

The government is not allowed to destroy DNA evidence from a federal criminal case while the defendant remains incarcerated, with certain exceptions. The government may destroy DNA evidence: (1) if a court has denied a motion for DNA testing; (2) if the defendant knowingly and voluntarily waived the right to DNA testing; (3) if the defendant was notified after his conviction became final that the evidence may be destroyed and did not file a motion for testing (4) if the evidence has already been tested and the results included the defendant as the source. If the evidence is large or bulky, the government may preserve only a representative sample.[24]

One word of caution: If you assert your innocence and the DNA evidence does not show you to be innocent, the court can hold you in contempt and if you are convicted of making false assertions, your term of imprisonment will be extended by at least three years.[25] However, if the evidence excludes you as the source of the DNA evidence, then you can petition for a new trial, which shall be granted when the test results, considered with all other evidence in the case (whether introduced at trial or not), establish by compelling evidence that a new trial would result in an acquittal.[26] Also, if you are a federal defendant, you may file a motion for a new sentencing hearing if evidence of an offense was admitted during a federal death sentencing hearing and exoneration of that offense would entitle you to a reduced sentence or to a new sentencing proceeding.[27]

2. Motion for a New Trial Based on Newly Discovered Evidence

Once you have succeeded in your motion to secure DNA evidence, gotten the DNA testing you asked for, and have obtained results that point to your innocence, it is time to file a motion for a new trial. Every state, and the federal government, allows you to file a motion for a new trial based on newly discovered evidence. Because DNA technology is so new, the results of DNA analysis may be considered "newly discovered evidence," even if the substance being analyzed is not itself newly discovered.

Every jurisdiction has a test that courts apply in deciding whether to grant a motion for a new trial based on newly discovered evidence. In the federal system, courts traditionally ask five questions to determine whether to grant a defendant's motion for a new trial: [28]

(1) Was the evidence available before the trial?
(2) Could it have been discovered before the trial through the exercise of due diligence?[29]
(3) Is the evidence "material" (relevant) to the issue you raise in your motion?
(4) Is the evidence merely "cumulative" (does it only support the other similar evidence already admitted at trial) or "impeaching" (does it only contradict other evidence admitted at trial)?; and
(5) Would the evidence probably change the result if a new trial were granted?[30]

State courts use similar tests to determine whether to grant a motion for a new trial. New York courts have historically used a formula like the federal test.[31] While the trial court is bound by these questions, it

---

24. 18 U.S.C. § 3600A(a), (c)(1-5) (2006).
25. 18 U.S.C. §§ 3600 (f)(2)(B)(i), (f)(3) (2004).
26. 18 U.S.C. § 3600 (g)(2) (2004).
27. 18 U.S.C. § 3600 (g)(2)(B) (2004).
28. In federal courts, Rule 33 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure authorizes a request for a new trial. Rule 33 allows the court to grant a new trial on defendant's motion if "the interest of justice so requires." Fed. R. Crim. P. 33.
29. Due diligence in this context means that you and/or your attorney should have been able to find the evidence had you looked for it. There should be a reason why you were not able to find the evidence before trial, and you should make this known to the court.
30. See John A. Glenn, Annotation, What Constitutes "Newly Discovered Evidence" Within Meaning of Rule 33 of Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure Relating to Motions for New Trial, 44 A.L.R. Fed. 13 (2002); see also United States v. Carlone, 603 F.2d 63, 66–67 (8th Cir. 1979) (using this standard to deny a new trial when a newly discovered defense witness claimed F.B.I. agents asked him to plant weapons and drugs in the defendant's home); Pitts v. United States, 263 F.2d 808, 810–11 (9th Cir. 1959) (going through all five questions to show that evidence submitted by defense would not meet any of the standards, even if it had been newly discovered); United States v. Bertone, 249 F.2d 156, 160 (3rd Cir. 1957) (rejecting motion for a new trial based on testimony from newly available witnesses because the witnesses were available and known by defendant during trial); United States v. Marachowsky, 213 F.2d 235, 238–39 (7th Cir. 1954) (applying this test to reject three witnesses newly brought by the defense to secure a new trial).
31. See People v. Priori, 164 N.Y. 459, 472, 58 N.E. 668, 672 (1900) (using a six-step test to deny the defendant's motion for a new trial, and splitting question four of the federal test into two separate questions about cumulative and impeaching evidence).

has some discretion to decide whether to grant a new trial. These motions are extraordinary, so courts do not grant them freely, and appellate courts rarely reverse a trial judge's decision to deny a new trial motion.

Note also that most states, as well as the federal government, limit the period of time after your conviction during which you may file such a motion.[32] These time limits, called the "statute of limitations," are based on the idea that evidence becomes less reliable over time. If the time has expired to file for this motion, you must try other, less direct, post-conviction remedies (such as a writ of habeas corpus, discussed in Section 3 below), which may offer a longer statute of limitations period.

To file your motion on time, you need "newly discovered evidence." For you, this is the DNA results of the biological evidence at issue.

Depending on your jurisdiction's statute, you may be able to file a motion for a new trial based on newly discovered evidence if biological evidence from the crime for which you were convicted still exists, but:

(1) DNA testing was never performed on it;
(2) DNA analysis was performed, but the results were not admitted in court (because, for example, DNA testing was not regarded as reliable evidence at the time of your trial); or
(3) DNA analysis was performed, but the methods then used to analyze the evidence are now known to be unreliable (for example, microscopic hair comparison).

If you pleaded guilty at trial, you may be denied your motion for a new trial based on newly discovered evidence and/or your request for DNA testing. This might occur even if the statute does not specifically say so. New York, for example, does not explicitly bar people who pleaded guilty from requesting DNA testing, but courts have held that those who pleaded guilty have admitted their factual guilt and have waived the right to a new trial based on newly discovered evidence.[33] You should consult both your state's statutes and case law to determine whether a guilty plea prevents you from seeking a new trial based on DNA evidence.

One further point to keep in mind is that even if your state has not passed a statute providing for post-conviction DNA testing, this does not mean that you cannot request a test. Courts might treat such a request as a matter of discretion and will probably determine whether to grant it based on a combination of factors similar to the ones listed in the various state statutes that have been passed.

3. Habeas Corpus Relief

It might be possible for you to get post-conviction relief by petitioning for a writ of habeas corpus, although it is unlikely.[34] A habeas corpus writ is a court's written order demanding a prisoner be brought before the court to see whether his imprisonment or detention is illegal. Unlike most post-conviction DNA cases, in which motions are made to find evidence, in habeas cases it is assumed you already have the evidence to exonerate you.[35] So, this remedy is not available unless the biological evidence from the crime scene has already been subjected to DNA testing. Another problem federal habeas corpus petitioners encounter is it is traditionally assumed relief cannot be granted unless a constitutional error occurred at trial.[36]

---

32. Herrera v. Collins, 506 U.S. 390, 410–11, 113 S. Ct. 853, 865–66, 122 L. Ed. 2d 203, 223 (1993), (finding that while some states required filing a motion within weeks of conviction, some provide a time limit of one, two, or three years, and a few states have no time limit). Since Herrera, the federal statute of limitations for filing a motion based on new evidence was extended from two to three years. Fed. R. Crim. P. 33.

33. See People v. Jackson, 163 Misc. 2d 224, 226, 620 N.Y.S.2d 240, 241 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County 1994) ("By pleading guilty, the defendant admitted his factual guilt and waived his right to confront his accusers. He may not now seek to defend himself against those accusers by a motion based upon newly discovered evidence.").

34. See Chapter 13 of the JLM, "Federal Habeas Corpus," for more information on habeas corpus petitions.

35. If you are already bringing a petition for habeas corpus on other grounds, then you can also request DNA testing; however, because a petition for habeas corpus is a difficult route to take to seek testing, it is only recommended if you are already filing a habeas petition. See Cherrix v. Braxton, 131 F. Supp. 2d 756, 761–62 (E.D. Va. 2001) (defending decision to order DNA testing on previously tested material due to technological advances and principle that newly-discovered DNA evidence would "illuminate" federal habeas claim). See also Thomas v. Goldsmith, 979 F.2d. 746, 749–50 (9th. Cir. 1992) (requiring state to turn over allegedly exculpatory DNA evidence in order to allow the prisoner to make a colorable showing of innocence and overcome procedural default on habeas claim).

36. But see In re Davis, 130 S. Ct. 1, 174 L. Ed. 2d 614 (2009) (remanding case to district court where defendant made a strong claim of "actual innocence" in an original habeas petition). Although there was no constitutional error in the defendant's trial, the extraordinary showing of innocence later presented by the defendant forced the Court to remand the case in order to decide whether the defendant had grounds for relief under the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 (AEDPA). It remains to be seen whether In re Davis has significant value as precedent.

You may request access to crime scene evidence through the right to demonstrate actual innocence in habeas corpus review. This idea is based on Herrera v. Collins, in which the Supreme Court left open the possibility that "a truly persuasive post-trial demonstration of 'actual innocence'" in a capital case could lead to relief in the event there was not a state-sanctioned review of the evidence.[37] In House v. Bell, the Supreme Court decided that in some cases where new evidence would have been likely to cast a reasonable doubt on a state prisoner's conviction, that state prisoner may file for a federal habeas corpus writ, even if the laws of the state where he was convicted would have normally barred a federal habeas filing.[38]

In connection with habeas review, you may find success through the Brady obligation (also known as the Brady material doctrine).[39] Under this rule, the prosecution in a criminal case must reveal any evidence that may prove your innocence. Note, however, the evidence referred to is the results from DNA testing, not the material being tested. You may have a claim for habeas corpus relief if (1) evidence was subjected to DNA testing; (2) the prosecution withheld the results of that test from you; and (3) the results may have helped to prove your innocence. But, if DNA analysis was never performed on the material, you cannot allege a Brady violation based on the prosecution's withholding of that evidence (since the "evidence" did not exist).[40]

The Supreme Court has interpreted Brady not to impose a constitutional duty on the state to perform DNA tests on evidence, or to preserve evidence so it can be tested.[41] But, this rule changed when Congress passed the Justice for All Act of 2004.[42] The Justice for All Act imposes uniform rules for the preservation of evidence for DNA testing in federal crimes but does not provide for damages.[43] But, whether a violation of those procedures would be the basis for other claims for relief, like a claim under Section 1983, is unclear.

C. Legal Assistance for Those Seeking Post-Conviction DNA Testing

If you do not have a lawyer and want to seek post-conviction DNA testing, there are many not-for-profit organizations—usually called "innocence projects"—that might help. These organizations receive huge numbers of requests, therefore they are often forced to choose a few cases over others that may be just as worthy. You may want to consider contacting multiple organizations for help.

Appendix A below lists organizations that may help you use DNA evidence to prove your innocence. To have one of these offices consider your case, you should mail a brief factual summary of the case and a list of the evidence used against you. The case must involve biological evidence (semen, blood, saliva, skin, sweat, or hair). If possible, you should indicate what evidence you want to test, why it would be important to your case, and the last known location of that evidence (if you include this information, it may help the attorneys get back to you faster). Also, include your full name, mailing address, and prison identification number.

---

37. See Herrera v. Collins, 506 U.S. 390, 417, 113 S. Ct. 853, 869, 122 L. Ed. 2d 203, 227 (1993) (noting that in a capital case a truly persuasive demonstration of "actual innocence" made after trial would render the execution of a defendant unconstitutional, and warrant federal habeas relief if there were no state avenue open to process such a claim).

38. See House v. Bell, 547 U.S. 518, 535-37, 126 S. Ct. 2064, 2076–77, 165 L. Ed. 2d 1, 21 (2006).

39. See Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 87, 83 S. Ct. 1194, 1196–97, 10 L. Ed. 2d 215, 218 (1963) (holding "the suppression by the prosecution of evidence favorable to an accused … violates due process where the evidence is material either to guilt or to punishment, irrespective of the good faith or bad faith of the prosecution"); United States v. Agurs, 427 U.S. 97, 110, 96 S. Ct. 2392, 2401, 49 L. Ed. 2d 342, 353–54 (1976) ("[T]here are situations in which evidence is obviously of such substantial value to the defense that elementary fairness requires it to be disclosed even without a specific request."). The Agurs standards explaining when evidence must be disclosed are no longer good law, but the idea behind them is. See United States v. Bagley, 473 U.S. 667, 675, 105 S. Ct. 3375, 3380, 87 L. Ed. 2d 481, 489–90 (1985) (holding that the prosecutor is required to "disclose evidence favorable to the accused that, if suppressed, would deprive the defendant of a fair trial"). See Chapter 13 of the JLM, "Federal Habeas Corpus," for information on the Brady duty.

40. But see Godschalk v. Montgomery County Dist. Attorney's Office, 177 F. Supp. 2d 366, 369–70 (E.D. Pa. 2001) ("since DNA testing of the genetic material could indeed provide material exculpatory [Brady] evidence for a jury to consider along with the inculpatory evidence of plaintiff's detailed confession … plaintiff has a due process right of access to the genetic material for the limited purpose of DNA testing").

41. See Arizona v. Youngblood, 488 U.S. 51, 57, 109 S. Ct. 333, 337, 102 L. Ed. 2d 281, 289 (1988) (holding that "failure of the State to preserve evidentiary material of which no more can be said than that it could have been subjected to tests, the results of which might have exonerated the defendant" does not violate the Due Process Clause).

42. 18 U.S.C. § 3600A(a) (2006).

43. 18 U.S.C. § 3600A(f) (2006).

D. Conclusion

If you believe DNA can prove your innocence, there are legal options you may be able to use summarized in the sections above. The legal options differ depending on whether you are in state versus federal prison, or whether you are in a state with or without a post-conviction DNA testing statute. Appendix A provides a list of organizations with expertise in helping prisoners seek post-conviction testing. These organizations may be able to help you.

APPENDIX A

PROJECTS THAT MAY OFFER ASSISTANCE IN OBTAINING DNA TESTING—BY STATE

Alaska
Innocence Project Northwest
University of Washington School of Law
William H. Gates Hall, P.O. Box 85110
Seattle, WA 98145
E-mail: jackiem@u.washington.edu
Phone: 206-616-5780
Fax: 206-685-2388

Arizona
Arizona Justice Project
Carrie Spelling, Executive Director
c/o Sandra Day O' Connor College of Law
P.O. Box 877906
Tempe, AZ 85287
E-mail: carrie@azjusticeproject.org
Phone: 480-727-0009

Northern Arizona Justice Project
Robert Schehr, Director
Department of Criminal Justice
Northern Arizona University
P.O. Box 15005
Flagstaff, AZ 86011-5005
Phone: 928-523-7082

Arkansas
Arkansas Innocence Project
James Hensley, Jr.
P.O. Box 639
Cabot, Arkansas 72023
Phone: 501-843-2770

California (Northern)
Northern California Innocence Project
Santa Clara University, School of Law
900 Lafayette Street, Suite 105
Santa Clara, CA 95050
Phone: 408-554-1945
Fax: 408-554-5440

California (Southern)
California Innocence Project
Justin Brooks, Project Director and Institute Professor
California Western School of Law
350 Cedar Street
San Diego, CA 92101
E-mail: jbrooks@cwsl.edu

Colorado
Colorado Innocence Project
James E. Scarboro
370 17th Street, Suite 4500
Denver, CO 80202
Phone: 303-863-2311
Fax: 303-832-0428

Connecticut
Connecticut Innocence Project
c/o McCarter & English
City Place 1, 36th Floor
185 Asylum Street
Hartford, Connecticut 06103
Phone: 860-275-6140

New England Innocence Project
Project Coordinator
Goodwin Procter LLP
Exchange Place
53 State Street
Boston, MA 02109
E-mail: coordinator@newenglandinnocence.org

Delaware
Office of the Public Defender
Lisa M. Schwind, Director
Carvel State Building
820 French Street, 3rd floor
Wilmington, DE 19801
Phone: 302-577-5125

District of Columbia
Mid-Atlantic Innocence Project
American University,
Washington College of Law
4801 Massachusetts Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20016-8184
E-mail: Dsatin@exonerate.org
Phone: 202-895-4519
Fax: 202-774-4226.

Florida
Innocence Project of Florida, Inc.
1100 East Park Avenue
Tallahassee, FL 32301
Phone: 850-561-6767

Georgia
Georgia Innocence Project
2645 North Decatur Road
Decatur, Georgia 30033
Phone: 404-373-4433

Hawaii
Hawai'i Innocence Project
Justin Brooks, Project Director and Institute Professor
California Western School of Law
350 Cedar Street
San Diego, CA 92101
E-mail: jbrooks@cwsl.edu

Idaho
Idaho Innocence Project
Boise State University
1910 University Drive
Boise, ID 83725-1515

Innocence Project Northwest
University of Washington School of Law
William H. Gates Hall, P.O. Box 85110
Seattle, WA 98145
E-mail: jackiem@u.washington.edu
Phone: 206-616-5780
Fax: 206-685-2388

Illinois
Center on Wrongful Convictions
Northwestern University School of Law
375 East Chicago Avenue
Chicago, IL 60611
Phone: 312-503-2391
Fax: 312-503-8977

Indiana
Innocence Project of Indiana
Indiana University School of Law, Indianapolis
Fran Watson, Professor of Law
530 West New York Street
Indianapolis, IN 46202
Phone: 317-274-8523

Wisconsin Innocence Project
Frank J. Remington Center
University of Wisconsin Law School
975 Bascom Mall
Madison, WI 53706-1399
Phone: 608-263-7461 or 608-262-1002

Iowa
Nebraska Innocence Project
P.O. Box 24183
Omaha, NE 68124-0183
Phone: 402-341-7954

Wisconsin Innocence Project
Frank J. Remington Center
University of Wisconsin Law School
975 Bascom Mall
Madison, WI 53706-1399
Phone: 608-263-7461 or 608-262-1002

Kansas
Midwestern Innocence Project
Jay Swearingen, Executive Director
6320 Brookside Plaza
P.O. Box 1500
Kansas City, MO 64113
Phone: 816-221-2166

Kentucky
University of Kentucky Innocence Project
Roberta M. Harding, Professor of Law
University of Kentucky College of Law
209 Law Building
Lexington, KY 40506-0048
Phone: 859-257-1880

Kentucky Innocence Project
Department of Public Advocacy
Kentucky Innocence Project DNA Program
207 Parker Drive, Suite 2
La Grange, KY 40031
Phone: 502-222-2626
Fax: 502-564-3949

Louisiana
Innocence Project New Orleans
3301 Charters Street
New Orleans, LA 70117
Phone: 504-943-1902
Fax: 504-943-1905

Innocence Project of Northwest Louisiana
400 Travis Street, Suite 1222
Shreveport, LA 71101

Maine
New England Innocence Project
Project Coordinator
Goodwin Procter LLP
Exchange Place
53 State Street
Boston, MA 02109
E-mail: coordinator@newenglandinnocence.org

Maryland
Mid-Atlantic Innocence Project
American University,
Washington College of Law
4801 Massachusetts Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20016-8184
E-mail: Dsatin@exonerate.org
Phone: 202-895-4519
Fax: 202-774-4226.

Massachusetts
New England Innocence Project
Project Coordinator
Goodwin Procter LLP
Exchange Place
53 State Street
Boston, MA 02109
E-mail: coordinator@newenglandinnocence.org

Michigan
Thomas M. Cooley Innocence Project
300 S. Capitol Avenue
P.O. Box 13038
Lansing, MI 48901
Phone: 517-371-5140, ext. 5764

Wisconsin Innocence Project
Frank J. Remington Center
University of Wisconsin Law School
975 Bascom Mall
Madison, WI 53706-1399
Phone: 608-263-7461 or 608-262-1002

Minnesota
Innocence Project of Minnesota
Erika Applebaum, Executive Director
Hamline University School of Law
1536 Hewitt Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55104
Phone: 651-523-3152
Fax: 651-523-2967

Wisconsin Innocence Project
Frank J. Remington Center
University of Wisconsin Law School
975 Bascom Mall
Madison, WI 53706-1399
Phone: 608-263-7461 or 608-262-1002

Mississippi
Innocence Project New Orleans
3301 Chartres Street
New Orleans, LA 70117
Phone: 504-943-1902
Fax: 504-943-1905

Missouri
Midwestern Innocence Project
Jay Swearingen, Executive Director
6320 Brookside Plaza
P.O. Box 1500
Kansas City, MO 64113
Phone: 816-221-2166 OK.

Montana
Innocence Project Northwest
University of Washington School of Law
William H. Gates Hall, P.O. Box 85110
Seattle, WA 98145
E-mail: jackiem@u.washington.edu
Phone: 206-616-5780
Fax: 206-685-2388

Nebraska
Nebraska Innocence Project
P.O. Box 24183
Omaha, NE 68124-0183
Phone: 402-341-7954

Nevada
Rocky Mountain Innocence Center
358 South 700 East, Box B235
Salt Lake City, UT 84102
Phone: 801-355-1888

New Hampshire
New England Innocence Project
Project Coordinator
Goodwin Procter LLP
Exchange Place
53 State Street
Boston, MA 02109
E-mail: coordinator@newenglandinnocence.org

New Jersey
Centurion Ministries
Jim McCloskey
221 Witherspoon Street
Princeton, NJ 08542

New Mexico
New Mexico Innocence and Justice Project
Professors April Land,
Barbara Bergman, and Rob Schwartz
University of New Mexico School of Law
1117 Stanford Drive NE
Albuquerque, NM 87131
Phone: 505-277-5265

New York
Innocence Project
Benjamin N. Cardozo School of Law
100 Fifth Avenue, 3rd Floor
New York, NY 10011
Phone: 212-364-5340
Fax: 212-364-5341
Serves New York City, Westchester County

Pace Post-Conviction Project
78 North Broadway, Room G210
White Plains, NY 10603

New York State Defenders Association
194 Washington Avenue, Suite 500
Albany, NY 12210
Phone: 518-465-3524

Second Look Program
Professor Will Hellerstein
Brooklyn Law School
250 Joralemon Street
Brooklyn, NY 11201
Phone: 718-780-7964

North Carolina
North Carolina Center on Actual Innocence
3713 University Drive, Suite D
Durham, NC 27707
Phone: 919-489-3268

North Dakota
Innocence Project of Minnesota
Erika Applebaum, Executive Director
Hamline University School of Law
1536 Hewitt Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55104
Phone: 651-523-3152
Fax: 651-523-2967

Ohio
Lois and Richard Rosenthal Institute for Justice/Ohio Innocence Project University of Cincinnati College of Law
P.O. Box 210040
Cincinnati, OH 45221-0040
Phone: 513-556-0752
Fax: 513-556-1236

Innocence Institute
Point Park College, Dept. of Journalism and Mass Communications
201 Wood Street
Pittsburgh, PA 15222
Phone: 412-765-3164
Fax: 412-392-3917

Oklahoma
Oklahoma Indigent Defense System
DNA Forensic Testing Program
P.O. Box 926
Norman, OK 73070
Phone: 405-801-2666
Fax: 405-801-2690

Oregon
Innocence Project Northwest
University of Washington School of Law
William H. Gates Hall, P.O. Box 85110
Seattle, WA 98145
E-mail: jackiem@u.washington.edu
Phone: 206-616-5780
Fax: 206-685-2388

Pennsylvania
Innocence Institute
Point Park University, Dept. of Journalism and Mass Communications
201 Wood Street
Pittsburgh, PA 15222
Phone: 412-765-3164
Fax: 412-392-3917

Duquesne Law Innocence Project
Professor John T. Rago, Director
600 Forbes Avenue, 632 Fisher Hall
Pittsburgh, PA 15282
Phone: 412-396-4704
Fax: 412-396-5287

Rhode Island
New England Innocence Project
Project Coordinator
Goodwin Procter LLP
Exchange Place
53 State Street
Boston, MA 02109
E-mail: coordinator@newenglandinnocence.org

South Carolina
Palmetto Innocence Project
P.O. Box 11623
Columbia, SC 29211
Phone: 803-779-0005
Fax: 803-779-0666

South Dakota
Innocence Project of South Dakota
Professor Chris Hutton, Director
University of South Dakota School of Law
414 E. Clark Street
Vermillion, SD 57069
Phone: 605-677-5443

Innocence Project of Minnesota
Erika Applebaum, Executive Director
Hamline University School of Law
1536 Hewitt Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55104
Phone: 651-523-3152
Fax: 651-523-2967

Tennessee
Tennessee Innocence Clinic
c/o UT - Pro Bono
University of Tennessee Innocence Clinic
1505 West Cumberland Avenue
Knoxville, TN 37996
Phone: 865-974-9791
Fax: 865-974-6782

Texas
University of Houston Innocence Network
Professor David Dow, Director
University of Houston Law Center
100 Law Center
Houston, TX 77204-6060
Phone: 713-743-7552

Texas Center for Actual Innocence
University of Texas School of Law
727 East Dean Keeton Street
Austin, TX 78705
Phone: 512-232-1463

Innocence Project of Texas
1511 Texas Ave
Lubbock, Texas 79401
Phone: 806-744-6525
Fax: 806-744-6480

Utah
Rocky Mountain Innocence Center
358 South 700 East, Box B235
Salt Lake City, UT 84103
Phone:801-355-1888

Vermont
New England Innocence Project
Project Coordinator
Goodwin Procter LLP
Exchange Place
53 State Street
Boston, MA 02109
E-mail: coordinator@newenglandinnocence.org

Virginia
Mid-Atlantic Innocence Project
American University,
Washington College of Law
4801 Massachusetts Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20016-8184
E-mail: Dsatin@exonerate.org
Phone: 202-895-4519
Fax: 202-774-4226.

Washington
Innocence Project Northwest
University of Washington School of Law
William H. Gates Hall, P.O. Box 85110
Seattle, WA 98145
E-mail: jackiem@u.washington.edu
Phone: 206-616-5780
Fax: 206-685-2388

Idaho Innocence Project
Boise State University
1910 University Drive
Boise, ID 83725-1515

West Virginia
Innocence Project at West Virginia University College of Law
P.O. Box 6130
Morgantown, WV 26506
Phone: 304-293-7249

Wisconsin
Wisconsin Innocence Project
Frank J. Remington Center
University of Wisconsin Law School
975 Bascom Mall
Madison, WI 53706-1399
Phone: 608-263-7461 or 608-262-1002

Wyoming
Rocky Mountain Innocence Center
358 South 700 East, Box B235
Salt Lake City, UT 84103
Phone: 801-355-1888

A JAILHOUSE LAWYER'S MANUAL

Chapter 12: Appealing Your Conviction Based on Ineffective Assistance of Counsel

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

CHAPTER 12

APPEALING YOUR CONVICTION BASED ON INEFFECTIVE ASSISTANCE OF COUNSEL

A. Introduction

Many prisoners appeal their conviction because of ineffective assistance of counsel. A claim of ineffective assistance requires two things. First, your lawyer did not follow professional standards during his representation of you. Second, there must be a "reasonable probability" that the lawyer's poor representation negatively affected the outcome of your case.[1] The right to effective counsel comes from the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments of the U.S. Constitution. If you are in New York State, Article I, Section 6 of the New York State constitution also protects the right to effective counsel.[2] There are different reasons why counsel can be considered ineffective and different ways to appeal your conviction based on this claim. This Chapter summarizes how to bring these claims, but other JLM Chapters, listed in footnote 3, can give you more detailed procedural information.

B. Ways to Claim Ineffective Counsel

There are three general ways to attack your conviction: direct post-conviction appeal, state post-conviction appeal, and a federal and/or state habeas corpus claim. Other JLM Chapters cover these topics.[3] In New York, if you are appealing your conviction based on ineffective counsel at the trial level, you should first raise your claim (1) in your direct appeal,[4] and then (2) in your federal habeas petition in federal court.[5] If you are filing a claim in New York state court and there are not enough facts in the record to let the court review an ineffectiveness claim on appeal, you should (3) also file an Article 440 motion in New York state court.[6] It is important to note that there is no Sixth Amendment right to counsel before you are actually charged with a crime, so you can only claim ineffective counsel under the Sixth Amendment starting from the time at which charges were actually brought against you.[7]

---

1. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 687, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2064, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 693 (1984). It is important to note the "outcome" that might be negatively affected by attorney ineffectiveness is not limited to the trial outcome. For example, you might claim your lawyer's ineffectiveness caused you to proceed to trial when you should have accepted a plea, or to accept a plea when you should have gone to trial. Or, you might claim your lawyer's ineffectiveness caused you to not file an appeal when you should have filed an appeal, or caused you to lose your appeal when you might have won.

2. Even if you do not live in New York, your state constitution may also provide the right to effective counsel. Regardless of whether your state constitution has a provision regarding the right to counsel, the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments of the U.S. Constitution give you a federal right to effective counsel.

3. Review the following JLM Chapters for more information: Chapter 9, "Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence" (direct appeals); Chapter 20, "Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence" (state post-conviction); Chapter 13, "Federal Habeas Corpus;" and Chapter 21, "State Habeas Corpus."

4. In New York, an ineffective assistance claim that is based only on the trial record must be made in the direct appeal. See People v. Love, 57 N.Y.2d 998, 1000, 443 N.E.2d 486, 487, 457 N.Y.S.2d 238, 239 (1982) ("Here ... we cannot conclude that defendant's counsel was ineffective simply by reviewing the trial record without the benefit of additional background facts that might have been developed had an appropriate after-judgment motion been made pursuant to CPL 440.10."); People v. Brown, 45 N.Y.2d 852, 853–54, 382 N.E.2d 1149, 1149–50, 410 N.Y.S.2d 287, 287 (1978) ("Generally, the ineffectiveness of counsel is not demonstrable on the main record, but in this case it is."); People v. Terry, 44 A.D.3d 1157, 1159, 845 N.Y.S.2d 145, 147 (3d Dept. 2007) (holding defendant must raise his ineffective assistance claim on direct appeal rather than in an Article 440 motion).

5. If you are not in New York, you may not be able to file both a direct appeal and a federal habeas claim. See Peoples v. United States, 403 F.3d 844, 848 (7th Cir. 2005) (holding that "a defendant who chooses to make an ineffective-assistance argument on direct appeal cannot present it again on collateral review").

6. For claims of ineffective assistance of trial counsel, an Article 440 motion, not a state habeas petition, is the appropriate procedural method in New York State. See Chapter 20 of the JLM for further discussion of Article 440. A state habeas petition may be the appropriate procedure in other states. See, e.g., State v. Leecan, 198 Conn. 517, 541, 504 A.2d 480, 493, cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1184, 106 S. Ct. 2922, 91 L .Ed. 2d 550 (1986) (stating the proper procedural vehicle for raising a claim of ineffective counsel in Connecticut is generally a state habeas petition).

7. Moran v. Burbine, 475 U.S. 412, 430–31, 106 S. Ct. 1135, 1145–46, 89 L. Ed. 2d 410, 427 (1986) (holding "the Sixth Amendment right to counsel does not attach until after the initiation of formal charges"); People v. Claudio, 83

You have the right to have effective counsel during a first appeal.[8] A finding of ineffective counsel at the appellate level can lead to a de novo (new) appeal and, sometimes, a reversal of your conviction.[9] If you are appealing your conviction based on ineffective counsel at the appellate level, you should file the appropriate state post-conviction motion in your state court or a federal habeas petition. In New York, the appropriate procedure for filing an ineffective appellate counsel claim is to file a coram nobis motion[10] in the court where the appeal was filed,[11] but each state has its own state post-conviction appeals procedure.[12] There is, however, no federal constitutional right to counsel in state post-conviction proceedings, so a claim of ineffective counsel at the post-conviction level based on the U.S. Constitution will not succeed.[13] But, some states do have a right to counsel in state post-conviction proceedings based on state statutory or state constitutional law, and some states allow courts to require effective counsel in state post-conviction proceedings when it is in the interest of justice.[14] If you are in a state that does have a right to counsel in state post-conviction hearings, you may also have a right to effective representation in those hearings.[15]

You must raise your ineffective counsel claims within the proper time and with the proper procedure.[16] If not raised during the proper time and using the proper procedure, your claim could be barred.[16] In federal

---

N.Y.2d 76, 80–81, 629 N.E.2d 384, 386, 607 N.Y.S.2d 912, 914 (1993) (holding the right under both the U.S. Constitution and the New York State constitution to effective counsel does not attach until the start of adversarial judicial proceedings). But, note that some state constitutions grant broader rights to counsel than the U.S. Constitution does. See People v. McCauley, 163 Ill. 2d 414, 423–24, 206 Ill. Dec. 671, 645 N.E.2d 923, 929 (1994) (giving a broader reading to article 1, section 10 of the Illinois constitution than the 5th Amendment right against self-incrimination as discussed in Moran v. Burbine). Also, you have a right to counsel under the 5th Amendment if you are interrogated while in custody. See Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 469, 86 S. Ct. 1602, 1626, 16 L. Ed. 2d 694, 721 (1966). But that right may not include the right to effective counsel. See Sweeney v. Carter, 361 F.3d 327, 333 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 543 U.S. 1020, 125 S. Ct. 657, 160 L. Ed. 2d 496 (2004) ("[A]s far as we can tell, the Supreme Court has not mentioned effective assistance of counsel (in the Strickland sense) and the Fifth Amendment in the same breath, let alone set forth a clearly established right to that effect.").

8. Evitts v. Lucey, 469 U.S. 387, 396, 105 S. Ct. 830, 836, 83 L. Ed. 2d 821, 830 (1985) (establishing that the defendant's 14th Amendment right to effective counsel at the trial level extends to a first appeal as of right).

9. See, e.g., McHale v. United States, 175 F.3d 115, 119 (2d Cir. 1999) (reinstating appeal upon finding that appellate counsel's ineffectiveness caused dismissal of original appeal).

10. A motion to restore you to a pre-conviction state alleging an erroneous conviction.

11. See People v. Bachert, 69 N.Y.2d 593, 600, 516 N.Y.S.2d 623, 628, 509 N.E.2d 318, 323 (1987) (holding that a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel must be filed "in the appellate tribunal which considered the primary appeal.").

12. In most states, ineffective appellate counsel can be raised as part of your state post-conviction motion, but you should check your state's laws. See, e.g., State v. Davis, 2008 Ohio 4608, 119 Ohio St. 3d 422, 894 N.E.2d 1221 (2008) (holding Ohio statute requires ineffective appellate counsel claims be made only to the state appellate court, rather than to the trial court in a post-conviction petition). For information on coram nobis motions, see Chapter 9 of the JLM, "Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence."

13. Coleman v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722, 752, 111 S. Ct. 2546, 2566, 115 L. Ed. 2d 640, 670 (1991) (citing Pennsylvania v. Finley, 481 U.S. 551, 107 S. Ct. 1990, 95 L. Ed. 2d 539 (1987); Murray v. Giarratano, 492 U.S. 1, 109 S. Ct. 2765, 106 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1989)).

14. For example, the Alaska post-conviction statute provides for counsel in one post-conviction appeal. Alaska Stat. § 18.85.100(c) (2009). Florida does not provide a statutory right, but the court may, in the interest of justice, determine whether, given the facts of the case, the prisoner should have the assistance of counsel. State v. Weeks, 166 So. 2d 892, 897 (Fla. 1964) ("Each case must be decided in the light of 5th Amendment Due Process requirements."). You should research your state's post-conviction act and relevant case law to see if such a right exists in your state.

15. See, e.g., Lozada v. Warden, 223 Conn. 834, 613 A.2d 818 (1992) (finding statutory right to counsel on habeas petition encompassed right to effective counsel, which could be vindicated by means of a second habeas petition); compare Moore v. Commonwealth, 199 S.W.3d 132, 139 (Ky. 2006) (reinstating appeal from denial of post-conviction relief, on grounds that statutory right to post-conviction counsel included right to competent counsel, but cautioning that "[o]ur holding ... should not be construed as sanctioning" the filing of a subsequent post-conviction motion based on previous post-conviction counsel's ineffectiveness).

16. "Procedural default" occurs when your lawyer did not properly raise a claim or objection in earlier proceedings and, as a result, you are not able to raise this claim on appeal. See Chapter 13 of the JLM, "Federal Habeas Corpus," for a further explanation of procedural default.

17. In a New York claim, courts have said that an Article 440 motion is usually the correct way to raise an ineffective assistance of counsel claim. People v. Brown, 45 N.Y.2d 852, 853–54, 382 N.E.2d 1149, 1149–59, 410 N.Y.S.2d 287, 287 (1978) ("Generally, the ineffectiveness of counsel is not demonstrable on the main record. ... Consequently, in the typical case it would be better, and in some cases essential, that an appellate attack on the effectiveness of counsel be bottomed on an evidentiary exploration by collateral or post-conviction proceeding brought under CPL 440.10."). If matters outside of the trial record must be examined, such as reasons for counsel's actions, New York courts require you court and in many states, you should not raise an ineffective assistance claim on direct appeal because the trial record usually does not contain enough information to evaluate the claim. Instead, you should make the claim in a collateral proceeding, allowing the trial court to hear testimony specifically about the adequacy of your representation. In a collateral proceeding, you can also argue that your appellate counsel was ineffective for not raising an ineffective trial counsel claim. If you had the same lawyer at trial and on direct appeal, failure to raise ineffectiveness on direct appeal does not procedurally bar you from raising the claim in a post-conviction proceeding.[17] But, in some states like New York, an ineffective assistance claim that can be decided based on the trial record alone must be made in the direct appeal, otherwise you are barred from raising it in a post-conviction motion.[18] Be sure to check the laws in your state for the proper procedure.

C. How to Prove Ineffective Counsel

As discussed above, there is a federal right to effective counsel and, in many states, a separate state right as well. The federal and New York standards for ineffective counsel are discussed below. If you were convicted in a state other than New York, you should research your state constitution and case law to find out whether there is a different state standard for ineffective assistance of counsel that you can argue was not met at trial.[19] You should always raise ineffective assistance of counsel as a federal constitutional claim, even if you also claim violation of state effective counsel guarantees. If you do not present the claim as a federal constitutional violation at this point, you may not be able to do so in a later federal habeas petition.[20]

1. The Federal Standard

The standard for ineffective assistance of counsel under the U.S. Constitution is the same no matter where you are. There are three ways in which you can make an ineffective counsel claim under federal law: you can claim (1) that your lawyer was actually ineffective, (2) constructively ineffective, or (3) that he had a to raise an ineffective counsel claim in an Article 440 motion, rather than in a motion to set aside the verdict or in a direct appeal. See People v. Love, 57 N.Y.2d 998, 1000, 443 N.E.2d 486, 487, 457 N.Y.S.2d 238, 239 (1982); People v. Monroe, 2008 NY Slip Op 5531, 1, 52 A.D.3d 623, 623, 860 N.Y.S.2d 564, 565 (2d Dept. 2008); People v. Bagarozy, 182 A.D.2d 565, 566, 582 N.Y.S.2d 424 (1st Dept. 1992) (motion to set aside); People v Garcia, 187 A.D.2d 868, 590 N.Y.S.2d 565 (3d Dept. 1992). You can use an Article 440 motion to raise claims that are based on information in the record, but in such a case you must have first made the claim in your direct appeal. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.10(b)–(c) (McKinney 2008). See Chapter 13 of the JLM for an additional explanation of barred claims, and Chapter 20 of the JLM for more on how to file an Article 440 motion.

---

17. Massaro v. United States, 538 U.S. 500, 504, 123 S. Ct. 1690, 1694, 155 L. Ed. 2d 714, 720 (2003) (holding an ineffective "assistance of counsel claim may be brought in a collateral proceeding ... whether or not the petitioner could have raised the claim on direct appeal"); see also United States v. Martinez, 136 F.3d 972, 979 (4th Cir. 1998) ("A defendant can raise the claim of ineffective assistance of counsel ... by a collateral challenge pursuant to [federal habeas corpus]."); People v. Dor, 132 Misc. 2d 568, 569–70, 505 N.Y.S.2d 317, 319 (Sup. Ct. Kings County 1986) (holding that, in an Article 440 motion, a defendant cannot make further attacks on "any issues that were raised or could have been raised in the appeal," but could claim ineffective assistance, which is "an issue that could not possibly be raised in an appeal by the same counsel.").

18. See, e.g., Guinan v. United States, 6 F.3d 468, 471 (7th Cir. 1993), overruled in part by Massaro v. United States, 538 U.S. 500, 123 S. Ct. 1690, 155 L. Ed. 2d 714 (2003) (stating that ineffectiveness of counsel claims cannot be waived in cases where the lawyer bringing the appeal also represented the defendant at trial, and also holding that an ineffectiveness claim may be brought in a collateral proceeding when evidence of ineffectiveness lies outside the record and an evidentiary hearing would be necessary or useful in determining whether counsel was ineffective); Alston v. Donnelly, 461 F. Supp. 2d 112, 123 (W.D.N.Y. 2006) ("where the record is sufficient to allow appellate review of [an ineffective assistance] claim, the failure to raise that claim on appeal precludes subsequent collateral review"); People v. Jossiah, 2 A.D.3d 877, 877, 769 N.Y.S.2d 743, 743 (2d Dept. 2003) ("[Since the] record ... clearly presented sufficient facts from which the defendant could have raised his [ineffective assistance claim] ... on direct appeal, it could not be raised on the CPL 440.10 motion."); Hartman v. Bagley, 492 F.3d 347, 357–58 (6th Cir. 2007) (holding that although Ohio's statute provided "adequate and independent" grounds to bar ineffective assistance claims in collateral proceedings, it did not apply to defendant's claim that relied on information outside of the trial record); Nixon v. Epps, 405 F.3d 318, 323 (5th Cir. 2005) (holding that a Mississippi statute, requiring defendant to raise ineffective assistance claim on direct review when he uses a different counsel, created an "adequate and independent" procedural default when defendant failed to comply on direct appeal).

19. For more information on legal research, see Chapter 2 of the JLM, "An Introduction to Legal Research."

20. For more information on filing a federal habeas corpus claim, see JLM, Chapter 13, "Federal Habeas Corpus."

conflict of interest that caused him to be actually ineffective. Each claim requires you to prove different things.

(a) Actual Ineffectiveness: The Strickland Test

In general, to show ineffective assistance of counsel under the U.S. Constitution, you must pass the two-part Strickland test.[21] The first part of this test, the "deficient performance prong," requires you to prove your lawyer's performance was "deficient."[22] The court decides whether your lawyer's representation fell below an "objective standard of reasonableness."[23] This means the court asks if your lawyer acted in a way that most other lawyers would think is acceptable. Since this standard can apply differently in different situations, you must identify the specific things your lawyer did that were so bad that you were effectively deprived of your right to counsel.[24] You cannot just say that you had a bad lawyer or that your lawyer did not do enough to help you. You must point to the specific things your lawyer did badly or did not do at all and show that these failures made your representation fall below the professional standards for lawyers.

If the court finds your lawyer's representation fell below this objective standard of reasonableness, it will apply the second part of the Strickland test. The second part, the "prejudice prong," requires you to prove there is a "reasonable probability that, but for counsel's unprofessional errors, the result of the proceeding would have been different."[25] This means you not only have to point out what your lawyer did wrong, but you also have to show that your lawyer's actions hurt you and possibly changed the outcome of your case. You can only win on an ineffective counsel claim if both parts of the test are met.[26] You should remind the court that the Supreme Court has specifically said the "prejudice prong" requires you to show only a "reasonable probability" of a different result, and you do not have to prove your lawyer's errors "more likely than not altered the outcome."[27]

Ineffective counsel claims are some of the most difficult claims to plead successfully because of the second part of the Strickland test. Courts usually do not find that an attorney's behavior affected a trial so strongly that the outcome is unreliable. When you are presenting an ineffective counsel claim, you should ask the court to consider the total effect of all of your lawyer's errors.[28] Try to find cases where defendants successfully presented similar claims and structure your claim in a similar way. Unfortunately, for every successful ineffective counsel claim, there are many other similar claims that are not granted, so be aware of cases that work against you as well and try to point out how those cases are different from your case.

---

21. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 687, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2064, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 693 (1984) (establishing federal standard for ineffective assistance of counsel). See also Knowles v. Mirzayance, 129 S. Ct. 1411, 1420, 173 L. Ed. 2d 251 (2009) (counsel's decision not to pursue insanity defense was not deficient or prejudicial because it was reasonable to believe that the defense would fail).

22. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 687, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2064, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 693 (1984).

23. These basic professional standards could include, but are not limited to, a duty of loyalty, a duty to avoid conflicts of interest, a duty to advocate the defendant's cause, the duty to consult with defendant on important decisions and to keep defendant informed of important developments during the prosecution, and a duty to use the level of skill and knowledge that make the trial truly adversarial. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 688–89, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2065, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 694 (1984) (outlining these duties but noting that they "neither exhaustively define the obligations of counsel nor form a checklist for judicial evaluation of attorney performance.").

24. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 690, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2066, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 695 (1984) (in deciding an ineffectiveness claim, a judge will look at the reasonableness of counsel's conduct based on facts of the particular case, viewed at the time of the counsel's conduct).

25. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 691–92, 694, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2067, 2068, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 696, 698 (1984) ("An error by counsel, even if professionally unreasonable, does not warrant setting aside the judgment of a criminal proceeding if the error had no effect on the judgment."); Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 390–91, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 1511–12, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389, 416 (2000) (holding that analysis of the prejudice prong should focus solely on whether there was reasonable probability that but for counsel's errors, the result of the proceeding would have been different); Wiggins v. Smith, 539 US 510, 534, 123 S. Ct. 2527, 2542, 156 L. Ed. 2d 471, 493 (2003) ("In assessing prejudice [in a capital case], we reweigh the evidence in aggravation against the totality of available mitigating evidence.").

26. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 700, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2071, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 702 (1984) ("Failure to make the required showing of either deficient performance or sufficient prejudice defeats the ineffectiveness claim.").

27. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 693, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2067, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 697 (1984).

28. See, e.g., Mackey v. Russell, No. 02-4237, 148 Fed. App'x. 355, 369 (6th Cir. August 9, 2005) (unpublished) (holding state court unreasonably applied Strickland when it failed to consider the cumulative effect of counsel's errors); but see Stainaker v. Bobby, 589 F. Supp. 2d 905, 931 (N.D. Ohio 2008) (holding that "there is some question whether cumulative error claims are cognizable on habeas review.").

(b) Constructive Ineffectiveness: The Cronic Standard

The second type of ineffective assistance of counsel claim available under the U.S. Constitution is a "constructive denial" of the assistance of counsel as described in United States v. Cronic.[29] You can claim constructive ineffective assistance if the circumstances of your trial were so unfair that prejudice and ineffective assistance can be presumed.[30] This means that under Cronic, unlike the Strickland test, you do not have to prove that there was actual prejudice.

The Cronic standard applies in three situations.[31] First, prejudice may be presumed if you were completely denied counsel during a "critical stage" of your trial.[32] Second, you can claim ineffective assistance under Cronic if your lawyer "entirely fails to subject the prosecution's case to meaningful adversarial testing."[33] Your lawyer's failure to test the state's case must have been "complete," meaning she put up no opposition whatsoever.[34] Third, you can also make a Cronic claim if the circumstances of your trial made it highly unlikely any lawyer could have provided effective assistance.[35] If your case falls within this third situation, you do not have to prove your lawyer's trial performance was deficient.

(c) Conflict of Interest

The third type of federal claim argues that counsel provided ineffective assistance due to a conflict of interest. To show that counsel had a conflict of interest, you must demonstrate that there was an actual conflict of interest that "adversely affected" your lawyer's performance.[36] For example, a conflict of interest can arise when one lawyer represents more than one co-defendant for the same crime.[37] The conflict must be

---

29. United States v. Cronic, 466 U.S. 648, 658, 104 S. Ct. 2039, 2046, 80 L. Ed. 2d. 657, 667 (1984) (recognizing a right where performance of counsel deprived defendant of a fair trial).

30. United States v. Cronic, 466 U.S. 648, 658, 104 S. Ct. 2039, 2046, 80 L. Ed. 2d. 657, 667 (1984).

31. United States v. Cronic, 466 U.S. 648, 659–62, 104 S. Ct. 2039, 2047–48, 80 L. Ed. 2d. 657, 668–70 (1984); Bell v. Cone, 535 U.S. 685, 695–98, 122 S. Ct. 1843, 1850–52, 152 L. Ed. 2d 914, 927–29 (2002) (limiting Cronic's holding that prejudice may be presumed to the three situations identified).

32. See, e.g., Wright v. Van Patten, 128 S. Ct. 743, 746, 169 L. Ed. 2d 583, 588 (2008) (holding counsel's participation in plea hearing by speaker phone should not be treated as complete denial of counsel); Rickman v. Bell, 131 F.3d 1150, 1156–60 (6th Cir. 1997) (affirming judgment of ineffective assistance where counsel had abandoned defendant's interests by repeatedly expressing contempt for client at trial and portraying client as crazy and dangerous, effectively acting as a second prosecutor); Javor v. United States, 724 F.2d 831, 833–34 (9th Cir. 1984) (finding prejudice inherent when counsel slept through much of the trial). But see Tippins v. Walker, 77 F.3d 682, 683–85 (2d Cir. 1996) (holding ineffective assistance claim should be judged under Strickland when counsel slept through the trial).

33. United States v. Cronic, 466 U.S. 648, 6598, 104 S. Ct. 2039, 2047, 80 L. Ed. 2d. 657, 668 (1984).

34. Bell v. Cone, 535 U.S. 685, 697, 122 S. Ct. 1843, 1851, 152 L. Ed. 2d 914, 928 (2002) (holding counsel's failure to produce mitigating evidence and waiver of closing argument did not constitute a complete failure to test the prosecutor's case and that Strickland applied rather than Cronic). This is a difficult standard to meet. For example, counsel's decision to concede guilt in a capital trial and focus instead on the sentencing phase, even though his client entered a "not guilty" plea, is not automatically a complete failure to subject the prosecution's case to adversarial testing. Compare Florida v. Nixon, 543 U.S. 175, 188–89, 125 S. Ct. 551, 561–62, 160 L. Ed. 2d 565, 579–80 (2004) ("The Florida Supreme Court's erroneous equation of [counsel's] concession strategy to a guilty plea led it to [wrongly apply the Cronic standard] in determining whether counsel's performance ranked as ineffective assistance."), with State v. Carter, 270 Kan. 426, 440–41, 14 P.3d 1138, 1148 (2000) (finding that a breakdown in the adversarial system of justice when counsel premised defense on defendant's guilt against his client's wishes).

35. Compare Powell v. Alabama, 287 U.S. 45, 56–58, 53 S. Ct. 55, 59–60, 77 L. Ed. 158, 164–65 (1932) (holding denial of effective counsel when defendants, who were "young, ignorant, illiterate, [and] surrounded by hostile sentiment," were tried for a capital offense, and when defense counsel was designated only minutes earlier and thus had no opportunity to investigate the facts or to prepare), with U.S. v. Cronic, 466 U.S. 648, 658–67, 104 S. Ct. 2039, 2046–51, 80 L. Ed. 2d. 657, 667–73 (1984) (rejecting defendant's constructive ineffective assistance argument based on counsel's lack of experience in criminal law or jury trials, and 25-day preparation time).

36. Cuyler v. Sullivan, 446 U.S. 335, 350, 100 S. Ct. 1708, 1719, 64 L. Ed. 2d 333, 348 (1980); see also United States v. Iorizzo, 786 F.2d 52, 57–58 (2d Cir. 1986) (applying Cuyler and finding that defendant's trial counsel had a conflict of interest because he had previously represented the state's key witness on a related matter and failed to effectively cross examine this witness after the trial judge had told him that he might encounter ethical problems if he pursued certain lines of questioning).

37. A conflict of interest may also arise in other situations, for example, if your lawyer represented a government or defense witness in a related trial, if the victim was a client of your lawyer, or if your lawyer collaborated or had a connection with the prosecution. See, e.g., Mickens v. Taylor, 535 U.S. 162, 174–76, 122 S. Ct. 1237, 1245–46, 152 L. Ed. 2d 291, 306–07 (2002) (holding that Cuyler applied to petitioner's claim that counsel was conflicted because he represented the victim in an unrelated case); Perillo v. Johnson, 205 F.3d 775, 808 (5th Cir. 2000) (finding actual conflict actual, not just potential, which means that your lawyer must have taken some action, or refrained from acting in some way, which harmed you and benefited the other person.[38] You are not required to show prejudice if your lawyer had an actual conflict of interest that adversely affected you, because prejudice is presumed.

2. New York State Standard

In addition to your federal right to effective counsel, New York State courts have said you are entitled to "meaningful representation" under Article I, Section 6 of the New York State constitution.[39] This means in New York, you must show your lawyer's failures harmed you so much that you did not have meaningful representation at trial.[40] Meaningful representation does not mean your attorney made no mistakes, but that your lawyer provided good enough representation to satisfy the court that you were properly represented.[41]

Note that claiming ineffective assistance of counsel means that you give up some of your attorney-client confidentiality privileges with that attorney.[42] This means once you file an ineffective counsel claim against your lawyer, your lawyer can then sometimes reveal information that otherwise would be kept secret. For example, your lawyer could cooperate with the prosecution by turning over case files, or even testifying for the prosecution against you.

3. Using a Claim of Ineffectiveness to Save a Procedurally Defaulted Claim

Ineffective assistance of counsel claims can be very useful because they can allow you to present claims that would otherwise be barred. As the various Chapters on attacking your conviction explain, many issues must be "preserved" in order to be appealed.[43] Usually, if you or your lawyer did not object to certain issues existed when counsel represented a co-defendant cooperating with the state as witness against accused); United States ex rel. Duncan v. O'Leary, 806 F.2d 1307, 1315 (7th Cir. 1986) (holding actual conflict existed when counsel was prosecutor's campaign manager for State's Attorney election, and counsel colluded with prosecutor and a police officer to get defendant to retain him because it would be good for the campaign).

---

38. See, e.g., Burger v. Kemp, 483 U.S. 776, 783–85, 107 S. Ct. 3114, 3120–21, 97 L. Ed. 2d 638, 650–51 (1987) (holding petitioner failed to show actual conflict when lawyer's partner was appointed to represent co-defendant, because "defendants may actually benefit from the joint efforts of two partners who supplement one another in their preparation"); Edens v. Hannigan, 87 F.3d 1109, 1116 (10th Cir. 1996) (holding actual conflict of interest existed when counsel made no effort to present a defense for client because it would have harmed co-defendant); Burden v. Zant, 24 F.3d 1298, 1305–07 (11th Cir. 1994) (finding ineffective assistance where counsel, representing two co-defendants, made an agreement with the prosecutor that one co-defendant would testify against another in exchange for not prosecuting the co-defendant); Dawan v. Lockhart, 31 F.3d 718, 721–22 (8th Cir. 1994) (finding ineffective counsel where public defender also represented co-defendant who had pleaded guilty and made statements implicating the client in the crime).

39. People v. Baldi, 54 N.Y.2d 137, 147, 429 N.E.2d 400, 405, 444 N.Y.S.2d 893, 898 (1981) ("So long as the evidence, the law, and the circumstances of a particular case, viewed in totality and as of the time of the representation, reveal that the attorney provided meaningful representation, the constitutional requirement will have been met.").

40. As mentioned above, if you are in a state other than New York, your state may have an independent source for the right to effective counsel and/or a different standard for proving ineffective counsel. You should research successful ineffective counsel claims in your state and look at what standard the courts use.

41. See People v. Benevento, 91 N.Y.2d 708, 712, 697 N.E.2d 584, 587, 674 N.Y.S.2d 629, 632 (1998) (holding that the New York State constitution guarantees meaningful but not perfect representation, and that representation does not have to be "errorless") (quoting People v. Aiken, 45 N.Y.2d 394, 398, 380 N.E.2d 272, 274, 408 N.Y.S.2d 444, 447 (1978)); see also People v. Droz, 39 N.Y.2d 457, 462, 348 N.E.2d 880, 882–83, 384 N.Y.S.2d 404, 407 (1976) (finding improper representation where a lawyer failed to adequately prepare for trial, did not communicate with his client in a timely manner, made no attempt to contact potential witnesses, and neglected to study the record); but see People v. Young, 116 A.D.2d 922, 923, 498 N.Y.S.2d 667, 669 (3d Dept. 1986) (noting that the standards from People v. Baldi and People v. Droz only apply to ineffective assistance during trial; evaluation of attorney performance when the defendant has accepted a guilty plea rests on different grounds).

42. Model Rules of Prof'l Conduct R. 1.6(b)(5) (2004) (allowing that "[a] lawyer may reveal information relating to the representation of a client to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes necessary ... to respond to allegations in any proceeding concerning the lawyer's representation of the client"); Standards for Crim. Just. § 4-8.6(d) (1993) ("Defense counsel whose conduct of a criminal case is drawn into question is entitled to testify concerning the matters charged and is not precluded from disclosing the truth concerning the accusation to the extent defense counsel reasonably believes necessary, even though this involves revealing matters which were given in confidence."). Note that this is not a complete waiver of confidentiality and does not allow for complete disclosure.

43. See JLM, Chapter 9, "Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence," regarding preservation of claims; JLM, during the trial, you cannot raise them on appeal. However, even if a claim is not preserved, often it can still be raised as part of an ineffective counsel claim.[44] In other words, the fact that your lawyer did not raise certain issues during trial can be used as evidence that he did not effectively represent you.

Ineffective assistance claims are also useful in "procedural default" situations. Procedural default happens when your claim is kept out of federal court because you have not followed all the procedures in your state. In procedural default situations, federal courts will not hear your claim because you did not follow state procedures. If your claim has been procedurally defaulted, you can often raise it as an ineffective counsel claim instead.[45] You can argue that the jury was selected in a racially discriminatory manner because your lawyer failed to object. In addition, if any court has held that you have a procedurally defaulted claim, you can argue that your lawyer's ineffectiveness was the "cause" of the default.[46] As a general rule of thumb, if you are raising a claim for the first time that should have been raised earlier, you should allege that you did not raise the claim earlier because your attorney was ineffective.

To include a barred claim (a claim that is not preserved or is procedurally defaulted) in an ineffective assistance of counsel claim, you must restate the issue by saying your lawyer was ineffective for not properly arguing your claim. For example, if the wrong jury instructions were given at trial, but that claim is barred because it was not raised at trial or "preserved," you can claim that your attorney was ineffective for not objecting to the jury instructions. Remember, you still must prove that your attorney's mistake deprived you of your right to counsel because it negatively affected your trial. This means you must show both that (1) by not objecting to the instructions, your attorney performed below the standard attorneys are judged by; and (2) by not objecting, your attorney lost a chance to argue a claim that would have succeeded.

Here is an example of how to include a barred claim in an ineffective counsel claim: Suppose you believe that your jury was selected in a racially discriminatory manner, but this issue was not raised at trial or on direct appeal and now is procedurally barred. You can:

(1) Argue that your lawyer failed to object to the way in which the jury was selected and failed to select a racially unbiased jury. Argue that your lawyer's failure to correct or object to the discriminatory jury selection fell below the reasonable standard of performance for attorneys;
(2) Argue that this failure of your attorney meant you had a racially biased jury and, because of the circumstances of your case, you were denied a fair trial as a result of this jury selection error. Since there is a chance the outcome of your case would have been different, your lawyer's failure to object to or raise this claim resulted in prejudice.

To summarize, your overall claim is that by not objecting to the racially discriminatory way in which the jury was selected, your lawyer was ineffective because his performance fell below the standard of objective reasonableness for attorneys, and this resulted in a biased jury, which affected the outcome of your case.

A checklist for incorporating a barred claim into an ineffective counsel claim is:

(1) Identify the barred claim. Make sure the claim cannot be raised directly for procedural reasons;
(2) Determine whether the claim is barred because of your lawyer's ineffectiveness. Did your lawyer not raise the issue at trial? Did your lawyer say or do something at trial that decreased your chance of winning on the issue? Did your lawyer fail to raise the issue on direct appeal?;[47] and
(3) Argue that the reason the claim is barred is because of your lawyer's ineffectiveness. Then show that if your lawyer had not been ineffective in this way, this claim would have succeeded. Remember you must plead both the "deficient performance prong" and the "prejudice prong" of the Strickland test.

Chapter 20, "Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence," regarding errors of record in the trial; and JLM, Chapter 13, "Federal Habeas Corpus," regarding procedural default.

44. In Kimmelman v. Morrison, 477 U.S. 365, 384–85, 106 S. Ct. 2574, 2587–88, 91 L. Ed. 2d 305, 325–26 (1986), for example, the trial court refused to rule on the defendant's motion to suppress evidence because counsel's motion was untimely. The defendant nonetheless ultimately obtained a hearing on the merits of the suppression motion by raising a claim that his trial counsel was ineffective for failing to make a timely suppression motion.

45. See Kimmelman v. Morrison, 477 U.S. 365, 106 S. Ct. 2574, 91 L. Ed. 2d 305 (1986).

46. See JLM, Chapter 13 for an additional explanation of barred claims.

47. Jackson v. Leonardo, 162 F.3d 81, 84–87 (2d Cir. 1998) is an excellent example of how to turn a procedurally barred claim into a successful claim of ineffectiveness. In Jackson, the Court of Appeals held that the defendant's double jeopardy claim was procedurally barred, but granted relief on the defendant's claim that his appellate counsel was ineffective for failing to raise the double jeopardy claim.

This means you must both (a) point out the specific failures of your lawyer and (b) show that your lawyer's failures to correct or address the issues hurt your case.

Note that in addition to re-framing the barred claim as an ineffective counsel claim, you should still raise the claim separately, alleging that counsel's ineffectiveness constitutes "cause and prejudice" for any procedural default.[48]

D. Common Ineffective Counsel Claims

Below are some of the most common ineffective counsel claims that have succeeded. This does not mean that these claims are always successful or that this list includes every possible ineffective counsel claim. When you plead these claims, be sure to check the case law in your state.

(1) Counsel is not qualified to practice law;[49]
(2) Counsel had a conflict of interest;[50]
(3) Counsel failed to investigate[51] or perform certain pretrial functions;[52]
(4) Counsel failed to properly select a jury;[53]
(5) Counsel failed to pursue defenses available to defendant;[54]
(6) Counsel did not properly advise defendant as to a plea;[55]

---

48. See, e.g., Williams v. Anderson, 460 F.3d 789, 799–801 (6th Cir. 2006) (finding that appellate counsel's ineffectiveness in raising trial counsel ineffectiveness claim on direct appeal constituted "cause and prejudice" for the procedural default that it caused).

49. See United States v. Novak, 903 F.2d 883, 890 (2d Cir. 1990) (holding that "counsel" does not include an individual who holds himself out as a lawyer but obtains admission to the bar under false pretenses). See also Solina v. United States, 709 F.2d 160, 167–69 (2d Cir. 1983) (requiring reversal where defendant was unaware that counsel was unlicensed to practice law in any state, and "the lack of such authorization stemmed from failure to seek it or from its denial for a reason going to legal ability, such as failure to pass a bar examination, or want of moral character"); but see Waterhouse v. Rodriguez, 848 F.2d 375, 382-83 (2d Cir. 1988) (framing rule to exclude situation where licensed attorney is unknowingly disbarred during trial).

50. See the discussion in Part C(1)(c) of this Chapter.

51. See Wiggins v. Smith, 539 U.S. 510, 535–38, 123 S. Ct. 2527, 2542–44, 156 L. Ed. 2d 471, 493–95 (2003) (finding decision of counsel not to expand investigation of petitioner's life history for mitigating evidence beyond pre-sentence investigation report and department of social services records fell short of prevailing professional standards and amounted to ineffective assistance); Appel v. Horn, 250 F.3d 203, 215–18 (3d Cir. 2001) (finding counsel's failure to investigate or prepare for the petitioner's competency determination violated his right to effective assistance and merited granting habeas corpus relief); People v. LaBree, 34 N.Y.2d 257, 259–61, 313 N.E.2d 730, 731–32, 357 N.Y.S.2d 412, 413–15 (1974) (finding ineffective assistance based on counsel's inadequate investigation and preparation); see also Henry v. Poole, 409 F.3d 48, 67–72 (2d Cir. 2005) (finding counsel's failure to investigate led counsel to present alibi defense for the wrong date and bolstered an otherwise weak prosecution case).

52. See Kimmelman v. Morrison, 477 U.S. 365, 385–91, 106 S. Ct. 2574, 2588–91, 91 L. Ed. 2d 305, 326–29 (1986) (finding ineffective assistance of counsel where counsel failed to conduct any pretrial discovery and failed to file timely motion to suppress illegally seized evidence); Gersten v. Senkowski, 426 F.3d 588, 609–15 (2d Cir. 2005) (finding that attorney's failure to seek medical expert consultation for the defense or to investigate critical government evidence constituted ineffective assistance of counsel); People v. Donovan, 184 A.D.2d 654, 654–56, 585 N.Y.S.2d 70, 71–72 (2d Dept. 1992) (ordering a new trial after attorney provided ineffective assistance of counsel by not moving to suppress certain evidence and by failing to conduct an adequate investigation before the trial).

53. See Johnson v. Armontrout, 961 F.2d 748, 755–56 (8th Cir. 1992) (finding ineffective assistance where evidence showed that at least two jurors were biased, and counsel failed to request removal for cause of biased jurors); Hollis v. Davis, 912 F.2d 1343, 1350–52 (11th Cir. 1990) (finding ineffective assistance where trial counsel failed to challenge the racial composition of a jury chosen in 1959 when African-Americans were systematically excluded from the list of potential jurors).

54. See Wilcox v. McGee, 241 F.3d 1242, 1246 (9th Cir. 2001) (finding ineffective assistance where counsel failed to move at a second trial to dismiss an indictment barred by double jeopardy); Jackson v. Leonardo, 162 F.3d 81, 86 (2d Cir. 1998) (holding that appellate counsel's failure to raise the obvious double jeopardy claim constituted ineffective performance); DeLuca v. Lord, 77 F.3d 578, 590 (2d Cir. 1996) (determining that counsel's failure to pursue extreme emotional disturbance defense constituted ineffective assistance when a reasonable probability existed that a jury would have found this defense persuasive and would have reduced defendant's liability from second degree murder to first degree manslaughter). However, a defense counsel does not have to pursue defenses that he believes are futile, even if it is the only defense available and you have nothing to lose by pursuing it. See Knowles v. Mirzayance, 129 S. Ct. 1411, 173 L. Ed. 2d 251 (2009).

55. The Supreme Court in Hill v. Lockhart, 474 U.S. 52, 57, 106 S. Ct. 366, 370, 88 L. Ed. 2d 203, 209 (1985), held that the two-prong Strickland standard is "applicable to ineffective-assistance claims arising out of the plea process." Hill claimed his guilty plea was induced by false information about his parole eligibility. The Court held that if a

(7) Counsel failed to use important evidence or testimony at trial;[56]
(8) Counsel failed to object to improper use of evidence at trial;[57]
(9) Counsel failed to request proper jury instructions; [58]
(10) Counsel failed to object to improper jury instructions;[59]

---

defendant claims that he pleaded guilty because of ineffective assistance of counsel, the second prong of the Strickland test would be satisfied by showing "a reasonable probability that, but for counsel's errors, he would not have pleaded guilty and would have insisted on going to trial." Hill v. Lockhart, 474 U.S. 52, 59, 106 S. Ct. 366, 370, 88 L. Ed. 2d 203, 210 (1985); s*ee also* Meyers v. Gillis, 142 F.3d 664, 666–70 (3d Cir. 1998) (using the second prong of the Strickland test, the Court found the defendant would be eligible for parole after seven years when law required mandatory life sentence without possibility of parole); United States v. Hansel, 70 F.3d 6, 8 (2d Cir. 1995) (finding counsel provided ineffective assistance in plea bargaining when counsel failed to inform defendant that charges against him were time-barred and defendant would not have pleaded guilty but for counsel's error). Courts have extended this reasoning to the "reverse-Hill" claim where a defendant claims that counsel's ineffectiveness caused the defendant to proceed to trial when there is a reasonable probability that if correctly advised the defendant would have accepted a plea offer. See Mask v. McGinnis, 233 F.3d 132, 139–42 (2d Cir. 2000) (finding that reasonable probability that the defendant would have accepted a plea if counsel effectively advised him constitutes ineffective assistance of counsel); United States v. Gordon, 156 F.3d 376, 380–82 (2d Cir. 1998) (finding that the large disparity between "the actual maximum sentencing exposure under the Sentencing Guidelines and the sentence exposure represented by defendant's attorney" indicates a reasonable probability exists that had the defendant's counsel properly advised him, the proceedings would have gone differently); but see Purdy v. United States, 208 F.3d 41, 46-48 (2d Cir. 2000) (finding that although attorney should inform each client of the probable costs and benefits of accepting a plea bargain, he need not advise client explicitly to either plead guilty or not).

Normally, your lawyer is not required to advise you about the collateral consequences of a guilty plea. "Collateral consequences" refers to any effects of a guilty plea that do not arise directly from the plea. For example, if you lose your job or your immigration status is revoked because of a guilty plea, that is considered a collateral consequence. In some jurisdictions, however, if your lawyer provides incorrect information about collateral consequences that may be considered ineffective assistance of counsel. See, e.g.,United States v. Couto, 311 F.3d 179-89 (2d Cir. 2002). However, you should check the law in your state because some states do not allow ineffective assistance claims for collateral consequences even if your attorney has given you grossly erroneous advice. For example, the Kentucky Supreme Court recently held that an attorney's legally incorrect advice about the possible immigration consequences of a guilty plea did not constitute ineffective assistance of counsel. Commonwealth v. Padilla, 253 S.W.3d 482, 485 (KY. 2008). This issue may soon be settled as the U.S. Supreme Court has agreed to review Padilla. Padilla v. Kentucky, 129 S. Ct. 1317 (2009), cert. granted, 77 U.S.L.W. 3326 (U.S. Feb. 23, 2009) (No. 08-651). If this issue might apply to your case, you should try to review the Supreme Court's decision when it comes out.

56. See Lindstadt v. Keane, 239 F.3d 191, 201–02 (2d Cir. 2001) (finding ineffective assistance in part because trial counsel made no effective challenge to the only physical evidence of sexual abuse, which consisted of expert testimony based on unnamed studies which were essentially unchallenged at trial and disputed by other easily available, published studies); Pavel v. Hollins, 261 F.3d 210, 216–26, 223, 228 (2d Cir. 2001) (finding ineffective assistance where trial counsel did not prepare a defense, failed to call two important fact witnesses, and did not call a medical expert); Brown v. Myers, 137 F.3d 1154, 1156–58 (9th Cir. 1998) (finding ineffective assistance when counsel failed to investigate and present testimony supporting petitioner's alibi); Tosh v. Lockhart, 879 F.2d 412, 414-15 (8th Cir. 1989) (finding defense counsel's failure to procure alibi witnesses was ineffective assistance of counsel); People v. Jenkins, 68 N.Y.2d 896, 897, 501 N.E.2d 586, 586–87, 508 N.Y.S.2d 937, 937–38 (1986) (finding that failure to use crucial evidence, if due solely to attorney's erroneous assumption of its inadmissibility, may be so prejudicial as to be ineffective assistance of counsel); People v. Riley 101 A.D.2d 710, 711, 475 N.Y.S.2d 691, 692–93 (4th Dept. 1984) (finding failure to impeach prosecution witnesses with available records of prior testimony contributed to ineffective assistance of counsel).

57. See Kimmelman v. Morrison, 477 U.S. 365, 385–87, 106 S. Ct. 2574, 2588–90, 91 L. Ed. 2d 305, 326–27 (1986) (finding ineffective assistance when counsel failed to move to suppress evidence because of counsel's failure to investigate); Tomlin v. Myers, 30 F.3d 1235, 1237–39 (9th Cir. 1994) (finding counsel ineffective for failure to move to suppress lineup identification evidence); People v. Wallace 187 A.D.2d 998, 998–99, 591 N.Y.S.2d 129, 130 (4th Dept. 1992) (finding attorney's failure to object to admission of evidence was ineffective assistance); People v. Riley 101 A.D.2d 710, 711, 475 N.Y.S.2d 691, 692–93 (4th Dept. 1984) (finding failure to object to inadmissible hearsay evidence, and lack of preparation and the pursuit of a highly prejudicial cross-examination constituted ineffective assistance).

58. See People v. Norfleet, 267 A.D.2d 881, 883–84, 704 N.Y.S.2d 146, 148 (3d Dept. 1999) (finding ineffective assistance where counsel failed to seek jury instructions for lesser offense); People v. Wiley, 120 A.D.2d 66, 67–68, 507 N.Y.S.2d 928, 929 (4th Dept. 1986) (finding an attorney who fails to request an alibi charge may be found ineffective).

59. See Cox v. Donnelly, 432 F.3d 388, 390 (2d Cir. 2005) (finding that counsel's repeated failure to object to erroneous jury instruction constituted ineffective counsel); Everett v. Beard, 290 F.3d 500, 513, 515–16 (3d Cir. 2002) (holding that counsel performed deficiently by failing to object on due process grounds to jury instruction which incorrectly permitted jury to convict defendant of first degree murder even if his accomplice intended to cause the death of the victim); Gray v. Lynn, 6 F.3d 265, 269, 271–72 (5th Cir. 1993) (finding counsel fell below objective standard of reasonable assistance, thereby providing ineffective assistance, where counsel failed to object to erroneous jury

(11)Counsel failed to present or argue an appeal,[60] or to present a meritorious issue on appeal;[61] and (12)Counsel's conduct at trial was simply so bad that it was ineffective.[62]

E. Conclusion

Ineffective assistance of counsel can be a very useful claim for prisoners who had inadequate legal representation at trial or on direct appeal. It can also be useful for prisoners who face procedural problems with some of their appellate claims. When you bring your ineffective counsel claim, it is important to check the relevant Chapters of the JLM and other sources to make sure you are using the right procedure. Your ineffective counsel claim will have a better chance of success if you make sure to show the court all the specific reasons why your lawyer performed poorly, and all of the ways in which this inadequate representation prejudiced the outcome of your case.

---

instructions regarding elements of first degree murder).

60. See Roe v. Flores-Ortega, 528 U.S. 470, 484, 120 S. Ct. 1029, 1038, 145 L. Ed. 2d 985, 999–1000 (2000) (finding that defendant was entitled to effective assistance of counsel when deciding whether to file a notice of appeal, but that he must show a reasonable probability that but for counsel's errors, he would have filed the appeal); Garcia v. United States, 278 F.3d 134, 137–38 (2d Cir. 2002) (finding ineffective assistance of counsel where counsel incorrectly advised defendant on the record that he could not appeal and district court confirmed that advice); United States v. Phillips, 210 F.3d 345, 350–53 (5th Cir. 2000) (finding that counsel's failure to appeal an obstruction of justice sentencing enhancement constituted ineffective assistance); Castellanos v. United States, 26 F.3d 717, 719–20 (7th Cir. 1994) (finding attorney provides ineffective assistance of counsel in failing to appeal conviction following a guilty plea if the prisoner told his lawyer to appeal in a timely manner); United States v. Peak, 992 F.2d 39, 41–42 (4th Cir. 1993) (finding that counsel's failure to file for appellate review when requested by defendant deprives defendant of 6th Amendment right to assistance of counsel even if he would have not been likely to win on appeal); United States v. Horodner, 993 F.2d 191, 195–96 (9th Cir. 1993) (finding ineffective assistance of counsel which prejudiced the defendant if the defendant did not agree to waive the appeal); Bonneau v. United States, 961 F.2d 17, 18–19, 22–23 (1st Cir. 1992) (finding that where attorney never filed an appeal despite multiple time extensions, ineffective assistance of counsel denied the defendant his constitutionally guaranteed opportunity to appeal); People v. Stokes, 95 N.Y.2d 633, 638–39, 744 N.E.2d 1153, 1156, 722 N.Y.S.2d 217, 220 (2001) (finding defendant's right to appellate counsel was not adequately safeguarded because the brief submitted by appellate counsel contained no reference to the evidence or to defense counsel's objections at trial and made clear that counsel did not act like an advocate on behalf of the client); People v. Vasquez, 70 N.Y.2d 1, 3–4, 509 N.E.2d 934, 935, 516 N.Y.S.2d 921, 922 (1987) (finding that defense counsel's identification of points as being "without merit" in appellate brief, though defendant wished to raise them on appeal, denied defendant effective assistance of counsel).

61. See, e.g., Ballard v. United States, 400 F.3d 404, 407–10 (6th Cir. 2005) (holding appellate counsel ineffective for failing to raise meritorious argument that sentence enhancement by judge violated right to jury trial).

62. This kind of general argument is very hard to make successfully. Your claim must include specific information about why your counsel's conduct was not acceptable. See Tippins v. Walker, 77 F.3d 682, 686–90 (2d Cir. 1996) (finding ineffective assistance where attorney slept through substantial portions of the trial such that judge interrupted proceedings to reprimand attorney); Burdine v. Johnson, 262 F.3d 336, 341 (5th Cir. 2001) (finding ineffective assistance because counsel was unconscious during substantial portions of trial, leaving the petitioner without representation during critical stages of the trial); People v. Huggins, 164 A.D.2d 784, 786–87, 559 N.Y.S.2d 720, 721–22 (1st Dept. 1990) (finding ineffective assistance where attorney was an alcoholic who had once been disbarred for twenty years and was confused and inattentive at trial).

A JAILHOUSE LAWYER'S MANUAL

Chapter 13:
Federal Habeas Corpus

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

CHAPTER 13

FEDERAL HABEAS CORPUS*

A. Introduction

This Chapter explains an important right—the writ of habeas corpus. Habeas corpus is guaranteed by the Constitution to prisoners who believe they have been wrongfully convicted. As a prisoner, you can challenge your conviction or sentence by petitioning for a writ of habeas corpus in federal court. By petitioning for a writ, you are asking the court to determine whether your conviction or sentence is illegal. A writ of habeas corpus can be very powerful because if the court accepts your argument, it can order your immediate release, a new trial, or a new sentencing hearing. This Chapter will teach you more about federal habeas corpus and how to petition for it. Part A will introduce and explain a few basic concepts about federal habeas. The rest of the chapter will go into more detail.

1. What Is Habeas Corpus?

Habeas corpus is a kind of petition that you can file in federal court to claim that your imprisonment violates federal law.[1] Whether you are a state or federal prisoner, a federal habeas petition claims that your imprisonment is illegal because your arrest, trial, or sentence violated federal law. This would be true if any aspect of your arrest, trial, or actual sentence violated a federal statute, treaty, or the U.S. Constitution. If you believe that your imprisonment violates federal law, you can file a habeas petition regardless of whether your trial was in state court or federal court, and regardless of whether you are in a state prison or a federal prison. However, as you will learn in this Chapter, state prisoners and federal prisoners will have to go through different processes for filing habeas petitions. State prisoners may also find it more difficult than federal prisoners to win a habeas claim. In both cases, a federal habeas petition claims that your imprisonment is illegal because your arrest, trial, or sentence violated federal law.

It is important to understand what a habeas petition is not. A habeas petition is not a "direct appeal" of your conviction. A direct appeal asks the state or federal appeals court (the court above the trial court in which you were convicted) to review the objections you or your lawyer made during the trial. To learn more about direct appeals, read JLM, Chapter 9, "Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence." Federal habeas is a different kind of appeal. It is called a "collateral appeal" because you are claiming that a mistake was made during your trial or sentencing that violated federal law. You will probably base this claim on evidence that you did not present at your trial. You can only make a habeas claim after making other appeals.

If you are a state prisoner and lose your direct appeal, your state will have another appellate procedure you can follow to challenge your conviction. This procedure is usually called either "state post-conviction proceedings" or "state habeas corpus." State habeas corpus is the same thing as a state post-conviction appeal; it is a remedy provided by the state in which you were convicted, and is based on that state's statutes.[2]

If you are a state prisoner, you will need to "exhaust" your state remedies before being able to file a federal habeas petition. This means that you will only file a federal habeas petition if you have already lost your state direct appeal and your state post-conviction proceedings. In your federal habeas petition, you can ask the federal court to review the claims that you brought in your direct appeal and your post-conviction proceedings in state court. However, in your federal habeas petition, you can only include claims that are based on federal law (federal statutes, treaties, or the Constitution).

---

* This Chapter was revised by Bridget Kennedy based on earlier versions by Archana Prakash, Edward Smock, Jennifer H. Lin, Reena Sandoval, Allison Rutledge-Parisi, Miriam Lefkowitz, William Duffy, and Mark Sanders. Special thanks to Carrie Ellis, Ryan Marks, and Ronald Tabak.

1. A habeas challenge is a civil action, not a criminal action. It is an action that you bring against the government. Therefore, in habeas petitions, the prisoner is often referred to as the "plaintiff," "petitioner," or "complainant." For clarity, this Chapter often refers to the prisoner bringing the habeas petition as the "defendant."

2. For more information about state post-conviction proceedings, you can look at other chapters of the JLM. State post-conviction proceedings for Florida, New York, and Texas are described in JLM, Chapter 21, "State Habeas Corpus: Florida, New York, and Texas." Remember, state habeas proceedings are the same as state post-conviction proceedings. In this Chapter, the term "state post-conviction proceedings" will be used to refer to both. The term "habeas" will only be used to refer to federal habeas corpus.

If you are a federal prisoner, you will not file a state post-conviction proceeding. If you lose your direct appeals in federal court, you will be able to file a federal habeas petition right away. This Chapter will often discuss state proceedings. If you are a federal prisoner, you should keep in mind while reading this Chapter that discussions of state proceedings do not apply to you unless the Chapter specifically says that they do.

2. What Will This Chapter Teach You?

Part B ("The Fundamental Elements of a Federal Habeas Corpus Argument") will teach you about the basic elements of claims you can bring in a habeas petition and how the courts will treat your claims. Since most habeas petitions include claims of constitutional violations, Section 1 explains the portions of the U.S. Constitution that you are most likely to rely on in your habeas petition. Section 1 also lists examples of successful habeas claims and tells you how to discover a habeas claim in your arrest, trial, or sentence. Section 2 explains how the court evaluates your claim. This Section will teach you how to know which standard the courts use and how to show the court that your rights were violated. Section 3 teaches you how to show the court that the violation of your rights affected your conviction or sentence; this section also discusses the harmless error rule. Section 4 explains the special standard of review that federal courts must use when they review habeas claims brought by state prisoners.

Part C ("What You Cannot Complain About") tells you what violations or issues you cannot complain about in your habeas petition because the writ of habeas corpus is designed to only allow you to obtain relief in specific situations. Section 1 explains that you generally cannot bring habeas petitions that claim Fourth Amendment violations. Sections 2 and 3 discuss the relevance of laws that are passed after your trial, called new laws. Section 2 discusses what a new law is and explains that you normally cannot bring habeas claims based on new laws. Section 3 explains the exceptions to this rule—the situations when you can include claims based on a new law in your habeas petition.

Part D ("Procedures for Filing a Petition for Habeas Corpus") explains the basic requirements of your habeas petition, including that you are in custody, have exhausted state remedies, are not in procedural default, have filed within the proper time limit, and that your petition is not successive.

Part E ("The Mechanics of Petitioning for Federal Habeas Corpus") discusses the basic mechanical process surrounding habeas law: (1) when to file, (2) where to file, (3) whom to file against, (4) how to file, (5) what to expect after you file, and (6) how to appeal.

Part F ("How to Get Help from a Lawyer") discusses, as the title suggests, how to get help from a lawyer for your habeas petition. Even though you are entitled to a lawyer during your trial and direct appeals, you are not entitled to have a lawyer to help with your habeas petition. However, you should still try to get help from a lawyer if you can.

Appendix A is a chart of the appeals process, from your trial through your federal habeas petition. Appendix B provides a checklist you can refer to when putting together your federal habeas corpus petition.

3. When Do People File Habeas Petitions?

Usually prisoners file their federal habeas petitions after they have finished their direct appeals and state post-conviction proceedings:

Direct Appeal → Post-Conviction Appeal → Federal Habeas Claim

Because you are entitled to a lawyer during your direct appeal, you should always file a direct appeal before anything else. If you lose your direct appeal, you have to decide whether to file a state post-conviction appeal. It is not necessary to follow this sequence, but most people do. The reason that most people file a state post-conviction appeal is that before you can file any claim in your federal habeas petition, you must have filed that same claim with the state court. If you are filing any claims in your federal habeas petition that were not raised in your direct appeal, you must give the state court a chance to review those claims before filing your federal habeas petition. Giving the state court the chance to hear all of the claims you will raise in your habeas petition is called "exhaustion." It is an important requirement, and is discussed in more detail in Part D(2) ("Exhaustion of State Remedies and Direct Appeal") below. Because you will often want to raise issues in habeas that you were unable to raise on direct appeal, you have to raise them first in your state post-conviction proceeding.

After your direct appeal, you might find more errors that occurred during your trial. These errors may be based on outside information not in your transcript. If you want to bring these claims in your federal habeas petition and you are a state prisoner, you must first go to state court and file a state post-conviction appeal. Then, if you are denied relief, you can bring a federal habeas petition. Your federal habeas petition will be filed after you finish all your state appeals (direct and collateral). There are strict timelines that apply to habeas petitions after you finish your state appeals, as discussed in Part D(4) ("Time Limit") below.

4. Which Laws Apply to Federal Habeas Corpus?

You can find all of the laws covering federal habeas corpus in 28 U.S.C. §§ 2241–66 (2006). Section 2241 is the habeas corpus statute, which gives courts the authority to release prisoners who are being held in violation of the Constitution. Sections 2242 and 2253 deal with issues relating to a habeas petition, such as evidence and appeals issues. There are additional statutes that apply separately to state and federal prisoners, in Sections 2254 and 2255 respectively.[3] When a state prisoner brings a habeas petition, he brings it under 28 U.S.C. § 2254.[4] When a federal prisoner brings a habeas petition, he brings it under 28 U.S.C. § 2255.[5] In some circumstances, a federal prisoner may bring a habeas action directly under 28 U.S.C. § 2241,[6] without using Section 2255. Additionally, in cases where the defendant faces the death penalty, special procedures in 28 U.S.C. §§ 2261–66 may be used if the state meets certain standards. See Part F ("How to Get Help from a Lawyer") of this Chapter for more information. There are also special rules governing procedures for filing and litigating habeas corpus cases. These can be found in the "Rules Governing Section 2254 Cases in the United States District Courts," and the "Rules Governing Section 2255 Proceedings in the United States District Courts."[7] The Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 ("AEDPA") also affects federal habeas corpus law.[8] These laws change often, and courts often decide cases changing these laws' interpretations. So, you should Shepardize the cases included in this Chapter before relying on them.[9]

5. Three Rules to Know Before Filing

Habeas corpus law is very complex. Different courts follow different rules. You will need to research cases in your district to understand how your district follows each rule. You should use this Chapter as a

---

3. The differences between federal and state prisoners' petitions are mostly procedural, not substantive issues. This means that regardless of whether you are a state or federal prisoner, you may use cases brought under either 28 U.S.C. § 2255 or under 28 U.S.C. § 2254 as authority in your petition if you are discussing substantive issues. See United States v. Bendolph, 409 F.3d 155, 163 (3d Cir. 2005) ("[T]o provide guidance to the district courts, as well as to avoid confusion, we … should treat § 2255 motions and § 2254 petitions the same absent sound reason to do otherwise."); Miller v. New Jersey Dept. of Corrections, 145 F.3d 616, 619 n.1 (3d Cir. 1998) ("[W]e have followed the practice, whenever we decide an AEDPA issue that arises under § 2254 and the same holding would analytically be required in a case arising under § 2255, or vice versa, of so informing the district courts."). In this Chapter, the procedural differences are discussed as they arise, and you should pay careful attention to them

4. You are a state prisoner if you are imprisoned for committing a state crime. You are a federal prisoner if you are imprisoned for violating a federal law. Most crimes, including murder and theft, are state crimes. Some crimes, including kidnapping and drug-related offenses, may be federal crimes. If you are detained by a tribal court, you are neither a state nor a federal prisoner. To bring a habeas claim, prisoners of a tribal court should use 25 U.S.C. § 1303 (2006). This Chapter does not address habeas petitions by prisoners of a tribal court. Because tribes are not subject to the same provisions of the Constitution that states and the federal government are, if you are a tribal prisoner, you should do outside research to find out how habeas law applies to you. A few cases dealing with habeas claims by petitioners in tribal custody are United States v. Lara, 541 U.S. 193, 124 S. Ct. 1628, 158 L. Ed. 2d 420, 72 USLW 4277 (2004); Poodry v. Tonawanda Band of Seneca Indians, 85 F.3d 874 (2d Cir. 1996); Wetsit v. Stafne, 44 F.3d 823 (9th Cir. 1995).

5. Technically, 28 U.S.C. § 2255 (2006) is not an application for habeas corpus, but it has the same effect. Therefore, it is still referred to as a habeas petition.

6. Note that the restrictions in § 2241(e) denying federal court jurisdiction to detainees determined to be "enemy combatants" were found to be unconstitutional. Boumediene v. Bush, 553 U.S. 723, 728, 128 S. Ct. 2229, 2238, 171 L. Ed. 2d 41 (2008).

7. In the United States Code ("U.S.C.") the rules immediately follow the individual statute.

8. Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act, Pub. L. No. 104-132, 110 Stat. 1214 (1996) (codified as amended in scattered sections of 28 U.S.C. and 21 U.S.C.). The changes this law made to the habeas statutes are all incorporated into later versions of the applicable statutes in title 28 of the United States Code. If you have a recent copy of the United States Code or recent supplements to the Code, the habeas statutes will contain the AEDPA changes. Such statutes include 28 U.S.C. §§ 2244, 2253, 2254, 2255, 2261–66 (2006) and 21 U.S.C. § 848 (2006).

9. By using LexisNexis and Shepardizing, you can make sure that the law has not changed. See Chapter 2 of the JLM for an explanation of how to Shepardize a case.

general guide to direct more intensive research. You should try to get a lawyer if you can,[10] but if you cannot, you should not give up on your habeas claim. Although it may seem confusing at first, after reading this Chapter the complexities of federal habeas corpus will be easier to understand. Read this Chapter very carefully, and try to understand what the rules are. Before you read the rest of this Chapter, however, there are three important rules of which you must be aware.

(a) File Your Petition Within One Year of the End of Your Direct Appeal

If you file a state post-conviction appeal, the one-year deadline will be extended while your case goes through the state post-conviction process. This deadline and extension will be discussed at greater length in Part D(4) ("Time Limit") of this Chapter. It is important for you to remember that time matters, and you must pay attention to the different time requirements.

(b) Present Any and All Claims You Bring in a Federal Court to the State Court First

This is called "exhaustion" and is discussed more fully in Part D(2) ("Exhaustion of State Remedies and Direct Appeal") of this Chapter. The point of this requirement is to give state courts a chance to correct any violations of federal law that occurred during your trial before you complain to a federal court in your habeas petition. So, if you do not ask the state court for relief first, the federal court will not address your claims.

(c) Be Aware that It Is Almost Impossible to File More than One Habeas Petition

Courts are very strict about this rule, and therefore you only have one chance to get your habeas petition right. This means that you have to meet all the deadlines, follow all the court procedures correctly, and include all the necessary information in your first habeas petition. If you make a mistake or miss deadlines, you probably will not be able to ask for habeas relief again. For more information about this, see Part D(5) ("Successive Petitions") of this Chapter.

6. Plea Agreements May Affect Habeas Corpus Relief

Unfortunately, plea agreements can sometimes affect habeas corpus relief. If your conviction was based on a plea, habeas relief may not be available to you. Some federal courts, including the Tenth Circuit and the Middle District of Pennsylvania, have found a successful post-conviction challenge like habeas to be a breach of a plea agreement, under which the defendant agreed to serve the imposed sentence without protest. These courts have dissolved protesting defendants' plea arrangements and later convicted them under the charges previously dropped by the agreements.[11] In other words, if your conviction was a part of a plea agreement, your habeas relief may violate that previous arrangement. If the court voids that plea agreement as part of your habeas relief, the prosecutor can try to convict and imprison you under another charge that had been previously dropped under the plea arrangement. In short, you may still end up in jail on another charge.[12]

But, at least one federal district court in New York has held that habeas relief does not violate prior plea agreements. The Southern District of New York has granted habeas relief and still held valid the previous plea arrangements. The court held that after the federal court releases you based on a successful habeas

10. Part F of this Chapter ("How to Get Help from a Lawyer") gives more information on how to get a lawyer for your habeas petition. You are not entitled to a lawyer and have to convince the court to give you one. If the court denies your request, you can write your own habeas petition and ask for a lawyer again after the court has seen your petition.

11. See United States v. Bunner, 134 F.3d 1000, 1002–05 (10th Cir. 1998) (concluding that the defendant's challenge of the plea agreement breaks the contract, so the charges that were dismissed by the plea agreement can be reinstated); United States v. Viera, 931 F. Supp. 1224, 1228–29 (M.D. Pa. 1996) (same). But see United States v. Sandoval-Lopez, 122 F.3d 797, 802 (9th Cir. 1997) (determining that defendant did not break plea bargain contract by vacating conviction because plea agreement prohibited attacks on the sentence, not the conviction); United States v. Gaither, 926 F. Supp. 50, 51–52 (M.D. Pa. 1996) (holding that defendant did not breach plea agreement by moving to vacate his conviction); DiCesare v. United States, 646 F. Supp. 544, 548 (C.D. Cal. 1986) (holding that government is still bound by obligations in plea agreement when defendant's conviction was vacated because of intervening change in law).

12. However, the state may be prevented from reinstating charges against you if (1) the statute of limitations has run on the dismissed charges, (2) you already served a substantial part of the sentence you received as part of the plea agreement, and (3) you did not agree to waive the statute of limitations defense in your plea agreement. See Rodriguez v. United States, 933 F. Supp. 279, 281–83 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) (ruling that, based on a new court ruling, the conviction should be dropped and that the other charges dropped by the plea agreement cannot be reinstated as defendant could not be returned to her position prior to the plea agreement, having already served more than half her sentence; distinguishing this case from other cases where the dropped charges could be reinstated).

petition, no prosecutor can try to convict you for charges that were dropped by the prior plea agreements.[13] The Ninth Circuit has also held that a grant of habeas relief does not entitle the court to set aside the entire plea agreement and let the State re-prosecute charges that had been dropped as part of the agreement.[14] If you are challenging the validity of your conviction on only one of multiple counts, you should probably assume that the court would set aside the invalid conviction and re-sentence you on the remaining crimes for which you pleaded guilty.

7. Can You Petition for Someone Else in Governmental Custody?

Filing a habeas petition for someone else is often allowed. The petitioner (the person who files the habeas petition) is called a "next friend" and may be a relative, friend, or lawyer. To be allowed to file a petition as a "next friend" in court, you must establish that (1) the prisoner cannot bring the petition himself and (2) you are truly dedicated to the best interests of the prisoner. Sometimes the courts may require that you have some significant relationship with the prisoner.[15] In addition, courts seek proof that the next friend is in a better position to file the petition than the prisoner.[16] In general, filing a habeas petition for someone else is not allowed if it goes against the competent adult prisoner's wishes.[17] However, courts usually permit parents to petition on behalf of their underaged children who are in governmental custody.[18]

B. The Fundamental Elements of a Federal Habeas Corpus Argument

Prisoners in both state and federal custody can complain about the same types of problems under federal habeas corpus law. This part of the Chapter will give you an idea of what types of claims you can make in a habeas petition and how to prove you are entitled to relief. It is important to remember that if you are a state prisoner, you must present any claim in your habeas petition to the state court first. This requirement, called exhaustion, will be discussed in Part D(2) ("Exhaustion of State Remedies and Direct Appeal").

To argue for federal habeas relief, you will try to show that you are being held in prison illegally because you have been wrongfully convicted in violation of your rights. Because the Constitution is the only federal law that governs state criminal procedures, habeas claims by state prisoners must claim a violation of the Constitution. Federal prisoners may claim violations of other federal laws. The Constitution does not describe in detail what is included in the set of constitutional rights that you have. The U.S. Supreme Court interprets the Constitution, so the cases it decides describe specifically what makes up a constitutional right or violation. To argue that you deserve federal habeas relief, you will first need to show which of your federal rights were violated. Section 1 of this Part explains how to find constitutional violations and gives many examples and cases to reference. Once you have identified at least one possible violation, you will need to 13. Rodriguez v. United States, 933 F. Supp. 279, 281–83 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) (ruling that the conviction should be dropped based on a new court ruling and that the other charges dropped by the plea agreement cannot be reinstated as defendant could not be returned to her position prior to the plea agreement, having already served more than half her sentence; distinguishing this case from other cases where the dropped charges could be reinstated). It is important to note that the Second Circuit has not addressed this issue, and that New York district courts are not in agreement about this case. You will need to examine the cases in your district to see whether this ruling is accepted there.

---

14. United States v. Barron, 172 F.3d 1153, 1158–60 (9th Cir. 1999) (holding that a defendant seeking to set aside a conviction for conduct that was innocent under a statute neither breached the plea agreement nor repudiated the agreement and that, as a result, the district court could only vacate the judgment and resentence the defendant on the counts of conviction that still stood, not those counts that had been dropped).

15. See Whitmore v. Arkansas, 495 U.S. 149, 163–64, 110 S. Ct. 1717, 1727, 109 L. Ed. 2d 135, 150 (1990) (noting that the two prerequisites for next friend standing are (1) providing an adequate explanation, such as mental incompetence or disability as to why the real party in interest cannot appear on his own behalf, and (2) showing that the "next friend" is truly dedicated to the best interests of the person on whose behalf he seeks to litigate and has some significant relationship with the real party in interest).

16. See Demosthenes v. Baal, 495 U.S. 731, 735, 110 S. Ct. 2223, 2225, 109 L. Ed. 2d 762, 766 (1990) (per curiam) (holding that though the prisoner's parents filed a petition for him, he was competent to represent his own interests); Lonchar v. Thomas, 58 F.3d 588, 588-589 (11th Cir. 1995) (per curiam) (denying next friend petition because prisoner was competent and did not want a habeas petition filed, but allowing a next friend petition where prisoner is incompetent).

17. See In re Zettlemoyer, 53 F.3d 24, 28 (3d Cir. 1995) (per curiam) (denying next friend petition brought by both prisoner's former counsel and his mother because prisoner competently chose to waive right to file habeas petition, but not questioning lawyer's ability to proceed on an incompetent prisoner's behalf).

18. See Amerson v. Iowa, 59 F.3d 92, 93 n.3 (8th Cir. 1995) (concluding that although a child was placed with the state department of human services, the child's mother "was, and still is a proper next friend to bring this petition on behalf of [the child], notwithstanding termination of her parental rights ….").

identify the standard the court uses to determine whether the action violated your rights. Section 2 explains both how to find the standard the court uses for your violation and how to show the court that the standard was met. However, just showing that your rights were violated is not enough to get federal habeas relief. You must also show that the violation of your rights harmed you by having a substantial effect on the outcome of your trial. Section 3 therefore explains how to show the court that the violation of your rights was not a "harmless" error, in other words that the error had a "substantial effect" on your trial. If you are a federal prisoner, once you have shown that your rights were violated and that the violation substantially harmed your trial, you will have shown that you deserve habeas relief. However, there are many specific procedures that you must follow to successfully file for habeas corpus. These procedures are discussed in Part D ("Procedures for Filing a Petition for Habeas Corpus").

If you are a state prisoner, showing that your federal rights were violated and that the violation substantially harmed your trial is not enough to be granted habeas relief in federal court. As a state prisoner, you have another very important element of your habeas petition to prove: that the state court was unreasonable in finding that either your rights were not violated or the outcome of the trial was not affected by the violation. This "unreasonableness" requirement is called the "standard of relief," and it is a very hard standard to meet. It is discussed in detail in Section 4 of this Part. To sum up, as a state prisoner, you must show that your rights were violated, the violation was not harmless, and the state court was incorrect according to the high standard of relief in order for you to obtain federal habeas relief.

1. Examples of Constitutional Violations

To obtain a writ of habeas corpus, you must show the court that your custody violates the Constitution or laws of the United States.[19] You cannot claim that your custody violates the state constitution or state laws because federal habeas corpus relief is only granted if your federal rights have been violated. You can satisfy this requirement by showing that the police, prosecutor, defense counsel, or judge acted (or failed to act)—during your arrest, trial, or sentencing—in a way that violated your constitutional rights. Your constitutional rights can be found in the amendments to the Constitution. Habeas claims often state violations of the Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Eighth, and Fourteenth Amendments.

Below are two lists. The first is designed to give you a very general idea of what rights these amendments guarantee. The second list gives some examples of habeas claims in violation of these amendments. It is hard to understand what these rights mean in real situations without looking at cases. You should look over this list, and then if you think one of these rights may have been violated in your case, read the cases in the footnotes following the list relating to that amendment to get a better understanding of exactly how the court has interpreted the right in real situations. Also, read the list of examples below to see if you experienced anything similar to the violations listed. Remember, these are just general lists, and the examples provide only a selection of some of the things found to violate the Constitution. You may have experienced a violation that is not mentioned here and still may be able to get habeas corpus relief.

(a) The Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Eighth, and Fourteenth Amendments:

Fourth Amendment: This is the right to be free from unlawful search or seizure. This Amendment is why the police need to have warrants or probable cause to search you or take your property.

Fifth Amendment: This Amendment has a few rights in it. First is the right to be tried before a jury for certain crimes. Second is the right to be tried only once for any specific crime. Being tried more than once for the same crime is called "double jeopardy" and is not legally allowed. Third is the right to be free from self-incrimination. This means that you do not have to disclose evidence that would help the people prosecuting you. This is why you do not have to speak to the police or be a witness in your own trial. Fourth is the right to due process. Due process basically means a fair procedure, but the courts have identified many elements under the right to due process.

Sixth Amendment: This Amendment also has several rights in it. First is the right to a speedy and public trial. Second is the right to an impartial jury. Third is the right to have your trial in the state and district where the crime occurred. Fourth is the right to be informed of the crime you are charged with. Fifth is the right to confront witnesses against you and to be able to obtain witnesses for your side. Sixth is the right to have the assistance of a lawyer.

---

19. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(a) (2006). Because there are no federal laws that regulate state criminal proceedings, as a state prisoner you must prove that your custody violates the U.S. Constitution. Remember, you can raise state constitutional violations in your petition only if they amount to a denial of your rights under the federal Constitution.

Eighth Amendment: This is the right to be free from excessive bail, fines, or cruel and unusual punishment.

Fourteenth Amendment: This Amendment again guarantees the right to due process (see the explanation for the Fifth Amendment above). However, this Amendment applies specifically to states. This amendment is what makes the above rights apply to both federal trials and state trials.

If you are a state prisoner, remember that you may only raise violations of the Constitution in your habeas petition. If you are a federal prisoner, you may raise violations of the Constitution or violations of federal criminal law.[20]

(b) Examples of Habeas Claims Based on the Constitution

(1) Investigation and Policing: A witness identified you through a police line-up or photograph in which the police were (impermissibly) suggestive,[21] violating your Fourteenth Amendment right to due process.

(2) Your Confession: Your confession was obtained involuntarily in violation of your Fourteenth Amendment due process rights.[22] In order to prove that your confession was involuntary, you must prove that your will was overborne (overtaken).[23] Some facts that may support a claim that your will was overborne include threats of physical violence,[24] threats against loved ones,[25] repeated coercive questioning after you indicated that you wanted to stop answering questions,[26] fraudulent promises by police,[27] and other forms of ill treatment.[28]

(3) Right to Counsel Violations:

(a) You were denied your Fifth and Sixth Amendment rights to counsel. You would claim this if you were denied counsel that the State should have provided because you were indigent

20. See Title 18 of the United States Code for information on federal criminal law.

21. Suggestiveness is generally determined by five factors: (1) the opportunity of the witness to view the criminal at the time of the crime; (2) the witness' degree of attention; (3) the accuracy of the witness' prior description of the criminal; (4) the level of certainty demonstrated at the confrontation; and (5) the time between the crime and the confrontation. Manson v. Brathwaite, 432 U.S. 98, 114–15, 97 S. Ct. 2243, 2253, 53 L. Ed. 2d 140, 154 (1977); see also Neil v. Biggers, 409 U.S. 188, 199–200, 93 S. Ct. 375, 382, 34 L. Ed. 2d 401, 411 (1972) (discussing suggestiveness and the possible danger from police suggestiveness, but ultimately finding that the totality of circumstances showed that the suggestiveness was overcome); Dickerson v. Fogg, 692 F.2d 238, 244 (2d Cir. 1982) (granting habeas relief because the identification was impermissibly suggestive based on the five-factor assessment). Dickerson involved both a pretrial and in-court identification. The court thus held that the suggestiveness of the pretrial identification must be weighed against the independent reliability of the in-court identification.

22. See Miller v. Fenton, 474 U.S. 104, 110–12, 106 S. Ct. 445, 449–51, 88 L. Ed. 2d 405, 411–12 (1985) (holding that the voluntariness of a confession is not a factual question but a legal question that requires independent consideration in a habeas proceeding, and therefore finding it not subject to the § 2254(d) presumption of correctness for state court findings of fact). In Miller, the police got a confession by questioning a suspect with a mental problem and telling him that he would receive medical help rather than punishment if he confessed.

23. See Dickerson v. United States, 530 U.S. 428, 434, 120 S. Ct. 2326, 2331, 147 L. Ed. 2d 405, 413 (2000) (affirming that when a defendant claims his confession was involuntary, the question is whether his will was overborne by the circumstances surrounding the giving of the confession).

24. See Brown v. Mississippi, 297 U.S. 278, 286, 56 S. Ct. 461, 465, 80 L. Ed. 682 (1936) (stating that due process is violated when violence is used to coerce confession).

25. See Lynumn v. Illinois, 372 U.S. 528, 534, 83 S. Ct. 917, 920, 9 L. Ed. 2d 922, 926 (1963) (finding that defendant's confession was involuntary because her will was overborne when the police threatened to take her young children from her if she did not confess).

26. See Kordenbrock v. Scroggy, 919 F.2d 1091, 1100 (6th Cir. 1990) (holding portions of confession invalid when obtained after police ignored defendant's statements that he did not want to talk and threatened to arrest his girlfriend).

27. See United States v. Rutledge, 900 F.2d 1127, 1130–31 (7th Cir. 1990) (holding that police are allowed to pressure, cajole, conceal facts, actively mislead, and commit minor acts of fraud, but are not allowed to magnify a suspect's fears, ignorance, anxieties, or uncertainties to the point where rational decision becomes impossible); see also Moore v. Czerniak, 534 F.3d 1128, 1138 n.10 (9th Cir. 2008) (noting that petitioner's taped confession given to police was involuntarily given in response to a police officer's false promises of leniency and that petitioner's attorney's failure to seek suppression of this evidence was objectively unreasonable given the possibility of attaining a superior plea bargain).

28. See Davis v. North Carolina, 384 U.S. 737, 752, 86 S. Ct. 1761, 1770, 16 L. Ed. 2d 895, 905 (1966) (finding that where police held a prisoner in a cell and questioned him off and on for sixteen days with a meager diet, the prisoner's confession was an involuntary end product of coercive influences and therefore constitutionally inadmissible).

(poor);[29] you were denied the opportunity for new counsel when an irreconcilable difference arose between you and your appointed counsel;[30] you were denied counsel at arraignment;[31] you did not voluntarily, knowingly, and intelligently waive your right to counsel during interrogation or discussions with police officers while in custody;[32] or your lawyer provided such poor representation as to amount to ineffective assistance of counsel.[33]

(b) The trial court unreasonably denied your request to proceed pro se (as your own attorney).[34]

(c) You were convicted based on information provided by an informant who was "bugged" or reported jail cell conversations between you and him in violation of the Fifth or Sixth Amendments.[35]

---

29. See Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335, 343–45, 83 S. Ct. 792, 796–97, 9 L. Ed. 2d 799, 804–06 (1963) (holding that, in a criminal trial, if defendant cannot afford counsel, counsel must be provided); see also Swenson v. Bosler, 386 U.S. 258, 259, 87 S. Ct. 996, 997, 18 L. Ed. 2d 33, 35 (1967) (holding that the right to counsel on direct appeal in state courts cannot be denied to a defendant solely because he is unable to afford a lawyer).

30. See Schell v. Witek, 218 F.3d 1017, 1025 (9th Cir. 2000) (holding that a trial court may not ignore the timely motion for new counsel by an indigent defendant with appointed counsel). But see United States v. Calabro, 467 F.2d 973, 986 (2d Cir. 1972) (holding that defendant must show good cause for rejecting assigned counsel, such as a complete breakdown in communication, a conflict of interest, or irreconcilable conflict with the attorney); United States v. Garey, 540 F.3d 1253, 1270 (11th Cir. 2008) (finding defendant waived the right to counsel when he rejected his appointed counsel three days before trial and his request for substitute counsel was denied); Jones v. Walker, 540 F.3d 1277, 1295 (11th Cir. 2008) (finding there is no violation of the right to counsel if a defendant proceeds pro se because he refuses to work with an assigned public defender and is denied his request to have another public defender assigned to him).

31. See Rothgery v. Gillespie County, 554 U.S. 191, 198, 128 S. Ct. 2578, 2581, 171 L. Ed. 2d 366, 372 (2008) (holding that the 6th Amendment's guarantee of the right to counsel applies at a defendant's first appearance before a judicial officer where the defendant should be told of the formal accusations against him and the restrictions imposed on his liberty).

32. See Brewer v. Williams, 430 U.S. 387, 403, 97 S. Ct. 1232, 1242, 51 L. Ed. 2d 424 (1977) (placing the burden on the prosecutor to show that the defendant has voluntarily, knowingly, and intelligently waived his right to counsel); Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 468, 86 S. Ct. 1602, 1624, 16 L. Ed. 2d 694 (1966) (finding that defendant must be informed of his rights before he may be considered to have knowingly and intelligently waived his right to counsel); see also Stansbury v. California, 511 U.S. 318, 114 S. Ct. 1526, 128 L. Ed. 2d 293 (1994) (finding that defendant must be given Miranda warnings if he is in custody and being questioned). But see Texas v. Cobb, 532 U.S. 162, 167, 121 S. Ct. 1335, 1340, 149 L. Ed. 2d 321 (2001) (holding that the 6th Amendment right is "offense specific" and that a defendant charged with burglary did not have a right to counsel when being interrogated about a murder from the same incident); Young v. Walls, 311 F.3d 846, 850 (7th Cir. 2002) (finding the purpose of Miranda warnings is to protect a suspect from coerced self-incrimination, so police failure to give Miranda warnings to a suspect who confessed because he wanted to talk is not unconstitutional).

33. See Wiggins v. Smith, 539 U.S. 510, 524, 123 S. Ct. 2527, 2536, 156 L. Ed. 2d 471, 486 (2003) (granting defendant's habeas claim for ineffective assistance of counsel when counsel failed to investigate defendant's life history, which included sexual and physical abuse, diminished mental capacities, and severe family problems). See Part B(2) of this Chapter ("Standards and Tests for Claims of Violations") for more information on ineffective assistance of counsel.

34. Faretta v. California, 422 U.S. 806, 818–19, 95 S. Ct. 2525, 2532–33, 45 L. Ed. 2d 562, 572–73 (1975) (finding that the 6th and 14th Amendments provide the right of self-representation); United States v. Hernandez, 203 F.3d 614, 621 (9th Cir. 2000) (finding that a denial of a pro se request may be unconstitutional if it was made before jury selection and if the request was not a delay tactic); see also Moore v. Haviland, 531 F.3d 393, 404 (6th Cir. 2008) (holding that petitioner's habeas relief was warranted because he was denied the right to proceed pro se where petitioner had requested during trial to proceed pro se and did not waive this right merely by responding to questions posed by his attorney). But see Indiana v. Edwards, 128 S. Ct. 2379, 2386, 171 L. Ed. 2d 345, 355 (2008) (holding that defendant could be denied right to self-representation if he is deemed not competent to defend himself at trial, even if he is competent enough to stand trial). Note that this does not mean that you have a constitutional right to any counsel. The court may reject your request to have a non-lawyer, other than yourself, represent you. United States v. Gigax, 605 F.2d 507, 517 (10th Cir. 1979) (finding that the 6th Amendment does not protect the right to be represented by a lay person).

35. See Massiah v. United States, 377 U.S. 201, 206, 84 S. Ct. 1199, 1203, 12 L. Ed. 2d 246, 250 (1964) (finding that evidence from a conversation between defendant on bail and a co-defendant that was radio transmitted without defendant's knowledge violated his 6th Amendment right to assistance of counsel); see also Maine v. Moulton, 474 U.S. 159, 177, 106 S. Ct. 477, 487, 88 L. Ed. 2d 481 (1985) (finding that the state violated the 6th Amendment right of the defendant when they recorded conversations between him and a co-defendant who was operating as an undercover agent for the state); United States v. Henry, 447 U.S. 264, 274, 100 S. Ct. 2183, 2189, 65 L. Ed. 2d 115 (1980) (omitting from trial the defendant's incriminating statements made to a paid informant who was confined in the same cell block as defendant because the government was found to have violated the defendant's 6th Amendment right to counsel by intentionally creating a situation that was likely to induce the defendant to make incriminating statements). But see Kuhlmann v. Wilson, 477 U.S. 436, 459, 106 S. Ct. 2616, 2630, 91 L. Ed. 2d 364 (1986) (holding that it is not a constitutional violation if the informant merely listens to the defendant without questioning or inciting him to speak);

(d) You were temporarily banned from consulting with your attorney.[36]

(4) Your Competency: You were denied your Fourteenth Amendment right to an examination to determine whether you were competent to stand trial, whether you were competent to waive counsel, or whether you were competent to plead guilty.[37]

(5) Your Guilty Plea: Your guilty plea was unconstitutional because you pleaded guilty involuntarily.[38]

(a) You pleaded guilty as part of a plea bargain agreement that was broken.[39]

(b) You pleaded guilty without understanding the charges against you,[40] or language difficulties prevented you from understanding the charges against you.[41]

(c) You pleaded guilty without understanding the consequences of pleading guilty.[42]

United States v. Rommy, 506 F.3d 108, 136 (2d Cir. 2007) (holding that it is not a constitutional violation if the informant's questions to the defendant do not stimulate discussion but only seek to clarify information already volunteered).

36. See Jones v. Vacco, 126 F.3d 408, 415–17 (2d Cir. 1997) (finding that an overnight ban on petitioner's consultation with his attorney, imposed when the trial judge declared an overnight recess during petitioner's cross-examination, violated petitioner's 6th Amendment right to counsel).

37. The Supreme Court has held that the standard of competency is the same for these three matters. That is, if a defendant is found competent to stand trial, he is necessarily competent to waive counsel and to plead guilty. Godinez v. Moran, 509 U.S. 389, 391, 113 S. Ct. 2680, 2682, 125 L. Ed. 2d 321, 327 (1993). The court identified the test for legal competency as "whether [the defendant] has sufficient present ability to consult with his lawyer with a reasonable degree of rational understanding and whether he has a rational as well as factual understanding of the proceedings against him." Drope v. Missouri, 420 U.S. 162, 171–72, 95 S. Ct. 896, 903–04, 43 L. Ed. 2d 103, 112–13 (1975) (finding that a psychiatric evaluation was also required when, among other indications, defendant had attempted suicide during trial); see also Cooper v. Oklahoma, 517 U.S. 348, 369, 116 S. Ct. 1373, 1384, 134 L. Ed. 2d 498, 515 (1996) (finding that a state law presuming defendant is competent unless he proves his incompetence by clear and convincing evidence violates due process); Pate v. Robinson, 383 U.S. 375, 385, 86 S. Ct. 836, 842, 15 L. Ed. 2d 815, 822 (1966) (holding that defendant is entitled to a competency hearing when there has been evidence presented in trial showing his insanity, since convicting an incompetent defendant violates the 14th Amendment); Johnson v. Norton, 249 F.3d 20, 22 (1st Cir. 2001) (finding a violation of due process when trial court did not hold a competency hearing when defendant stated that he did not know "what's going on" because he had been hit on the head and lost consciousness just before the start of trial); Bouchillon v. Collins, 907 F.2d 589, 592–94 (5th Cir. 1990) (finding that there was sufficient evidence at trial to establish a reasonable probability that defendant was incompetent at the time of a guilty plea due to post-traumatic stress disorder).

38. See Fontaine v. United States, 411 U.S. 213–15, 93 S. Ct. 1461–63, 36 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1973) (holding that defendant is entitled to a hearing to determine whether or not his guilty plea was voluntary even though he had declared in open court that his plea was given voluntarily and knowingly); Machibroda v. United States, 368 U.S. 487, 494, 82 S. Ct. 510, 514, 7 L. Ed. 2d 473 (1962) (holding that petitioner was entitled to a hearing on the issue of whether his guilty plea, which was based on the prosecutor's threats and unkept promises, was made involuntarily); Fair v. Zant, 715 F.2d 1519, 1520–22 (11th Cir. 1983) (holding that defendant's guilty plea was not voluntary where trial judge told defendant he could plead guilty but later withdraw his plea if he did not want to accept the sentence, but then refused to allow withdrawal of plea after sentencing); United States ex rel. Hill v. Ternullo, 510 F.2d 844, 846–48 (2d Cir. 1975) (holding that defendant was entitled to a hearing to determine whether his guilty plea was voluntary when his guilty plea was made based on his attorney's assurances that he would receive a lesser sentence than what was allowed under state law).

39. See Santobello v. New York, 404 U.S. 257, 262, 92 S. Ct. 495, 499, 30 L. Ed. 2d 427, 433 (1971) (holding that when pleas rest on an implied promise or on an agreement by a prosecutor that he will make no sentencing recommendations, such promises must be fulfilled); Brown v. Poole, 337 F.3d 1155, 1160–61 (9th Cir. 2003) (granting habeas relief and release of prisoner when state breached oral plea agreement that prisoner would only have to serve half of her 15-year sentence if she maintained a good prison record, even though prosecutor never had authority to make such a promise); Johnson v. Beto, 466 F.2d 478, 479–80 (5th Cir. 1972) (holding that if a prosecutor says he will make a sentencing recommendation in exchange for a guilty plea, but then actually recommends a harsher sentence in court, the plea bargain has been broken and defendant is entitled to resentencing or withdrawal of his guilty plea).

40. See Marshall v. Lonberger, 459 U.S. 422, 436, 103 S. Ct. 843, 852, 74 L. Ed. 2d 646, 660 (1983) (ruling that a guilty plea cannot be voluntary unless the accused has "received real notice of the true nature of the charge against him"); Henderson v. Morgan, 426 U.S. 637, 96 S. Ct. 2253, 49 L. Ed. 2d 103 (1976) (ruling that where neither defense counsel nor the trial court had explained the elements of the offense of second degree murder, the guilty plea was involuntary); United States v. Andrades, 169 F.3d 131 (2d Cir. 1999) (holding that defendant's guilty plea was invalid because he did not understand the nature of the charges against him due to his poor education and drug addiction).

41. The Court Interpreters Act, 28 U.S.C. §§ 1827–1828 (2006), requires the court to supply you with an interpreter if you do not understand English. See also United States v. Mosquera, 816 F. Supp. 168, 177 (E.D.N.Y. 1993) (setting requirements for translation in cases in which the defendant does not speak English), aff'd 48 F.3d 1214 (2d Cir. 1994).

(6) Timing of Conviction and Trial:

(a) The statute of limitations had already run out when you were charged with the offense,[43] or you were charged with a federal, non-capital crime more than five years after the crime occurred.[44]

(b) You were denied your Sixth Amendment right to a speedy trial.[45]

(7) Right to Be Free from Self-Incrimination:

(a) You were made to testify before a grand jury in violation of your Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination.[46]

(b) After you were promised immunity in exchange for testimony before a grand jury, the grand jury used your testimony against you in violation of your Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination.[47]

(c) During trial the prosecutor commented on your post-arrest silence in violation of your Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination;[48] or the prosecutor made an improper

---

42. See Marvel v. United States, 380 U.S. 262, 85 S. Ct. 953, 13 L. Ed. 2d 960 (1965) (ordering a rehearing to determine whether the trial judge misled the defendant about maximum possible sentence); United States ex rel. Leeson v. Damon, 496 F.2d 718, 722 (2d Cir. 1974) (reversing a conviction because the appellant did not understand that his plea could result in confinement in a reformatory for five years rather than a shorter state prison term); Jones v. United States, 440 F.2d 466, 468 (2d Cir. 1971) (ruling a defendant was entitled to a hearing on whether he was aware of the maximum possible sentence at the time of his guilty plea and, if not, whether he would have pled guilty had he known).

43. A statute of limitations is a period of years, set by state law, after which the government cannot prosecute a suspect. Statutes of limitations vary depending on the crime with which you are charged. The clock starts running on a statute of limitations once the crime is committed. The statute of limitations cannot be waived. This time limit is different than the 6th Amendment right to a speedy trial. The right to a speedy trial does not start running until you are indicted; you can waive this right, and the court balances this right against other considerations.

44. See 18 U.S.C. § 3282 (2006), which requires the federal government to issue an indictment within five years of the commission of a non-capital offense. There is an important new exception to this rule: the government can issue a "DNA profile indictment" that contains a set of DNA identification characteristics but not the identity of the accused. An indictment issued under this rule is not subject to the five-year limitation. See 18 U.S.C. § 3282(b) (Supp. 2007). There are many other federal laws that govern the procedure to be followed in federal criminal trials and sentencing.

45. Courts follow the guidelines set out in Barker v. Wingo, 407 U.S. 514 (1972), to determine whether a defendant was denied his right to a speedy trial. Courts balance the conduct of the prosecution and defendant and look at these factors: (1) the length of the delay; (2) the reason for the delay; (3) whether the defendant asked for a speedy trial; and (4) whether the delay prejudiced the defendant. Barker v. Wingo, 407 U.S. 514, 530, 92 S. Ct. 2182, 2192, 33 L. Ed. 2d 101, 117 (1972) (ruling that where defendant did not want a speedy trial, and was not seriously prejudiced by the delay, a five-year delay between arrest and trial did not violate defendant's 6th Amendment rights); see also Klopfer v. North Carolina, 386 U.S. 213, 221–22, 87 S. Ct. 988, 992–93, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1, 7 (1967) (ruling that a state may not postpone prosecution of any case for an unlimited period even though the accused remains free to go wherever he desires). But see Reed v. Farley, 512 U.S. 339, 114 S. Ct. 2291, 129 L. Ed. 2d 277 (1994) (ruling that violation of a federal statute that limits trial length is not necessarily a violation of the constitutional right to a speedy trial when defendant did not object to delay and showed no prejudice from the delay); United States v. Marion, 404 U.S. 307, 92 S. Ct. 455, 30 L. Ed. 2d 468 (1971) (ruling that the right to a speedy trial guaranteed by the 6th Amendment does not apply until you have been accused of a crime, which may not occur until indictment).

46. See United States v. Mandujano, 425 U.S. 564, 575, 96 S. Ct. 1768, 1776, 48 L. Ed. 2d 212, 221 (1976) (ruling that a witness cannot be compelled to answer questions that are self-incriminating, a determination that the judge may make if necessary). But see Kastigar v. United States, 406 U.S. 441, 459–62, 92 S. Ct. 1653, 1664–66, 32 L. Ed. 2d 212, 225–27 (1972) (finding that a defendant may be forced to testify over a claim of privilege from self-incrimination when defendant has been granted immunity from use of the compelled testimony, or evidence derived from the testimony, in future criminal proceedings).

47. Two types of immunity may be granted to witnesses who testify before grand juries. "Transactional immunity" gives a potential defendant full immunity from prosecution for any offense related to the incident in question. "Use immunity," on the other hand, only guarantees that the government will not use any of the information revealed in your testimony in future proceedings against you. See Kastigar v. United States, 406 U.S. 441, 458, 92 S. Ct. 1653, 1664, 32 L. Ed. 2d 212, 225 (1972) (ruling that a court can compel witnesses to testify simply by giving them use immunity and that the court does not also need to give transactional immunity); see also United States ex rel. Gasparino v. Butler, 398 F. Supp. 127, 129–30 (S.D.N.Y. 1974) (ruling that, in New York, use immunity is the usual kind of immunity intended and that transactional immunity must be expressly authorized by a grand jury vote). Note, however, that habeas petitions are rarely granted on these grounds.

48. See Doyle v. Ohio, 426 U.S. 610, 96 S. Ct. 2240, 49 L. Ed. 2d 91 (1976) (holding that due process rights are violated when the prosecutor questions defendant about why he didn't tell his story to police after Miranda warnings at time of his arrest); Griffin v. California, 380 U.S. 609, 85 S. Ct. 1229, 14 L. Ed. 2d 106 (1965) (ruling that a defendant's 5th Amendment rights were violated where judge instructed jury that they may take into account failure of defendant to testify about evidence to indicate the truthfulness of that evidence); Gravley v. Mills, 87 F.3d 779 (6th Cir. 1996) (holding summation.[49] (A summation, or closing argument, is the argument made to the jury at the end of a trial.)

(d) Statements that you made at a court-ordered competency hearing before a state-appointed psychologist or psychiatrist were used against you in violation of your Fifth and Fourteenth Amendment rights against self-incrimination.[50]

(8) Access-to-Evidence Violations:

(a) The prosecution withheld requested[51] evidence that could have helped your case, in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment.[52] that a prosecutor violated due process by repeatedly making references to petitioner's post-arrest silence; also finding that defendant had ineffective assistance of counsel because counsel had not objected to prosecutor's comments at trial); Hill v. Turpin, 135 F.3d 1411, 1416 (11th Cir. 1998) (granting habeas corpus where prosecutor's references to petitioner's post-Miranda assertions of right to remain silent were "repeated and deliberate"). But see Fletcher v. Weir, 455 U.S. 603, 607, 102 S. Ct. 1309, 1371, 71 L. Ed. 2d 490, 494 (1982) (finding that it is not a constitutional violation for prosecutors to use post-arrest silence to impeach a defendant where the defendant had not been told that he had a right to remain silent); Roberts v. United States, 445 U.S. 552, 561, 100 S. Ct. 1358, 1364–65, 63 L. Ed. 2d 622, 631 (1980) (refusing to consider petitioner's 5th Amendment claim when he was given a harsher sentence due to his refusal to answer questions about drug suppliers because his purpose in keeping silent was not to prevent self-incrimination); Jenkins v. Anderson, 447 U.S. 231, 100 S. Ct. 2124, 65 L. Ed. 86 (1980) (finding that it is not a constitutional violation for prosecutors to use a defendant's pre-arrest two-week silence to impeach his testimony that he had acted in self-defense); Splunge v. Parke, 160 F.3d 369 (7th Cir. 1998) (holding that prosecutor's comment on petitioner's post-arrest silence was not a 5th Amendment violation when not used for the purpose of impeaching petitioner at trial). Therefore, the mere fact that the prosecution or judge improperly commented on your silence will not necessarily afford you relief.

---

49. See Darden v. Wainwright, 477 U.S. 168, 181, 106 S. Ct. 2464, 2471, 91 L. Ed. 2d 144, 157 (1986) (announcing that where prosecutor called defendant an animal and made offensive emotional remarks, the comments were improper, but not granting relief because the comments did not "so infect the trial with unfairness as to make the resulting conviction a denial of due process"); United States v. Elias, 285 F.3d 183, 190 (2d Cir. 2002) (noting that remarks of a prosecutor during summation do not amount to a due process violation unless they constitute egregious misconduct); Moore v. Morton, 255 F.3d 95, 119–20 (3d Cir. 2001) (ruling that habeas relief was appropriate when prosecutor made improper race-based comments and trial judge's curative instructions to the jury were not adequate to ensure a fair trial, and listing in footnotes 15 and 16 cases where habeas relief was granted or denied for improper racial comments).

50. See Satterwhite v. Texas, 486 U.S. 249, 260, 108 S. Ct. 1792, 1799, 100 L. Ed. 2d 284, 296 (1988) (ruling that where defendant was not afforded right to consult with counsel before submitting to psychiatric examination, admission of testimony based on examination was a constitutional violation and not harmless error); Estelle v. Smith, 451 U.S. 454, 467–69, 101 S. Ct. 1866, 1875–76, 68 L. Ed. 2d 359, 372 (1981) (finding that defendant's statements in a court-ordered psychiatric examination could not be admitted at a capital trial when the defendant had not been warned of his 5th Amendment privilege against compelled self-incrimination); Buchanan v. Kentucky, 483 U.S. 402, 421–24, 107 S. Ct. 2906, 2916–18, 97 L. Ed. 2d 336, 354–56 (1987) (ruling that the prosecution may use psychologist's report solely to rebut petitioner's psychological evidence).

51. A defendant's failure to request evidence that could have helped his case does not leave the government free of all obligations. See United States v. Agurs, 427 U.S. 97, 103–08, 96 S. Ct. 2392, 2397–99, 49 L. Ed. 2d 342, 349–52 (1976) (finding that there are three situations in which a Brady claim might arise: (1) where new evidence revealed that the prosecution introduced trial testimony that it knew or should have known was false; (2) where the prosecution failed to obey a defense request for specific exculpatory evidence (evidence that helps to prove defendant's innocence); and (3) where the prosecution failed to volunteer exculpatory evidence that was never requested, or requested only in a general way; and noting the existence of a duty on the part of the government in this last situation when suppression of the evidence would be "of sufficient significance to result in the denial of the defendant's right to a fair trial"); see also United States v. Bagley, 473 U.S. 667, 678, 105 S. Ct. 3375, 3381–82, 87 L. Ed. 2d 481, 491–92 (1985) (finding that regardless of whether the request for the evidence was specific or general, favorable evidence is material, and the government violates the Constitution by suppressing such evidence "if there is a reasonable probability that, had the evidence been disclosed to the defense, the result of the proceeding would have been different"); Kyles v. Whitley, 514 U.S. 419, 435, 115 S. Ct. 1555, 1567, 131 L. Ed. 2d 490, 507 (1995) (finding that once a court applying Bagley has found constitutional error, there is no need for further harmless-error review).

52. See Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 87, 83 S. Ct. 1194, 1196–97, 10 L. Ed. 2d 215, 218 (1963) (holding that the prosecution must turn over evidence to the defense if evidence is exculpatory, impeaching, or material). The Brady standard says that the prosecution must disclose evidence that is exculpatory (helps to prove the defendant's innocence) or impeaching (shows one of the prosecution's witnesses might not be believable). Exculpatory or impeaching evidence must also be material, which means that there must be a "reasonable probability that, had the evidence been disclosed to the defense, the result of the proceeding would have been different." United States v. Bagley, 473 U.S. 667, 682, 105 S. Ct. 3375, 3383, 87 L. Ed. 2d 481, 494 (1985); see also Kyles v. Whitley, 514 U.S. 419, 421–22, 115 S. Ct. 1555, 1560, 131 L. Ed. 2d 490, 498 (1995) ("[B]ecause the net effect of the evidence withheld by the State in this case raises a reasonable probability that its disclosure would have produced a different result, [defendant] is entitled to a new trial."); Pennsylvania v. Ritchie, 480 U.S. 39, 59–60, 107 S. Ct. 989, 1002–03, 94 L. Ed. 2d 40, 58–59 (1987) (finding that a

(b) The state failed to preserve important evidence in your investigation.[53]
(c) You were denied needed expert assistance at trial in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment.[54]
(d) The prosecution admitted hearsay, or out-of-court statements against you in violation of the Confrontation Clause of the Sixth Amendment,[55] and the admitted hearsay did not qualify as one of the many exceptions to the hearsay rule.[56] defendant has the right to ask the court to review confidential files to see if evidence is material, but the defendant does not have the right to examine the confidential files himself); United States v. Bagley, 473 U.S. 667, 676, 105 S. Ct. 3375, 3380, 87 L. Ed. 2d 481, 490 (1985) (holding that evidence impeaching a witness' credibility falls within the Brady rule); United States v. Agurs, 427 U.S. 97, 112–14, 96 S. Ct. 2392, 2401–02 49 L. Ed. 2d 342, 354–56 (1976) (holding that evidence of a murder victim's prior criminal record was not "material" and did not have to be turned over to the defense because it did not change the probability that the result of the trial would have been different); Boyette v. Lefevre, 246 F.3d 76, 93 (2d Cir. 2001) (holding that a state's non-disclosure of information relating to the witness' ability to identify the defendant was a Brady violation because the non-disclosure seriously undermined "confidence in the outcome of the trial"); Carriger v. Stewart, 132 F.3d 463, 478–79 (9th Cir. 1997) (en banc) (finding a violation of due process when the prosecutor failed to disclose that the man whom the defendant claimed had committed the murder and who was also the prosecutor's main witness had a long history of prior crimes, of lying to police, and of shifting blame to others, and there was evidence that he had boasted about committing the murder).

---

53. See Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 87, 83 S. Ct. 1194, 1196–97, 10 L. Ed. 2d 215, 218 (1963) (holding that "the suppression by the prosecution of evidence favorable to an accused upon request violates due process where the evidence is material either to guilt or punishment, irrespective of the good faith or bad faith of the prosecution"); Killian v. Poole, 282 F.3d 1204, 1209–10 (9th Cir. 2002) (holding that the prosecution's failure to turn over letters in which the prosecution's witness admitted to perjury in order to gain sentencing concessions amounted to a constitutional violation and, with other violations at trial, amounted to reversible error). But see Arizona v. Youngblood, 488 U.S. 51, 57–58, 109 S. Ct. 333, 337, 102 L. Ed. 2d 281, 289 (1988) (holding that to show a denial of due process, defendant must show that the prosecution acted in bad faith in failing to preserve evidence if the evidence is only potentially exculpatory); California v. Trombetta, 467 U.S. 479, 490–91, 104 S. Ct. 2528, 2534–35, 81 L. Ed. 2d 413, 423 (1984) (finding that the state's failure to retain breath samples for defendants was not a violation of procedural due process when defendants had alternative means of demonstrating their innocence); United States v. Garza, 435 F.3d 73, 75–76 (1st Cir. 2006) (ruling that the destruction of evidence is a violation of due process if the exculpatory value of the evidence was apparent before its destruction and if the evidence is of such a nature that the defendant cannot obtain comparable evidence, but finding in this situation that the violation was harmless). The case law establishing that destruction of evidence can be a constitutional violation is based on the case law that withholding evidence is a constitutional violation.

54. See Ake v. Oklahoma, 470 U.S. 68, 82–83, 105 S. Ct. 1087, 1096, 84 L. Ed. 2d 53, 66 (1985) (noting that when an indigent defendant shows that his sanity will be a significant factor in his defense, due process entitles the defendant to the services of a court-appointed expert to "conduct an appropriate examination and assist in evaluation, preparation, and presentation of the defense"); Schultz v. Page, 313 F.3d 1010, 1017–18 (7th Cir. 2002) (finding that the competency evaluation ordered by the court and conducted at the time of trial was insufficient to establish defendant's sanity at the time of the crime and that denial of defendant's request for an evaluation of his sanity at the time of the crime violated due process where defendant had shown sanity was a significant factor at trial); Starr v. Lockhart, 23 F.3d 1280, 1287 (8th Cir. 1994) (holding that the denial of petitioner's request for appointment of a mental health expert to develop evidence of diminished capacity and mitigating circumstances violated his due process rights).

55. The "Confrontation Clause" of the 6th Amendment, which protects your right to confront witnesses who testify against you, generally prohibits the prosecution from using hearsay as evidence against you at trial. Hearsay is testimony, or comments, presented at trial by someone other than the person who originally spoke. The rules on hearsay are found in the Federal Rules of Evidence, at Fed. R. Evid. 801–07, in Title 28 of the United States Code. For more information on the hearsay rules and their exceptions, see an evidence textbook or evidence treatise. See, e.g., Charles T. McCormick, McCormick on Evidence (John W. Strong et al. eds., 6th ed. 2006); Christopher B. Mueller & Laird C. Kirkpatrick, Evidence (3d ed. 2003). See also Murillo v. Frank, 402 F.3d 786, 791 (4th Cir. 2005) (admitting that hearsay statements made by another suspect during interrogation violated the 6th Amendment); Brown v. Keane, 355 F.3d 82, 87–88 (2d Cir. 2004) (finding that the admission of an anonymous 911 call was unconstitutional, despite prosecution's argument that the call fell within the "present sense impression" exception to the 6th Amendment's hearsay prohibition).

56. The Federal Rules of Evidence list exceptions to the hearsay rule. Fed. R. Evid. 803, 804, 807. When out-of-court statements fall within a category listed in the Federal Rules of Evidence, it is admissible as evidence despite the Confrontation Clause of the 6th Amendment. Some of the exceptions include "excited utterances" and statements for medical diagnosis. Fed. R. Evid. 803. Some out-of-court statements are not defined as hearsay and are not protected by the hearsay rule. For example, courts do not consider as hearsay any statements that are made by a co-conspirator in furtherance of a conspiracy; since such statements are not considered hearsay, they may generally be admitted as evidence. Fed. R. Evid. 801. The Supreme Court may make exceptions to the hearsay rule in addition to those listed in the Federal Rules. Fed. R. Evid. 802. See also United States v. Inadi, 475 U.S. 387, 399–400, 106 S. Ct. 1121, 1128–29, 89 L. Ed. 2d 390, 401–02 (1986) (finding that the prosecution does not need to show that a person is unavailable to appear in court for his or her out-of-court statements to be used in a trial if the person was a co-conspirator).

(9) Witness Violations:

(a) You were denied the right to cross-examine a witness who testified against you.[57]

(b) A witness lied on the stand about having been granted leniency from the police in exchange for testifying against you.[58]

(10) The Jury:

(a) You were denied your Sixth Amendment right to a trial by a fair and impartial jury because you were denied a trial by jury.[59]

(b) You were tried by a jury of fewer than six members,[60] or you were convicted by a non-unanimous jury vote.[61]

---

57. See Crawford v. Washington, 541 U.S. 36, 68–69, 124 S. Ct. 1354, 1373, 158 L. Ed. 2d 177, 203 (2004) (ruling that a defendant must have the opportunity to confront a person giving testimonial evidence against the defendant either before or during trial, unless that person is unavailable; noting that the reliability of the person testifying is irrelevant); see also Giles v. California, 554 U.S. 353, 377, 128 S. Ct. 2678, 2693, 171 L. Ed. 2d 288 (2008) (holding that the unconfronted testimony of a murder victim cannot be admitted under a theory that defendant forfeited his 6th Amendment right to confront the victim/witness because he murdered her and thereby made her unavailable to testify); Lilly v. Virginia, 527 U.S. 116, 139, 119 S. Ct. 1887, 1901, 144 L. Ed. 2d 117, 136 (1999) (finding that a defendant has a 6th Amendment right to confront an accomplice whose confession is offered as evidence against that defendant); Davis v. Alaska, 415 U.S. 308, 320, 94 S. Ct. 1105, 1112, 39 L. Ed. 2d 347, 356 (1974) (ruling that a defendant was denied his 6th Amendment right to confront and to cross-examine a witness when the state prevented the defendant from questioning a juvenile witness about the juvenile's probationary status); Howard v. Walker, 406 F.3d 114, 132–33 (2d Cir. 2005) (finding that limiting a defendant's cross-examination of the state's expert witness and impeding the defendant's presentation of a counter expert witness violated the Confrontation Clause); Hill v. Hofbauer, 337 F.3d 706, 717 (6th Cir. 2003) (ruling that it is a violation of the Confrontation Clause to admit a non-testifying co-defendant's confession that implicates the defendant); Lewis v. Wilkinson, 307 F.3d 413, 420–21 (6th Cir. 2002) (finding a violation of the Confrontation Clause in a rape case when defendant was barred from cross-examining complainant about diary passages that supported a consent defense); United States ex rel. Negron v. New York, 434 F.2d 386, 389–90 (2d Cir. 1970) (holding that an inadequate translation during trial violated non-English-speaking petitioner's right to confront witnesses). But see United States v. Hendricks, 395 F.3d 173, 179 (3d Cir. 2005) (finding that defendant does not always have the right to cross-examine hearsay evidence that is not "testimonial").

58. Giglio v. United States, 405 U.S. 150, 154–55, 92 S. Ct. 763, 766, 31 L. Ed. 2d 104 (1972) (holding that the government has a due process duty to disclose impeachment evidence, including promises that the prosecution makes to key witnesses in exchange for their testimony); see Brown v. Wainwright, 785 F.2d 1457, 1464–65 (11th Cir. 1986) (finding prosecutors had deliberately withheld fact that the main witness against defendant lied on the stand by saying he had not received leniency from prosecution in exchange for his testimony against defendant); see also DuBose v. Lefevre, 619 F.2d 973, 979 (2d Cir. 1980) (finding that the prosecution cannot make agreements in general terms to a witness and therefore escape the fact that it gave the witness reason to believe that his testimony would lead to favorable treatment by the State). But see Shabazz v. Artuz, 336 F.3d 154, 162–66 (2d Cir. 2003) (finding that evidence that prosecution witnesses ultimately received favorable sentencing treatment in their own cases did not alone show that prosecutor failed to disclose promises of leniency because there was no evidence that anything was promised before the witnesses' testimony).

59. See Duncan v. Louisiana, 391 U.S. 145, 162, 88 S. Ct. 1444, 1453, 20 L. Ed. 2d 491 (1968) (holding defendants charged with non-petty criminal offenses have a right to trial by jury); see also Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 477, 120 S. Ct. 2348, 2356, 147 L. Ed. 2d 435, 447 (2000) (holding that the Due Process Clause and the 6th Amendment "entitle a criminal defendant to a jury determination that he is guilty of every element of the crime with which he is charged, beyond a reasonable doubt"). But see Neder v. United States, 527 U.S. 1, 15, 119 S. Ct. 1827, 1837, 144 L. Ed. 2d 35, 51 (1999) (finding the failure to submit an element of a crime to a jury is an error that is subject to harmless error analysis).

60. Ballew v. Georgia, 435 U.S. 223, 228, 98 S. Ct. 1029, 1033, 55 L. Ed. 2d 234 (1978) (holding that juries must consist of at least six people or else there is a 6th Amendment violation); see Williams v. Florida, 399 U.S. 78, 86, 90 S. Ct. 1893, 1898, 26 L. Ed. 2d 446 (1970) (holding that refusal to impanel more than six members for the jury does not violate the defendant's 6th Amendment rights). But see People v. Dean, 80 A.D.2d 695, 696, 436 N.Y.S.2d 455 (2d Dept. 1981) (granting that a defendant is denied due process of law when he is tried before a jury of six rather than 12 people if the state constitution says that "crimes prosecuted by indictment shall be tried by a jury composed of twelve persons").

61. See United States v. Gipson, 553 F.2d 453, 456 (5th Cir. 1977) (holding that a federal criminal defendant has a constitutional right to a unanimous jury verdict); see also Richardson v. United States, 526 U.S. 813, 815, 119 S. Ct. 1707, 1709, 143 L. Ed. 2d 985 (1999) (finding that the jury in a federal criminal case cannot convict unless it unanimously finds that the government has proven each element of the crime). Fed. R. Crim. P. 31(a) requires a unanimous verdict in all federal jury cases. But see McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 450, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 1237, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369, 385 (1990) (finding that the constitutional requirement for a unanimous verdict requires only a "substantial agreement as to the principal factual elements underlying a specified offense"). See also Apodaca v. Oregon, 406 U.S. 404, 92 S. Ct. 1628, 32 L. Ed. 2d 184 (1972); Johnson v. Louisiana, 406 U.S. 356, 92 S. Ct. 1620, 32 L. Ed. 2d

(c) The community where members of the jury work or live was exposed to inflammatory media accounts about your case.[62]
(d) Members of certain racial, religious, gender, or age-based (the elderly) groups were excluded from the jury pool,[63] or the prosecutor intentionally used his or her peremptory challenges (peremptory challenges are when the prosecutor or defendant eliminates potential jurors without a reason) to remove members of a particular racial group or gender from the jury.[64]
(e) Members of a distinct class or group, such as blacks or women, were systematically excluded from the grand jury in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment.[65]

---

152 (1972). Note that both Apodaca and Johnson, which allow convictions in state court with jury majorities of 10–2 and 9–3 respectively, apply only to certain non-capital cases.

62. See Irvin v. Dowd, 366 U.S. 717, 724–25, 81 S. Ct. 1639, 1643–44, 6 L. Ed. 2d 751, 757–58 (1961) (holding that failure to grant change of venue, despite build-up of prejudice and a jury that was not impartial, is unconstitutional); Woods v. Dugger, 923 F.2d 1454, 1460 (11th Cir. 1991) (finding deprivation of a fair trial after extensive pretrial publicity and presence of uniformed prison guards in audience at trial when victim was a prison guard).

63. See Batson v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 79, 89, 106 S. Ct. 1712, 1719, 90 L. Ed. 2d 69, 82–83 (1986) (holding that use of peremptory challenges to exclude African-Americans from a jury when the defendant was African-American violates the 14th Amendment's equal protection guarantee); Taylor v. Louisiana, 419 U.S. 522, 531, 95 S. Ct. 692, 698, 42 L. Ed. 2d 690, 698 (1975) (holding that sex discrimination in selection of jury violates the 6th Amendment); Smith v. Texas, 311 U.S. 128, 130, 61 S. Ct. 164, 165, 85 L. Ed. 84, 86 (1940) (holding that the 14th Amendment prohibits racial discrimination in selection of grand jury); see also Snyder v. Louisiana, 552 U.S. 472, 474, 128 S. Ct. 1203, 1206, 170 L. Ed. 2d 175 (2008) (holding that the Supreme Court of Louisiana's rejection of a Batson claim was erroneous and that the prosecutor at trial improperly excluded blacks from a jury that convicted defendant of capital murder); United States v. Barnes, 520 F. Supp. 2d 510, 514 (2d Cir. 2007) (finding that in order to establish a prima facie case of a violation of the fair cross-section requirement of the 6th Amendment, a defendant must show: (1) that the group alleged to be excluded is a "distinctive" group in the community; (2) that the representation of this group in venires from which juries are selected is not fair and reasonable in relation to the number of such persons in the community; and (3) that this underrepresentation is due to systematic exclusion of the group in the jury selection process); People v. Snow, 44 Cal.3d 216, 225–26 (Cal. 1987) (generally upholding principle against excluding members of a certain race from a jury); State v. Gilmore, 103 N.J. 508, 543 (N.J. 1986) (finding a violation where prosecutor excluded members of a cognizable group—in this case, black jurors—from a jury because of prosecutor's presumption that those jurors had a group bias). Although the Supreme Court has never expressly held that religious discrimination in jury selection is unconstitutional, many lower courts have. See, e.g., United States v. Somerstein, 959 F. Supp. 592, 595 (E.D.N.Y. 1997) (stating that Batson applies to religious discrimination and "only if the religion of the jurors is directly relevant to the crimes at issue" can the strike based on religion of a juror be proper); State v. Hodge, 248 Conn. 207, 240 (Conn. 1999) (stating peremptory challenges based on religious affiliation are unconstitutional).

64. See J.E.B. v. Alabama ex rel. T.B., 511 U.S. 127, 146, 114 S. Ct. 1419, 1430, 128 L. Ed. 2d 89, 107 (1994) (holding that the use of peremptory challenges to exclude members of a particular gender violates the Equal Protection Clause); Amadeo v. Zant, 486 U.S. 214, 228–29, 108 S. Ct. 1771, 1781, 100 L. Ed. 2d 249, 264 (1988) (finding prosecutor's jury selection scheme to limit number of African-Americans and women on the jury constituted serious error); Batson v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 79, 84, 106 S. Ct. 1712, 1716, 90 L. Ed. 2d 69, 79 (1986) (holding that the use of peremptory challenge to exclude members of a racial group violates the Equal Protection Clause); Galarza v. Keane, 252 F.3d 630, 640 (2d Cir. 2001) (vacating denial of habeas petition since the state trial court failed to resolve the factual issue of whether it credited the prosecution's race-neutral explanations for striking potential jurors); Jordan v. Lefevre, 206 F.3d 196, 202 (2d Cir. 2000) (reversing denial of habeas petition because of lack of meaningful inquiry into the question of discrimination); Turner v. Marshall, 121 F.3d 1248, 1250 (9th Cir. 1997) (holding prosecutor's use of peremptory challenges to strike African-Americans from jury venire not justified by stated reasons). But see Smulls v. Roper, 535 F.3d 853, 859 (8th Cir. 2008) (finding that since prosecution's reasons for the strike were "credible," which was the standard—as opposed to giving "persuasive" reasons or "plausible" reasons—he was not motivated by race discrimination).

65. See Campbell v. Louisiana, 523 U.S. 392, 398, 118 S. Ct. 1419, 1423, 140 L. Ed. 2d 551 (1998) (holding that a white defendant, convicted by an all-white jury and alleging discriminatory selection of jurors, has standing to challenge whether he was convicted by means that violate due process, even though the claim is based upon exclusion of blacks from the grand jury); Vasquez v. Hillery, 474 U.S. 254, 264, 106 S. Ct. 617, 623, 88 L. Ed. 2d 598 (1986) (holding that habeas relief is appropriate where blacks were systemically excluded from the grand jury that indicted petitioner); Johnson v. Puckett, 929 F.2d 1067, 1068–69 (5th Cir. 1991) (granting black prisoner's habeas corpus petition where his grand jury foreman was white because petitioner had shown a prima facie claim of racial discrimination by showing that for 20 years every grand jury foreman in the county had been white, despite a 43% black population in the county). But see Hobby v. United States, 468 U.S. 339, 345–46, 104 S. Ct. 3093, 3096–97, 82 L. Ed. 2d 260, 266–67 (1984) (holding that discrimination in grand jury foreman selection, as distinguished from discrimination in the selection of the grand jury itself, does not threaten defendant's due process rights); United States v. Taylor, 154 F.3d 675, 681 (7th Cir. 1988) (holding that Vasquez is a limited ruling).

(f) The jury instructions[66] were unconstitutional because they did not tell the jury the prosecution must prove all crucial elements of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt,[67] or the instructions did not tell the jury the prosecution must overcome a presumption of innocence to convict you.[68]

(g) Evidence was insufficient to sustain the jury's verdict of guilty beyond a reasonable doubt.[69]

(11) The Judge: The judge was biased against you because he was corrupt and you did not bribe him.[70]

(12) Your Lawyer:

(a) Your lawyer did not represent you effectively at trial.[71]

(b) Your lawyer did not file an appeal although you would have wanted to file one.[72]

---

66. Jury instructions are read by the judge to the jury to inform the jury of the elements of the crime and to explain the legal standards by which the jury must weigh the evidence against you. An example of a jury instruction is to find guilt "beyond a reasonable doubt."

67. See Sandstrom v. Montana, 442 U.S. 510, 524, 99 S. Ct. 2450, 2459, 61 L. Ed. 2d 39, 51 (1979) (holding that the prosecution must prove every element of a crime beyond a reasonable doubt; therefore, trial court may not shift the burden of proof to defendant by instructing jury to presume intent in jury instructions); Patterson v. New York, 432 U.S. 197, 215, 97 S. Ct. 2319, 2329, 53 L. Ed. 2d 281, 295 (1977) (holding that the state must prove every element of an offense beyond a reasonable doubt); see also Boyde v. California, 494 U.S. 370, 380, 110 S. Ct. 1190, 1198, 108 L. Ed. 2d 316, 329 (1990) (holding that in an ambiguous case the proper inquiry is "whether there is a reasonable likelihood that the jury has applied the challenged instruction in a way that prevents the consideration of constitutionally relevant evidence"); Patterson v. Gomez, 223 F.3d 959, 961 (9th Cir. 2000) (holding that jury instructions that assumed the defendant was sane at the time of offense constituted an unconstitutional shifting of the prosecution's burden of proof).

68. See Kentucky v. Whorton, 441 U.S. 786, 789, 99 S. Ct. 2088, 2090, 60 L. Ed. 2d 640, 643 (1979) (holding that a judge's refusal to instruct the jury that a defendant is innocent until proven guilty may violate the Constitution if the "totality of the circumstances" indicates that the trial was constitutionally unfair); Taylor v. Kentucky, 436 U.S. 478, 490, 98 S. Ct. 1930, 1937, 56 L. Ed. 2d 468, 478 (1978) (finding that judge's refusal to give jury instructions that defendant is presumed to be innocent was a violation of due process).

69. See Jackson v. Virginia, 443 U.S. 307, 318–19, 99 S. Ct. 2781, 2789, 61 L. Ed. 2d 560, 573 (1979) (ruling that a reviewing court will determine whether any rational jury, viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the prosecution, could have found the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt). However, the Anti-Terrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act ("AEDPA") applies a stronger standard to this determination, so a federal reviewing court must give strong deference to the state court's findings. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d) (2006). See Part B(4) of this Chapter ("Standard for Getting Relief") for more information on how the AEDPA standard is applied. See also Juan H. v. Allen, 408 F.3d 1262, 1276 (9th Cir. 2005) (finding that evidence was insufficient to establish defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt); United States v. Desena, 260 F.3d 150, 154–56 (2d Cir. 2001) (reversing a conviction where no evidence linked the defendant to the general conspiracy charge).

70. Usually, a judge's qualifications are not considered to be a constitutional issue. However, the Due Process Clause requires "a fair trial in a fair tribunal" before a judge with no actual bias against the defendant. See Bracy v. Gramley, 520 U.S. 899, 904, 117 S. Ct. 1793, 1797, 138 L. Ed. 2d 97, 104 (1997) (finding a due process violation where the judge imposed excessively harsh treatment on petitioner in order to hide or to compensate for the fact that he was taking bribes and giving light sentences in other cases). Note that this is a serious charge. You must have proof that the judge was corrupt and that your sentence was unusually harsh. The Supreme Court has made it clear that there is a presumption of legitimacy to public officers' actions, and clear evidence to the contrary must be presented in order to contradict that presumption. See Nat'l Archives & Records Admin. v. Favish, 541 U.S. 157, 174–75, 124 S. Ct. 1570, 1581–82, 158 L. Ed. 3d 319, 336 (2004) (holding that a privacy interest against the government's release of public information—photographs—is only overcome by clear evidence showing that the government engaged in some wrongdoing).

71. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 687, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2064, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 693 (1984) (confirming that the proper standard for judging attorney performance is "reasonably effective assistance," considering all the circumstances). Ineffective assistance of counsel is among the most promising habeas claims. The standard for determination of ineffective assistance of counsel is discussed in Part B(2) of this Chapter ("Standards and Tests for Claims of Violations"). Your trial counsel may have been ineffective for any number of reasons. See, e.g., Kimmelman v. Morrison, 477 U.S. 365, 106 S. Ct. 2574, 91 L. Ed. 2d 305 (1986) (finding ineffective assistance of counsel where counsel conducted no pretrial discovery and failed to file a timely suppression motion against prosecution's evidence); Cossel v. Miller, 229 F.3d 649 (7th Cir. 2000) (holding that the victim's in-court identification of petitioner lacked sufficient independent reliability to be admissible, that petitioner's counsel was ineffective for failing to object to its admission, and that the state court's rejection of petitioner's ineffective assistance claim was an unreasonable application of clearly established federal law); Brown v. Myers, 137 F.3d 1154, 1156–57 (9th Cir. 1998) (ruling counsel was ineffective in failing to investigate and present available testimony supporting petitioner's alibi); Alston v. Garrison, 720 F.2d 812, 815–16 (4th Cir. 1983) (holding defendant was denied effective assistance of counsel where counsel failed to object to evidence that defendant exercised right to remain silent); but see Wilson v. Vaughn, 533 F.3d 208 (3d Cir. 2008) (holding that defendant was not prejudiced by failure to object to evidence because the court concluded that such evidence would have been admitted even without the racketeering charge).

(c) Your lawyer did not represent you effectively in your direct appeal (also known as a "first appeal as of right").[73]

(13) The Law and Statutes:

(a) You were convicted under a statute that is unconstitutional.[74]
(b) You received a certain type of punishment, and the law now forbids this type of punishment.[75]
(c) You were convicted for an act that is no longer a crime under the new law.[76]
(d) A state statute cancels your provisional early release credits after you have already earned them.[77]

(14) Double Jeopardy:

(a) You were convicted for an act that is no longer a crime under the new law.[78]
(b) A state statute cancels your provisional early release credits after you have already earned them.[79]
(c) Your conviction violates your Fifth Amendment right against "double jeopardy" because you were convicted of a crime for which you had already been tried in the same state.[80]

---

72. This claim is a subset of an ineffective assistance of counsel claim that was decided by the Supreme Court in Roe v. Flores-Ortega, 528 U.S. 470, 120 S. Ct. 1029, 145 L. Ed. 2d 985 (2000). The Supreme Court held that there is a constitutionally imposed duty on an attorney to consult with a defendant about an appeal if there is reason to believe that a rational defendant would want an appeal or that the particular defendant has reasonably demonstrated that he was interested in appealing. Additionally, the defendant must show that had he been consulted about an appeal he would have made a timely appeal. See Nnebe v. United States, 534 F.3d 87, 91–92 (2d Cir. 2008) (finding a violation of the right to effective assistance of counsel where lawyer who is appointed under statute that requires pursuing appeals to the Supreme Court fails to file petition despite requests by defendant); Restrepo v. Kelly, 178 F.3d 634, 640–41 (2d Cir. 1999) (finding that failure of petitioner's counsel to file timely notice of appeal despite repeated requests by petitioner and reassurances by counsel constituted a denial of constitutional right to effective assistance); Alston v. Garrison, 720 F.2d 812, 816 (4th Cir. 1983) (holding that "the content of an appeal is heavily controlled by counsel, and where … the defendant's trial lawyer also prosecuted the appeal, it is obvious that ineffective assistance of counsel is not likely to be raised at trial or to appear among the assignments of constitutional error" on appeal).

73. See Cannon v. Berry, 727 F.2d 1020, 1022 (11th Cir. 1984) (affirming writ of habeas corpus where counsel failed to file a brief on direct appeal of defendant's murder conviction, which thus constituted ineffective assistance of counsel). Defective counsel is a ground for habeas relief only if counsel was constitutionally required. Therefore, the defective representation must have been at the trial or on direct appeal because there is no constitutional right to counsel in post-conviction proceedings. See Coleman v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722, 755–57, 111 S. Ct. 2546, 2567–68, 115 L. Ed. 2d 640, 672–74 (1991) (refusing to grant federal habeas relief for counsel errors in state habeas proceedings because there was no constitutional right to counsel). Still, an indigent criminal defendant is constitutionally entitled to an effective attorney in his "one and only appeal as of right," which usually occurs in a state court of appeals. Evitts v. Lucey, 469 U.S. 387, 396, 105 S. Ct. 830, 836, 83 L. Ed. 2d 821, 830 (1985) ("[A] first appeal as of right therefore is not adjudicated in accord with due process of law if appellant does not have the effective assistance of an attorney."); Douglas v. California, 372 U.S. 353, 357–58, 83 S. Ct. 814, 816–17, 9 L. Ed. 2d 811, 814–15 (1963); Mason v. Hanks, 97 F.3d 887, 902 (7th Cir. 1996) ("[W]hen we are convinced that a petitioner might well have won his appeal on a significant and obvious question of state law that his counsel omitted to pursue, we are compelled to conclude … that the appeal was not fundamentally fair and that the resulting affirmation of his conviction is not reliable."). For more information on ineffective assistance of counsel claims, see JLM, Chapter 12, "Appealing Your Conviction Based on Ineffective Assistance of Counsel," and Part H in JLM, Chapter 9, "Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence."

74. Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356, 373–74, 6 S. Ct. 1064, 1073, 30 L. Ed. 220, 227–28 (1886) (finding imprisonment illegal because the ordinance upon which conviction was based violated the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment as applied); Ex parte Siebold, 100 U.S. 371, 376–77, 25 L. Ed. 717, 719 (1879) (finding that the question of the constitutionality of the laws involved was a proper ground for considering a writ of habeas corpus); Vuitch v. Hardy, 473 F.2d 1370, 1370 (4th Cir. 1973) (finding defendant doctor entitled to habeas corpus because the state abortion statute was unconstitutional).

75. See Part C(3)(a)(i) ("Prohibited Punishments") of this Chapter.

76. See Part C(3)(a)(ii) ("Decriminalized Behavior") of this Chapter for further explanation.

77. See Lynce v. Mathis, 519 U.S. 433, 447, 117 S. Ct. 891, 899, 137 L. Ed. 2d 63, 75–76 (1997) (holding retroactive cancellation, which actually increased the prisoner's punishment through re-arrest, violated the Ex Post Facto Clause).

78. See Part C(3)(a)(ii) ("Decriminalized Behavior") of this Chapter for further explanation.

79. See Lynce v. Mathis, 519 U.S. 433, 447, 117 S. Ct. 891, 899, 137 L. Ed. 2d 63, 75–76 (1997) (holding retroactive cancellation, which actually increased the prisoner's punishment through re-arrest, violated the Ex Post Facto Clause).

80. See Green v. United States, 355 U.S. 184, 190, 78 S. Ct. 221, 225, 2 L. Ed. 2d 199, 205 (1957) (determining that where jury had been instructed on first and second degree murder and convicted defendant of second degree murder with no comment on first degree charge, defendant may not be tried again for first degree murder); Dye v. Frank, 355 F.3d 1102, 1104 (7th Cir. 2004) (barring a criminal drug charge because defendant had previously been sanctioned under

(d) You were convicted in a second trial after your first trial was declared a mistrial in violation of the Fifth Amendment.[81]

(e) You were tried a second time for the same offense after a reviewing court had reversed your earlier conviction on the grounds that the evidence at your first trial was insufficient to support a conviction.[82]

(15) Other Procedural Problems at Trial:

(a) You were denied the right to be present at your trial.[83]

(b) You were prohibited from testifying on your own behalf.[84]

(c) The court in which you were convicted did not have the power to convict you because it did not have jurisdiction.[85] a state civil penalty "so punitive in purpose and effect that it constituted a criminal punishment"); Terry v. Potter, 111 F.3d 454, 459–60 (6th Cir. 1997) (holding that where petitioner's wanton murder conviction was reversed, and where the first jury was discharged without convicting him of intentional murder, petitioner could not be retried for intentional murder). Footnote 81 below describes when jeopardy attaches in a criminal trial.

---

81. Generally, once jeopardy "attaches" to a charge in a trial the state may not try you for that charge in another trial without violating the 5th Amendment. If there is a mistrial declared after jeopardy has attached, you may not be tried again for that charge unless you consented to the mistrial declaration or there was a "manifest necessity" for declaring the mistrial. Arizona v. Washington, 434 U.S. 497, 505, 98 S. Ct. 824, 830, 54 L. Ed. 2d 717, 728 (1978) (explaining that the prosecutor has the burden of showing this "manifest necessity"); see also United States v. Razmilovic, 507 F.3d 130, 141–42 (2d Cir. 2007) (finding that double jeopardy bars a second trial where defendant initially joined in a co-defendant's motion for mistrial but almost immediately changed his position after mistrial was to be finalized); Love v. Morton, 112 F.3d 131, 137 (3d Cir. 1997) (affirming grant of habeas relief from conviction on retrial after first trial court judge declared a mistrial soon after jury was sworn due to the judge's inability to complete the trial and without consent from counsel). Jeopardy "attaches" to your jury trial when the jury is sworn and empanelled. See Crist v. Bretz, 437 U.S. 28, 38, 98 S. Ct. 2156, 2162, 57 L. Ed. 2d 24, 33 (1978) (holding federal double jeopardy rule, which states that jeopardy attaches after jury is sworn and empaneled, overrides a Montana state rule that jeopardy attaches after the first witness is sworn).

82. See Burks v. United States, 437 U.S. 1, 18, 91 S. Ct. 2141, 2151, 57 L. Ed. 2d 1, 14 (1978) (holding that double jeopardy prohibits a second trial after a reviewing court has found the evidence legally insufficient to justify conviction); Hudson v. Louisiana, 450 U.S. 40, 44–45, 101 S. Ct. 970, 973, 67 L. Ed. 2d 30, 34–35 (1981) (holding double jeopardy protection was violated when petitioner was prosecuted after trial judge had already granted petitioner's motion for new trial based on insufficiency of evidence supporting guilty verdict).

83. See McKaskle v. Wiggins, 465 U.S. 168, 178, 104 S. Ct. 944, 951, 79 L. Ed. 2d 122, 133 (1984) (stating that a defendant has a right to be present at all important stages of trial); Drope v. Missouri, 420 U.S. 162, 182–83, 95 S. Ct. 896, 909, 43 L. Ed. 2d 103, 119–20 (1975) (finding that trial court erred in going forward with a trial when defendant was absent due to his attempted suicide); Larson v. Tansy, 911 F.2d 392, 396 (10th Cir. 1990) (holding that defendant's absence from the courtroom at critical junctures in his trial violated his due process rights because he was unable to provide assistance to his counsel or have a psychological impact on the jury). However, you will likely only be granted habeas relief for denial of this right if it resulted in "substantial and injurious effect." Rice v. Wood, 77 F.3d 1138, 1144 (9th Cir. 1996) (holding that a writ should not be granted for petitioner's absence during the jury's announcement of a death sentence if his absence did not have a "substantial and injurious effect" on him because his absence was not a structural error); see also Sturgis v. Goldsmith, 796 F.2d 1103, 1108–09 (9th Cir. 1986) (holding that petitioner's absence from his competency hearing warrants habeas relief if the absence was not harmless error).

84. See Rock v. Arkansas, 483 U.S. 44, 49, 107 S. Ct. 2704, 2708, 97 L. Ed. 2d 37, 44–45 (1987) (holding that defendants have a fundamental constitutional right to testify on their own behalf); People v. Allen, 187 P.3d 1018, 44 Cal. 4th 843, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 183 (Cal. 2008) (holding that a defendant who was found to be a sexually violent predator had a right to testify under the California and federal constitutions even though his lawyer told him not to testify). But see Taylor v. United States, 287 F.3d 658, 661–62 (7th Cir. 2002) (holding defense counsel does not have a duty to tell defendant about his constitutional right to testify).

85. S*ee* Sunal v. Large, 332 U.S. 174, 178–79, 67 S. Ct. 1588, 1591, 91 L. Ed. 1982, 1987 (1947) (finding habeas relief appropriate where (1) conviction was under a federal statute alleged to be unconstitutional, (2) federal court's jurisdiction was challenged, or (3) specific constitutional guarantees were violated); Butler v. King, 781 F.2d 486, 490 (5th Cir. 1986) (finding that defendant was entitled to federal writ of habeas corpus because state district court lacked jurisdiction over him at time of trial); Lowery v. Estelle, 696 F.2d 333, 336–38 (5th Cir. 1983). "Jurisdiction" means that the court has the power to hear your case. If a court holds a trial without jurisdiction, it violates the Due Process Clause of the 5th or 14th Amendments. In Lowery, a Texas trial court dismissed an indictment for firearm use, then convicted the defendant on other charges. The court violated a Texas state law that strips a court of jurisdiction over a case if it dismisses an indictment. The prisoner filed a habeas petition claiming that the trial court lacked jurisdiction to hold his trial. The federal court would not consider this claim for habeas corpus, however, because the petitioner had not exhausted state procedures, which means he had not raised the claim in the state courts before petitioning federal court.

(d) You were convicted without using a certain procedure that the law now says is necessary to ensure the fundamental fairness of a trial.[86]

(e) An error occurred during trial that made the trial fundamentally unfair in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment.[87]

Remember that the above list does not include every possible example. If you think you experienced a violation of your rights not listed above, try to identify what kind of right may have been violated. Look carefully through a criminal procedure handbook in your prison library. Read the amendments to the Constitution carefully. Read many cases, especially cases dealing with a situation like yours. For example, if you were convicted of drug trafficking, read other cases involving drug trafficking. Start by looking at Supreme Court cases because the Supreme Court is the strongest authority on Constitutional rights and how those rights should apply to actual cases. The Supreme Court's decisions are what all the other courts look to when they make their own decisions. If you find a case that deals with something similar to the situation you experienced, then read the cases the court relies on to determine whether something was a violation or not. Shepardize[88] the case to find lower court decisions in your district that may give you more information on how violations are interpreted in your district. You should look out for a rule or standard used to review your violation. Then, you will develop your case around how the standard or rule was violated in your arrest, trial, or sentence. (This process is explained further in Section 2 below.)

Another approach is to start by getting an idea of what a constitutional violation looks like, and then examining what happened at your arrest, trial, and sentence to determine if there was a similar error. If you can, look at a transcript of your trial and pay close attention to where your lawyer raised an objection. You should look at any records relating to your case, including pretrial proceedings. Also, speak to family members, your trial attorney, and investigators to help discover violations. If you are unable to identify a violation, federal habeas will not be able to help you.

If you can identify violations, you should list every possible violation and every instance of each violation.

2. Standards and Tests for Claims of Violations

Once you have identified at least one possible violation that you think occurred, you will need to identify the standard the court uses to determine whether or not that violation happened. A standard is a rule or a test that sets out the requirements a defendant must prove in order to convince the court that a violation occurred. Most courts use a standard that is "well-established," and some may have multiple standards.

After you have identified the applicable standard, you will need to show the court that this standard was met in your case in order to convince the court that a violation of your rights has occurred. You do this by demonstrating to the court that the facts of your case match the requirements set out in the standard. This Section will explain how you find the standard and how to show the court that the standard was satisfied.

After you have proven that the standard was met (that you have suffered a violation), you will still need to show that the violation harmed you. To show harm, you will need to convince the court that the violation may have negatively affected the outcome of your trial (discussed in Part B(3) of this Chapter). Also, if you are a state prisoner, you will need to show that the state court was incorrect in failing to find that the violation occurred. If the state court ruled there was a violation but it did not harm you, you will need to show that its finding of "no harm" was unreasonable or contrary to federal law (discussed in Part B(4) of this Chapter).

(a) Finding the Standard the Court Uses for Your Violation

To find out the standard the court will use to judge your claim, you have to look at past cases in which the same claim was raised. If you are complaining about a violation from the list above, you should check the

86. See Part C(3)(b) ("Fundamental Fairness at Trial") of this Chapter.

87. See Riggins v. Nevada, 504 U.S. 127, 137–38, 112 S. Ct. 1810, 1816–17, 118 L. Ed. 2d 479, 490–91 (1992) (finding that the forced administration of an antipsychotic drug to defendant may have impermissibly violated his constitutional right to receive a fair trial by compromising the substance of his testimony, interaction with counsel, and comprehension); Young v. Callahan, 700 F.2d 32, 37 (1st Cir. 1983) (finding that a trial court committed a constitutional error by requiring petitioner to sit in prisoner's block rather than at counsel's table even though there was no finding that restraint was necessary and petitioner objected). But see Moore v. Ponte, 186 F.3d 26, 36 (1st Cir. 1999) (finding no constitutional error when it appeared the court had considered security concerns in deciding to make defendant sit in prisoner's block).

88. By Shepardizing, you can make sure that the law has not changed over time. See Chapter 2 of the JLM for an explanation of how to Shepardize a case.

cases referred to in the relevant footnotes. When you read these cases, you will be able to get an idea of which test the court will use to judge whether a violation has occurred. The court will usually say something like: "To prove a violation, the court should look to the following," "To prove a violation has occurred, the petitioner needs to satisfy the following requirements," or "In order to show the right was violated, petitioner has to meet the following test." This is not the exact language in every case, but it gives you an idea of what to look for to find the standard. Once you find the test courts use for the claim you are pursuing, the next step is to figure out if there is any way to present your claim to meet the test.

Here is an example of a violation and the standard for that particular violation: At your trial, you have a constitutional right to an attorney. If your trial lawyer was bad, you might have a claim that she did not represent you effectively at trial (called "ineffective assistance of counsel") in violation of the Sixth Amendment. The case that sets out the standard for this type of violation is Strickland v. Washington.[89] In Strickland, the court established a two-part test (now referred to as the Strickland test) to determine whether your right to effective counsel was violated. Under the first part, a court evaluates whether your lawyer's representation fell below an objective standard of reasonableness considering all the circumstances under prevailing (current) professional norms.[90] This means that the court will determine the reasonableness of what you are claiming that your attorney did, or failed to do, while representing you.[91]

Under the second part of the Strickland test, the court will determine whether you were prejudiced as a result of your lawyer's unreasonable representation.[92] Prejudice is an important concept in habeas. It means that there is a "reasonable probability"[93] that the result of your trial would have been different and more favorable to you if not for the violation (in this example, your lawyer's ineffective representation).[94]

To meet the standard required to show ineffective assistance of counsel, you must satisfy both parts of the Strickland test.[95] To summarize, the standard for ineffective assistance of counsel is: (1) that your lawyer acted unreasonably and (2) that these actions prejudiced you.

---

89. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674 (1984) (affirming the denial of defendant's claim that his lawyer's advice at and before his death sentencing hearing constituted ineffective assistance of counsel requiring reversal of conviction or sentencing).

90. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 687–88, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2064–65, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 693–94 (1984).

91. Note that it is possible that even if your lawyer made mistakes or failed to provide you the best representation, the court may still find you have received reasonable representation because the representation was still above the standard the court uses to determine what is reasonable. In other words, you need to show that your attorney's actions were not reasonable in order to be successful in your habeas petition. See, e.g., Bell v. Cone, 535 U.S. 685, 702, 122 S. Ct. 1843, 1854, 152 L. Ed. 2d 914, 931 (2002) (holding that when counsel is faced with a tough choice, even if his or her decision was arguably mistaken, the court would start with "a 'strong presumption' that counsel's conduct falls within the wide range of reasonable professional assistance" (quoting Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 689, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2065, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 694 (1984))). Note that a habeas corpus appeal involving the same parties was heard by the Supreme Court in 2009. The holding of that decision does not affect the holding of this one.

92. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 687–88, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2064–65, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 693–94 (1984).

93. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 694, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2068, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 698 (1984) (holding that the appropriate test for prejudice is that "there is a reasonable probability that, but for counsel's unprofessional errors, the result of the proceeding would have been different," and defining "reasonable probability" as "a probability sufficient to undermine confidence in the outcome").

94. United States v. Lilly, 536 F.3d 190, 197 (3d Cir. 2008) (affirming the denial of a prisoner's habeas petition based upon ineffective assistance of counsel where the prisoner was not prejudiced by heeding his attorney's advice to waive a jury trial because the court found that there was sufficient evidence offered, including evidence of drug sales and the prisoner's own incriminating statements, for a jury to convict the prisoner even if he had a jury trial).

95. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 687–88, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2064–65, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 693–94 (1984). Though many prisoners may claim ineffective assistance of counsel, proving it is difficult. In Lockhart v. Fretwell, 506 U.S. 364, 369–70, 113 S. Ct. 838, 842–43, 122 L. Ed. 2d 180, 188–89 (1993), where trial counsel failed to raise an objection at sentencing, the Supreme Court held that to meet the Strickland "prejudice" test the defendant must show that the outcome would have been different and that the defendant was deprived of a fundamentally fair trial with a "reliable result." However, in Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389 (2000), the Supreme Court limited the effect of Lockhart on the Strickland test. In this case, the Supreme Court held that failure to develop mitigating evidence during a capital sentencing hearing, which included severe childhood neglect and abuse, borderline mental retardation, and a favorable prison record, violated the standard of Strickland v. Washington. Additionally, the court held that by applying the standard in Lockhart to this claim, the Virginia Supreme Court had erred by expanding the scope of when Lockhart applies. The Court stated that Lockhart applies in situations where the ineffectiveness of counsel does not deprive the defendant of a substantive or procedural right the defendant is entitled to by law. Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 391–93, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 1512–13, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389, 416–18 (2000); see also Stallings v. United States, 536 F.3d 624, 628 (7th Cir. 2008) (vacating and remanding to the district court a claim of ineffective assistance of

Other constitutional violations will have different standards that must be met to persuade the court that a violation occurred. There are so many different tests that the JLM cannot explain all of the standards; however, you can begin to learn about the standards that matter to you by reading and Shepardizing[96] the cases cited in the footnotes.

(b) Showing the Court Your Rights Have Been Violated

Once you have identified the standard that must be satisfied for your violation, you will need to show the court that your situation meets the standard. You must clearly explain how your federal rights were violated in the court proceedings being challenged. To get federal habeas relief, the facts must support each violation you claim. For example, if you claim that your right to counsel was violated, you should use the Strickland[97] standard. Under the Strickland standard, you must show (1) that you had a right to counsel at the time,[98] and (2) that adequate counsel was not provided. If you do not properly tell the court about the facts[99] of the violation and how they relate to the relevant standard, your allegations will not entitle you to relief and your claim may be dismissed.[100] Remember to give as many details about the violation as you can, but make sure that the facts that you choose to include are relevant to the violation. If a statement relevant to the violation you have claimed was made during your trial, find those exact words in the trial transcript and include them as supporting evidence in your habeas petition. Note in your petition the line and page in the transcript where the words can be found.

You may need to obtain additional information through public records and other means in order to support the facts of your case. This process is called discovery and is generally described in Chapter 8 of the JLM, "Obtaining Information to Prepare Your Case: The Process of Discovery." While a non-capital habeas petitioner is usually not entitled to discovery, you may obtain discovery under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure[101] by showing "good reason" that it is needed. You can show good reason when the facts you are alleging, if correct, would entitle you to habeas relief. [102] counsel to determine whether there was "prejudice" as defined by Strickland—that is, whether the outcome at the district court level would have been different had counsel raised those claims).

---

96. By Shepardizing, you can make sure that the law has not changed. See Chapter 2 of the JLM for an explanation of how to Shepardize a case.

97. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674 (1984). For a discussion of habeas petitions based on a violation of your right to counsel, see Part B(2)(a) of this Chapter.

98. If, for example, a statement you gave to an agent of the prosecution (police, marshals, jailers, bailiffs, etc.) was used against you at trial and you are claiming that the statement was illegal because you did not have counsel present, you must first show that you had a right to counsel at the time the information was given to that agent. See United States v. Henry, 447 U.S. 264, 274–75, 100 S. Ct. 2183, 2189, 65 L. Ed. 2d 115, 124–25 (1980) (holding that the prosecution's use of a statement made by defendant to an undercover informant after the defendant was indicted violated his 6th Amendment right to counsel); Massiah v. United States, 377 U.S. 201, 205–06, 84 S. Ct. 1199, 1202–03, 12 L. Ed. 2d 246, 250 (1964) (ruling that a prisoner's statements to a government informant, where situation was intentionally created to induce incriminating statements after the prisoner's indictment and without counsel, should not be admitted at trial because it violated his right to counsel). But see Illinois v. Perkins, 496 U.S. 292, 299, 110 S. Ct. 2394, 2399, 110 L. Ed. 2d 243, 253 (1990) (ruling that a defendant's 6th Amendment rights are not violated by admission of confession he made to undercover agent while in jail because no charges had been filed on the subject of the confession and there was no right to counsel).

99. Courts refer to these facts as "elements" of the violation.

100. See McFarland v. Scott, 512 U.S. 849, 860, 114 S. Ct. 2568, 2574, 129 L. Ed. 2d 666, 676 (1994) (O'Connor, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part) ("[T]he habeas petition, unlike a complaint, must allege the factual underpinning of the petitioner's claim."). Note that a dissenting opinion is an opinion disagreeing with the majority opinion. To the extent it disagrees with the opinion of the court, it does not have the force of law. It can be influential, however, and provide you some ideas on how to distinguish your case from the law and facts in the majority opinion. A concurring opinion agrees with the basic holding of the majority opinion, but may decide the case on different grounds, or provide alternative explanations for the basis of the holding. Again, concurring opinions can sometimes be very influential and provide different arguments that might help your case, but they do not have as much weight or persuasive force as majority opinions.

101. Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rule 6, 28 U.S.C. § 2254 and Rules Governing § 2255 Cases Rule 6, 28 U.S.C. § 2255 discuss discovery.

102. See Bracy v. Gramley, 520 U.S. 899, 908–09, 117 S. Ct. 1793, 1799, 138 L. Ed. 2d 97, 106 (1997) (finding that it is the duty of the courts to provide the necessary facilities and procedures for an adequate inquiry if petitioner's allegations when fully developed may demonstrate that the petitioner is entitled to relief); United States v. Armstrong, 517 U.S. 456, 468–70, 116 S. Ct. 1480, 1488–89, 134 L. Ed. 2d 687, 701–02 (1996) (explaining what a defendant alleging racially discriminatory prosecutorial practices must do to establish entitlement to discovery); United States v. Bass, 536 U.S. 862, 863–64, 122 S. Ct. 2389, 2391–92, 153 L. Ed. 2d 769, 771–72 (2002) (reaffirming the Armstrong requirements

3. The Harmless Error Rule

Once you have established that a violation occurred, the next requirement is to show that you were harmed by the violation.[103] This is necessary because of the "harmless error rule," which says that even if your rights were violated, a court cannot grant you habeas unless you show that you were actually harmed by that violation (that is, the violation substantially affected the outcome of trial).

The standard for determining what counts as a "harmless error" in federal habeas petitions was established in Brecht v. Abrahamson.[104] In Brecht, the Supreme Court held that errors are not harmless unless they have a "substantial and injurious effect or influence in determining the jury's verdict."[105] The circuit courts are divided on how Brecht applies after the AEDPA amendment to 20 U.S.C. § 2245(d)(1).[106] The alternative standard for "harmless error" analysis was developed in Chapman v. California.[107] In Chapman, the Supreme Court held that a violation of a constitutional right is not harmless unless the court believes the error is harmless "beyond a reasonable doubt."[108] Some courts have interpreted AEDPA to require courts to first evaluate the violation under the Chapman reasonable doubt standard and then also evaluate the violation under the Brecht standard,[109] some circuits hold Brecht to be the relevant standard,[110] and others circuits hold that AEDPA supersedes the Brecht standard.[111] You will therefore have to show "what effect the error had or reasonably may … have had upon the jury's decision."[112] To put it another way, the success of your argument will depend on your being able to demonstrate that the error played a serious role in (or had a "substantial and injurious effect" on) the jury's decision-making process. Judges will likely consider the context when making a harmless error determination. Among the factors that might be considered are:

(1) The nature of the right at issue;
(2) How severely violations of that right are likely to affect the jury's deliberations;
(3) The character of the proceedings;
(4) What is at stake;
(5) The seriousness of the violation; and
(6) The frequency of the violation during trial.[113] to show entitlement to discovery and adding that raw statistics about overall arrest and charge patterns say nothing about charges brought against similarly situated defendants).

---

103. There are some constitutional violations that automatically survive the harmless error threshold. For these violations, you only need to show that the constitutional violation occurred, and the court will accept that you were harmed by the violation. You must do further research on the violation you are alleging in order to find out if you must show harmless error or only that the violation occurred. However, for any other constitutional violation, you need to show both that the constitutional violation occurred and also that it harmed you.

104. Brecht v. Abrahamson, 507 U.S. 619, 623, 113 S. Ct. 1710, 1714, 123 L. Ed. 2d 353, 363 (1993). This test is sometimes referred to as the Kotteakos test. Before Brecht, the Kotteakos test had been the test used in federal habeas proceedings of federal prisoners to determine whether a non-constitutional error was harmless. In Brecht, the court applied the Kotteakos test to all violations including constitutional violations. See Kotteakos v. United States, 328 U.S. 750, 66 S. Ct. 1239, 90 L. Ed. 1557 (1946).

105. Brecht v. Abrahamson, 507 U.S. 619, 637, 113 S. Ct. 1710, 1722, 123 L. Ed. 2d 353, 373 (1993).

106. Gutierrez v. McGinnis, 389 F.3d 300, 304 n.3. (2d Cir. 2004).

107. Chapman v. California, 386 U.S. 18, 87 S. Ct. 824, 17 L. Ed. 2d 705 (1967).

108. Chapman v. California, 386 U.S. 18, 24, 87 S. Ct. 824, 828, 17 L. Ed. 2d 705, 711 (1967). In Brecht, the Supreme Court limited the application of the Chapman standard to cases on direct review and established the Brecht standard for habeas review.

109. See Allen v. Lee, 366 F.3d 319, 336–37, 342–44 (4th Cir. 2004); Aleman v. Sternes, 320 F.3d 687, 690–91 (7th Cir. 2003).

110. See Nevers v. Killinger, 169 F.3d 352, 371 (6th Cir. 1999); Robertson v. Cain, 324 F.3d 297, 306–07 (5th Cir. 2003); Herrera v. Lemaster, 301 F.3d 1192, 1200 (10th Cir. 2002); Sanna v. DiPaolo, 265 F.3d 1, 14 (1st Cir. 2001).

111. See Whitmore v. Kemna, 213 F.3d 431, 433 (8th Cir. 2000); Gutierrez v. McGinnis, 389 F.3d 300, 306 (2d Cir. 2004) (holding that when a state court has explicitly conducted a review of a constitutional violation for harmless error, 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1) requires the habeas court to apply the Chapman standard).

112. Brecht v. Abrahamson, 507 U.S. 619, 643, 113 S. Ct. 1710, 1724, 123 L. Ed. 2d 353, 376 (1993) (Stevens, J., concurring) (internal citation omitted).

113. Kotteakos v. United States, 328 U.S. 750, 66 S. Ct. 1239, 90 L. Ed. 1557 (1946). Brecht also included an exception, stating that a deliberate and especially serious error, or one combined with a pattern of prosecutorial misconduct, might warrant habeas relief even if it did not "substantially influence" the jury's verdict. Brecht v. Abrahamson, 507 U.S. 619, 638 n.9, 113 S. Ct. 1710, 1722 n.9, 123 L. Ed. 2d 353, 373 n.9 (1993); see also Duckett v.

Judges in different districts or circuits may come to different conclusions about whether certain errors meet the "substantial and injurious effect" standard. But at least one standard applies to all judges: if the federal judge reviewing your case is in "grave doubt," meaning he or she cannot decide whether or not an error had a "substantial and injurious effect," he or she must find that the error was not harmless.[114] In other words, you get the benefit of the doubt, as long as the judge has a strong doubt about the effect of the error. Therefore if the judge cannot determine the effect of the error, your habeas petition has satisfied the requirement of showing that you were harmed and that the harm might have affected the outcome of the case.

The Brecht "harmless error" standard does not always apply in federal courts when the court is reviewing a state court's determination that an error was harmless. One of the most important changes AEDPA[115] made to habeas corpus law is that it created a more deferential standard of review for federal courts hearing challenges to state court decisions.[116] Specifically, AEDPA provides that when a federal court is determining how the state court applied the law in your state collateral attack, it must only hold the state court's decision to a standard of unreasonableness.[117] This means that if the state court held that the constitutional error in your case was harmless, your habeas petition will have to convince the federal court that the state court's decision that the violation was harmless was unreasonable.[118] This is more difficult than just convincing a court that the error caused harm. To learn more about the standard that AEDPA imposes for federal habeas review of state court decisions, see Part B(4) of this Chapter.

The harmless error rule is a defense that the prosecutor can raise to defeat your petition for habeas relief. This means that once you have shown that a violation occurred, it is the prosecution's responsibility to raise the issue of a harmless error (or, in other words, claim that you were not actually harmed).[119] If the prosecution fails to raise the harmless error issue, it is waived, and the court will assume that the violation caused harm. The prosecution will probably raise this defense; therefore, you should explain in your petition how the error harmed you and carefully show how it most likely affected the jury's decision-making. If you do so successfully, your habeas petition will survive the harmless error test.

To have a better idea of when you should argue that the error was not harmless, it might help to see a list of examples that courts have found to be harmless errors:

(1) Where the defendant's right to cross-examine the victim was limited, but not completely denied, the error was harmless.[120]

Mullin, 306 F.3d 982, 993 n.3 (10th Cir. 2002) (finding that misconduct of the prosecutor does not put error into Brecht's "footnote nine exemption"); Hardnett v. Marshall, 25 F.3d 875, 879–80 (9th Cir. 1994) (holding that the key consideration to whether the Brecht "footnote nine exemption" will be applicable is whether the integrity of the proceeding was so infected that the entire trial was unfair). As of 2004, however, no court has found for a defendant based on these details.

114. O'Neal v. McAninch, 513 U.S. 432, 435, 115 S. Ct. 992, 994, 130 L. Ed. 2d 947, 951 (1995). However, the federal judge does not need to be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that the error was harmless. See Fry v. Piller, 551 U.S. 112, 121–22, 127 S. Ct. 2321, 2328, 168 L. Ed. 2d 16, 24 (2007).

115. See footnote 8.

116. The state court's decision must have "resulted in a decision that was contrary to, or involved an unreasonable application of, clearly established Federal Law." 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1) (2006); see Gutierrez v. McGinnis, 389 F.3d 300, 304 (2d Cir. 2004) ("[F]ederal courts sitting in habeas review of state conditions must grant a measure of deference to claims 'adjudicated on the merits' by state courts").

117. An unreasonableness standard means that the court will only look at whether the lower court's decision was unreasonable. This means that if the lower court did not find a constitutional error, but the reviewing court does find a constitutional error, the reviewing court cannot reverse the lower court's decision unless the lower court was unreasonable in not finding a violation.

118. See Mitchell v. Esparza, 540 U.S. 12, 18, 124 S. Ct. 7, 12, 157 L. Ed. 2d 263, 271 (2003) ("[The federal court] may not grant [a] habeas petition … if the state court simply erred in concluding that the State's errors were harmless; rather, habeas relief is appropriate only if the [state court] applied harmless error review in an 'objectively unreasonable' manner." (quoting Lockyer v. Andrade, 538 U.S. 63, 75, 123 S. Ct. 1166, 1174, 155 L. Ed. 2d 144, 158 (2003))).

119. See United States v. Dominquez Benitez, 542 U.S. 74, 82 n.7, 124 S. Ct. 2333, 2339 n.7, 159 L. Ed. 2d 157, 167 n.7 (2004) (holding that using the Brecht standard means that the government has "the burden of showing that constitutional trial error is harmless"); Sanders v. Cotton, 398 F.3d 572, 582 (7th Cir. 2005) (holding that the harmless error rule was waived because the state did not raise it in district court); Holland v. McGinnis, 963 F.2d 1044, 1057–58 (7th Cir. 1992) (holding that the state waived the harmless error defense by waiting until oral argument before the Court of Appeals to present the defense).

120. Pettiway v. Vose, 100 F.3d 198, 202 (1st Cir. 1996) (finding that a trial judge's limitation of the defendant's right to cross-examine the victim in a child molestation sexual assault case did not have a "substantial and injurious" effect because other evidence in the case was so overpowering).

(2) The trial court's failure to issue a jury instruction on the lesser included offense of kidnapping in a felony murder case did not have a "substantial and injurious" effect on the jury's verdict.[121]
(3) Where the federal trial court failed to inform the defendant of his right to appeal his conviction, but the defendant was already aware of this right, the error was harmless.[122]
(4) It was harmless error when the trial court admitted evidence that was obtained in violation of the defendant's Fifth Amendment rights because the evidence was unrelated to the charges he was appealing.[123]

The following are some situations where courts have found errors to be not harmless (harmful):

(1) The defense attorney represented two defendants charged with possession of drugs. Both defendants wanted to assert that someone else owned the drugs. The two defendants had conflicting interests because they each may have implicated the other defendant as part of their defense strategy. The error was not harmless because the attorney represented the habeas petitioner with a conflict of interest.[124]
(2) It was not harmless error when a juror lied about his background to get on the jury and made numerous comments that called into doubt his impartiality.[125]
(3) The trial court allowed testimony from a co-defendant about his interpretation of the defendant's knowledge of fraudulent behavior. The appellate court reversed, finding the admission of this testimony was not harmless error because the testimony related to the case's "central disputed issue" and because of the government's relatively weak case. Since the government's case was weak, mostly circumstantial, and the government's opening and closing statements relied heavily on the co-defendant, the testimony of the co-defendant was found to be "vitally important."[126]

In a few situations, the court will make an exception to the harmless error rule and will assume that you were harmed because of the nature of the violation. These violations are called "per se prejudicial."[127] Per se prejudicial violations (sometimes called structural errors) are errors that the court will always consider to have violated your right to a fair trial. Therefore, they are not subject to the harmless error rule, and you do not have to prove to the court that you were harmed.[128] Per se prejudicial violations include[129] "the total deprivation of the right to counsel, the denial of the right to an impartial judge,[130] unlawful discrimination in the grand-jury selection process,[131] the denial of the right to self-representation at trial,[132]

---

121. Villafuerte v. Stewart, 111 F.3d 616, 624–25 (9th Cir. 1997) (stating that the lower court's error did not have a "substantial or injurious" effect on the verdict, and adding that the error "was at most harmless and more likely irrelevant").

122. Peguero v. United States, 526 U.S. 23, 24, 119 S. Ct. 961, 963, 143 L. Ed. 2d 18, 22 (1999) (holding that no harm is caused when a district court fails to advise a defendant of his right to appeal if the defendant knew of his right, and ruling that the court's error did not entitle defendant to habeas relief).

123. United States v. Suarez, 263 F.3d 468, 484 (6th Cir. 2001).

124. McFarland v. Yukins, 356 F.3d 688, 705–14 (6th Cir. 2004) (holding that the court's error was prejudicial where the defendant "was forced, over her objection, to go to trial with counsel who was actively representing a co-defendant").

125. Green v. White, 232 F.3d 671, 677–78 (9th Cir. 2000).

126. United States v. Kaplan, 490 F.3d 110, 123–24 (2d Cir. 2007).

127. A court rarely finds a violation per se prejudicial. If you find a case where a court described the violation you are claiming as a per se prejudicial violation, a structural violation, or an automatic reversal violation, you should cite the case and show the court how your violation is similar and why it deserves the same treatment as the violation described in that case. Here are some examples of when courts have found violations per se prejudicial: Roe v. Flores-Ortega, 528 U.S. 470, 484, 120 S. Ct. 1029, 1038, 145 L. Ed. 2d 985, 999 (2000) (when the petitioner is effectively denied the right to an appeal due to ineffective assistance of counsel); Edwards v. Balisok, 520 U.S. 641, 647, 117 S. Ct. 1584, 1588, 137 L. Ed. 2d 906, 914 (1997) (when the trial judge is not impartial); Bell v. Cone, 535 U.S. 685, 695–96, 122 S. Ct. 1843, 1851, 152 L. Ed. 2d 914, 927 (2002) (when petitioner is denied counsel at a "critical stage" of the proceedings).

128. See Arizona v. Fulminante, 499 U.S. 279, 310, 111 S. Ct. 1246, 1265, 113 L. Ed. 2d 302, 332 (1991) ("[S]tructural defect[s] affect[] the framework within which the trial proceeds, rather than simply … error[s] in the trial process.").

129. This list is not complete. There are other instances where the court will find the error per se prejudicial (a structural error), and your federal appeals court may include more instances than the Supreme Court.

130. Richardson v. Quarterman, 537 F.3d 466, 470–79 (5th Cir. 2008) (denying a habeas petition alleging that a judge had to remove himself from a murder prosecution because the appearance of bias arising from his wife's acquaintance with the victim was only a harmless error and not a structural error requiring automatic reversal).

131. Vasquez v. Hillery, 474 U.S. 254, 262–64, 106 S. Ct. 617, 623, 88 L. Ed. 2d 598, 609 (1986).

… the denial of the right to a public trial, [and] … the giving of defective jury instructions on reasonable doubt."[133] However, you should always show the court how you were harmed by a violation, even if it was a per se prejudicial violation, to help you in your petition. You should only use the argument that a violation was per se prejudicial to strengthen your argument that you were harmed by the violation.[134]

In the vast majority of cases, the court will not assume that you were harmed by the violation (will not find that it was a per se prejudicial violation), and you will be responsible for showing the harm that you suffered. This element of your habeas petition is just as important as showing that a violation occurred because if the court finds that the violation was harmless, the court will not grant habeas relief. Thus, it is very important that you establish in your pleading how the error in your case negatively affected the outcome of your trial and caused you harm.

4. AEDPA Standard of Relief: Showing the Federal Court that the State Court Was Incorrect in Refusing to Grant You Relief[135]

Once you have shown the court that your rights were violated and the violation was harmful, state prisoners will also need to convince the federal court that the state court was incorrect in failing to find that your rights were violated and that you were harmed by the violation. In some cases where the state court ruled on both of these elements, you will have to show the federal court that the state court was incorrect on both counts. (Remember, you must present your claims to a state court first, so you will only be filing a federal habeas petition if the state court has denied you relief.)

In 1996, AEDPA altered 28 U.S.C. § 2254 and set a new "standard of review" for habeas relief for state court prisoners. A standard of review is the test that the federal court will use to decide whether to overrule the state court's decision denying you relief. Under AEDPA, you must prove that the state court decision rejecting your claim was either "contrary to, or involved an unreasonable application of, clearly established Federal law, as determined by the Supreme Court of the United States,"[136] or that it was based on an "unreasonable determination of the facts in light of the evidence presented in the State court proceeding."[137] This is a very high standard and one that is not easily met. The federal courts are hesitant to overturn state court decisions. This means that to get federal habeas relief you cannot just show the federal court that the state court was wrong—you must show that the state court was "unreasonable" or "contrary" to the Supreme Court's interpretation of federal law.

How the federal court will apply the AEDPA standard of review will depend on how the state court handled your state collateral attack.[138] If the state court made a determination about certain issues, then the federal court will apply the AEDPA standard of review to the state court's decision-making process. The federal court will look to see if the state court's decision was "unreasonable" or "contrary" to the Supreme Court's interpretation of the law. In addition to demonstrating that the state court's decision-making process was incorrect, you still need to show that the state court's ultimate determination was incorrect using facts.

For example, if the state court rejected your collateral attack because it found that a constitutional violation did not occur, and it did not discuss the issue of harmless error, then the AEDPA standard of 132. McKaskle v. Wiggins, 465 U.S. 168, 177–178, n.8, 104 S. Ct. 944, 950–51, n.8, 79 L. Ed. 2d 122, 133 n.8 (1984); See also Johnstone v. Kelly, 808. F.2d 214, 218 (2d Cir. 1986) ("[V]iolation of a defendant's right to proceed pro se requires automatic reversal of a criminal conviction.").

---

133. United States v. Allen, 406 F.3d 940, 944 (8th Cir. 2005) (citing Arizona v. Fulminante, 499 U.S. 279, 309, 111 S. Ct. 1246, 1264, 113 L. Ed. 2d 302, 331 (1991)); see also Neder v. United States, 527 U.S. 1, 8, 119 S. Ct. 1827, 1834, 144 L. Ed. 2d 35, 45 (1999) (noting structural errors subject to automatic reversal are (1) a complete denial of counsel, (2) biased trial judge, (3) racial discrimination in selection of grand jury, (4) denial of self-representation at trial, (5) denial of public trial, and (6) defective reasonable-doubt instruction).

134. For example, after you show the court that the error was harmful, you might say "even if this error were harmless, I would still be entitled to relief because the error was a per se prejudicial violation that affected my substantial rights." See, e.g., Neder v. United States, 527 U.S. 1, 7, 119 S. Ct. 1827, 1833, 144 L. Ed. 2d 35, 46 (1999) (stating that there is a "limited class of fundamental constitutional errors that … are so intrinsically harmful as to require automatic reversal (i.e., 'affect substantial rights') without regard to their effect on the outcome").

135. The standard of review discussed in this Section only applies to state prisoners. For federal prisoners, appellate courts review questions of law de novo, and questions of fact for clear error. This means that reviewing courts will apply their own judgments to question of law, but "the factual findings of the courts are presumed to be correct." Smith v. Mann, 173 F.3d 73, 76 (2d Cir. 1999); see, e.g., Dorsey v. Chapman, 262 F.3d 1181, 1185 (11th Cir. 2001) (ineffective assistance of counsel claim).

136. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1) (2006).

137. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(2) (2006).

138. See Part A(1) (of this Chapter) for an explanation of "collateral attack."

review will only apply to establishing the constitutional violation. Showing that the state court was incorrect will be subject to the AEDPA standard of review, so you will have to prove that the state court was "unreasonable" or "contrary" to the Supreme Court's interpretation of federal law. This means that you will have to show the federal court that the state court was incorrect in failing to find that the violation occurred, in addition to showing that the constitutional violation occurred (by showing that the action met the appropriate standard, as discussed in Part B(2)). If the state court did not rule on the next element of the habeas petition, harmless error, then you will not need to apply the AEDPA standard of review to the harmless error issue. In this example, because the state court never ruled on the harmless error issue, the federal court will look at the harmless error issue de novo, which means that the federal court will look at the issue as if for the first time. If the state court found that a violation occurred, but that it was harmless, the federal court will apply AEDPA's unreasonableness standard of review to the harmless error issue. Also, the state court may have found that there was no constitutional violation but may have ruled on the harmless error issue anyway. Because in such a situation the state court ruled on both elements of the habeas petition, the federal court has to apply the AEDPA standard of review to both elements.

Occasionally state prisoners present habeas claims to federal courts that have not been previously presented to state courts. This happens when the claim falls under one of the exceptions to the exhaustion rule. You should see Part D(2) of this Chapter below for a detailed discussion of the state exhaustion rule. In these very rare circumstances, the AEDPA standard of review will not be used at all. If your claim falls under one of the exceptions to the exhaustion rule, you only need to show the federal court that your rights were violated and that the violation affected the outcome of the trial. Once you have shown this, you will have completed the substantive part of your habeas claim. However, there are still many procedural issues you will have to address to be granted habeas relief. These procedural issues are discussed below in Part D ("Procedures for Filing a Petition for Habeas Corpus") of this Chapter.

Assuming the state court has ruled on your claim, it will be subject, at least in part, to the AEDPA standard of review. This Section discusses this standard in more detail. Subsection (a) of this Section will discuss how to use the first test—"contrary to, [or an] unreasonable application of, clearly established Federal law as determined by the Supreme Court." Subsection (b) will discuss the second test—"unreasonable determination of facts in light of the evidence presented."

(a) "Contrary to, or involv[ing] an unreasonable application of, clearly established Federal law, as determined by the Supreme Court"[139]

The Supreme Court explained this test in Williams v. Taylor.[140] In Williams, the petitioner claimed his attorney had provided ineffective assistance of counsel. The Court held that Mr. Williams had shown his counsel's performance was ineffective and went on to consider whether habeas relief should be granted under this standard.[141] The Court first held that in order to be successful, a petitioner must show that the claimed violation was based on federal law that was clearly established by the Supreme Court at the time the state court decided these claims. This means that before the court will consider your claim, you must show that the law you are relying on is not new and that the Supreme Court itself has interpreted the law at some point in the past.[142] Most of the examples of constitutional violations listed above are not new laws and would qualify for relief. There are some very limited exceptions that allow new law to be used. To learn more about these exceptions read Part C(3) ("Exceptions to the New Laws Rule") of this Chapter.

If you can show that you are relying on clearly established federal law, the next step is to show either that the state or trial court's decision was contrary to that federal law, or that the state or trial court applied the law in an unreasonable manner. Remember, the point of the federal habeas petition is to give the federal court a chance to correct a wrong decision by the state or trial court.

---

139. Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 402–03, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 1518, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389, 424 (2000).

140. Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 384–90, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 1508–11, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389, 412–16 (2000).

141. In determining that Mr. Williams' counsel was ineffective, the Court found that Mr. Williams had met the Strickland standard. Mr. Williams showed a violation of clearly established federal law and/or the Constitution, found the right standard, and showed the Court that he had suffered harm from this violation. To learn more about the Strickland standard, see Part B(2) of this Chapter. For a discussion of the "clearly established" standard, see Part B(1) of this Chapter. To learn how to find the correct standard, see Part B(2) of this Chapter, and for an explanation of how to establish that a violation caused harm, see Part B(3) of this Chapter.

142. For an explanation of how to establish that the law you are relying on is not new, see Part C(2) ("New Laws: The Teague Rule") of this Chapter.

(i) "Contrary" Standard

The first way to show that the decision was wrong is to show that the court's decision was contrary to clearly established federal law.[143] This is a very difficult standard to meet. In Williams, the Court held that this clause meant that habeas relief is warranted if the court "applies a rule that contradicts the governing law set forth in our cases."[144] This means that the court must have applied the wrong standard in a case or interpreted that standard incorrectly. For example, in an ineffective assistance of counsel case, the governing standard is the Strickland standard.[145] If the court applied a standard that was different than the Strickland standard, then it has applied a standard "contrary" to clearly established law, and relief may be warranted. Also, if the court interpreted Strickland incorrectly, then the decision would be contrary to federal law, and relief could be granted.[146] That said, it is difficult to persuade an appeals court that a state court applied the law in a contrary way.[147]

The other way to show that your state court's decision was contrary to federal law is to show that the Supreme Court considered a case very similar to yours, and it reached a different conclusion than your state court.[148] This means that if you can find a Supreme Court case with very similar facts to your case, and the state court did not rule in the same way as the Supreme Court, you might be entitled to relief.[149] In Williams, however, the Court stressed that if the correct legal standard is applied to a claim and there is no Supreme Court case with similar facts, then the state court decision rejecting the claim is not "contrary" to federal law.[150]

So, under this part of the test, in order to show that the decision rejecting your claim was contrary to federal law, you must do one of three things: (1) show that the court relied on the wrong standard in

---

143. It is important to note that dicta (plural of dictum) are not considered clearly established federal law. Only Supreme Court holdings are considered law clearly established by the Supreme Court. Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 412, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 1523, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389, 429 (2000).

144. Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 405, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 1519, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389, 425 (2000) (O'Connor, J., concurring).

145. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 688, 694, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2064, 2068, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 693, 698 (1984) (declaring that the standard for establishing ineffective assistance of counsel is whether the attorney's performance was objectively reasonable and whether deficient performance prejudiced the defense).

146. In Williams, the Court found that the state court decision was contrary to federal law because the court used the test for ineffective assistance of counsel found in Lockhart v. Fretwell, 506 U.S. 364, 113 S. Ct. 838, 122 L. Ed. 2d 180 (1993), instead of the Strickland standard, which should have been used. Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 391, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 1512, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389, 416–17 (2000) (O'Connor, J., concurring).

147. See, e.g., Bell v. Cone, 535 U.S. 685, 693, 122 S. Ct. 1843, 1849, 152 L. Ed. 2d 914, 926 (2002) (observing that AEDPA "modified a federal habeas court's role in reviewing state prisoner applications in order to prevent federal habeas 'retrials' and to ensure that state-court convictions are given effect to the extent possible under the law").

148. Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 406, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 1519–20, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389, 426 (2000) ("A state-court decision will also be contrary to this Court's clearly established precedent if the state court confronts a set of facts that are materially indistinguishable from a decision of this Court and nevertheless arrives at a result different from our precedent."); see also Ramdass v. Angelone, 530 U.S. 156, 165–66, 120 S. Ct. 2113, 2119–20, L. Ed. 2d 125, 135–36 (2000) (reiterating that "a state court acts contrary to clearly established federal law if it applies a legal rule that contradicts our prior holdings or if it reaches a different result from one of our cases despite confronting indistinguishable facts").

149. See Lockyer v. Andrade, 538 U.S. 63, 73, 123 S. Ct. 1166, 1173, 155 L. Ed. 2d 144, 156 (2003) (explaining that if the state court confronts a set of facts that are materially indistinguishable from a decision of the Supreme Court and nevertheless arrives at a different result than the Supreme Court, the state court's decision is "contrary" to federal law); see also Cockerham v. Cain, 283 F.3d 657, 663 (5th Cir. 2002) (finding jury instructions were contrary to federal law because the same instructions had been found to be unconstitutional by the Supreme Court in Cage v. Louisiana, 498 U.S. 39, 111 S. Ct. 328, 112 L. Ed. 2d 339 (1990)).

150. Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 385–86, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 1508–09, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389, 412–13 (2000); Ellis v. Norris, 232 F.3d 619, 623 (8th Cir. 2000) (concluding that the state court's decision was not contrary to clearly established federal law because the facts involved "materially distinguish[ed] it from any relevant Supreme Court precedent"); Jones v. Stinson, 229 F.3d 112, 119 (2d Cir. 2000) (holding that a state court decision was not contrary to Supreme Court precedent because it did not apply a rule of law contradicting precedents and did not contain "materially indistinguishable" facts from a Supreme Court case that reached a contrary result); Sanders v. Easley, 230 F.3d 679, 686 (4th Cir. 2000) (holding that a state court decision was not "contrary to" established Supreme Court precedent when the state court correctly identified the governing standard and "articulated specific considerations similar to those recognized by the Supreme Court"). But see Lockyer v. Andrade, 538 U.S. 63, 73, 123 S. Ct. 1166, 1173, 155 L. Ed. 2d 144, 156 (2003) (explaining that if the state court confronts a set of facts that are materially indistinguishable from a decision of the Supreme Court and nevertheless arrives at a different result than the Supreme Court, the state court's decision is "contrary" to federal law).

determining whether a violation had occurred;[151] (2) show that the court chose the right standard, but then applied it incorrectly to your case; or (3) point to a Supreme Court case with similar facts and claims to your case, in which the Supreme Court ruled differently than the state court in your case. Put simply, to prove that you deserve relief, you must point to a violation of a federal right,[152] identify the standard that applies to that violation,[153] show the court that the violation in your case meets that standard,[154] and then argue that the state court used the wrong standard or applied the standard incorrectly to the facts in your case.

(ii) Unreasonable Application Standard

If the state court used the correct standard and the decision rejecting your claim of a violation of a federal right is not contrary to federal law, you may still be able to get relief under the second part of the test. This part of the test applies either if the state court used the right standard for the violation you are claiming but applied it to the facts of your case in an unreasonable way, or if the state court did not use the correct standard for your violation.[155] There are times when this standard will overlap with the "contrary to" standard,[156] and you should always argue that your case meets both standards. To show that the state court decision was an unreasonable application of federal law, you have to show that the state court was "objectively unreasonable" in the way it applied the standard.[157]

You should show that there is specific Supreme Court precedent that required the state court to reach a result that it did not reach. The more specific the Supreme Court precedent is, the more recent it is, and the more similar it is to your case, the more closely the state court will have to follow the precedent.[158] Therefore, you will strengthen your argument that the state court was unreasonable by showing the federal court that the Supreme Court precedent was specific and required a specific outcome in your case. The Court has said that an "unreasonable" application of federal law is more than just an "incorrect" application of federal law.[159] State courts can go so far as to be "imprecise" and yet still apply the law reasonably.[160] Therefore, you cannot just show the federal court that the state court was wrong—you must show them something more.[161]

---

151. To find out what standard the court should have applied, see Part (B)2 ("Standards and Tests for Claims of Violations") of this Chapter.

152. See Part B(1) ("Examples of Constitutional Violations") of this Chapter.

153. See Part B(2) ("Standards and Tests for Claims of Violations") of this Chapter.

154. See Part B(4) ("Standards for Getting Relief") of this Chapter.

155. Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 409, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 1521, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389, 427 (2000) (explaining that the "unreasonable application" standard is met when "a state-court decision unreasonably applies the law of this Court to the facts of a prisoner's case"); see Wiggins v. Smith, 539 U.S. 510, 520, 123 S. Ct. 2527, 2534–35, 156 L. Ed. 2d 471, 484 (2003) (stating that unreasonable application of federal law is when a state court "has misapplied a 'governing legal principle' to 'a set of facts different from those of the case in which the principle was announced'" (quoting Lockyer v. Andrade, 538 U.S. 63, 76, 123 S. Ct. 1166, 1175, 155 L. Ed. 2d 144, 158 (2003)); Ramdass v. Angelone, 530 U.S. 156, 166, 120 S. Ct. 2113, 2120, 147 L. Ed. 2d 125, 136 (2000) ("The statute also authorizes federal habeas corpus relief if, under clearly established federal law, a state court has been unreasonable in applying the governing legal principle to the facts of the case. A state determination may be set aside under this standard if, under clearly established federal law, the state court was unreasonable in refusing to extend the governing legal principle to a context in which the principle should have controlled.").

156. Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 384–86, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 1508–09, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389, 412–13 (2000) (explaining that the two standards are not mutually exclusive and anticipating that claims will be brought under both).

157. Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 409–10, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 1521–22, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389, 428 (2000) (explaining that a showing of "objective unreasonableness" is not defeated by the fact that one jurist has applied the law in the same manner as the state court); see also Woodford v. Visciotti, 537 U.S. 19, 24–25, 123 S. Ct. 357, 360, 154 L. Ed. 2d 279, 286 (2002) (holding that it is not enough for a federal court to find a state court applied federal law incorrectly; rather, the prisoner must show that the state court applied federal law in an objectively unreasonable manner).

158. See Yarborough v. Alvarado, 541 U.S. 652, 664, 124 S. Ct. 2140, 2149, 158 L. Ed. 2d 938, 951 (2004) (concluding the more general the rule being applied, the more leeway the state courts have in making their decisions).

159. Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 410, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 1522, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389, 428 (2000).

160. See Woodford v. Visciotti, 537 U.S. 19, 23–24, 123 S. Ct. 357, 359, 154 L. Ed. 2d 279, 285–86 (2002) (holding that while the California Supreme Court was imprecise in how it applied the Strickland test, it was not unreasonable).

161. See Hameen v. Delaware, 212 F.3d 226, 235 (3d Cir. 2000) (stating that a federal court may not grant habeas relief simply because the state court applied federal law erroneously or incorrectly); Phoenix v. Matesanz, 233 F.3d 77, 83 (1st Cir. 2000) ("We cannot say that [the state court's] finding was objectively unreasonable, even if we might have found differently."); Francis S. v. Stone, 221 F.3d 100, 111 (2d Cir. 2000) (stating that "some increment of incorrectness beyond error is required" but "the increment need not be great"); see also Middleton v. McNeil, 541 U.S. 433, 437–38, 124 S. Ct. 1830, 1832–33, 158 L. Ed. 2d 701, 707, 72 U.S.L.W. 3687, 17 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. S 265 (2004) (holding that the

It is hard to define what more you would need to show. You should try to show that the state court's analysis and reasoning were flawed, as well as its conclusion. One way to think of it is that you should show that the court's point of view is different from how most people would see the situation, and that it would be hard for a reasonable person to understand how the state court came to its decision. If you can show a significant error in the court's reasoning, you may be able to show that its actions were unreasonable.[162]

Circuits have different interpretations as to what this "unreasonable" standard means. You should check how your circuit defines "unreasonable" in this context by Shepardizing the main Supreme Court case on this point, Williams v. Taylor,[163] and finding a case in your circuit interpreting Williams.

(b) "Unreasonable determination of facts in light of the evidence presented in the State court proceeding"

This Subsection discusses a different standard for getting habeas relief. As you will recall, Part B(4)(a) of this Chapter reviews how to get habeas relief if the state court determination of your claim rested on incorrect law or law that was unreasonably applied. This Subsection is not for when the state court gets the law wrong, but rather when the state court gets the facts of your case wrong. This means that the state court determined the right standard for your case, but (1) did not believe some of the evidence that was presented; state court was not unreasonable when it upheld jury instructions, even though an incorrect instruction was given, because the jury was given the correct instructions at least three other times).

---

162. See Wiggins v. Smith, 539 U.S. 510, 528, 123 S. Ct. 2527, 2538, 156 L. Ed. 2d 471, 489 (2003) (finding that a "clear factual error" in a state court's analysis "highlight[ed] the unreasonableness" of the court's decision); see also Rompilla v. Beard, 545 U.S. 374, 389, 125 S. Ct. 2456, 2467, 162 L. Ed. 2d 360, 376 (2005) (finding that the state court's "fail[ure] to answer the considerations [the Supreme Court] ha[s] set out" amounted to an unreasonable decision on a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel); Mask v. McGinnis, 233 F.3d 132, 140 (2d Cir. 2000) (concluding that the state court's decision was a "unreasonable application" of the test in Strickland, because it required petitioner to meet a higher standard—certainty that the results of the proceeding would have been different—to establish an ineffective assistance of counsel claim, rather than the preponderance of the evidence standard required under Strickland); Washington v. Hofbauer, 228 F.3d 689, 707 (6th Cir. 2000) (concluding that the state court's application of Strickland was objectively unreasonable where, among other things, the state court incorrectly cited Darden v. Wainwright, 477 U.S. 168, 182, 106 S. Ct. 2464, 2472, 91 L. Ed. 2d 144, 158 (1986), to support its incorrect conclusion that counsel was not ineffective in failing to object to prosecutorial misconduct in the closing argument).

163. Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389 (2000). The following is a list of sample cases, by circuit, interpreting the unreasonable application standard. See Jackson v. Edwards, 404 F.3d 612, 628 (2d Cir. 2005) (holding that a trial court applied the law unreasonably by not instructing the jury about a justification defense); Kibbe v. Dubois, 269 F.3d 26, 37, 39 (1st Cir. 2001) (finding that the state court's decision was objectively reasonable because it fell within "the universe of plausible, credible outcomes," and stating that multiple contradictory, reasonable interpretations are likely when there are unresolved legal issues); Davis v. Strack, 270 F.3d 111, 133 (2d Cir. 2001) (finding that the Appellate Division's decision was "egregiously at odds with the standards of due process propounded by the Supreme Court" and fit within the "unreasonable application" clause); Hameen v. Delaware, 212 F.3d 226, 235 (3d Cir. 2000) (following Williams by requiring more than error to find unreasonableness); Jermyn v. Horn, 266 F.3d 257, 312 (3d Cir. 2001) (finding that defendant's counsel had been ineffective for failing to conduct adequate investigation and that the state court's decision to the contrary was objectively unreasonable); Bell v. Jarvis, 236 F.3d 149, 162 n.9 (4th Cir. 2000) (holding that the state court's rejection of the plaintiff's ineffective counsel claim was not objectively unreasonable, and explicitly stating that the "unreasonable" standard should not be equated with the "clearly erroneous" standard); Martinez v. Johnson, 255 F.3d 229, 243–44 (5th Cir. 2001) (distinguishing the objective standard of unreasonableness from the "debatable among reasonable jurists" standard, and holding that the court's decision was not objectively unreasonable because a rational trier of fact could come to the same conclusion); McFarland v. Yukins, 356 F.3d 688, 714 (6th Cir. 2004) (finding that requiring the defendant to go to trial with an attorney with a conflict of interest was contrary to clearly established federal law); Boss v. Pierce, 263 F.3d 734, 742 (7th Cir. 2001) (holding that the appellate court's decision was unreasonable and noting that to determine unreasonableness, the court asks "whether the decision is at least minimally consistent with the facts and circumstances of the case or if it is one of several equally plausible outcomes … [and only granting habeas] if the determination is at such tension with governing U.S. Supreme Court precedents, or so inadequately supported by the record, or so arbitrary as to be unreasonable" (internal quotations omitted)); Miller v. Dormire, 310 F.3d 600, 604 (8th Cir. 2002) (finding that state court's application of the harmless error rule to defense attorney's waiver of jury trial without defendant's consent was contrary to clearly established federal law because federal law holds that denial of a jury trial is a "structural" error and always harmful); Byrd v. Lewis, 566 F.3d 855, 866 (9th Cir. 2009) (finding that an error in jury instructions is not "structural" when it "affects only an element of the offense, a permissible evidentiary inference, or a potential theory of conviction," rather than "the overarching reasonable doubt standard of proof"); Thomas v. Gibson, 218 F.3d 1213, 1220 (10th Cir. 2000) (applying the Supreme Court's distinction between erroneous and unreasonable); Brown v. Head, 272 F.3d 1308, 1313 (11th Cir. 2001) (holding that the lower court decision was not objectively unreasonable and noting that it is the "objective reasonableness, not the correctness per se, of the state court decision that we are to decide").

(2) interpreted some of that evidence incorrectly and based a ruling on this misinterpreted evidence; or (3) ignored legally relevant facts that it needed to consider in order to reach the correct result.

If the federal court determines that the state court unreasonably interpreted the facts of your case and based its decision on unreasonably interpreted facts, then it can grant habeas relief.[164] On the other hand, if it determines that the state court was reasonable in its determination of the facts, it cannot grant relief. A reviewing court will defer to the trial court and start with the assumption that the state court based its decision on a correct reading of the facts.[165] It is up to you to prove that the court did not read the facts correctly because it either ignored some evidence or interpreted some evidence incorrectly. You must then prove that the state court decision would have been different if the court had properly considered and applied all of the relevant facts.

The first step is to show the federal court that there was a determination of facts—for example, at an evidentiary hearing or at credibility determinations where the court chose to believe one witness over another. You cannot rely on this standard for relief if no facts were determined by the state court. However, if the state court did not determine any facts, but should have, you might be entitled to relief by arguing that a failure to find facts at all is actually an unreasonable determination of facts.[166]

The second step is to prove that the state court determinations of fact were unreasonable. One way to do this is to show that the fact-finding procedure the court used was inadequate.[167] This means that the court made conclusions without looking at the evidence you presented, or did not take into consideration some of the important evidence you presented. This part of the inquiry deals with how the state court went about making factual determinations, not what those determinations were.

The third step in proving that the state court determinations of fact were unreasonable is to show that the determinations the state court made were substantively unreasonable. This means you have to show that the state court's determination of facts was unreasonable and not at all supported by the evidentiary record.[168] The standard for doing this is "clear and convincing" evidence.[169] This means you cannot just make 164. See Torres v. Prunty, 223 F.3d 1103, 1110 n.6 (9th Cir. 2000) (finding that "the state courts' factual determinations were unreasonable" and that the defendant "rebutted the presumption of correctness of [the state courts'] findings by clear and convincing evidence").

---

165. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(e)(1) (2006) ("[A] determination of a factual issue made by a State court shall be presumed to be correct. The applicant shall have the burden of rebutting the presumption of correctness by clear and convincing evidence."); see also Weeks v. Snyder, 219 F.3d 245, 258 (3d Cir. 2000) (holding that the presumption of correctness applies to the state court's implicit factual findings as well as express findings); Bottoson v. Moore, 234 F.3d 526, 534 (11th Cir. 2000) (finding that "[w]hen there is conflicting testimony by expert witnesses, as here, discounting the testimony of one expert constitutes a credibility determination, a finding of fact" to which the presumption of correctness is applied).

166. See Taylor v. Maddox, 366 F.3d 992, 1000–01 (9th Cir. 2004) (finding that a state court's determination of facts is unreasonable if no finding was made and the court "should have made a finding of fact but neglected to do so"); Nunes v. Mueller, 350 F.3d 1045, 1055 (9th Cir. 2003) (finding that the state court's "factual" findings were unreasonable when the court made the findings without holding an evidentiary hearing); Mask v. McGinnis, 233 F.3d 132, 140 (2d Cir. 2000) (refusing to give the state court's "factual findings" a presumption of correctness because they were not factual findings but only conclusions).

167. See Caliendo v. Warden of Cal. Men's Colony, 365 F.3d 691, 698 (9th Cir. 2004) (deciding that there is no deference given to a state court's fact findings when those findings were "arrived at through the use of erroneous legal standards"); Nunes v. Mueller, 350 F.3d 1045, 1055 (9th Cir. 2003) (finding lack of an evidentiary hearing inadequate to find "facts"); Bottoson v. Moore, 234 F.3d 526, 533–36 (11th Cir. 2000) (determining that 10 days of evidentiary hearings and contradicting expert witnesses are adequate to support findings of fact); Francis S. v. Stone, 221 F.3d 100, 116 (2d Cir. 2000) (finding an "extensive" record adequate to credit one expert witness over another).

168. See Miller-El v. Dretke, 545 U.S. 231, 240–65, 125 S. Ct. 2317, 2325–40, 162 L. Ed. 2d 196, 214–30 (2005) (finding that the state court's finding on racial discrimination in jury selection was an unreasonable determination of facts "in light of the evidence presented"); Miller v. Dormire, 310 F.3d 600, 603–04 (8th Cir. 2002) (determining that the state court's finding that defendant had waived his right to a jury was unreasonable when the record was "devoid of any direct testimony from [defendant] regarding his consent to waive trial by jury"); Torres v. Prunty, 223 F.3d 1103, 1109 (9th Cir. 2000) (concluding that state court's factual determination of competency was unreasonable because it was "conclusionary and not fairly supported by evidence on the record"); Thomas v. Gibson, 218 F.3d 1213, 1228–29 (10th Cir. 2000) (determining that the court's assumption that "a murderer would not continue to inflict blows after a victim fell unconscious" to support a finding that defendant had inflicted the blows while the victim was conscious was an unreasonable factual finding because other uncontradicted evidence in the record indicated that the victim had been stabbed after death).

169. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(e)(1) (2006) ("[A] determination of a factual issue made by a State court shall be presumed to be correct. The applicant shall have the burden of rebutting the presumption of correctness by clear and convincing evidence.").

conclusions and assertions that the state court determined the facts unreasonably—you actually have to demonstrate to the court, with specific examples, why the state's determination of facts was unreasonable.[170]

C. What You Cannot Complain About

Federal law is very particular about what you can complain about in your federal habeas petition. As stated in Parts A and B of this Chapter, you must show that your imprisonment violates the Constitution, the laws, or the treaties of the United States. Remember, this means that you cannot discuss violations of state constitutions, state laws, or prison conditions, unless your prison condition or sentence amounts to cruel and unusual punishment.[171] You generally may not raise habeas complaints based on illegal search and seizure or based on new law. This section discusses these two situations, as well as the exceptions to these restrictions.

1. Illegal Search and Seizure

The Fourth Amendment addresses searches and seizures. Evidence that is obtained in violation of the Fourth Amendment is not allowed to be introduced at trial.[172] Even though introducing illegally obtained evidence into trial violates federal law, the habeas court will rarely listen to complaints about this problem. The Supreme Court has created a different standard of review for this particular kind of federal violation. In Stone v. Powell, the Supreme Court held that you cannot complain about the introduction of illegally obtained evidence in a habeas petition if the state provided you with a "full and fair opportunity" to raise this error at trial and on appeal.[173] All courts have procedures for determining whether there has been a "full and fair opportunity" to litigate a claim. Because different states may have different standards, you should check the law of the state where you stood trial.

In some lower courts, the "full and fair opportunity" standard is not met when: (1) the state's procedures do not allow any petitioner in your situation to raise a claim; or (2) the procedures were used incorrectly in your case.[174] You should focus your claims on the ways the procedures failed to let you contest the use of illegally obtained evidence in your trial.[175] If the state court never considered this claim "on the merits" (i.e., your claim was dismissed for procedural reasons before the court heard or considered your evidence), most courts will find you were denied your "full and fair opportunity." In other words, you can complain about an

---

170. See Fisher v. Lee, 215 F.3d 438, 446 (4th Cir. 2000) (holding that petitioner failed to demonstrate to the court that the state's factual findings were unreasonable); Torres v. Prunty, 223 F.3d 1103, 1110 n.6 (9th Cir. 2000) (finding that the state courts' factual determinations were unreasonable and defendant rebutted the "presumption of correctness" of the state courts' findings "by clear and convincing evidence"); Hooks v. Ward, 184 F.3d 1206, 1231 (10th Cir. 1999) (holding that petitioner rebutted the presumption of correctness by demonstrating, through clear and convincing evidence, that the state court's conclusion, that the evidence admitted at trial was insufficient to raise a reasonable doubt as to defendant's intent to kill, was incorrect).

171. The 8th Amendment of the Constitution prohibits cruel and unusual punishment. The Supreme Court defines "cruel and unusual punishment" as the "unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain" that is "grossly out of proportion to the severity of the crime." Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 173, 96 S. Ct. 2909, 2925, 49 L. Ed. 2d 859, 875 (1976).

172. The 4th Amendment of the Constitution bars illegal searches and seizure. The "exclusionary rule" says that evidence seized by the police illegally may not be introduced in the criminal trial of the victim of the unreasonable search and seizure. Weeks v. United States, 232 U.S. 383, 394–95, 34 S. Ct. 341, 345, 58 L. Ed. 652, 656 (1914) (applying the exclusionary rule only to a federal officer in a federal court); see also Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643, 655, 81 S. Ct. 1684, 1691, 6 L. Ed. 2d 1081, 1090 (1961) (applying the exclusionary rule to states through the 14th Amendment).

173. Stone v. Powell, 428 U.S. 465, 494, 96 S. Ct. 3037, 3052, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1067, 1088 (1976).

174. See Capellan v. Riley, 975 F.2d 67, 70 (2d Cir. 1992) ("Review of fourth amendment claims in habeas petitions [is] undertaken … : (a) if the state has provided no corrective procedures at all to redress the alleged fourth amendment violations; or (b) if the state has provided a corrective mechanism, but the defendant was precluded from using that mechanism because of an unconscionable breakdown in the underlying process."). This standard has been adopted in other circuits. See Willett v. Lockhart, 37 F.3d 1265, 1271–72 (8th Cir. 1994) (adopting the standard in Capellan); Palmer v. Clarke, 408 F.3d 423, 437 (8th Cir. 2005) (applying Willett and therefore the Capellan standard); see also Machacek v. Hofbauer, 213 F.3d 947, 952 (6th Cir. 2000) (finding that if a state has adequate procedural mechanisms for reviewing illegally seized evidence, but if those mechanisms failed and the prisoner was prevented from litigating his claim, the federal court may review an illegal search and seizure claim); United States ex. rel. Bostick v. Peters, 3 F.3d 1023, 1027–29 (7th Cir. 1993) (finding that state review of 4th Amendment claims was deficient where defendant was denied the opportunity to testify at a suppression hearing about his version of an encounter with drug enforcement officers).

175. See Capellan v. Riley, 975 F.2d 67, 71 (2d Cir. 1992) (explaining that the focus as to whether a federal court may review a 4th Amendment claim in a habeas petition is the "existence and application of the [state's] corrective procedures," not the outcome of those procedures).

illegal search and seizure problem in your habeas petition if the court: (1) never considered whether your factual arguments were right or wrong; or (2) never considered why your factual arguments were right or wrong.[176]

Defendants in New York generally have the opportunity to raise illegal search and seizure claims at several different stages during a trial. For example, the defendant may notify the judge of this problem during pretrial hearings and during the trial.[177] The defendant may also raise this type of claim on appeal as long as the claim was properly preserved[178] during the trial.[179] Full and fair opportunity to raise claims concerning illegally obtained evidence is almost always provided. Therefore, in New York, unless something very unusual occurred at your trial, you probably cannot complain about illegal search and seizure in your habeas petition.

Stone's full and fair opportunity test applies only to Fourth Amendment exclusionary rule claims. So far, this standard has not been applied to other constitutional claims.[180] The Stone rule is a defense that the state can raise to your petition for habeas relief. This means that it is the state's responsibility to raise it in

---

176. Here are three examples of cases where the federal habeas court decided that the state court failed to provide a full and fair opportunity to litigate an illegally seized evidence claim:

(1) In United States ex rel. Bostick v. Peters, the petitioner sought habeas relief from a conviction of drug possession. The police had searched his bags without a warrant or probable cause. The petitioner raised this issue in a pretrial hearing, but the judge told him he did not have to testify in order to make his claim. The court then admitted the evidence, and the petitioner was convicted. The petitioner raised the illegal evidence claim again on appeal, but the appellate court affirmed the conviction without considering the petitioner's claim. The petitioner then filed a federal habeas petition raising the same claim. The appeals court held that the petitioner was not at fault because he reasonably relied on the trial court's ruling that his testimony was not necessary. United States ex rel. Bostick v. Peters, 3 F.3d 1023 (7th Cir. 1993).

(2) In Agee v. White, the petitioner sought habeas relief from a murder conviction. The police had brought him to the station twice, first under illegal arrest and then voluntarily a week later. During the second visit, the petitioner made incriminating statements that were later admitted as evidence. At his trial and on state appeal, the petitioner argued that the information given in the second interrogation was "tainted." Both courts, however, ignored the claims. Petitioner argued in his habeas petition that he had not had a "full and fair opportunity" to present the illegal evidence claim because the appellate court ignored his argument. The habeas court agreed that the petitioner did not have a full and fair opportunity to bring this claim earlier, and therefore agreed that the claim was properly before the court in the habeas petition. But after considering the petitioner's argument, the habeas court decided that the second interrogation was not illegal because it occurred a week after the first illegal arrest and was itself voluntary. Agee v. White, 809 F.2d 1487 (11th Cir. 1987).

(3) In Riley v. Gray, the petitioner raised his claim of illegally seized evidence on appeal. The evidence had been taken under a warrant that was based on other evidence obtained in a warrantless search. The appellate court affirmed the conviction on the basis of a procedural rule without considering the facts of the illegal evidence claim. The appeals court granted habeas relief based on the same claim because an "unforeseeable application of a procedural rule" had prevented the petitioner from fully presenting his claim earlier. Riley v. Gray, 674 F.2d 522 (6th Cir. 1982).

177. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 710.40 (McKinney 1995) allows a defendant to raise this claim in a pretrial motion or at trial if the defendant was unaware of the illegal seizure.

178. To preserve your claim, you must make a motion to suppress the evidence and object to its inclusion if your motion does not succeed. See Chapter 9 of the JLM for more information on properly preserved claims.

179. O'Sullivan v. Boerckel, 526 U.S. 838, 845, 119 S. Ct. 1728, 1732, 144 L. Ed. 2d 1, 9 (1999) (holding that "state prisoners must give the state courts one full opportunity to resolve any constitutional issues by invoking one complete round of the State's established appellate review process"); see also 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1-2) (1996). See Section B(2) ("New Laws: The Teague Rule") of this Chapter for more information on 28 USC § 2254 and its effect on procedural default; see also Fay v. Noia, 372 U.S. 391, 439, 83 S. Ct. 822, 849, 9 L. Ed. 2d 837, 869 (1963) (stating that a habeas applicant who understandingly had an opportunity to appeal but knowingly waived his right to appeal his federal claims in the state court may fairly be denied relief by the federal court considering his habeas petition, and acknowledging that there are exceptions to this rule).

180. See Kimmelman v. Morrison, 477 U.S. 365, 373–75, 106 S. Ct. 2574, 2582–83, 91 L. Ed. 2d 305, 318–19 (1986) (refusing to extend the Stone rule to claims of ineffective assistance of counsel based on counsel's failure to file a timely suppression motion); Rose v. Mitchell, 443 U.S. 545, 560–61, 99 S. Ct. 2993, 3002–03, 61 L. Ed. 2d 739, 752–53 (1979) (refusing to extend the Stone rule to an equal protection claim of racial discrimination in the selection of a state grand jury foreman); Jackson v. Virginia, 443 U.S. 307, 320–24, 99 S. Ct. 2781, 2790–92, 61 L. Ed. 2d 560, 574–77 (1979) (refusing to extend the Stone rule to claims of due process violations alleging insufficiency of evidence supporting conviction); Withrow v. Williams, 507 U.S. 680, 682–83, 113 S. Ct. 1745, 1748, 123 L. Ed. 2d 407, 413 (1993) (refusing to extend the Stone rule to a claim of Miranda violations). Miranda requires police to take certain precautions when interrogating suspects in their custody, such as informing the suspect that he has a right to remain silent. Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 86 S. Ct. 1602, 16 L. Ed. 2d 694 (1966).

your habeas proceedings. If the state does not raise the issue, the rule will not apply. Once Stone has been raised, it is your burden to prove that you did not have a full and fair opportunity to litigate your Fourth Amendment claim. However, it is highly unlikely that the state will fail to raise the Stone rule, so you should always be sure to show that you did not have a full and fair opportunity to raise the claim in state court. Remember that your lawyer's failure to raise a Fourth Amendment issue might also be grounds for an ineffective assistance of counsel claim.[181]

2. New Laws: The Teague Rule[182]

You also cannot raise a federal habeas claim based on new law.[183] This means that if the Supreme Court decides a rule, test, or standard in a case that is decided after your direct review was complete, you generally may not rely on this new law as a basis for habeas relief. This rule comes from the case Teague v. Lane[184] and is therefore called the Teague Rule. It is applicable to federal and state prisoners. However, state prisoners have an additional requirement that they must meet. State prisoners are subject to AEDPA, which says that state decisions can only be reversed if they were "contrary to, or involved an unreasonable application of, clearly established Federal law, as determined by the Supreme Court of the United States."[185] This section discusses the requirement for state prisoners that the law be "clearly established,"[186] in addition to the requirement from Teague that habeas petitioners cannot rely on new law.[187]

These two standards (that the law is clearly established and that the law may not be new) mean almost the same thing. The one difference is that federal prisoners can use cases from the federal district in which they were convicted to show that the law they are relying on is "not new" (even if the Supreme Court has not dealt with the law), while state prisoners can only uses cases from the U.S. Supreme Court since they need to show that the law is "not new" by showing that it is "clearly established" by the Supreme Court.[188] This Section will address both standards at the same time.

(a) What Is New Law?

"New law" is a rule of law that was not in force at the time of your trial and direct appeals, according to Teague.[189] New law is law that was not "clearly established," according to the requirement of AEDPA.[190] State prisoners are subject to the requirement in Section 2254(d)(1) of AEDPA that any law used in a habeas petition must be "clearly established." This requirement was established by AEDPA and changed the way that federal habeas law is applied to state prisoners. AEDPA took the Teague rule from Teague v. Lane and turned it into a law passed by Congress.

The triggering date for what counts as "new law" differs under the Teague standard and the "clearly established" requirement of AEDPA. For the Teague standard, the law you rely on must have been established by the time your conviction becomes final. The date of finality is usually the date when the 181. Failure to raise 4th Amendment claims of illegally obtained evidence may amount to ineffective assistance of counsel if the claim of illegal evidence is meritorious and there is a reasonable probability that the defendant would not have been convicted if his 4th Amendment rights had been respected. Kimmelman v. Morrison 477 U.S. 365, 375, 106 S. Ct. 2574, 2582–83, 91 L. Ed. 2d 305, 319 (1986). See Part B(2) ("Standards and Tests for Claims of Violations") of this Chapter for more information on ineffective assistance of counsel claims.

---

182. Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288, 109 S. Ct. 1060, 103 L. Ed. 2d 334 (1989); 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1) (2006).

183. Although a habeas petitioner cannot use a new rule as grounds for his petition, the courts can use a new rule to deny a habeas petition. Courts support this because it helps them in having the final word on how laws work. Lockhart v. Fretwell, 506 U.S. 364, 372, 113 S. Ct. 838, 844, 122 L. Ed. 2d 180, 191 (1993) (holding that the retroactivity rule in Teague does not apply to the federal government).

184. Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288, 308–10, 109 S. Ct. 1060, 1074–75, 103 L. Ed. 2d 334, 354–56 (1989).

185. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1) (2006).

186. For more information on the "contrary to or involving an unreasonable application" requirement of 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1) (2006), see Part B(4)(a) of this Chapter.

187. Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288, 308–10, 109 S. Ct. 1060, 1074–75, 103 L. Ed. 2d 334, 354–56 (1989).

188. See Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 412, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 1523, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389, 430 (2000) ("With one caveat, whatever would qualify as an old rule under our Teague jurisprudence will constitute 'clearly established Federal law.'"). The one "caveat," or exception, is § 2254(d)(1), which restricts the source of clearly established law to the Supreme Court's jurisprudence. You may be able to use non-Supreme Court federal court precedent to support your claim that the Supreme Court law was clearly established when your case was tried or to show whether the state court applied the law reasonably. See Musladin v. LaMarque, 403 F.3d 1072, 1074 (9th Cir. 2005).

189. Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288, 308–10, 109 S. Ct. 1060, 1074–75, 103 L. Ed. 2d 334, 354–56 (1989).

190. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1) (2006).

Supreme Court refuses to hear your appeal (the date the Supreme Court denies your writ of certiorari).[191] However, for the "clearly established" requirement in Section 2254, the courts use a different standard: the law must have been clearly established by the date that the state court's conviction became final in your case.[192]

There is no specific formula that the courts use to determine what is new law; instead, the courts look at many factors. The courts use similar factors to determine whether law is clearly established. If the law you are relying on had not been clearly stated in another court case when your conviction became final, the courts may still find that the law was clearly established if it was dictated by previously decided cases, known as "precedent." That means if previously decided cases require a certain outcome in your case, even if a case exactly like yours has not yet been decided, the courts will not consider the rule you are relying on to be new law. For a rule of law to be dictated by precedent, and therefore not new law, the precedent does not have to explicitly state the rule of law. If precedent implies the rule of law, and a case that was decided after your conviction became final simply articulates the previously implied rule, that rule is already clearly established.[193] Although dictum (the part of a judge's opinion that does not count as a decision about the particular case that the judge is deciding) is not considered law, it may be used as support that an implied rule of law had been clearly established before it was articulated.[194]

For example, in Teague, the prosecutor had used peremptory challenges to keep all African-Americans off the jury (peremptory challenges are used by lawyers to disqualify potential jurors without giving any reason), and subsequently, the all-white jury convicted the black defendant of murder. Two and a half years after this defendant's conviction, the Supreme Court, in Batson v. Kentucky, ruled that a defendant can establish a prima facie case of racial discrimination just by showing that he is a member of a racial group and that the prosecutor used peremptory challenges to remove jury members of that racial group at the trial in question.[195] The Teague defendant asked the habeas court to apply Batson to his trial. The Supreme Court ruled that the petitioner could not apply Batson because it was a "new rule of law." That is, the decision in Batson was not required by any prior cases.

A rule of law is considered "new" even if it was based in part on earlier cases. The Supreme Court has found that a rule was "new" when there had been disagreement between lower courts about the question before the Supreme Court ruling.[196] Unfortunately for the habeas petitioner in this situation, the benefit of the doubt tends to go toward calling law "new." If there could have been "debate among reasonable minds"[197] as to whether the law was clearly established, it is considered new law.

Consider the following four examples of the Supreme Court rejecting habeas relief because the petitioner's habeas claim was based on new law:

(1) In Saffle v. Parks,[198] the petitioner sought habeas relief because, at his trial, the judge had instructed the jury to "avoid any influence of sympathy."[199] The petitioner argued that this instruction was unconstitutional because it made the jury ignore evidence that mitigated the

---

191. See Stringer v. Black, 503 U.S. 222, 227, 112 S. Ct. 1130, 1135, 117 L. Ed. 2d 367, 376–77 (1992) ("Subject to two exceptions, a case decided after a petitioner's conviction and sentence became final may not be the predicate for federal habeas corpus relief unless the decision was dictated by precedent existing when the judgment in question became final."). If you do not file for certiorari from the Supreme Court, your conviction becomes final when your time for filing a petition for certiorari has elapsed. Lambrix v. Singletary, 520 U.S. 518, 117 S. Ct. 1517, 137 L. Ed. 2d 771 (1997).

192. Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 380, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 1506, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389, 410 (2000) (finding that the defendant's constitutionally guaranteed right to effective assistance of counsel was "clearly established" by the time the state court heard his case).

193. See Roe v. Flores-Ortega, 528 U.S. 470, 484–85, 120 S. Ct. 1029, 1038–39 145 L. Ed. 2d 985, 999–1001 (2000) (finding that a newly articulated rule "breaks no new ground" because the court's earlier decisions implicitly established the rule); Ryan v. Miller, 303 F.3d 231, 248 (2d Cir. 2002) (explaining that for a right to be clearly established, the Supreme Court must have acknowledged it, but "it need not have considered the exact incarnation of that right or approved the specific theory").

194. See Gibbs v. Frank, 387 F.3d 268, 277 n.6 (3d Cir. 2004) (noting that because Supreme Court dictum "offers guidance about how the Supreme Court reasonably interprets its … decision" it is "relevant to determining whether a state court decision reasonably applies Supreme Court precedent").

195. Batson v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 79, 106 S. Ct. 1712, 90 L. Ed. 2d 69 (1986).

196. See Butler v. McKellar, 494 U.S. 407, 415, 110 S. Ct. 1212, 1217, 108 L. Ed. 2d 347, 356 (1990) (explaining that a rule is new if there is a "significant difference of opinion on the part of several lower courts that had considered the question previously").

197. Butler v. McKellar, 494 U.S. 407, 415, 110 S. Ct. 1212, 1217, 108 L. Ed. 2d 347, 356 (1990).

198. Saffle v. Parks, 494 U.S. 484, 110 S. Ct. 1257, 108 L. Ed. 2d 415 (1990).

199. Saffle v. Parks, 494 U.S. 484, 484, 110 S. Ct. 1257, 1257, 108 L. Ed. 2d 415, 415 (1990).

petitioner's guilt (to mitigate means to make the petitioner less culpable or less guilty). The district and appellate courts disagreed over whether this instruction violated a previously established rule or a new rule of law. The Supreme Court settled the dispute by calling it a new rule of law. The Court reasoned that even though it was based on earlier cases, the earlier cases did not say how the court should ask the jury to listen to mitigating evidence. Thus, the Court denied habeas relief.

(2) In Butler v. McKellar,[200] four years after petitioner's murder conviction was finalized, he asked the habeas court for relief. Relying on Arizona v. Roberson,[201] he claimed a violation of his Fifth Amendment rights because the police had interrogated him about a murder after he had requested a lawyer on a separate assault charge. The Supreme Court rejected his habeas petition on the ground that the Roberson case announced a "new" rule of law a couple of years after his conviction. His lawyer argued that the Roberson rule was not a new rule because it was dictated by an earlier case, Edwards v. Arizona,[202] which existed before his conviction became final. The Supreme Court did not agree that Roberson was dictated by Edwards because the Edwards rule covered interrogations on the same charge while the Roberson rule covered interrogations on separate charges. The Court concluded no one could have predicted the Edwards rule would extend to the situation in Roberson. Thus, Roberson announced a new rule of law that could not be relied upon in the habeas petition.

(3) In Sawyer v. Smith, the petitioner had been convicted of murder and sentenced to death. At his trial, the prosecutor had told the jury that if they sentenced him to death "you yourself will not be sentencing [the petitioner] to the electric chair."[203] A year after the petitioner's conviction was final, the Supreme Court ruled in Caldwell v. Mississippi[204] that a prosecutor may not make remarks that diminish the jury's sense of responsibility for the capital sentencing decision. The Sawyer petitioner asked the habeas court to apply the Caldwell rule to his conviction. He argued that earlier cases made the Caldwell case so predictable that it was not a "new rule" of law. The Supreme Court disagreed and ruled that the Caldwell rule was a "new rule of law" because it was not foreseeable based on earlier cases.[205]

(4) In Caspari v. Bohlen,[206] the Supreme Court explained the three steps the habeas court must take to see if the Teague rule applies. First, the court must find out the date on which the petitioner's conviction and sentence became final. Second, it must decide whether the trial court would have discovered the rule from earlier cases. Third, if the rule is "new," meaning the trial court would not have taken it from earlier cases, then the habeas court must decide if the defendant falls into one of the exceptions to the Teague rule. (For a discussion of those exceptions, see Part C(3) ("Exceptions to the New Law Rules") below).

It is the rule of law—not the way it is being applied—that needs to be "clearly established." Some rules will apply to many different fact situations. It is not necessary that the court has looked at your exact fact situation and applied a rule of law to it; it is only necessary that the legal principle has been established for dealing with your fact situation.[207] Although you should show the court that the law you are relying on is not new law, you should not actually mention the Teague standard in your habeas petition, even if you are making a claim based on an exception to the Teague standard. The Teague standard is an affirmative defense, which means it is the government's responsibility to raise it in response to your habeas claim to try to prevent your petition from going forward by arguing that your claim is based on "new law." However,

---

200. Butler v. McKellar, 494 U.S. 407, 110 S. Ct. 1212, 108 L. Ed. 2d 347 (1990).

201. Arizona v. Roberson, 486 U.S. 675, 108 S. Ct. 2093, 100 L. Ed. 2d 704 (1988).

202. Edwards v. Arizona, 451 U.S. 477, 484, 101 S. Ct. 1880, 1884–85, 68 L. Ed. 2d 378, 386 (1981) (holding that a defendant who had requested counsel during an interrogation but confessed the next day during another interrogation for the same offence had not waived his right to counsel).

203. Sawyer v. Smith, 497 U.S. 227, 230, 110 S. Ct. 2822, 2825, 111 L. Ed. 2d 193, 203 (1990) (holding that the Caldwell rule that prosecutors may not make remarks that diminish the jury's sense of responsibility in capital cases was a new rule and did not apply retroactively).

204. Caldwell v. Mississippi, 472 U.S. 320, 329, 105 S. Ct. 2633, 2639, 86 L. Ed. 2d 231, 239 (1985) (finding that where, in a capital case, a prosecutor makes statements to the sentencing jury that diminish the jury's sense of responsibility, the heightened requirements of the 8th Amendment are not met and the sentence of death cannot stand).

205. Sawyer v. Smith, 497 U.S. 227, 237, 110 S. Ct. 2822, 2829 111 L. Ed. 2d 193, 208 (1990).

206. Caspari v. Bohlen, 510 U.S. 383, 390, 114 S. Ct. 948, 953, 127 L. Ed. 2d 236, 246 (1994) (holding that, at the time of petitioner's conviction, a rule barring evidence of prior convictions for sentencing purposes did not yet exist).

207. See Hart v. Attorney General, 323 F.3d 884, 892 n.16 (11th Cir. 2003) (holding that, when confronting issues such as the voluntariness of a confession, where the rule of law will have to be applied on a case-by-case approach, it is "acceptable to derive clearly established federal law from … general principles").

because the government is highly likely to raise the Teague rule, you should be well prepared to show the court the rule of law in question was "clearly established" in precedent at the time your conviction became final.

3. Exceptions to the New Law Rule

Although you should avoid basing your habeas petition on new law, there are some exceptions that allow you to use new law. (Remember, only if the government raises the issue that your claims are based on new law do you need to defend your petition as based on "not new" law or show that your claims fit into an exception.)

The first exception to the new law rule is as follows. If the Supreme Court makes a new law and explicitly states that the law applies retroactively, which means it applies to cases that have already been decided, the law will apply to your case regardless of whether the law was established after your conviction and regardless of whether you are a federal or state prisoner. However, it is rare for the Supreme Court to declare a new law retroactive.

The Court in Teague v. Lane also mentions some specific exceptions to the Teague rule that allow you to bring a habeas petition based on new law.[208] It is not yet clear if these exceptions necessarily apply to state prisoners. Although AEDPA does not explicitly mention the exceptions to the "clearly established" requirement that Teague sets out, the Supreme Court has suggested that Section 2254 of AEDPA implicitly contains the Teague exceptions.[209] If you are a state prisoner, you should research whether your district has ruled that Section 2254 of AEDPA contains exceptions and whether they are the same exceptions as in Teague. If you are a prisoner in a state that has not recognized the Teague exceptions, you most likely will not be eligible to use the exceptions below.

There are two exceptions to the Teague rule. The first exception includes two kinds of new law: (1) new laws prohibiting certain types of punishment, and (2) new laws decriminalizing certain behavior. The second exception is for new laws that ensure fundamental fairness at trial. If the law you are relying on is new law, and the new law fits within one of these exceptions, then you may base your habeas claim on the new law.

(a) Exception: Prohibited Punishments and Decriminalized Behavior

(i) Prohibited Punishments

You may raise a new rule of law if it bars a certain type of punishment for a certain crime or for certain defendants.[210] For example, in Ford v. Wainwright, the Supreme Court prohibited states from imposing the death penalty on defendants who are insane.[211] In Roper v. Simmons, the Supreme Court held that prisoners who were under eighteen years old when their crimes were committed must not receive the death penalty.[212] If a court decision declares that the punishment you received is unconstitutional, you should raise this decision in your petition for federal habeas corpus. Because this is one of the exceptions to the "new law" rule, you can use the decision even if it is a new rule of law. (In other words, even if the decision that changed the law is handed down after your conviction, you can use it.)

(ii) Decriminalized Behavior

Another exception allows you to use a new rule of law if it "places 'certain kinds of primary, private individual conduct beyond the power of the criminal law-making authority to proscribe.'"[213] What this quotation means is that if your conviction was based on behavior that is no longer considered criminal under the new rule of law, you can use this new law to petition for habeas relief. For example, in Griswold v. Connecticut, the Supreme Court ruled that the Connecticut law against using contraception violated the

208. Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288, 310–12, 109 S. Ct. 1060, 1075–76, 103 L. Ed. 2d 334, 355–57 (1989).

209. See Whorton v. Bockting, 549 U.S. 406, 416–18, 127 S. Ct. 1173, 1181–82, 167 L. Ed. 2d 1, 11–12 (2007) (explicitly considering whether the facts of the case fell under either of the Teague exceptions in a claim under § 2254).

210. See Penry v. Lynaugh, 492 U.S. 302, 330, 109 S. Ct. 2934, 2953, 106 L. Ed. 2d 256, 285 (1989) (abrogated on other grounds); see also Sawyer v. Smith, 497 U.S. 227, 241, 110 S. Ct. 2822, 2831, 111 L. Ed. 2d 193, 211 (1990) (the first Teague exception applies to new laws that decriminalize an entire category of conduct and to new laws that prohibit a certain kind of punishment for a class of defendants because of their status or offense).

211. Ford v. Wainwright, 477 U.S. 399, 409–10, 106 S. Ct. 2595, 2602, 91 L. Ed. 2d 335, 346 (1986).

212. Roper v. Simmons, 543 U.S. 551, 568, 125 S. Ct. 1183, 1194, 161 L. Ed. 2d 1, 21 (2005).

213. Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288, 307, 109 S. Ct. 1060, 1073, 103 L. Ed. 2d 334, 353 (1989) (quoting Mackey v. United States, 401 U.S. 667, 692, 91 S. Ct. 1160, 1165, 28 L. Ed. 2d 404, 420 (1971)).

constitutional right to marital privacy.[214] Therefore, the Court reversed the conviction of a Connecticut doctor who was convicted of the crime, as an accessory, for giving advice about birth control to a married couple.[215] Like the other Teague exceptions, this exception only applies in rare circumstances. For this reason, you should avoid using new rules whenever possible.

(b) Exception: Fundamental Fairness at Trial

You can also raise a new rule of law that requires the police, prosecutor, or judge to follow a procedure in order to ensure the "fundamental fairness" of your trial,[216] and "without which the likelihood of an accurate conviction is seriously diminished."[217] To fit into this new exception, the new rule has to involve a "bedrock procedural element."[218] For example, in Gideon v. Wainwright, the Court ruled, on due process grounds, that the state needed to appoint counsel for poor defendants facing criminal charges.[219] This rule might fall under the fundamental fairness exception. By contrast, in Crawford v. Washington, the Supreme Court changed the standard for when out-of-court testimony may be admitted in trial.[220] However, the Supreme Court recently decided that the Crawford rule may not be applied retroactively because the rule does not impose an "impermissibly large risk of an inaccurate conviction"[221] and does not "constitute a previously unrecognized bedrock procedural element that is essential to the fairness of a proceeding."[222]

Keep in mind that it is very rare that a new rule of law comes within the fundamental fairness exception. The Supreme Court has indicated that it believes that courts have already discovered most of the procedures essential to a fair trial and conviction.[223] For instance, in 1981, in Arizona v. Roberson, the Supreme Court held that police interrogation after a prisoner had requested a lawyer during interrogation for a separate charge violated the Constitution.[224] In 1990, however, the Supreme Court decided that forbidding such interrogations was not essential to the fairness of the trial or to obtaining an accurate conviction.[225] Since this "new rule" did not involve any "bedrock" procedural element, the Court concluded it could not be a basis for habeas relief for any prisoner whose conviction became final before Roberson was decided. As another example, in 2005, the Supreme Court held in United States v. Booker that the federal mandatory sentencing guidelines were unconstitutional.[226] However, several circuit courts have held that this new rule does not fit under the fundamental fairness exception and may not be applied retroactively.[227]

---

214. Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 485–86, 85 S. Ct. 1678, 1682, 14 L. Ed. 2d 510, 515–16 (1965).

215. Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 486, 85 S. Ct. 1678, 1682, 14 L. Ed. 2d 510, 516 (1965); see also Richardson v. United States, 526 U.S. 813, 815, 119 S. Ct. 1707, 1709, 143 L. Ed. 2d 985, 991 (1999) (requiring the jury to unanimously agree not only that the accused committed a continuing series of violations but also which specific violations made up the continuing series for conviction under 18 U.S.C. § 848 (2006), and therefore vacating a conviction in which the jury was not unanimous in deciding which specific violations were committed).

216. Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288, 312, 109 S. Ct. 1060, 1076, 103 L. Ed. 2d 334, 357 (1989).

217. Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288, 313, 109 S. Ct. 1060, 1077, 103 L. Ed. 2d 334, 358 (1989).

218. Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288, 315, 109 S. Ct. 1060, 1078, 103 L. Ed. 2d 334, 359 (1989).

219. Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335, 342, 83 S. Ct. 792, 795, 9 L. Ed. 2d 799, 804 (1963).

220. Crawford v. Washington, 541 U.S. 36, 68–69, 124 S. Ct. 1354, 1374, 158 L. Ed. 2d 177, 203 (2004).

221. Whorton v. Bockting, 549 U.S. 406, 418, 127 S. Ct. 1173, 1182, 167 L. Ed. 2d 1, 12 (2007).

222. Whorton v. Bockting, 549 U.S. 406, 420, 127 S. Ct. 1173, 1183, 167 L. Ed. 2d 1, 13–14 (2007).

223. See, e.g., Beard v. Banks, 542 U.S. 406, 417, 124 S. Ct. 2504, 2513–14, 159 L. Ed. 2d 494, 506 (2004) (noting that the Court has "yet to find a new rule that falls under the second Teague exception"); Saffle v. Parks, 494 U.S. 484, 495, 110 S. Ct. 1257, 1264, 108 L. Ed. 2d 415, 429 (1990) (deciding that habeas petitioner's contention, that the 8th Amendment required that the jury be allowed to base its sentencing decision in a capital case upon the sympathy it felt for the defendant after hearing his mitigating evidence, did not constitute a watershed right or rule).

224. Arizona v. Roberson, 486 U.S. 675, 677, 108 S. Ct. 2093, 2096, 100 L. Ed. 2d 704, 710 (1981).

225. Butler v. McKellar, 494 U.S. 407, 416, 110 S. Ct. 1212, 1218, 108 L. Ed. 2d 347, 357 (1990) (noting that interrogating a prisoner despite his request for counsel during interrogation for a separate charge might in fact increase the likelihood of an accurate conviction).

226. United States v. Booker, 543 U.S. 220, 245–46, 125 S. Ct. 738, 756–57, 160 L. Ed. 2d 621, 651 (2005) (holding that federal sentencing guidelines are recommendations and that the sentencing court can take into account a variety of factors when deciding whether to depart from the guidelines).

227. See Lloyd v. United States, 407 F.3d 608, 611–16 (3d Cir. 2005) (determining that the rule announced in United States v. Booker was a new law and not subject to either Teague exception); see also Never Misses A Shot v. United States, 413 F.3d 781, 783–84 (8th Cir. 2005); United States v. Bellamy, 411 F.3d 1182, 1186–87 (10th Cir. 2005); Guzman v. United States, 404 F.3d 139, 143–44 (2d Cir. 2005); Varela v. United States, 400 F.3d 864, 867–68 (11th Cir. 2005); Humphress v. United States, 398 F.3d 855, 863 (6th Cir. 2005); McReynolds v. United States, 397 F.3d 479, 481 (7th Cir. 2005).

As you have seen, the Teague exceptions are very hard to meet. You should always try to base your habeas claim on old and clearly established law. If you make your claim on new law with a Teague exception, remember that even when you are basing your claim on an exception to the Teague rule, the Teague rule itself is an affirmative defense that the government must assert. You should not raise the Teague rule in your petition. Instead, you should wait to defend the government's claim that your habeas petition is based on new law. Once the government has argued your petition is based on new law, you should defend your claim by showing the law is either not new law or qualifies for one of the Teague exceptions just described.

D. Procedures for Filing a Petition for Habeas Corpus

If you experienced a violation of the Constitution, a federal statute, or a federal treaty in your arrest, trial, or sentence, you may file a federal habeas corpus claim. A successful claim will allow the court to vacate, set aside, or correct your present sentence. However, there are very strict procedural requirements you must meet in order to be successful in a habeas petition. This Part explains these procedural requirements.

Although this Part explains the federal habeas corpus procedures for both state and federal prisoners, it concentrates on the process for New York State prisoners. When the procedure differs for federal prisoners, this Section will explain the different procedure. State prisoners in other states will need to research further their state's procedures. However, you should still read and understand this Section, as many of the procedures will be the same in every state. State prisoners will use 28 U.S.C. § 2254 to file a habeas claim. Federal prisoners will use 28 U.S.C. § 2255[228] to file a habeas claim.

You must prove some important conditions in your petition. These conditions are complicated and require a great deal of attention. The conditions are (1) you must be in custody; (2) you must have exhausted all state procedures before petitioning to a federal court if you are a state prisoner, or you must have given the direct appeals court a chance to hear your petition if you are a federal prisoner; (3) you must follow all state rules and procedures correctly before petitioning to a federal court if you are a state prisoner; and (4) the petition must be filed in federal court within a specific time frame. These conditions are explained in detail in this Part. Section 5 of this Part will also discuss when you can file a second (successive) petition.

1. In Custody

When you file your petition for a writ of habeas corpus, you must be "in custody" for the conviction or sentence that you are attacking.[229] The purpose of this requirement is to ensure that you have sufficient interest in the habeas relief.[230] This is not a difficult condition to fulfill. Courts have interpreted "in custody" liberally. Actual physical custody is not necessary. You are "in custody" as long as you are presently restrained in ways that are not shared by the general public.[231] You are "in custody" if you are in prison, on parole, or on probation.[232]

---

228. Occasionally, a federal prisoner will file under 28 U.S.C. § 2241, instead of § 2255. See Part A(4) ("Which Laws Apply to Federal Habeas Corpus?") for information on when a federal prisoner would file under § 2241.

229. 28 U.S.C. §§ 2241(c)(1)–(3), 2254(a)–(b) (2006). See Carafas v. LaVallee, 391 U.S. 234, 238, 88 S. Ct. 1556, 1560, 20 L. Ed. 2d 554, 559 (1968) (noting that the federal habeas corpus statute requires that the applicant must be "in custody" when the application for habeas corpus is filed); Finkelstein v. Spitzer, 455 F.3d 131, 133 (2d Cir. 2006) (finding that federal courts will consider a habeas corpus petition from a state court judgment only when the petitioner's custody is in violation of the Constitution or laws or treaties of the United States at the time his petition is filed).

230. Hensley v. Municipal Court, 411 U.S. 345, 351, 93 S. Ct. 1571, 1574, 36 L. Ed. 2d 294, 300 (1973) ("The custody requirement of the habeas corpus statute makes the writ of habeas corpus a remedy only for severe restraints on individual liberty.").

231. Jones v. Cunningham, 371 U.S. 236, 242–43, 83 S. Ct. 373, 377, 9 L. Ed. 2d 285, 290–91 (1963) (holding that petitioner, as a parolee, was in custody within the meaning of the habeas corpus statute); Harvey v. People, 435 F. Supp. 2d 175, 177 (E.D.N.Y. 2006) (finding that a petitioner who is on parole or serving a term of supervised release is "in custody" for purposes of federal habeas corpus statutes).

232. See Rumsfeld v. Padilla, 542 U.S. 426, 437, 124 S. Ct. 2711, 2719, 159 L. Ed. 2d 513, 529 (2004) ("[W]e no longer require physical detention as a prerequisite to habeas relief."); Garlotte v. Fordice, 515 U.S. 39, 45, 115 S. Ct. 1948, 1952, 132 L. Ed. 2d 36, 43 (1995) ("[A] prisoner serving consecutive sentences is 'in custody' under any one of them for purposes of the habeas statute."); Braden v. 30th Judicial Circuit Court, 410 U.S. 484, 498–99, 93 S. Ct. 1123, 1131–32, 35 L. Ed. 2d 443, 454–55 (1973) (discussing "custody" in one state when prisoner is held in another); Jones v. Cunningham, 371 U.S. 236, 239–40, 83 S. Ct. 373, 375, 9 L. Ed. 2d 285, 289 (1963) (finding that aliens seeking entry, persons subject to enlistment in the military, and paroled prisoners are all "in custody"); Jackson v. Coalter, 337 F.3d 74, 78–79 (1st Cir. 2003) (holding that custody includes supervised probation).

If you are claiming that your sentence is illegal, you do not have to be currently serving that sentence in order to fulfill the "in custody" requirement. You are also considered "in custody" if: (1) you are contesting a consecutive sentence that you have not yet begun to serve;[233] (2) you are contesting a sentence that has been temporarily postponed because you have been released on your own recognizance;[234] or (3) you are out on bail pending trial or appeal.[235] In fact, you may have already served the sentence imposed for the conviction being challenged. You are still "in custody" as long as you are serving a sentence that is ordered to run consecutively to your challenged sentence.[236] In addition, you are restrained, and thus "in custody," if you are required to appear in court for trial and cannot leave without permission.[237] At least one court has been willing to extend the definition of "in custody" to minors who may suffer some future collateral consequences.[238]

2. Exhaustion of State Remedies and Direct Appeal

Before filing a habeas petition, if you are a state prisoner, you must "exhaust" all available state procedures that can correct your unconstitutional conviction or sentence.[239] To "exhaust state remedies" means you must do all that you can to get the state courts to change your conviction or sentence before you can petition a federal court. The purpose of this exhaustion requirement is to give the state courts a chance to correct any mistakes of federal law and to respect the state court's ability to conduct judicial proceedings.[240] Federal habeas petitions are based on federal law. This exhaustion requirement allows the state court to correctly apply federal law before the federal court steps in.

To meet the exhaustion requirement, you must do two things: (1) give the highest court of the state an opportunity to hear your federal claims; and (2) present these claims to the highest court of the state fairly (called fair presentation). The following two sections discuss these two exhaustion requirements. Remember, there are very few exceptions to exhaustion, and these will be discussed below only as a brief outline. It is not safe to rely on these exceptions to exhaustion; you must exhaust state remedies for all your federal claims or you risk forfeiting them!

---

233. Peyton v. Rowe, 391 U.S. 54, 67, 88 S. Ct. 1549, 1556, 20 L. Ed. 2d 426, 435 (1968) (holding that a prisoner serving consecutive sentences is "in custody" under any one of them for purposes of the federal habeas corpus statute, even where he is scheduled to serve one of them); Frazier v. Wilkinson, 842 F.2d 42 (2d Cir. 1988) (finding that habeas corpus may be used to challenge a sentence that is consecutive to a sentence currently being served where there is reason to believe that the jurisdiction that obtained the consecutive sentence will seek its enforcement).

234. See Hensley v. Municipal Court, 411 U.S. 345, 351, 93 S. Ct. 1571, 1575, 36 L. Ed. 2d 294, 300 (1973) (holding that a person is "in custody" for habeas purposes when subject to restraints and rules not shared by the general public); Eltayeb v. Ingham, 950 F. Supp. 95, 99 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) (finding that the "in custody" requirement for habeas review includes actual, physical custody and release on bail or personal recognizance following actual, physical custody).

235. Lefkowitz v. Newsome, 420 U.S. 283, 286 n.2, 95 S. Ct. 886, 888 n.2, 43 L. Ed. 2d 196, 200 n.2 (1975) (noting that petitioner was recognized as "in custody" when he was released on bail pending final disposition of his case); United States v. Arthur, 367 F.3d 119, 121–22 (2d Cir. 2004) (finding that defendant who was free on bail awaiting surrender date on sentence for federal convictions for mail fraud was in custody and therefore able to seek habeas relief).

236. Garlotte v. Fordice, 515 U.S. 39, 45–46, 115 S. Ct. 1948, 1952, 132 L. Ed. 2d 36, 43 (1995) (deciding that petitioner who is serving consecutive state sentences is "in custody" and may attack the sentence scheduled to run first, even after it has expired, until all sentences have been served); see also United States v. Arthur, 367 F.3d 119 (2d Cir. 2004) (finding that defendant who was free on bail awaiting surrender date on sentence for federal convictions for mail fraud was in custody and therefore able to seek habeas relief).

237. Hensley v. Municipal Court, 411 U.S. 345, 348–49, 93 S. Ct. 1571, 1573–74, 36 L. Ed. 2d 294, 298–99 (1973); see also United States v. Arthur, 367 F.3d 119 (2d Cir. 2004) (finding that defendant who was free on bail awaiting surrender date on sentence for federal convictions for mail fraud was in custody and therefore able to seek habeas relief).

238. See A.M. v. Butler 360 F.3d 787, 790 (7th Cir. 2004) (finding that a declaration of juvenile delinquency without any further restrictions does not bar a habeas petition when the juvenile will continue to face adverse consequences stemming from the declaration); D.S.A. v. Circuit Court, 942 F.2d 1143, 1150 (7th Cir. 1991) (holding that minor's release from custody did not bar consideration of habeas petition even though the sentence had already been served where underlying conviction had sufficient collateral consequences such as consideration of the conviction in future juvenile proceedings). But see Spencer v. Kemna, 523 U.S. 1, 14, 118 S. Ct. 978, 986, 140 L. Ed. 2d 43, 54 (1998) (determining that a revocation of parole, where defendant has since been released, does not have sufficient collateral consequences to warrant consideration of habeas petition).

239. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(b)–(c) (2006).

240. Rose v. Lundy, 455 U.S. 509, 518–19, 102 S. Ct. 1198, 1203, 71 L. Ed. 2d 379 (1982) (granting that a petitioner seeking release from state custody on account of a wrongful conviction must first exhaust state judicial remedies before filing a habeas petition).

While exhausting your claims in state court, it is important to keep in mind the one-year time limit for bringing federal habeas claims.[241] Your state may allow you more than one year to file the state procedures necessary to exhaust a claim, but a longer state time limit does not affect the federal time limit. You will still only have one year to file your federal petition.[242] You must exhaust all of the claims in your habeas petition in state court first. If you fail to exhaust the process for just one of the claims in state court, and then proceed to federal court, the law requires the federal court to dismiss your entire habeas petition.[243] But if your petition is dismissed, it will be dismissed without prejudice. This means that you can leave the federal court to exhaust your claims in state court. Then, once your claims are exhausted, you may resubmit your petition in federal court, and you will not be prejudiced for filing a second or successive petition.[244] But most often, such a dismissal still affects your one-year time limit.

Most courts have found that a state court challenge on a specific claim will toll[245] the time limit for your entire habeas petition.[246] This means that, in most cases, the time limit will temporarily be stopped on your entire habeas petition, not just for the claims you are making in your present case. In addition, in rare circumstances, the court may issue a "stay and abeyance" order for your dismissed petition,[247] which means you will have a short amount of time to present your unexhausted claims to the state court while your time limit is tolled for your entire petition.[248] If the district court says that your petition contains exhausted and unexhausted claims, you should request a stay and abeyance and explain to the district court that you are concerned that your one-year time limit will expire before you are able to resubmit your fully exhausted petition. In some circumstances you may also be able to delete the unexhausted claims from your petition and proceed only with the exhausted claims.[249] You will need to determine whether proceeding in federal court immediately without the unexhausted claims is a better option than leaving to exhaust the claims in state court and risking the time limit expiring for all your claims in federal court.

---

241. For more information about time limits for bringing federal habeas claims, see Part D(4) ("Time Limit") of this Chapter.

242. The Supreme Court has been strict in enforcing time limits on federal habeas petitions. Bowles v. Russell, 551 U.S. 205, 213, 127 S. Ct. 2360, 2366, 168 L. Ed. 2d 96, 104 (2007) (declining a prisoner's habeas claim because it was filed too late, even though it was filed within the time limit specified by the district court).

243. A petition that contains both exhausted and unexhausted claims is dismissed without prejudice. This means that the court will allow you to resubmit your petition when every claim has been exhausted. See Rhines v. Weber, 544 U.S. 269, 273–74, 125 S. Ct. 1528, 1532–33, 161 L. Ed. 2d 440, 449 (2005) (holding that petitioners who present habeas petitions with exhausted and unexhausted claims should be allowed to submit the unexhausted claims to state court and then return to federal court without prejudice to present "perfected petitions"); Rose v. Lundy, 455 U.S. 509, 518–19, 102 S. Ct. 1198, 1203, 71 L. Ed. 2d 379, 387 (1982) (requiring "total exhaustion" of claims in state courts).

244. See Part D(5) ("Successive Petitions") of this Chapter for more information on successive petitions.

245. "Tolling" means that the running of the time period is paused. Time that is tolled does not count toward the one-year time limit. See Part D(4) ("Time Limits") for more information on time limits and tolling.

246. See Sweger v. Chesney, 294 F.3d 506, 520 (3d Cir. 2002) (holding that "a properly filed state post-conviction proceeding challenging the judgment tolls the AEDPA statute of limitations during the pendency of the state proceeding"); Carter v. Litscher, 275 F.3d 663, 665 (7th Cir. 2001) ("Any properly filed collateral challenge to the judgment tolls the time to seek federal collateral review.").

247. See Rhines v. Weber, 544 U.S. 269, 278, 125 S. Ct. 1528, 1535, 161 L. Ed. 2d 440, 452 (2005) (holding that federal courts should issue a stay and abeyance for a mixed petition if petitioner had "good cause" for failing to exhaust the unexhausted claims, the unexhausted claims are "potentially meritorious," and there is no indication that the petitioner has engaged in tactics with the purpose of delaying the proceedings).

248. See Rhines v. Weber, 544 U.S. 269, 278, 125 S. Ct. 1528, 1535, 161 L. Ed. 2d 440, 452 (2005) (determining that if a stay and abeyance is issued, district courts should "place reasonable time limits on a petitioner's trip to state court and back"). See Part D(4) for more information on tolling and time limits.

249. See Rhines v. Weber, 544 U.S. 269, 278, 125 S. Ct. 1528, 1535, 161 L. Ed. 2d 440, 452 (2005) ("[I]f a petitioner presents a district court with a mixed petition and the court determines that stay and abeyance is inappropriate, the court should allow the petitioner to delete the unexhausted claims and to proceed with the exhausted claims if dismissal of the entire petition would unreasonably impair the petitioner's right to obtain federal relief.").

(a) Opportunity for Highest State Court to Hear Your Federal Claims[250]

Before you can petition for federal habeas corpus in federal court, you must first present each claim you want to present in your petition to the highest court in your state, either through the state appellate process (often called "direct appeal") or through a state post-conviction procedure (often called "collateral attack").[251] The difference between a direct appeal and a collateral attack is explained more fully in Part A(1) ("What Is Habeas Corpus?") of this Chapter. A key point is that you must provide the state court with the opportunity to rule on each of your claims before you submit them to federal court. It is not enough that you presented each claim to just the intermediate appellate court in your state. This process, in which you pursue all state remedies available before you can have access to federal court, is called "exhaustion." You only have to present your federal claims to the highest state court once—you do not have to do it both on direct appeal and in state post-conviction procedures. Most states call their highest court the "State Supreme Court." However, in New York, the "New York Supreme Court" is actually a lower court, and the "New York Court of Appeals" is the highest state court.[252]

You can present your claim to the highest state court in one of two ways. First, if you have not appealed your conviction yet and still have time to do so, you can contest your conviction through the state appellate process.[253] You have a right to appeal to an intermediate appellate court.[254] If the appellate court rejects your claim, you should then "request leave"[255] to appeal to the state's highest court. Whether the highest state court grants your leave to appeal and then rejects your claim, or simply denies your leave to appeal, you have satisfied the exhaustion requirement by allowing the state court a chance to rule on your claim. You do not need to petition the U.S. Supreme Court for certiorari. In other words, your petition can be reviewed by a lower federal court without having to petition the Supreme Court on direct review first,[256] and you do not need to pursue your claim through a state post-conviction remedy as long as that claim was raised on direct appeal.[257]

If you missed the deadline for a direct appeal, or if you simply neglected to raise a claim in your direct appeal, you must pursue your claim through a state post-conviction procedure to satisfy the exhaustion requirement.[258] In New York, you can choose between two post-conviction remedies: an Article 440 motion[259]

---

250. The Supreme Court held that, even when a state's appellate rules do not automatically give you the right to a hearing in your state's highest court, you must still present all of your claims to that court in order to exhaust your state remedies. In Illinois, for example, a party must petition the Illinois Supreme Court for leave to appeal a decision of the intermediate appellate court. Even though the granting of such a petition for review is not guaranteed, the Supreme Court held that petitioner had not exhausted his claims because the Illinois Supreme Court had not been able to review them. See O'Sullivan v. Boerckel, 526 U.S. 838, 848, 119 S. Ct. 1728, 1734, 144 L. Ed. 2d 1, 11 (1999) (holding that claims not submitted to the state's court of last resort in a petition for discretionary review are deemed to be procedurally defaulted).

251. See O'Sullivan v. Boerckel, 526 U.S. 838, 848, 119 S. Ct. 1728, 1734, 144 L. Ed. 2d 1, 11 (1999) (holding that claims not submitted to the state's court of last resort in a petition for discretionary review are deemed to be procedurally defaulted); Roberts v. LaVallee, 389 U.S. 40, 88 S. Ct. 194, 19 L. Ed. 2d 41 (1967) (determining that repetitious appeals applications to state courts are not required when defendant has already exhausted his remedies to the state courts); see also Grey v. Hoke, 933 F.2d 117, 119–20 (2d Cir. 1991) (holding that petitioner's failure to specifically raise his sentencing and prosecutorial misconduct claims in state court appeals barred him from making these claims in federal habeas proceedings).

252. See Chapter 2 of the JLM, "Introduction to Legal Research," for more information on the court system.

253. See Part C of Chapter 9 of the JLM, "Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence," for an explanation of the time limits for appealing your conviction.

254. See Chapter 9 of the JLM, "Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence," for a discussion of state appeals.

255. To "request leave" means to ask for permission.

256. See, e.g., Ulster County Court v. Allen, 442 U.S. 140, 149 n.7, 99 S. Ct. 2213, 2220 n.7, 60 L. Ed. 2d 777, 787 n.7 (1979) (determining that petitioner did not lose federal power of review by failing to seek certiorari from the Supreme Court); Smaldone v. Senkowski, 273 F.3d 133, 138 (2d Cir. 2001) (granting that the exhaustion requirement does not require petitioner to seek certiorari from the United States Supreme Court before pursuing a habeas remedy).

257. Castille v. People, 489 U.S. 346, 350, 109 S. Ct. 1056, 1059, 103 L. Ed. 2d 380, 385 (1989); see also Daye v. Attorney General, 696 F.2d 186, 191 n.3 (2d Cir. 1982) ("A petitioner need not give the state court system more than one full opportunity to rule on his claims; if he has presented his claims to the highest state court on direct appeal he need not also seek state collateral relief.").

258. See, e.g., Castille v. Peoples, 489 U.S. 346, 351, 109 S. Ct. 1056, 1060, 103 L. Ed. 2d 380, 386 (1989) (stating that a claim must be "fairly presented" to the state courts to meet the exhaustion requirement, and finding that petitioner's claim was not exhausted because he had raised it for the first time in the state's highest court on a discretionary review).

or a petition for state habeas corpus.[260] You should generally use an Article 440 motion because it is the most modern and has the best-developed state post-conviction procedure.[261] If a New York Supreme Court (the state trial court) denies the claim presented in your Article 440 motion, you should ask for leave to appeal to an intermediate appellate division. Then, if the appellate division does not allow you to appeal, or grants leave to appeal but then rejects your claim, you still have given the highest state court an opportunity to decide your claim. You have fulfilled this part of the exhaustion requirement.

(b) Fair Presentation

In order to exhaust your state remedies, you must "reasonably inform" the state court about your federal claim and thus provide the court with "fair presentation" of the federal claim. This means you must reasonably present your claim as a federal one to the highest state court before you can raise it in federal habeas proceedings. You must explicitly say that you are raising a federal claim or alleged violation of the Constitution.[262] When you file a direct appeal or collateral attack in state court, your appeal/attack must mention the same relevant facts and legal theory that you will later include in your petition for federal habeas corpus.[263] While it is important to provide both the factual basis and legal principles on which your claim relies, some courts have been flexible in the factual requirement.[264] It is not enough to discuss a state claim that is similar to a federal claim. The Supreme Court has held that you must make specific references to the federal law that forms the basis of each of your claims.[265] Thus, the Court has held that a petitioner does not fairly present a claim if the petition or brief does not alert the state court that the claim is federal in nature.[266]

These facts and legal principles must show the court that your claim rests, either entirely or partially, on the Constitution.[267] This puts the state court on notice that you are raising a federal claim. You may satisfy this requirement by:

(1) Citing a specific provision of the Constitution;[268]
(2) Relying on federal constitutional precedents;[269]

---

259. Article 440 motions are discussed in Chapter 20 of the JLM.

260. New York State habeas corpus procedure is explained in Chapter 21 of the JLM.

261. The New York legislature designed the Article 440 motion to simplify and to combine all of the previously existing post-conviction remedies, including state habeas corpus. See Chapter 20, Part B, of the JLM for a discussion of why New York courts prefer Article 440 motions over petitions for state habeas corpus. See also Chapter 14, "The Prison Litigation Reform Act," for a discussion of exhausting your administrative remedies.

262. See Duncan v. Henry, 513 U.S. 364, 365–66, 115 S. Ct. 887, 888, 130 L. Ed. 2d 865, 868 (1995) ("If state courts are to be given the opportunity to correct alleged violations of prisoners' federal rights, they must surely be alerted to the fact that the prisoners are asserting claims under the United States Constitution."); see also Schneider v. Delo, 85 F.3d 335, 339 (8th Cir. 1996) (determining that a federal claim must be stated in state court).

263. See Pappageorge v. Sumner, 688 F.2d 1294, 1295 (9th Cir. 1982) (holding that petitioner had not exhausted his state remedies because the claim presented to the federal court was not substantially similar to the claim presented in state court due to a new key factual allegation that was not part of the record before the state court or raised before it).

264. See Davis v. Silva, 511 F.3d 1005, 1010–11 (9th Cir. 2008) (holding that a claim was fairly presented when the factual basis of the petitioner's claim could be determined from the legal materials provided, including citations to relevant cases, statutes, and regulations and a basic factual description).

265. Baldwin v. Reese, 541 U.S. 27, 32, 124 S. Ct. 1347, 1351, 158 L. Ed. 2d 64, 71 (2004) (rejecting the idea that judges, on appeal, can find for themselves the claims based on federal law, and stating that ordinarily a state prisoner does not "fairly present" a claim to a state court if that court must read beyond a petition or a brief (or a similar document) that does not alert it to the presence of a federal claim).

266. Baldwin v. Reese, 541 U.S. 27, 32, 124 S. Ct. 1347, 1351, 158 L. Ed. 2d 64, 71 (2004).

267. See Picard v. Connor, 404 U.S. 270, 277–78, 92 S. Ct. 509, 513, 30 L. Ed. 2d 438, 444–45 (1971) (dismissing habeas claim because petitioner failed to name a constitutional claim, even though he raised all the facts of his claim in state court). You must clearly tell the state court of the federal nature of the claim and permit the state court to decide the federal issue squarely. See Verdin v. O'Leary, 972 F.2d 1467, 1474 (7th Cir. 1992); see also Aparicio v. Artuz, 269 F.3d 78. 89 (2d Cir. 2001) (finding that petitioner must present the same federal constitutional claims that he will urge upon the federal courts in his habeas petition to the highest court in that state in order to exhaust the claims).

268. See Scarpa v. DuBois, 38 F.3d 1, 6–7 (1st Cir. 1994) (citing Gagne v. Fair, 835 F.2d 6, 7 (1st Cir. 1987) (finding that state court was sufficiently alerted because the defendant cited the 6th Amendment by name); see also Daye v. Attorney General, 696 F.2d 186, 192 (2d Cir. 1982) ("Obviously if petitioner has cited the state courts to the specific provision of the Constitution relied on in his habeas petition, he will have fairly presented his legal basis.").

269. See Scarpa v. DuBois, 38 F.3d 1, 6 (1st Cir. 1994) (quoting Gagne v. Fair, 835 F.2d 6, 7 (1st Cir. 1987)); see also Abdurrahman v. Henderson, 897 F.2d 71, 73 (2d Cir. 1990) (finding that defendant's citation to Strickland v.

(3) Alerting the state court of the claim's federal nature through your claim's substance;[270] or
(4) Claiming a particular right guaranteed by the Constitution.[271]

To provide a fair presentation to the state, you must clearly indicate you are claiming that the Constitution has been violated.[272] For example, one petitioner claimed in state court that the admission of certain evidence "infringed on his right to present a defense and receive a fair trial" but made reference to a state evidentiary law without mentioning any federal constitutional rights.[273] While the petitioner's federal due process rights may have been implicated, the court held that the federal law part of his claim was not "fairly presented" to the state court.[274] While you do not need to cite "book and verse on the federal [C]onstitution,"[275] some degree of specificity in describing the federal relevance is required.[276] You should be specific in explaining the violation of a federal law to the state court.

Federal courts generally consider remedies to be exhausted when you have "fairly presented" a claim one time to the highest state court.[277] For example, if you raised a particular claim on direct appeal to the highest state court, you do not have to raise it again in state post-conviction proceedings.[278] The state court does not need to fully consider your claim in order to be reasonably informed that the claim relies on federal law. In short, just be sure that you present the same factual arguments and legal theories regarding a federal claim in both your state claims and federal habeas claims.

So, what do you do if you discover new evidence about your claim or become better acquainted with the law concerning your claim after presenting your claim to the state court? You can, and should, strengthen your claim by adding this new factual and legal material in your federal petition. Explain to the court that you are simply supplementing your pending claim, not adding a new claim. This may also give you an additional benefit by giving you more time to file your habeas petition.[279] However, be aware that supplementing a federal petition with new information may lead to the dismissal of your original habeas claim. If the new information that you wish to include in your habeas petition was not presented to the state courts, and state relief is now available to you, then the federal courts will probably dismiss your federal claim.[280]

It is important to remember to go to state court first in order to exhaust all claims before filing in federal court. Any petitioner who files first in federal court, goes back to exhaust, and then tries to amend the federal petition runs a great risk of having the petition dismissed as untimely. Remember, you have a one-

---

Washington in a brief to the Appellate Division was sufficient to alert the court that defendant was raising a federal claim regarding ineffective assistance of counsel, since Strickland is the leading Supreme Court case on that issue).

270. See Scarpa v. DuBois, 38 F.3d 1, 6 (1st Cir. 1994) (quoting Gagne v. Fair, 835 F.2d 6, 7 (1st Cir. 1987)); see also Jackson v. Edwards, 404 F.3d 612, 619 (2d Cir. 2005) (finding petitioner had fairly presented his claim to the state court because "the substance of the federal habeas corpus claim [was] clearly raised and ruled on in state court" even though petitioner had failed to explicitly name it as a federal claim). But see Baldwin v. Reese, 541 U.S. 27, 32–34, 124 S. Ct. 1347, 1351–52, 158 L. Ed. 2d 64, 71–72 (2004) (holding that the federal nature of the claim must be apparent in the brief or petition, not in the opinion of a lower court).

271. See Scarpa v. DuBois, 38 F.3d 1, 6 (1st Cir. 1994) (quoting Gagne v. Fair, 835 F.2d 6, 7 (1st Cir. 1987)).

272. See Duncan v. Henry, 513 U.S. 364, 365–66, 115 S. Ct. 887, 888, 130 L. Ed. 2d 865, 868 (1995) (noting that "[i]f state courts are to be given the opportunity to correct alleged violations of prisoners' federal rights, they must surely be alerted to the fact that the prisoners are asserting claims under the United States Constitution").

273. Johnson v. Zenon, 88 F.3d 828, 831 (9th Cir. 1996).

274. Johnson v. Zenon, 88 F.3d 828, 831 (9th Cir. 1996).

275. Picard v. Connor, 404 U.S. 270, 278, 92 S. Ct. 509, 513, 30 L. Ed. 2d 438, 445 (1971) (quoting Daugharty v. Gladden, 257 F.2d 750, 758 (9th Cir. 1958)).

276. See Beauchamp v. Murphy, 37 F.3d 700, 704 (1st Cir. 1994) (finding that petitioner did raise a federal claim even though the claim was not contained in the paragraph heading and that the court should look to "substance rather than form").

277. Picard v. Connor, 404 U.S. 270, 275, 92 S. Ct. 509, 512, 30 L. Ed. 2d 438, 443 (1971) ("[O]nce the federal claim has been fairly presented to the state courts, the exhaustion requirement is satisfied.").

278. However, if you raise a claim for the first and only time in a petition for discretionary review to a state appellate court, you will not meet the exhaustion requirement. See Castille v. Peoples, 489 U.S. 346, 351, 109 S. Ct. 1056, 1060, 103 L. Ed. 2d 380, 386 (1989) (stating that presentation of a new claim to a state's highest court on discretionary review does not constitute "fair representation" for purposes of determining that claim's exhaustion).

279. See 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(1)(D) (2006). See Part (D)(4) ("Time Limit") of this Chapter for more information on the one-year time limit in which you must file your federal habeas corpus petition. The time limit may also run from the time that new facts could have been discovered through due diligence.

280. See, e.g., Graham v. Johnson, 94 F.3d 958, 970–71 (5th Cir. 1996) (determining that, even though the state waived the exhaustion requirement, the petitioner's extensive new evidence was mostly factual and needed to be presented to state courts).

year time limit to file your federal habeas petition. Furthermore, your state petition could be your only opportunity to have a judge thoroughly review your claims on the merits. AEDPA gives federal courts very little room to disagree with state court rulings on your claims. AEDPA forbids federal courts from granting a writ of habeas corpus unless the state court's consideration of your claims was "contrary to, or involved an unreasonable application of, clearly established Federal law" or if the decision was based on an "unreasonable determination of the facts."[281]

(c) Exceptions to Exhaustion

There are a few narrow exceptions to the exhaustion requirement. First, you do not need to seek relief in state court if state remedies are "unavailable" or "ineffective."[282] For example, in North Carolina, a state statute did not allow a defendant who had already been convicted to raise an issue in a post-conviction proceeding if he could have raised the issue earlier. Since he could no longer raise the issue, there was no state remedy available to him. The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals thus held that the defendant was not barred from seeking habeas corpus relief.[283] In another case, a court found that state remedies were ineffective to protect the rights of a prisoner because he would be raising the same exact constitutional issue to the state supreme court that a fellow prisoner had already litigated and lost. In this situation, bringing the same issue before the court would most likely be unsuccessful and would have wasted the resources of the state system. So the court ruled that he did not need to raise the issue again in a post-conviction proceeding and exhaust his state court remedies.[284]

Another exception to the exhaustion requirement may occur after an unusually long delay in receiving a ruling on an appeal.[285] Some federal courts do not require exhaustion when the state courts have unconstitutionally delayed hearing the prisoner's appeal for a few years or more.[286] In at least one case, exhaustion of state remedies was not required because the prisoner's jury misconduct claim hinged on the testimony of a juror who was elderly, marginally incompetent, and in poor health.[287]

In spite of these exceptions, federal courts do not usually excuse the exhaustion requirement; they trust the state courts to be able to address all of your claims sufficiently. And even if a court excuses your failure to exhaust state remedies, you will likely end up with another problem, known as "procedural default."[288] In one case, a New York prisoner was found to have exhausted state remedies even though he did not explicitly raise the issue on direct appeal.[289] The court went on to say that state remedies would also have been unavailable to him under the New York State law, which did not allow the prisoner to raise a claim in a collateral attack (Article 440 motion) when he failed to raise the claim on direct appeal in state court.[290]

---

281. The standard that federal courts use to review habeas petitions is contained in 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1) –(2) (2006). For more information about this standard, see Part B(4) ("Standard for Getting Relief") of this Chapter.

282. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(b)(1)(B) (2006).

283. Stem v. Turner, 370 F.2d 895, 897 (4th Cir. 1966).

284. Evans v. Cunningham, 335 F.2d 491, 493–94 (4th Cir. 1964).

285. See Montgomery v. Meloy, 90 F.3d 1200, 1205–06 (7th Cir. 1996) (citing Lane v. Richards, 957 F.2d 363, 365 (7th Cir. 1992), for the idea that an excessive delay in receiving a ruling on a state post-conviction application satisfies the exhaustion requirement, but finding that this was not the case here).

286. Federal courts have not required exhaustion when the prisoner argues that the state courts have unconstitutionally delayed hearing the prisoner's appeal. The delay must be unusually long in order to fit within this exception. It is unlikely that a one-year delay would be enough to waive the exhaustion requirement, but a two-year delay might be. See Harris v. Champion, 15 F.3d 1538, 1556 (10th Cir. 1994) (determining that a "delay in adjudicating a direct criminal appeal beyond two years from the filing of the notice of appeal gives rise to a presumption that the state appellate process is ineffective"); Calhoun v. Farley, 913 F. Supp. 1218, 1221 (N.D. Ind. 1995) (holding that sufficient time had passed to excuse the need for exhausting state remedies where no action had been taken by the state or by the prisoner for almost two years on prisoner's petition for post-conviction relief); Geames v. Henderson, 725 F. Supp. 681, 685 (E.D.N.Y. 1989) (finding that a delay of three and a half years is excessive when the "[c]ourt views the issues on appeal as no more complex than in most criminal appeals").

287. Simmons v. Blodgett, 910 F. Supp. 1519, 1524 (W.D. Wash. 1996) ("Because petitioner's ability to prove his claim continues to diminish rapidly over time, and is at risk of being lost, justice requires that his habeas petition be heard expeditiously.").

288. Procedural default is explained in Part D(3) ("Procedural Default") of this Chapter.

289. The prisoner filed a petition for federal habeas corpus on the ground that his confession was involuntary, even though he had not raised the issue of voluntariness on direct appeal. However, he was found to have adequately exhausted his state remedies because the judge had indirectly ruled on that issue through an evidentiary determination. Quartararo v. Mantello, 715 F. Supp. 449, 464 (E.D.N.Y. 1989), aff'd, 888 F.2d 126 (2d Cir. 1989).

290. See Quartararo v. Mantello, 715 F. Supp. 449, 464 (E.D.N.Y. 1989), aff'd, 888 F.2d 126 (2d Cir. 1989). See Chapter 20 of the JLM for a discussion of N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.10(2)(c).

Since the prisoner could not raise the claim in a collateral attack, it would be useless for him to return to the state court, and so the federal court could excuse his failure to exhaust the claim. However, the federal court will probably still bar his habeas petition because he committed procedural default by failing to raise the claim on direct appeal as state law required him to do.[291] So even though this failure helped the prisoner avoid the exhaustion requirement, the same failure could still prevent him from getting his writ of habeas corpus.[292] In short, you should not rely on exceptions to the exhaustion requirement because they are rarely granted.

(d) What Happens If You Do Not Exhaust State Remedies

If you present your claim to a federal court before you have exhausted all your state remedies, the court may look at the merits of your claim anyway. You are taking a risk here because if the court believes that your claim is without merit, it may deny you relief once and for all, even though you have not finished presenting your claim to the lower courts.[293] Otherwise, the court will reject your petition for not exhausting state remedies, either with or without looking at the merits, and you will need to finish presenting it to the state courts in order to fulfill the exhaustion requirement. This Subsection describes what you should do if a federal court will not consider your petition because you have not exhausted your state remedies and then dismisses your petition without prejudice to allow you to exhaust your facts and claims in the state court.

Upon dismissal, first you should check to see if the state has waived the exhaustion requirement in your case.[294] A federal court will never assume that the state waived the exhaustion requirement in your case just because the state did not insist on exhaustion.[295] There must be an express statement by an authorized state attorney saying that the exhaustion requirement in your case has been waived, otherwise there is no waiver.

If the state has not given you a waiver, you must return to state court and seek relief there. Remember the one-year time limit! To ensure your claims will not later be barred from federal review because of the limitations period, you can ask the federal district court to hold your habeas petition in abeyance (delay the federal proceeding) while you return to state court to exhaust your state remedies. You should explain to the federal court that you are concerned that you will pass the statute of limitations, so you want a "stay and abeyance" order to ensure that you will be able to return to federal court after exhausting your state remedies. You also have to offer to dismiss your unexhausted claims in federal court.[296] Often courts issue a stay and abeyance order that will allow you to return to state court to exhaust remedies without fear of the one-year limitations period expiring.[297] Absent cause for equitable tolling (see the explanation of tolling in Part D(4)), the court is not required to warn a pro se litigant that his federal claims would be time-barred

---

291. See Daye v. Attorney General, 696 F.2d 186, 190 n.3 (2d Cir. 1982) (en banc) (explaining that failure to comply with a state rule, resulting in a procedural default that bars, under state law, the subsequent assertion of a challenge to the conviction, may also preclude federal habeas through the doctrine of procedural forfeiture unless the petitioner can demonstrate that there was "cause" for his failure to comply with the state procedure and that "prejudice" resulted).

292. See, e.g., Castille v. Peoples, 489 U.S. 346, 351–52, 109 S. Ct. 1056, 1060, 103 L. Ed. 2d 380, 386–387 (1989) (stating that a claim must be fairly presented to the state courts to meet the exhaustion requirement); Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288, 298–99, 109 S. Ct. 1060, 1069, 103 L. Ed. 2d 334, 348 (1989) (finding that a procedural default does not prevent consideration of a habeas petition unless the state court "clearly and expressly" stated that its judgment rests on a state procedural bar (citing Harris v. Reed, 489 U.S. 255, 263, 109 S. Ct. 1038, 1043, 103 L. Ed. 2d 308 (1989))).

293. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(b)(2) (2006). But see Glenn v. Bartlett, 98 F.3d 721, 725 (2d Cir. 1996) (explaining that the court's consideration of the merits of a claim does not mean that it excuses any procedural bar that should have prevented the case from coming before a federal court).

294. "Waived" means "decided not to apply." A state waiver of a requirement means that you do not have to fulfill the requirement.

295. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(b)(3) (2006); see Lurie v. Wittner, 228 F.3d 113, 123 (2d Cir. 2000) (noting that state waivers of exhaustion are disfavored and that such a waiver must be made expressly).

296. Pliler v. Ford, 542 U.S. 225, 230–31, 124 S. Ct. 2441, 2445, 159 L. Ed. 2d 338, 347 (2004) (describing the Ninth Circuit's procedure for granting a stay and abeyance, under which the unexhausted claims are dismissed, resolved in state court, and then re-added to the federal court claims while the federal court claims that were already exhausted in state court remain pending).

297. Rhines v. Weber, 544 U.S. 269, 278, 125 S. Ct. 1528, 1535, 161 L. Ed. 2d 440, 452 (2005) (directing that federal courts should issue a stay and abeyance for a mixed petition if petitioner had "good cause" for failing to exhaust the unexhausted claims, the unexhausted claims are "potentially meritorious," and there is no indication that the petitioner has engaged in tactics with the purpose of delaying the proceedings); see, e.g., Anthony v. Cambra, 236 F.3d 568, 574 (9th Cir. 2000) (agreeing to consider petitioner's proper federal habeas claim as if it had been filed on the date that he originally filed an improper claim because the district court had incorrectly dismissed the original claim for having both unexhausted and exhausted claims, instead of allowing petitioner to resubmit his claim with only the exhausted claims, as was customary in that circuit).

upon his return to federal court if he opted to dismiss the petitions without prejudice and return to state court to exhaust all of his claims.[298]

If the time limit to raise the unexhausted claim in state court has run out, look for an exception to the exhaustion requirement.[299] Because such exceptions are rarely successful, you should use this argument only as a last resort. If the time limit has not run out, file as quickly as possible in state court so that tolling will apply.[300] Once you re-file in state court and satisfy the exhaustion requirement, if your claims are dismissed, you can still re-file a federal habeas petition in federal court if your time to do so has not run out (requesting a stay and abeyance order beforehand will ensure that your time has not run in federal court). This petition—which follows your earlier petition that was dismissed by the district court without prejudice—will not count as a successive habeas petition and will not be subject to dismissal for that reason.[301]

Dismissal of a federal habeas petition for failing to exhaust and running over the one-year time limit can be very harmful because of the strict timelines that AEDPA imposes on habeas petitions. Therefore, make sure you understand this, and that you have complied with the two requirements of exhaustion: (1) you have given the highest state court an opportunity to hear your claim; and (2) you have fairly presented each claim by identifying the facts and the federal law supporting it to the highest state court.

3. Procedural Default

If you present a habeas claim to the federal court that has not been presented to the state court or federal appeals court, your claim may be in "procedural default,"[302] and the federal court will be barred from hearing your claim.[303] If you are a federal prisoner, you can avoid procedural default by raising every habeas claim in your direct appeal. In some circumstances, you may be required to have raised the claims at your trial (for example, by making appropriate objections) to be able to raise the claims in your direct appeal.[304] State prisoners can avoid procedural default by raising every claim in state court. In many cases, state prisoners will be required to have raised claims at trial, through motions or objections, to raise the claims on direct review.[305] State prisoners must be certain to raise all claims in all state collateral proceedings, too.[306]

---

298. Pliler v. Ford, 542 U.S. 225, 231, 124, S. Ct. 2441, 2446, 159 L. Ed. 2d 338, 348 (2004).

299. See Part D(2)(c) ("Exceptions to Exhaustion") of this Chapter.

300. Tolling is discussed in Part D(4) ("Time Limit") of this Chapter.

301. See Slack v. McDaniel, 529 U.S. 473, 478, 120 S. Ct. 1595, 1601, 146 L. Ed. 2d 542, 551 (2000). This issue is further discussed in this Chapter at Part D(5) ("Successive Petitions").

302. 28 U.S.C. § 2254 (b)(1), (c) (2006).

303. See United States ex rel. Redding v. Godinez, 900 F. Supp. 945, 948–50 (N.D. Ill. 1995) (finding procedural default where petitioner did not raise claims during direct appeal, during state petition for post-conviction relief, or during state petition to appeal from denial of post-conviction relief); see also House v. Bell 547 U.S. 518, 522, 126 S. Ct. 2064, 2068, 165 L. Ed. 2d 1, 12 (2006) ("Out of respect for the finality of state-court judgments federal habeas courts, as a general rule, are closed to claims that state courts would consider defaulted.").

304. Some kinds of claims do not have to be raised at trial to be validly raised on direct appeal. For example, you may bring an ineffective assistance of counsel claim in a § 2255 motion even if you did not raise the issue on direct appeal. See Massaro v. United States, 538 U.S. 500, 504, 123 S. Ct. 1690, 1694, 155 L. Ed. 2d 714, 720 (2003) (holding that "an ineffective-assistance-of-counsel claim may be brought in a collateral proceeding under § 2255, whether or not the petitioner could have raised the claim on direct appeal"); see also 28 U.S.C. § 2255 (2006).

305. Before your trial ends, you must object to any errors that occurred at trial in order to preserve these issues for review on appeal. See Wainwright v. Sykes, 433 U.S. 72, 90–91, 97 S. Ct. 2497, 2508, 53 L. Ed. 2d 594, 610 (1977) (describing how the "contemporaneous-objection rule" encourages the proceedings to be "as free of error as possible," so criminal defendants should make their objections known if they think the trial court has deprived them of any federal constitutional rights). Otherwise, states like New York will consider only those appellate issues involving a violation of fundamental principles of law. For example, if the prosecutor at your trial in New York made inflammatory closing remarks that prejudiced the jury, but your lawyer did not object to this error at trial, you cannot raise this error on direct appeal. New York courts probably will not see prejudicial remarks by a prosecutor as a violation of fundamental principles of law. Thus, if you did not object to the prosecutor's comments during trial, you probably cannot raise this issue on direct appeal or through an Article 440 motion (New York law gives courts discretion in refusing to accept 440 motions). See N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.10(3)(a)–(c) (McKinney 2005). See Chapter 20 of the JLM for more information about Article 440. Therefore, you will also be unable to raise the issue in your federal habeas petition. However, always remember that if your attorney was responsible for failing to object, you may have an ineffective assistance of counsel claim. See JLM, Chapter 9 and Chapter 12 for more information on ineffective assistance of counsel claims.

306. In New York, you cannot raise claims in a post-conviction proceeding that you neglected to raise on direct appeal. See N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.10(2)(c) (McKinney 2005). See also Anderson v. Harless, 459 U.S. 4, 7–8, 103 S. Ct. 276, 278, 74 L. Ed. 2d 3, 7–8 (1982) (rejecting habeas relief because prisoner's constitutional argument had never been presented to, or considered by, the state court); Smith v. Duncan, 411 F.3d 340, 350 (2d Cir. 2005) (finding that the habeas claim was procedurally defaulted because the claim had not been fairly presented to the state court). If your

(a) State Procedural Rules and Procedural Default

Your claim can also be in procedural default if you raised your claim to a state court that refused to review the merits of the claim due to a state procedural rule. This often occurs when prisoners fail to pursue their claim in a timely manner.[307] State prisoners are not allowed to bring habeas claims in federal court if those claims were not reviewed on the merits in state court because the petitioner did not follow a state procedural rule.[308] But if a state procedural rule prevents you from bringing a claim in state court, and the state court ignores the rule and reviews the merits of your claim anyway, a federal court cannot later refuse to review your claim based on the state procedural rule.[309]

If you are in procedural default, you can try to use the "independent and adequate state grounds" doctrine to avoid procedural default.[310] You can get out of procedural default if the procedural rule the state court used to deny you a hearing on the merits was (1) not independent of federal law, or (2) not adequate (good enough) to bar federal review of the claim. This is a hard standard to meet but is described in detail below.

(i) Showing the State Procedural Rule Is Not "Independent" of Federal Law

To show that the procedural rule the state court used was not independent of federal law, you must show that the state law is intertwined or connected with federal law, and not entirely separate from federal law.[311] State law is intertwined or connected with federal law if judges have to necessarily answer questions about federal law in order to decide the question of state law. For example, if a state procedural rule says that when fundamental or constitutional errors are made the claim is not considered untimely and can be reviewed, then the state court judges have to decide questions of federal law—the constitutional issue—before deciding if the state procedural rule applied to your case.[312] You can try to argue that the procedural rule is not "independent" of federal law and it should not stop the habeas court from reviewing your claim.

---

lawyer failed to object to a prosecutor's prejudicial remarks, and you were therefore barred from raising this issue on appeal, you are also barred from raising the issue in a habeas corpus petition. Remember, though, that ineffective assistance of counsel claims can be raised for the first time in a post-conviction proceeding, and your lawyer's failure to raise objections in court may be grounds for an ineffective assistance of counsel claim. See JLM, Chapters 9 and 12, for more information on ineffective assistance of counsel claims.

307. See Coleman v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722, 749, 111 S. Ct. 2546, 2564, 115 L. Ed. 2d 640, 669 (1991) (holding that petitioner's failure to file a timely notice of appeal under state law barred further federal habeas review).

308. Harris v. Reed, 489 U.S. 255, 260, 109 S. Ct. 1038, 1042, 103 L. Ed. 2d 308, 315 (1989) (reaffirming that the federal court will not review a federal issue if the state court's judgment is based on an independent and adequate state law ground).

309. See, e.g., Freeman v. Attorney General, 536 F.3d 1225, 1231 (11th Cir. 2008) (discussing how, as an exception to the general rule of procedural default, when a state ignores the procedural bar, a federal court cannot apply the bar on the state's behalf and thus must hear the claim (citing People v. Campbell, 377 F.3d 1208, 1235 (11th Cir. 2004) and Davis v. Singletary, 119 F.3d 1471, 1479 (11th Cir.1997)).

310. See Coleman v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722, 729–30, 111 S. Ct. 2546, 2553–54, 115 L. Ed. 2d 640, 655–56 (1991) (stating that the Supreme Court will not review a question of federal law decided by a state court if the decision of that court rests on a state law ground that is independent of the federal question and adequate to support the judgment); Dretke v. Haley 541 U.S. 386, 392, 124 S. Ct. 1847, 1851–52, 158 L. Ed. 2d 659, 668 (2004) (discussing the general principle that federal courts will not disturb state court judgments based on adequate and independent state law procedural grounds); Hoffman v. Arave, 236 F.3d 523, 530 (9th Cir. 2001) (stating that "so long as the dismissal relies on a state law ground that is independent of the federal question and adequate to support the judgment, it will be insulated from federal review"). See, e.g., Fox Film Corp. v. Muller, 296 U.S. 207, 210, 56 S. Ct. 183, 184, 80 L. Ed. 158, 159 (1935) (affirming the non-reviewability of the state law decision in a breach of contract action for leasing motion-picture films).

311. Ake v. Oklahoma, 470 U.S. 68, 74–75, 105 S. Ct. 1087, 1092, 84 L. Ed. 2d 53, 60–61 (1985); see also Boyd v. Scott, 45 F.3d 876, 880 (5th Cir. 1994) (finding that state court decision was "interwoven with federal law, and did not express clearly that its decision was based on state procedural grounds").

312. See La Crosse v. Kernan, 244 F.3d 702, 706–07 (9th Cir. 2001) (holding that the state's "untimeliness" rule did not constitute "independent" state grounds because at the time the petitioner defaulted his claim, the rule had a "fundamental constitutional error exception" that involved a ruling on federal law); Johnson v. Gibson, 169 F.3d 1239, 1249 (10th Cir. 1999) (holding that petitioner's claim was not procedurally defaulted because "Oklahoma courts do review such claims for fundamental error—a review that necessarily includes review for federal constitutional error," so procedural bar was not independent of federal law); Jones v. Jerrison, 20 F.3d 849, 854 (8th Cir. 1994) (holding that although petitioner failed to bring an objection at trial, the state courts may review for plain error); Bradley v. Meachum, 918 F.2d 338, 343 (2d Cir. 1990) (holding that a state waiver rule that resulted in procedural default of petitioner's claim is not "independent of federal law" because, under Connecticut law, "procedural waiver cannot bar a

(ii) Showing the State Procedural Rule Was Not "Adequate" to Bar Federal Review

When you argue that your default of a state procedural rule is not an adequate (good enough) reason to deny review of your federal habeas petition, you are basically arguing that the state rule is unfair, interferes with enforcement of your federal rights, or is not applied consistently. Therefore, it is not an adequate reason to bar review of your claim.[313] Some common ways to argue that a state procedural rule is not adequate to bar review of your federal claims are

(1) The state's rule is not "firmly established," "consistently applied," or "strictly or regularly followed;"[314]

(2) The state procedural rule did not provide you with a reasonable opportunity to have your federal claim heard in state court because the rule frustrates (interferes with) the enforcement of federal rights or is unreasonably hard to meet and has the effect of frustrating federal rights;[315] defendant's challenge 'involv[ing] his constitutional right to a fair trial,'" and the state court had to first decide whether the petitioner received the constitutionally-required fair trial).

---

313. For a Supreme Court case that held that the state's procedural rule was not adequate to bar federal habeas review, see Lee v. Kemna, 534 U.S. 362, 122 S. Ct. 877, 151 L. Ed. 2d 820 (2002). See also Monroe v. Kuhlman, 433 F.3d 236, 245 (2d Cir. 2006) (finding state court's application of the contemporaneous objection rule to a situation where jurors viewed evidence during the trial without the judge present inadequate to bar federal review of the claim); Cotto v. Herbert, 331 F.3d 217, 247 (2d Cir. 2003) (finding New York Court of Appeals' application of the contemporaneous objection rule to a situation where there was no cross-examination of a witness who testified at petitioner's trial, and whose out-of-court identification of petitioner was admitted at trial through testimony of police officers, was inadequate to bar federal habeas review of this claim).

314. Ford v. Georgia, 498 U.S. 411, 423–24, 111 S. Ct. 850, 857, 112 L. Ed. 2d 935, 949 (1991); see also Johnson v. Mississippi, 486 U.S. 578, 587, 108 S. Ct. 1981, 1987, 100 L. Ed. 2d 575, 583 (1988) (finding that the "procedural bar to defendant's subsequent attempt to raise claim … did not provide 'adequate and independent state ground' for affirming defendant's conviction, where procedural bar had not been consistently or regularly applied in the past"); James v. Kentucky, 466 U.S. 341, 348–49, 104 S. Ct. 1830, 1835, 80 L. Ed. 2d 346, 353 (1984) (holding that only state procedures that are "firmly established and regularly followed … can prevent implementation of federal constitutional rights"); Barr v. City of Columbia, 378 U.S. 146, 149, 84 S. Ct. 1734, 1736, 12 L. Ed. 2d 766, 769 (1964) ("[S]tate procedural requirements which are not strictly or regularly followed cannot deprive us of the right to review."); Sayre v. Anderson, 238 F.3d 631, 634 (5th Cir. 2001) (asserting that a state ruling that petitioner had procedurally defaulted claims would not bar federal review when the rule was not usually applied to defendants in petitioner's position); Romano v. Gibson, 239 F.3d 1156, 1170 (10th Cir. 2001) (asserting that state procedural rule was not adequate because state court applied the rule inconsistently in the cases of two co-defendants charged and tried together); Moore v. Ponte, 186 F.3d 26, 32–33 (1st Cir. 1999) (stating that procedural default resulting from defendant's violation of the contemporaneous objection rule does not bar federal review because state courts have overlooked the requirement in cases like petitioner's); Gosier v. Welborn, 175 F.3d 504, 507 (7th Cir. 1999) (asserting that state procedural rule was an inadequate bar to federal habeas corpus review because state courts applied the rule inconsistently and incompatibly); Clayton v. Gibson, 199 F.3d 1162, 1171 (10th Cir. 1999) (stating that default did not bar federal review because the state procedural rule was adopted after the default supposedly occurred and could not have been firmly established); Forgy v. Norris, 64 F.3d 399, 401–02 (8th Cir. 1995) (pointing out a previous holding that "unexpectable state procedural bars are not adequate to foreclose federal review of constitutional claims"); Morales v. Calderon, 85 F.3d 1387, 1393 (9th Cir. 1996) (stating that California's state habeas time limits were not an adequate and independent state grounds to support procedural default where the time limits were not clear, well-established, and consistently applied prior to petitioner's filing of his first state habeas petition); Cochran v. Herring, 43 F.3d 1404, 1409 (11th Cir. 1995) (finding no bar to federal habeas review even though petitioner did not raise Batson claim on direct appeal because Alabama courts have not consistently applied a procedural bar to these types of cases), modified, 61 F.3d 20 (11th Cir. 1995); Grubbs v. Delo, 948 F.2d 1459, 1463 (8th Cir. 1991) ("[I]f a state applies its rule inconsistently, we are not barred from reaching the federal law claim.").

315. See Hoffman v. Arave, 236 F.3d 523, 531 (9th Cir. 2001) ("[I]f a state procedural rule frustrates the exercise of a federal right, that rule is 'inadequate' to preclude federal courts from reviewing the merits of the federal claim."); Mapes v. Coyle, 171 F.3d 408, 429 (6th Cir. 1999) (asserting that state procedural ground for denial of petition was not "adequate" because rulings resulted in "erroneous … refus[al] to consider" petitioner's ineffective assistance of appellate counsel claims); Jackson v. Shanks, 143 F.3d 1313, 1318–19 (10th Cir. 1998) (determining that state procedural rule procedurally barring claims not raised on direct appeal cannot be applied to ineffective assistance of counsel claims because doing so would "deprive [petitioner] of any meaningful review of the ineffective assistance of counsel claim"); Morales v. Calderon, 85 F.3d 1387, 1390 (9th Cir. 1996) (determining that federal habeas review was not barred due to procedural default because California timeliness rule was so unclear that it did "not 'provide … the habeas petitioner with a fair opportunity to seek relief in state court'" (quoting Harmon v. Ryan, 959 F.2d 1457, 1462 (9th Cir. 1992))); Wheat v. Thigpen, 793 F.2d 621, 624–25 (5th Cir. 1986) (stating that state rules not regularly followed prevented the "implementation of federal constitutional rights"); Williams v. Lockhart, 873 F.2d 1129, 1131–32 (8th Cir. 1989) (stating that violation of a "new [state] rule designed to thwart assertion of federal rights" is not an adequate bar to federal

(3) The procedural rule required you to object to the error before you could realize that the error occurred, or that the rule was applied in your case in a way that you could not have anticipated;[316] or
(4) You tried to raise a claim, and even though you did not follow the rule exactly, the way you tried to bring up the claim served the same interest as the state rule.[317]

If you have procedurally defaulted a claim, you can try to use the "independent or adequate state grounds" body of law to get around the procedural default. Remember, you have to show either that the state procedural rule is not independent of federal law or that the rule is not adequate to bar federal review.

(b) Exceptions to Procedural Default

If your claim is in procedural default, there are limited circumstances in which the federal court may still review your claim. These circumstances apply to both state and federal prisoners. The court will review your claim if you satisfy either the (1) "cause and prejudice" test or the (2) "fundamental miscarriage of justice" test.[318] The courts rarely find either of these, so you should not depend on either of these exceptions to the procedural default rule.[319] You should work hard to avoid procedural default by first raising all of your claims in state court or on direct federal appeal.

(i) Cause and Prejudice Test

The "cause and prejudice" test is a defense to procedurally defaulted claims. That means that if your claim is procedurally defaulted, the federal habeas court may still review your claim if you can prove that you had "cause" for not following the procedure and experienced "prejudice." To pass this test you must: (1) show cause (in other words, give a good reason for why you failed to follow the state procedural rule, or failed to present the claim in your direct appeal if you are a federal prisoner); and (2) show prejudice (that your case would have come out differently if you had been able to present your claim of constitutional violation).[320] habeas review); Walker v. Engle, 703 F.2d 959, 967 (6th Cir. 1983) (holding that notions of comity do not require deference to state court decisions where procedural bars that had no foundation in state law were applied).

---

316. See Gonzales v. Elo, 233 F.3d 348, 353–54 (6th Cir. 2000) (determining that the state rule that barred post-conviction review of claims not raised on direct appeal was inadequate to bar federal review of the claim because the rule was adopted after the petitioner's direct appeal was complete); Barnett v. Hadgett, 174 F.3d 1128, 1135 (10th Cir. 1999) (determining that state procedural rules deeming claims raised under Cooper v. Oklahoma, 517 U.S. 348, 116 S. Ct. 1373, 134 L. Ed. 2d 498 (1996) as barred if not raised on direct appeal cannot be applied to cases in which the direct appeal occurred before the Cooper decision); United States ex rel. Duncan v. O'Leary, 806 F.2d 1307, 1314 (7th Cir. 1986) (determining that petitioner did not default by not raising his ineffective assistance of counsel claim under state law because disagreement between the federal and state courts over the proper standard was such that petitioner could not have known about the claim and could not have been said to waive it).

317. See Albuquerque v. Bara, 628 F.2d 767, 772–73 (2d Cir. 1980) (holding that "substantial compliance" with the state procedural rule is enough to overcome procedural default).

318. Two of the main cases on this issue are Wainwright v. Sykes, 433 U.S. 72, 97 S. Ct. 2497, 53 L. Ed. 2d 594 (1977) and Coleman v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722, 750, 111 S. Ct. 2546, 2564, 115 L. Ed. 2d 640, 669 (1991). These exceptions were reaffirmed after the passage of AEDPA in Edwards v. Carpenter, 529 U.S. 446, 451, 120 S. Ct. 1587, 1591, 146 L. Ed. 2d 518, 523 (2000) ("We … require a prisoner to demonstrate cause for his state-court default of any federal claim, and prejudice therefrom, before the federal habeas court will consider the merits of that claim. … The one exception to that rule … is the circumstance in which the habeas petitioner can demonstrate a sufficient probability that our failure to review his federal claim will result in a fundamental miscarriage of justice.").

319. United States v. Mabry, 536 F.3d 231, 243 (3d Cir. 2008) (holding there was no miscarriage of justice from petitioner's claim that he did not fully understand what the phrase "miscarriage of justice" meant in his waiver of collateral and direct appeals in his guilty plea because he had not satisfactorily identified any non-frivolous ground, had not produced any substantial appealable issues, and had failed to allege appealable issues that fell outside the terms of his waiver).

320. See Coleman v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722, 755, 111 S. Ct. 2546, 2567, 115 L. Ed. 2d 640, 672 (1991) (holding that where petitioner had no independent constitutional right to counsel on appeal in state proceedings, his claim of ineffective counsel in state habeas petition did not constitute "cause" under the "cause and prejudice" standard); Engle v. Isaac, 456 U.S. 107, 129, 102 S. Ct. 1558, 1572–73, 71 L. Ed. 2d 783, 801 (1982) (reaffirming that any prisoner bringing a constitutional claim to the federal court after a state procedural default must demonstrate cause and actual prejudice). See also Reed v. Ross, 468 U.S. 1, 11–13, 104 S. Ct. 2901, 2908–10, 82 L. Ed. 2d 1, 11–14 (1984) (affirming habeas relief because, state law did not allow for constitutional review of the jury's instructions on burden of proof at the time of trial, and the prisoner was prejudiced because he may not have been convicted had the jury been instructed correctly). It is important to note that the new laws issues discussed in Part C(2), "New Laws: The Teague Rule," would still apply and may bar relief, even if procedural default were overcome in this situation.

The cause and prejudice standard is the most significant obstacle you must overcome to obtain federal habeas review. Since the Supreme Court announced the standard in 1977,[321] federal courts have thrown out thousands of habeas petitions for failing to meet the standard. Therefore, you must think carefully and creatively about how to satisfy or get around the "cause and prejudice" standard.

1. Showing Cause

Showing "cause" is not easy. Generally, cause must be based on an external (outside) factor that prevented you from avoiding a procedural mistake.[322] Some reasons that courts will consider to have shown "cause" include:

(1) State officials prevented you from following the state procedural rule.[323] For example, at your trial, a state officer led you to believe that a constitutional violation had not occurred, when in fact it had. In this case, the officer's actions would be "cause" for why you did not object to the violation at trial. The court will allow you to argue this claim.[324]

(2) State officials deliberately lied about material information.[325] For example, when a state tells you that all Brady material (exculpatory material) has been turned over to you, when in reality it has not been, you cannot be expected to be able to present this evidence—since you did not know about it.[326] The fact that the state initially lied to you establishes a cause for failure to investigate that the court may consider.

(3) The legal basis of your constitutional claim was not reasonably available to you (or your lawyer) at the time of your trial.[327] In other words, a federal court will excuse your failure to object to an incident that occurred at your trial, if you can show that you could not have known from the case law existing at the time of your trial that the incident was a constitutional violation. Unfortunately, most attempts to show cause in this way are unsuccessful.[328] You will not show "cause" by just claiming any of the following things: that your attorney was unaware of the claim; [329] that your attorney

---

321. Wainwright v. Sykes, 433 U.S. 72, 97 S. Ct. 2497, 53 L. Ed. 2d 594 (1977).

322. See Banks v. Dretke, 540 U.S. 668, 696, 124 S. Ct. 1256, 1275, 157 L. Ed. 2d 1166, 1192–93 (2004) ("The 'cause' inquiry, we have also observed, turns on events or circumstances 'external to the defense.'" (citing Amadeo v. Zant, 486 U.S. 214, 222, 108 S. Ct. 1771, 100 L. Ed. 2d 249 (1988)).

323. Murray v. Carrier, 477 U.S. 478, 488, 106 S. Ct. 2639, 2645, 91 L. Ed. 2d 397 (1986) (determining that "some interference by officials" would constitute "cause" (citing Brown v. Allen, 344 U.S. 443, 486, 73 S. Ct. 397, 422, 97 L. Ed. 469, 504 (1953))).

324. See Strickler v. Greene 527 U.S. 263, 283, 119 S. Ct. 1936, 1949, 144 L. Ed. 2d 286, 303 (1999) (holding that petitioner had shown cause for not raising Brady claim in state court since the prosecutor had withheld evidence and the petitioner had relied on the prosecution's open file policy as fulfilling the prosecutor's duty to disclose, but also finding that petitioner did not show prejudice); see also Forman v. Smith, 633 F.2d 634, 641 (2d Cir. 1980) (reversing grant of habeas petition, but affirming the principle that if a police officer made a misleading statement that obscures an opportunity to develop a federal constitutional violation claim, such statement would be "cause" for not raising the claim on direct appeal).

325. Banks v. Dretke, 540 U.S. 668, 695–96, 124 S. Ct. 1256, 1274–75, 157 L. Ed. 2d 1166, 1192–93 (2004) (holding that, where prosecutors had lied and concealed information regarding a paid informant, the petitioner had made a showing of cause for not raising Brady claim in prior proceedings).

326. See, e.g., Banks v. Dretke, 540 U.S. 668, 693, 124 S. Ct. 1256, 1273–74, 157 L. Ed. 2d 1166, 1191 (2004) (determining that because the prosecution persisted in hiding evidence and falsely representing that it had complied fully with its Brady disclosure obligations, the petitioner "had cause for failing to investigate, in state post-conviction proceedings").

327. See Reed v. Ross, 468 U.S. 1, 16, 104 S. Ct. 2901, 2910, 82 L. Ed. 2d 1, 15 (1984) (holding that, where well-settled law in the state placing the burden of proof on the defendant for self-defense and lack of malice could be challenged as unconstitutional under a new Supreme Court decision, the "novelty" of such a claim was proper cause for failing to raise the claim on direct appeal).

328. See, e.g., Fernandez v. Leonardo, 931 F.2d 214, 216–17 (2d Cir. 1991) (finding no cause where the law was unsettled on the claim raised in the habeas petition but where the defense should have known to raise the objection nonetheless). In addition, even if you succeed in arguing that you had "cause" for not raising the constitutional error in your appeal, because you could not have known at the time of your trial that a constitutional error had occurred, the court could decide that this error still cannot be considered because of the Teague case, which says you cannot make an argument that raises a "new" rule of law. See Part C(2), "New Laws: The Teague Rule," of this Chapter for more information.

329. See Engle v. Isaac, 456 U.S. 107, 134, 102 S. Ct. 1558, 1575, 71 L. Ed. 2d 783, 804 (1982) ("Where the basis of a constitutional claim is available, and other defense counsel have perceived and litigated that claim, the demands of comity and finality counsel against labeling alleged unawareness of the objection as cause for a procedural default.").

believed it would be useless to raise the claim because the state court had rejected the claim before;[330] or that your attorney simply overlooked the claim.[331]

(4) By failing to follow the state procedural rule (for example, failing to object at trial, failing to bring an appeal in time, etc.) your attorney provided you with "constitutionally ineffective assistance of counsel."[332] Remember that you must exhaust your claim of ineffective assistance of counsel in the state courts before presenting the claim to the federal court as cause for why you failed to follow a state procedural requirement.[333]

It is important to understand that the above list is not exhaustive: there may be other reasons in your specific case that would persuade a court to find that you have "cause." By Shepardizing both Wainwright[334] and Coleman[335] and researching this issue, you will discover other reasons that courts have found "cause."[336]

You should also be aware of various claims that the courts have determined do not constitute "cause." The following list includes only a few possibilities:

(1) Claims of ineffective assistance of counsel, if you did not have a constitutional right to counsel at that proceeding.[337]

(2) Claims that there are important facts that were not fully developed in the trial court, if you failed to develop the facts due to your own or your attorney's neglect.[338]

(3) Claims that rely on evidence that could not have been reasonably available to you at the trial or on direct appeal.[339] It is not enough to argue that you failed to make the claim earlier because you had not yet discovered the evidence. You have to show that you could not have discovered the evidence, even if you had tried. For example, if the prosecutor deliberately withheld evidence from the defense counsel at trial, that might show cause.[340]

2. Showing Prejudice

The Supreme Court has not explained "prejudice" as thoroughly as "cause." In United States v. Frady, the Court directly addressed the meaning of "prejudice" by stating that "prejudice" requires that you show errors at your trial "worked to [your] actual and substantial disadvantage, infecting [your] entire trial with error of constitutional dimensions."[341] You should Shepardize the Frady case to see if courts in your jurisdiction have explained what types of error show prejudice. For example, the Second Circuit has stated

---

330. See Engle v. Isaac, 456 U.S. 107, 130, 102 S. Ct. 1558, 1573, 71 L. Ed. 2d 783, 802 (1982) ("If a defendant perceives a constitutional claim and believes it may find favor in the federal courts, he may not bypass the state courts simply because he thinks they will be unsympathetic to the claim.").

331. See Murray v. Carrier, 477 U.S. 478, 488, 106 S. Ct. 2639, 2645, 91 L. Ed. 2d 397, 408 (1986) ("We think, then, that the question of cause for a procedural default does not turn on whether counsel erred or on the kind of error counsel may have made.").

332. Murray v. Carrier, 477 U.S. 478, 488, 106 S. Ct. 2639, 2645, 91 L. Ed. 2d 397, 408 (1986). But see Tsirizotakis v. Le Fevre, 736 F.2d 57, 62–63 (2d Cir. 1984) (listing cases rejecting a defendant's attempt to show cause by alleging ineffective assistance of counsel).

333. See Murray v. Carrier, 477 U.S. 478, 488–89, 106 S. Ct. 2639, 2645–46, 91 L. Ed. 2d 397, 409 (1986) (expressing that the exhaustion doctrine "generally requires" the claim for ineffective assistance of counsel to be presented independently in state court). In New York, exhaustion of the ineffective assistance of counsel claim is done through an Article 440 motion.

334. Wainwright v. Sykes, 433 U.S. 72, 97 S. Ct. 2497, 53 L. Ed. 2d 594 (1977).

335. Coleman v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722, 111 S. Ct. 2546, 115 L. Ed. 2d 640 (1991).

336. By Shepardizing, you can also make sure that the law has not changed. See Chapter 2 of the JLM for an explanation of how to Shepardize a case.

337. See Coleman v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722, 754, 111 S. Ct. 2546, 2567, 115 L. Ed. 2d 640, 672 (1991) ("[I]t is not the gravity of the attorney's error that matters, but that it constitutes a violation of petitioner's right to counsel.").

338. See Keeney v. Tamayo-Reyes, 504 U.S. 1, 6 n.2, 112 S. Ct. 1715, 1718 n.2, 118 L. Ed. 2d 318, 327 n.2 (1992) (rejecting a rule that would require an evidentiary hearing for habeas corpus cases where the state court hearing did not adequately develop the material facts "due to petitioner's own neglect").

339. McCleskey v. Zant, 499 U.S. 467, 498, 111 S. Ct. 1454, 1472, 113 L. Ed. 2d 517, 547 (1991).

340. Fairchild v. Lockhart, 979 F.2d 636, 640 (8th Cir. 1992).

341. United States v. Frady, 456 U.S. 152, 170, 102 S. Ct. 1584, 1596, 71 L. Ed. 2d 816, 832 (1982) (emphasis omitted); see McCoy v. Newsome, 953 F.2d 1252, 1261 (11th Cir. 1992) (applying the Wainwright standard, the court determined that the errors at trial did not actually and substantially disadvantage the defense, so the defendant was not denied fundamental fairness).

in dicta[342] that it would find prejudice if a New York trial court accepted a defendant's guilty plea without holding a hearing on the defendant's competency when required to do so by state law. Such an error, the Second Circuit stated, would "infect" the conviction and violate due process.[343]

The "cause and prejudice" test is very difficult to meet.[344] Do not rely on this excuse if another one is available to you.

(ii) Fundamental Miscarriage of Justice

Another exception to procedural default is the "miscarriage of justice" exception. This exception is also extremely difficult to meet, and you should not rely on this exception to get out of procedurally defaulted claims if you have any other exception available to you. This exception usually only works if you can show that "failure to consider the claims [that are procedurally defaulted] will result in a fundamental miscarriage of justice."[345] The Supreme Court has not clearly said what a fundamental miscarriage of justice is, but in Schlup v. Delo, the Court hinted strongly that this exception requires a persuasive showing of actual innocence.[346] It is important to note that if you use this exception, you are not claiming that you are innocent and should be set free; rather, you are claiming that you are innocent and that is why the court should consider your procedurally defaulted and barred constitutional claim.[347]

To meet the requirements for the fundamental miscarriage of justice exception, you must present new evidence showing you are innocent. This evidence must not have been presented at trial.[348] Then you must show that with this new evidence, no reasonable juror would have convicted you.[349] It is also important to

---

342. For a definition of dictum (the singular form of dicta), see Appendix V of the JLM, "Definitions of Words Used in the JLM."

343. See Silverstein v. Henderson, 706 F.2d 361, 368 n.13 (2d Cir. 1983). In Silverstein, the petitioner sought habeas relief from a sentence for armed burglary on the grounds that he was mentally retarded and had not understood his guilty plea. The Second Circuit granted habeas relief despite the fact that the petitioner had not raised this claim on direct appeal. The court found that applying the procedural default rule to an incompetent defendant was unconstitutional, and, therefore, it was unnecessary to apply the cause and prejudice test. In a footnote, the court remarked that even if procedural default applied, the defendant would be entitled to a hearing concerning the cause for his failure to raise the issue of competence on direct appeal. See also Pearson v. Secretary, No. 07-12828, 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 8559, at *9 (11th Cir. Apr. 15, 2008) (unpublished) (holding that a prisoner raising a claim of cause and prejudice or miscarriage of justice based on the fact that he was proceeding pro se does not establish either of the exceptions to the procedural bar).

344. Some prisoners have tried to avoid the cause and prejudice standard by arguing that the standard should not apply in death penalty cases. See, e.g., Smith v. Murray, 477 U.S. 527, 538–39, 106 S. Ct. 2661, 2668, 91 L. Ed. 2d 434, 447 (1986). Some prisoners have argued that the standard should not apply to constitutional errors, such as faulty jury instructions, which directly affect a jury's finding of guilt at trial. See, e.g., Engle v. Isaac, 456 U.S. 107, 129, 102 S. Ct. 1558, 1572–73, 71 L. Ed. 2d 783, 801 (1982). Other prisoners have argued that the standard should not apply to procedural defaults that occurred on appeal (such as failure to raise a particular claim on appeal), and not at trial. See, e.g., Murray v. Carrier, 477 U.S. 478, 491, 106 S. Ct. 2639, 2647, 91 L. Ed. 2d 397, 410–11 (1986). The Supreme Court, however, has rejected all of these arguments. In addition, the Court has ruled that the "cause and prejudice" standard applies even in cases where you have defaulted on not only one but all of your federal constitutional claims, since you failed to file a notice of appeal within the required time. Coleman v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722, 749–51, 111 S. Ct. 2546, 2564–65, 115 L. Ed. 2d 640, 668–70 (1991).

345. Coleman v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722, 750, 111 S. Ct. 2546, 2565, 115 L. Ed. 2d 640, 669 (1991) (reaffirming that the "fundamental miscarriage of justice" exception applies to procedurally defaulted claims). See also Murray v. Carrier, 477 U.S. 478, 495–96, 106 S. Ct. 2639, 2649, 91 L. Ed. 2d 397, 413 (1986) ("[W]here a constitutional violation has probably resulted in the conviction of one who is actually innocent, a federal habeas court may grant the writ even in the absence of a showing of cause for the procedural default."); Engle v. Isaac, 456 U.S. 107, 135, 102 S. Ct. 1558, 1575–76, 71 L. Ed. 2d 783, 805 (1982) (stating that in some cases "cause" and "prejudice" will include the correction of a fundamentally unfair incarceration).

346. Schlup v. Delo, 513 U.S. 298, 321–22, 115 S. Ct. 851, 864, 130 L. Ed. 2d 808, 832–33 (1995).

347. If you are claiming that you are innocent and should be set free, meaning there was not enough evidence to convict you, the standard is much higher, and you should refer to Jackson v. Virginia, 443 U.S. 307, 99 S. Ct. 2781, 61 L. Ed. 2d 560 (1979). Remember that AEDPA created a stricter standard of review, so the Jackson standard will likely be applied in an even stricter fashion than described in the court's decision.

348. See Schlup v. Delo, 513 U.S. 298, 324, 327–28, 115 S. Ct. 851, 865, 867, 130 L. Ed. 2d 808, 834, 836–37 (1995) (stating that the new evidence does not have to be evidence that would be admissible at trial).

349. Schlup v. Delo, 513 U.S. 298, 327, 115 S. Ct. 851, 867, 130 L. Ed. 2d 808, 836 (1995). In Murray v. Carrier, 477 U.S. 478, 496, 106 S. Ct. 2639, 2649, 91 L. Ed. 2d 397, 413 (1986), the Court first stated the standard for a fundamental miscarriage of justice and said a prisoner must show "a constitutional violation has probably resulted in the conviction of one who is actually innocent" in order to meet the fundamental miscarriage of justice exception. In Schlup, the Court note that this new evidence must not be prohibited by the Federal Rules of Evidence. Persuasive evidence of actual innocence that may not have been admissible in trial can be considered by the court in considering this claim.[350] If you can meet these standards, the court will consider your barred claims. The idea is that if you can convince the court that you are innocent, it will then look at the errors in your trial, even though it is normally barred from doing so, in order to make sure that a fundamental miscarriage of justice did not occur.

Finally, the fundamental miscarriage of justice exception can be used to challenge a procedurally defaulted claim if the result of the error is that the death penalty was imposed on someone who is "actually innocent" of a death sentence.[351] To be "actually innocent" of the death penalty means that you are innocent of the elements of the crime that pushed your sentence from a murder sentence to a capital murder sentence. To prove this claim, you must show by clear and convincing evidence that, if the constitutional violation had not occurred, you would not have been eligible for the death penalty.[352] This standard is extremely difficult to meet, and you should not rely on it to get around a procedurally defaulted claim.

4. Time Limit

Time is an issue that may complicate the preparation of your habeas petition. Both state and federal prisoners have a one-year time limit for filing federal habeas petitions.[353] This time limit applies even if the state post-conviction timeline is more than a year. Therefore, you must file both your state post-conviction petition and your federal habeas petition (if you are unsuccessful in your state petition) within the one-year time limit. Otherwise, the time runs out on your federal habeas petition, and you will be barred from seeking federal habeas review. Once you file the state post-conviction motion, however, your timeline for filing the federal habeas petition will be tolled, which means that the clock does not keep running while the state considers your motion.[354]

Generally, the one-year timeline will start on the day your case becomes "final"[355] following direct review.[356] Remember, the end of your direct review—not the end of your post-conviction appeals or any other proceeding—triggers the date your case becomes final. Your case will generally become final when the United States Supreme Court proceedings on direct review are completed,[357] or, if you do not file for certiorari,[358] the date when the time expires for filing a petition for certiorari.[359]

However, there are three special circumstances that can extend the time you have to file your federal habeas petition:

(1) If the state or federal government creates an impediment (obstruction or blockage) in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States that prevents you from filing the application or motion, you explained that this standard requires the defendant to "show that it is more likely than not that no reasonable juror would have found petitioner guilty beyond a reasonable doubt" if the constitutional error had not occurred. In House v. Bell, 547 U.S. 518, 539 126 S. Ct. 2064, 2078, 165 L. Ed. 2d 1, 22–23 (2006), the Supreme Court determined that AEDPA's higher standard of review does not apply in cases where there is a claim of actual innocence.

---

350 Schlup v. Delo, 513 U.S. 298, 327, 115 S. Ct. 851, 867, 130 L. Ed. 2d 808, 836 (1995).

351. See, e.g., Dugger v. Adams, 489 U.S. 401, 410 n.6, 109 S. Ct. 1211, 1217 n.6, 103 L. Ed. 2d 435, 445 n.6 (1989) (stating that a court may grant a writ even in the absence of a showing of cause for procedural default, but only in an "extraordinary" case); see also Sawyer v. Whitley, 505 U.S. 333, 345–46, 112 S. Ct. 2514, 2522–23, 120 L. Ed. 2d 269, 284–85 (1992) (indicating that factors disproving eligibility for the death penalty may overcome a procedural default).

352. Sawyer v. Whitley, 505 U.S. 333, 347–50, 112 S. Ct. 2514, 2523–25, 120 L. Ed. 2d 269, 284–87(1992) (holding that the court must find that but for the alleged constitutional error, the sentencing body could not have found any aggravating factors, and thus the petitioner was ineligible for the death penalty).

353. See 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(1) (2006) (state prisoners); 28 U.S.C. § 2255(f)(1) (2006) (federal prisoners). However, if you are a state prisoner convicted of the death penalty and your state qualifies as an opt-in state (meaning that, in exchange for providing competent counsel, the state can take advantage of faster resolution of federal habeas claims), your time limit is much shorter than one year.

354. See 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(2) (2006) (state prisoners).

355. See 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(1)(A) (2006) (state prisoners); 28 U.S.C. § 2255(f)(1) (2006) (federal prisoners).

356. See 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(1)(A) (2006) (state prisoners); 28 U.S.C. § 2255(f)(1) (2006) (federal prisoners).

357. See 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(1)(A) (2006) (state prisoners); 28 U.S.C. § 2255(f)(1) (2006) (federal prisoners).

358. "Certiorari," or a "writ of certiorari," is an appeal to the United States Supreme Court.

359. See 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(1)(A) (2006) (state prisoners); Clay v. United States, 537 U.S. 522, 532, 123 S. Ct. 1072, 1079, 155 L. Ed 2d 88, 97 (2003) ("[F]or federal criminal defendants who do not file a petition for certiorari with [the Supreme Court] on direct review, § 2255's one-year limitation period starts to run when the time for seeking such review expires.").

have one year after the unconstitutional or illegal impediment is removed to file your federal habeas petition;[360]

(2) If the Supreme Court announces a new retroactive legal right on which your habeas petition can be based, the petition is due one year from the announcement;[361] or

(3) If new facts become discoverable that were not discoverable before the one-year time limit, even with due diligence, your habeas petition is due one year from when the facts became discoverable through due diligence.[362]

The date on which your one-year timeline starts is called the triggering date. If more than one triggering date affects your case, you will have to apply within one year of the latest date of the above three options.[363] But, you should try to file within a year of the earliest triggering date, because it will often be very difficult to show that a later triggering date applies to your case.

If you have multiple claims in your petition and the claims do not all have the same triggering date, you should try to file within one year of the earliest triggering date. If the time limit runs out on one of your claims, the court will probably not hear the claim even if your habeas petition also includes other claims with later triggering dates.[364] For example, imagine that your conviction became final on January 1, and

---

360. See 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(1)(B) (2006) (state prisoners); 28 U.S.C. § 2255(f)(2) (2006) (federal prisoners). The unconstitutional or illegal impediment must be created by the state. An example of an unconstitutional impediment is the withholding of exculpatory evidence (evidence favorable to the defendant) in violation of Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 87, 83 S. Ct. 1194, 1196–97, 10 L. Ed. 2d 215, 218 (1963). See, e.g., Edmond v. U.S. Attorney, 959 F. Supp. 1, 4 (D.D.C. 1997) (determining that, for petitioner claiming that the government is holding exculpatory evidence, the one-year limitation does not begin until the receipt of the evidence). Another example of a state-created impediment is inadequate prison libraries. See, e.g., Whalem/Hunt v. Early, 233 F.3d 1146, 1148 (9th Cir. 2000) (remanding case for evidentiary hearing on whether petitioner's claim that an unconstitutional impediment existed because of lack of information in the prison law library may be upheld). The State can also create an impediment by interfering with your filing, for example, if prison officials place you in segregation and take away your legal materials. See United States v. Gabaldon, 522 F.3d 1121, 1126 (10th Cir. 2008) (finding pro se federal prisoner's habeas petition should not have been dismissed by district court because state interfered with his filing by placing him in segregation and confiscating his legal materials). But see Monroe v. Beard, 536 F.3d 198, 210 (11th Cir. 2008) (finding confiscation of prisoners' legal materials by prison officials did not violate constitutional rights because the prisoner did not allege actual injury nor did prisoner provide evidence that confiscation was constitutionally unreasonable where there was a legitimate interest in stopping the prisoner from filing fraudulent claims and the decision to confiscate materials was rationally related to this interest; noting due process only requires post-deprivation process for return of confiscated materials).

361. See 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(1)(C) (2006) (state prisoners); 28 U.S.C. § 2255(f)(3) (2006) (federal prisoners). See, e.g., United States v. Adams, No. 90–00431–08, 1996 U.S. Dist. Lexis 8875, at *5 n.2 (E.D. Pa. June 24, 1996) (unpublished) (noting that petitioner has one year from the date the right was initially recognized by the Supreme Court). Exactly when the one year ends depends on the circuit in which you are filing. See Haugh v. Booker, 210 F.3d 1147, 1150 (10th Cir. 2000) (noting that the circuits disagree as to whether the one-year period starts when the new right is announced, or when the court holds it to be retroactive on collateral claims). However, note that the Supreme Court construed AEDPA to mean that the one year runs from the date a new right was recognized, not the date the right was made retroactive. See Dodd v. United States, 545 U.S. 353, 357, 125 S. Ct. 2478, 2482, 162 L. Ed. 2d 343, 349 (2005).

362. See 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(1)(D) (2006) (state prisoners); 28 U.S.C. § 2255(f)(4) (2006) (federal prisoners). See, e.g., Dobbs v. Zant, 506 U.S. 357, 358–59, 113 S. Ct. 835, 836, 122 L. Ed. 2d 103, 107 (1993) (holding that when petitioner's habeas claim, which had been rejected by lower courts, was being reviewed by the federal circuit court, petitioner was allowed to supplement his record with a trial transcript because the delay in locating the transcript had been substantially caused by the state's mistake). For a more recent case discussing the concept of "due diligence" in prison settings, see Wims v. United States, 225 F.3d 186, 190–91 (2d Cir. 2000) (finding that the district court erred in dismissing habeas petition filed 17 months after conviction became final because the time delay was reasonable).

363. See 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(1) (2006) (state prisoners); 28 U.S.C. § 2255(f) (2006) (federal prisoners).

364. The Third and Sixth Circuits have held that each claim in a habeas petition must satisfy the one-year time limit, and claims not satisfying that time limit will be dismissed. Bachman v. Bagley, 487 F.3d 979, 984 (6th Cir. 2007); Fielder v. Varner, 379 F.3d 113, 118–120 (3d Cir. 2004). The Eleventh Circuit has held that, as long as at least one claim in a habeas petition satisfies the one-year time limit, the court can hear all claims in the petition, even if some of those claims would otherwise be untimely. Walker v. Crosby, 341 F.3d 1240, 1245 (11th Cir. 2003). The majority of district courts confronting the issue has rejected Walker and concluded that any individual claim in a habeas petition should be dismissed if it does not satisfy the time limit. See Khan v. United States, 414 F. Supp. 2d 210, 216 (E.D.N.Y. 2006) (declining to address the untimely claims in a habeas petition that also contained a timely claim based on a newly recognized right); Murphy v. Espinoza, 401 F. Supp. 2d 1048, 1052 (C.D. Cal. 2005) (stating that "this Court must assess the timeliness of an inmate's [habeas] claims on a claim-by-claim basis"). But see Ferreira v. Dept. of Corr., 494 F.3d 1286, 1289 (11th Cir. 2007) (discussing and upholding Walker as valid precedent); Shuckra v. Armstrong, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4408, at *12–13 (D. Conn. March 21, 2003) (unpublished) (holding that where a habeas petition contains at least one timely claim, other claims cannot be dismissed for untimeliness).

then on March 1 the Supreme Court announced a new retroactive legal right that applies to you. The triggering date for any claims that you have that are related to your trial is January 1, and the triggering date for the claim that you have that is based on the new Supreme Court case is March 1. You should file a habeas petition that contains all of your claims by January 1 of the following year. If you file in February, the court will hear your claim based on the new Supreme Court case, but will probably not hear any of the claims related to your trial.

The time limit for habeas petitions is very strict, but most federal courts have allowed the statute of limitations to be tolled (meaning that the time limit is put on hold) under certain circumstances. Tolling occurs while your state post-conviction appeal is pending, provided that you filed the petition correctly.[365] This means that if you have filed the state post-conviction petition in the proper court, with all the paperwork submitted properly, and within the time allowed by state law,[366] then the time that the state court spends considering your petition will not count against your one-year time limit. However, your time does not toll while a federal court is considering your petition.[367] In some extreme situations, you may qualify for "equitable tolling." Time that is equitably tolled does not count against your one-year time limit. However, equitable tolling is only available when "'extraordinary circumstances' beyond the petitioner's control make it impossible to file a petition on time."[368]

Think of the time limit as a stopwatch with one year on its face. Once the direct review of your case becomes final, the clock starts ticking. When an Article 440 motion or state post-conviction petition is filed in state court, the clock is stopped. Once the state court decides the case and all other appeals are completed,[369] the clock starts ticking again, and a habeas petition must be filed in federal court before the one year is up. Note that the clock does not reset to one year. Rather, the only time remaining is what was left when the Article 440 motion or state habeas petition was filed in state court.

5. Successive Petitions[370]

It is difficult to file more than one federal habeas corpus petition. It is very important to file your habeas petition properly and completely the first time. You may not raise a habeas claim a second time after it has

365. See 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(2) (2006) (explaining that the limitations period is tolled during "the time … which a properly filed application for State post-conviction or other collateral review with respect to the pertinent judgment or claim is pending"); Artuz v. Bennett, 531 U.S. 4, 8, 121 S. Ct. 361, 364–65, 148 L. Ed. 2d 213, 218 (2000) (holding that a state post-conviction motion is "properly filed" even if the motion is procedurally barred, as long as the "delivery and acceptance [of the papers] are in compliance with the applicable laws and rules governing filings"). The Artuz Court also noted that these rules usually include the form of the document, the time limits on its delivery, the place it must be filed, and the filing fee.

366. See Allen v. Siebert, 552 U.S. 3, 7, 128 S. Ct. 2, 4, 169 L. Ed. 2d 329, 334 (2007) (holding that a petition for post-conviction relief rejected by the court as untimely is not "properly filed" under 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(2) and thus does not toll the one-year limitation, even though an affirmative defense of the state's statute of limitations may still be available).

367. See Duncan v. Walker, 533 U.S. 167, 172, 121 S. Ct. 2120, 2124, 150 L. Ed. 2d 251, 258 (2001) (holding that properly filed federal habeas petitions do not toll the one-year deadline. In this case, Walker's state conviction became final in April 1996, and he filed a habeas petition that was dismissed in July 1996. In May 1997 he tried to file another federal habeas petition, and the Court held that this petition was time-barred because the time he was waiting for the decision on his first federal habeas petition did not stop the clock on the one-year timeline).

368. See Rhines v. Weber, 544 U.S. 269, 277–78, 125 S. Ct. 1528, 1535, 161 L. Ed. 2d 440, 452 (2005) (noting that in extraordinary circumstances the court may issue a stay so that the petitioner may have the opportunity to present his claim without the time limit running out). See also Pace v. DiGuglielmo, 544 U.S. 408, 418, 125 S. Ct. 1807, 1814, 161 L. Ed. 2d 669, 679 (2005) (holding that habeas petitioner has the burden of establishing that he pursued his rights diligently and that some extraordinary circumstance stood in his way of filing within the time limit for equitable tolling to be proper). This is often a very high burden. For example, in the Third Circuit, the court rejected an equitable tolling argument when the petitioner was never informed that the state supreme court had denied his petition, even though his lawyer had been informed, since the lawyer never informed the petitioner. The court held attorney error was not sufficient to establish an extraordinary circumstance. LaCava v. Kyler, 398 F.3d 271, 275–76 (3d Cir. 2005). Courts also may allow equitable tolling of the statute of limitations to allow you to file a state exhaustion petition and an amended federal post-exhaustion petition.

369. Most courts have held that any time used to file a petition for certiorari to the Supreme Court after state post-conviction proceedings does not continue to toll the clock. See Stokes v. Dist. Attorney, 247 F.3d 539, 542 (3d Cir. 2001) (holding that the 90-day period during which a certiorari petition may be filed does not toll the statute of limitations); Snow v. Ault, 238 F.3d 1033, 1035 (8th Cir. 2001) (affirming that the limitations period is not tolled for those 90 days); Rhine v. Boone, 182 F.3d 1153, 1155 (10th Cir. 2001) (finding that the limitations period for filing a habeas petition was not tolled while defendant was seeking an appeal to the Supreme Court).

370. "Successive" means the one after. In other words, petitions after your first one are considered "successive."

been adjudicated on the merits.[371] There are a few instances when you may bring new claims in a successive habeas petition, but these instances are very limited. It is very difficult to show the court that your claim falls into one of the exceptions where petitioners are allowed to file a successive petition.

If your first petition was insufficient for one of a few reasons, the courts will allow you to file a new petition without considering the new petition successive. The following are the situations for which the courts will not consider your second petition successive:

(1) If you failed to exhaust your state remedies, and your first petition is dismissed to allow you to exhaust your state remedies, your second petition, once all the claims are exhausted, is not considered successive.[372]
(2) If your first petition is rejected for failure to pay the filing fee or for mistakes in form, the second, corrected petition is not considered successive.[373]
(3) If the first petition you filed was mislabeled as a Section 2255 petition, but actually was a Section 2241 petition that challenged the execution instead of the validity of the sentence, the court will not bar your second petition for being successive.[374]
(4) If your second petition challenges parts of the judgment that came about as the result of an earlier, successful petition, the court will not bar that second petition.[375] In this case, you must obtain authorization to file a second petition.[376]

In some cases, even if the court deems a second petition to be successive, it may still allow you to proceed with your submission. However, exceptions to the general prohibition on successive petitions are rare and very difficult to meet. The court will only consider a successive petition in extraordinary situations where you are raising a "new" claim in a second petition for federal habeas relief. The exceptions for "new" claims are different for state and federal prisoners.

If you are a state prisoner, these are the possible exceptions to the general prohibition on successive petitions:

(1) Your new claim rests on a "new" and previously unavailable rule of constitutional law that the Supreme Court has deemed is applicable retroactively "to cases on collateral appeal."[377] This means,

---

371. 28 U.S.C. § 2244(b)(1) (2006). Section 2244 applies to all petitioners filing under §§ 2241, 2254, and 2255, which includes all state and federal habeas petitioners. You may consider reading the text of 28 U.S.C. § 2244 (2006) in full to better understand the restrictions on successive petitions. See Burton v. Stewart, 549 U.S. 147, 153–54, 127 S. Ct. 793, 796–97, 166 L. Ed. 2d 628, 633–34 (2007) (instructing the district court to dismiss prisoner's petition and finding that since the prisoner had not made a motion in the court of appeals for an order authorizing the district court to consider the application, the application was thus a "second or successive" habeas application that he did not have authorization to file).

372. See Slack v. McDaniel, 529 U.S. 473, 478, 120 S. Ct. 1595, 1601, 146 L. Ed. 2d 542, 551 (2000) (deciding that "a habeas petition which is filed after an initial petition was dismissed without adjudication on the merits for failure to exhaust state remedies is not a 'second or successive' petition as that term is understood in the habeas context"); Carlson v. Pitcher, 137 F.3d 416, 420 (6th Cir. 1998) (affirming that "a habeas petition filed after a previous petition has been dismissed on exhaustion grounds is not a 'second or successive petition'"); Camarano v. Irvin, 98 F.3d 44, 46 (2d Cir. 1996) (per curiam) ("Application of the gatekeeping provisions to deny a resubmitted petition in cases such as this would effectively preclude any federal habeas review and thus, would conflict with the doctrine of writ abuse, as understood both before and after Felker …. To foreclose further habeas review in such cases would not curb abuses of the writ, but rather would bar federal habeas review altogether."). See Part D(2), "Exhaustion of State Remedies and Direct Appeal," of this Chapter for more information on exhaustion.

373. See O'Connor v. United States, 133 F.3d 548, 550 (7th Cir. 1998) (asserting that a petitioner's "returned" petition will not be considered an "initial petition"); Benton v. Washington, 106 F.3d 162, 164 (7th Cir. 1996) (finding that petitioner's failure to pay a filing fee is not to be considered an "unsuccessful petition" and therefore the subsequent petition is not considered "successive").

374. See Chambers v. United States, 106 F.3d 472, 474–75 (2d Cir. 1997). See Part A(4) of this Chapter, "Which Laws Apply to Federal Habeas Corpus," for more information on when federal prisoners would use § 2241 instead of § 2255.

375. See, e.g., In re Taylor, 171 F.3d 185, 187–88 (4th Cir. 1999) (holding that petitioner's motion is not "second or successive" where petitioner seeks to raise only those issues that originated at the time of re-sentencing, after his first petition had been granted).

376. Burton v. Stewart, 549 U.S. 147, 127 S. Ct. 793, 166 L. Ed. 2d 628 (2007) (holding that where petitioner did not obtain authorization to file a second petition challenging the same judgment, the court lacked jurisdiction to hear it).

377. 28 U.S.C. § 2244(b)(2)(A) (2006). This provision only applies to you if the Supreme Court has announced a new right since your case was decided and has explicitly said that this new right would apply to cases that have already been decided. Section 2244(b)(2)(A) only applies if the Supreme Court has held that the law was retroactive in your case. In order to file a second habeas petition, it must be clear at the time of filing that the Court has held the law to be the Supreme Court has recently clarified or made a rule of constitutional law and noted that it applies, even to cases that were decided before they made the rule. See Part C(2) of this Chapter, "New Laws: The Teague Rules."

(2) Your new claim relies on facts that you could not have discovered earlier, even with "due diligence."[378] Additionally, these facts combined with the other facts already on the record establish by "clear and convincing"[379] evidence that "but for"[380] the constitutional error that you are challenging, no reasonable juror would have found you guilty of the offense with which you were charged.[381] See Part D(3)(B)(ii) of this Chapter, "Fundamental Miscarriage of Justice."

If you are a federal prisoner, these are the possible exceptions to the general prohibition:

(1) A recent Supreme Court decision announces a retroactive legal right that was not available when you filed your first petition.[382] In these cases, you do not need to show "the likelihood of innocence." If, after the rejection of your first petition, the Supreme Court announces that a particular new law will be applied to all future and prior cases, you can submit a second petition on the same claims. In these cases, you do not need to show that ignoring the new law will harm you in some way.[383]

(2) The combination of the "newly discovered evidence" with other facts on the record will provide "clear and convincing evidence" that, in the absence of a trial court's error, the jury would have found you not guilty.[384] In these cases, you need to show that the error caused by the court's violation of the Constitution, federal laws, or treaties is not merely "harmless."

Note that even if you can prove any of the above exceptions, other procedural difficulties could still prevent you from filing a second request for habeas relief. In order to file a successive petition in federal district court, you need to get permission from a panel of three federal circuit court judges. Upon your request, the panel of three judges will review your papers and make a decision about whether or not they will allow your special successive petition within thirty days.[385] If the court decides not to review your papers, then you cannot appeal their decision and, thus, you cannot file a second petition.

Because the rules are so strict, you should be careful when you are filing your petition for the first time. Be sure you include all the facts and do not assume that you will have a second chance if you get something wrong or if you do not follow a procedural rule correctly. The new law in AEDPA was meant to be harsh, and it is.[386]

E. The Mechanics of Petitioning for Federal Habeas Corpus

This Section explains the basic process surrounding habeas law: (1) when to file, (2) where to file, (3) whom to file against, (4) how to file, (5) what to expect after you file, and (6) how to appeal.

---

retroactive. Tyler v. Cain, 533 U.S. 656, 662, 121 S. Ct. 2478, 2482, 150 L. Ed. 2d 632, 642 (2001) (allowing successive habeas petition if the claim relies "on a new rule of constitutional law, made retroactive to cases on collateral review by the Supreme Court, that was previously unavailable").

378. "Due diligence" means "good effort." 28 U.S.C. § 2254(e)(2)(A)(ii) (2006).

379. "Clear and convincing evidence" is a standard between "preponderance of evidence" and "beyond a reasonable doubt." According to the "clear and convincing evidence" standard, you must show that it is highly likely that the new facts would have changed the outcome of your trial. However, you do not have to show that the new facts definitely would have changed the outcome of your trial.

380. "But for," in this context, means "without."

381. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(e)(2)(B) (2006).

382. 28 U.S.C. § 2255 (2006).

383. Federal prisoners may be able to bring habeas claims by filing a § 2241 habeas motion even when the new law is not constitutional. To do this, the new law must meet a few conditions: (1) the new law must be substantive, and it must now deem the "criminal" conduct for which the petitioner was convicted no longer "criminal"; and (2) the new law must have been passed after the petitioner's direct appeal, and before the first habeas motion. See In re Jones, 226 F.3d 328, 333 (4th Cir. 2000). See Part A(4), "Which Laws Apply to Federal Habeas Corpus," of this Chapter for more information on when federal prisoners should bring § 2241 petitions.

384. 28 U.S.C. § 2255 (2006).

385. 28 U.S.C. § 2244(b)(3)(D) (2006).

386. See Felker v. Turpin, 518 U.S. 651, 654, 116 S. Ct. 2333, 2335, 135 L. Ed. 2d 827, 834 (1996) (finding AEDPA's new restrictions on successive habeas corpus petitions constitutional).

1. When to File

You must file your writ for habeas corpus in federal district court within one year after your case becomes "final."[387] This is very important; if you miss this time limit, you will most likely not be allowed to bring a federal habeas claim. The time limit is discussed in detail in Part D(4) of this Chapter, "Time Limit."

If you are filing pro se,[388] you should file the following three documents within the one-year time limit: (1) a habeas petition,[389] (2) an application for appointment of counsel, and (3) an application for a stay (in death penalty cases only).[390]

2. Where to File

If you are a state prisoner, you may have a choice of federal courts in which to file your petition. You may file your petition in either the district court of the district where you are imprisoned or the district court of the district in which you were convicted.[391] For some people, this may be the same district. For others, this may be two different districts.

There are several advantages to filing in the district court where you were convicted. First, the records of your trial and sentencing are located there. Second, it is likely that additional evidence or witnesses that you may wish to produce for the court can be found there. Third, if you were convicted in a large city or urban area and are now imprisoned in a small town or rural area, more qualified attorneys may be available to you in the district where you were convicted. On the other hand, if you have an attorney, it may be easier for a local attorney to travel to your prison to discuss the case with you. In that case, you may choose to file in the district court of the place where you are now imprisoned. In any case, regardless of where you file, the court in which you file will likely transfer your case to the district where you were convicted if the court decides that a transfer is desirable.[392]

If you are a federal prisoner, you do not have a choice of where to file your habeas petition. You must file your petition in the district in which you were convicted and sentenced.

3. Whom to File Against

If you are a state prisoner filing a Section 2254 petition, or a federal prisoner filing under Section 2241,[393] you need to name a respondent on your petition. If you are a federal prisoner filing under Section 2255, you do not need to name a respondent on your petition.[394]

(a) State Prisoners and Section 2254

As a state prisoner, your habeas petition is a civil, not a criminal, action. You can think of a habeas petition as a lawsuit—you are not suing for money or damages, but rather for a new trial, or for your release from imprisonment. Therefore, you cannot simply file a petition to the court; you must file a petition against the person currently responsible for detaining you. The person you file the petition against is called the "respondent." The respondent will be the person who has control over your custody.[395] So, the person you name as the respondent will depend on your type of custody.[396]

Generally, the person who has control over your custody and whom you should name as the respondent is the warden of your prison or the chief officer in charge of state penal institutions.[397] However, there are a

---

387. See 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(1) (2006) (state prisoners); 28 U.S.C. § 2255 (2006) (federal prisoners).

388. "Pro se" means that you are appearing in court for yourself and are not represented by a lawyer.

389. Remember to raise all possible claims, as long as you can support them with factual details and explanations about the harms.

390. A "stay" means a temporary court-ordered stop of the judicial proceeding.

391. 28 U.S.C. § 2241(d) (2006).

392. 28 U.S.C. § 2241(d) (2006).

393. If you are filing under 28 U.S.C. § 2241, the guidelines for your respondent will be similar to those for state prisoners filing under § 2254. See Part A(4), "Which Laws Apply to Federal Habeas Corpus," of this Chapter for information on when federal prisoners should use § 2241.

394. This is because a § 2255 motion, unlike a § 2241 or § 2254 petition, is technically a criminal procedural motion. So, the respondent remains the party that prosecuted you—the United States.

395. This is called the "immediate custodian rule." Rumsfeld v. Padilla, 542 U.S. 426, 435, 124 S. Ct. 2711, 2718, 159 L. Ed. 2d 513, 527 (2004).

396. See Part D(1), "In Custody," of this Chapter for more information on custody.

397. "[T]he state officer having custody of the applicant shall be named as respondent." Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rule 2(a), 28 U.S.C. § 2254 (2006). You should name either the warden or officer based on who has "custody" over you. If you are unsure, you should name both the warden and the officer as respondents.

few situations where you should name a different party as respondent. If you are not currently in custody, but are challenging a future custodial sentence, you should name the attorney general of the state that will have custody over you.[398] If your custody falls under one of the few situations where you are not under physical custody of the state,[399] you should name as respondent the person who has legal control over your custody.[400] For example, if you are on parole, you should name the parole officer and the supervising agency, such as the parole board, as the respondents.[401]

4. How to File

To begin a habeas proceeding, you need to obtain a petition form for a writ of habeas corpus. You should write to the clerk of the federal district court in which you plan to file and request this form.[402] If you are a state prisoner, you should request the standard form for a petition under 28 U.S.C. § 2254 for a writ of habeas corpus.[403] If you are a federal prisoner, request a standard form for a 28 U.S.C. § 2255 motion.[404] The clerk should send the form free of charge.[405] Sample blank forms for 28 U.S.C. § 2254 petitions and 28 U.S.C. § 2255 motions are in the United States Code ("U.S.C.") following each statute's rules.[406]

The form will ask for a lot of information. The requested information includes the facts on which you base your claims, your custody status, the state court proceedings in which you exhausted your claims, the citations and results of any other federal habeas petitions, and the relief you seek.[407] The motion must also include all the grounds of relief available to you, the facts supporting each of your claims, and the relief you are requesting.[408] In providing this information, keep the following nine steps in mind.

(a) Write Plainly

Do not worry about using legal terminology with which you are uncomfortable. The court will not penalize you for not using formal legal terms. And, if you misuse legal phrases, you may confuse the court

---

398. Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rule 2(a), 28 U.S.C. § 2254 (2006).

399. See Part D(1), "In Custody," of this Chapter for more information on custody.

400. See Rumsfeld v. Padilla, 542 U.S. 426, 439, 124 S. Ct. 2711, 2720, 159 L. Ed. 2d 513, 530 (2004) ("[I]dentification of the party exercising legal control only comes into play when there is no immediate physical custodian with respect to the challenged 'custody.'").

401. See Hogan v. Hanks, 97 F.3d 189, 190 (7th Cir. 1996) ("If the petitioner is on parole, the parole board or equivalent should be named [as respondent].").

402. For a list of federal district court addresses, see Appendix I at the end of the JLM.

403. Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rule 2(d), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006) (requiring federal district courts to supply prisoners with forms for habeas corpus petitions); 28 U.S.C. §2254 r. 2(d) (2006). Note that these are citations to the Rules Governing Section 2254 Cases in the United States District Courts. If you have trouble locating these in your library, check with the federal district court clerk.

404. Rules Governing § 2255 Cases, Rule 2(c), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2255 (2006) (requiring federal district courts to supply prisoners with forms for § 2255 motions); 28 U.S.C. §2255 r. 2(c) (2006). Please NOTE: these are citations to the Rules Governing Section 2255 Cases in the United States District Courts. If you have trouble locating these in your library, check with the federal district court clerk.

405. Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rule 2(d), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006); Rules Governing § 2255 Cases, Rule 2(c), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2255 (2006) (both requiring that courts provide the forms free of charge); 28 U.S.C. §2254 r. 2(d) (2006); 28 U.S.C. §2255 r. 2(c) (2006).

406. Petition for Relief From a Conviction or Sentence By a Person in State Custody, 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006); Motion to Vacate, Set Aside, or Correct a Sentence By a Person in Federal Custody, 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2255 (2006); 28 U.S.C. §2254 Petition for Relief From a Conviction or Sentence By a Person in State Custody (2006); 28 U.S.C. §2255 Motion to Vacate, Set Aside, or Correct a Sentence By a Person in Federal Custody (2006). Note that these are citations to blank sample forms, and should be attached to the rules governing these statutes. If you have trouble locating these in your library, check with the federal district court clerk. Note that the Rules Governing § 2255 Cases, Rule 2(c), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2255 (2006) and the Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rule 2(c), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006) state that individual districts may alter the exact format of the form, but both the forms the court uses and the sample forms should have the same substance.

407. Petition for Relief From a Conviction or Sentence By a Person in State Custody, 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006); Motion to Vacate, Set Aside, or Correct a Sentence By a Person in Federal Custody, 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2255 (2006). OR: 28 U.S.C. §2254 Petition for Relief From a Conviction or Sentence By a Person in State Custody (2006); 28 U.S.C. §2255 Motion to Vacate, Set Aside, or Correct a Sentence By a Person in Federal Custody (2006).

408. Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rule 2(c)(1)-(4), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006); Rules Governing § 2255 Cases, Rule 2(b)(1)-(4), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2255 (2006). OR: 28 U.S.C. §2254 r. 2(c)(1)-(4) (2006); 28 U.S.C. §2255 r. 2(d)(1)-(4) (2006).

and prevent the judge from understanding your claim. Just be sure to write as clearly as possible by checking your reasoning, grammar, and spelling.

(b) Tell the Facts

The most important thing you can do in your petition is to tell the court the relevant facts. Judges usually know the law but rarely know the facts of your case. If you have facts that relate to your legal claims—for example, that the government withheld a ballistics report from your trial lawyer—you should tell the court. Factual details you think are unimportant may be very important to the court.

(c) Proofread

Ask someone you trust to read over your papers. Sometimes it is difficult to evaluate your own arguments. A fresh set of eyes can catch gaps in your reasoning or grammatical mistakes you might have overlooked.

(d) Argue Truthfully and Rely on the Law

Remember who your audience is. You are writing to a federal judge and his legal assistants. Federal judges and their assistants often have a great deal of experience handling habeas petitions, so you should not try to trick them or lie to them. Also, do not make a plea for mercy. Instead, you should appeal to a judge's sense of fairness by providing a strong argument that the government has convicted or sentenced you unfairly. To do this, you should use the legal standards and information provided above in this Chapter.

(e) Provide Copies of Parts of the Record

Throughout the criminal justice process, you have probably received lots of papers like subpoenas, briefs, judgments, and transcripts. These papers make up the record of your case and are often very helpful to a reviewing court. Include copies of as much of the record as you can, and point out the relevant parts of the record in your legal argument. If you are missing some of the record or do not have access to a copy machine, ask the court to get the relevant parts of the record from the trial court or the prosecution. If possible, identify the important parts of the record as specifically as you can. For example, do not simply say that the judge asked impermissible questions at your trial; instead, identify (if possible) what those questions were and the transcript page numbers where the questions appear.

(f) Provide Citations

Statutes, administrative rules, and judicial opinions often have citations explaining where they can be found. Whenever possible, provide citations to the laws and cases that apply to your factual situation. See Chapter 2 of the JLM, "Introduction to Legal Research," to learn how to find these laws and cases and how to provide citations. You are not required to give citations,[409] but they may help the judge make his or her decision efficiently. If you know only a part of the citation, like the name of a case, you can simply include that part. If you do not know the citation, do not include it and do not worry about it. Try not to include long lists of cases in your petition ("string cites"). Instead, rely on the best ones for your case. If a lot of cases say the same thing, pick the most recent decision from the highest court and cite it.

(g) Present All Possible Claims

As discussed in Part D(5) ("Successive Petitions") of this Chapter, you probably have only one chance to submit a federal habeas petition. Thus, you should submit all the claims that are supported by the facts of your case and by the law.

(h) Sign, Date, and Copy

After you complete the form, you must sign it.[410] In addition, date the petition and/or swear to the date that it was given to a prison official to be mailed.[411] Then, make three copies of the completed petition so that

409. See Jones v. Jerrison, 20 F.3d 849, 853 (8th Cir. 1994) ("No statute or rule requires that a petition identify a legal theory or include citations to legal authority.").

410. Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rule 2(d)(5), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006); Rules Governing § 2255 Cases, Rule 2(c)(5), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2255 (2006) (requiring you, or someone you have authorized, to sign the petition under penalty of perjury); 28 U.S.C. §2254 r. 2(d)(5) (2006); 28 U.S.C. §2255 r. 2(c)(5) (2006).

411. Petition for Relief From a Conviction or Sentence By a Person in State Custody, p.15, 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006); Motion to Vacate, Set Aside, or Correct a Sentence By a Person in Federal Custody, p.14, 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2255 you have four in total. You must send the original and two copies to the clerk of the court.[412] Keep the remaining copy for your own records.

(i) Pay Your Filing Fee

The filing fee for a habeas petition is five dollars.[413] If you cannot afford the fee, you should ask the clerk of the court for an in forma pauperis application.[414] This application seeks the court's permission to proceed "in the manner of a poor person" by not paying court fees and costs. In addition to completing the in forma pauperis form, you must write and sign an application of indigence.[415] Also, you must provide a certificate from your prison warden indicating how much money is in your prison account.[416] When you have the in forma pauperis form, the application of indigence, and the prison account certificate ready, you should make a copy for your own records and send the originals to the clerk of the court. If the clerk accepts your application, you will not have to pay the filing fee or any other expenses arising in your habeas proceeding.

Federal prisoners filing a motion under 28 U.S.C. § 2255 do not have to pay a filing fee.[417] However, federal prisoners should still complete the in forma pauperis form, discussed above, because it will be helpful to have the form on file in the event that the judge chooses to appoint you counsel.[418] Federal prisoners filing 28 U.S.C. § 2241 petitions,[419] and state prisoners filing 28 U.S.C. § 2254[420] petitions will have to pay the filing fee or file the in forma pauperis application discussed above.

Passage of the Prison Litigation Reform Act ("PLRA"), which requires prisoners to make full or partial payment of the application fee for civil suits, raised a question about whether habeas petitioners would be required to pay filing fees regardless of their in forma pauperis status.[421] However, federal courts of appeal have uniformly held that requirements set out in the PLRA do not apply to habeas corpus petitions.[422]

5. What to Expect After Filing

After you have filed your petition, you can expect the court to issue one or more of the following: (a) a dismissal, (b) an order to show cause, and/or (c) an evidentiary hearing. Generally, the court must conduct an evidentiary hearing if you "alleged facts, which, if found to be true, would have entitled [you] to habeas

---

(2006). [OR: 28 U.S.C. §2254 Petition for Relief From a Conviction or Sentence By a Person in State Custody, p.15 (2006); 28 U.S.C. §2255 Motion to Vacate, Set Aside, or Correct a Sentence By a Person in Federal Custody, p.14 (2006).It is important to note the date in case the petition does not arrive at the court for an extended period of time after you have given it to prison officials to be mailed. Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rule 3(d), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006); Rules Governing § 2255 Cases, Rule 3(d) 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2255 (2006) (stating that a petition is considered on time as long as it enters the prison internal mailing system on or before the last day of filing); 28 U.S.C. §2254 r. 3(d) (2006); 28 U.S.C. §2255 r. 3(d) (2006).

412. Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rule 3(a), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006); Rules Governing § 2255 Cases, Rule 3(a), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2255 (2006); 28 U.S.C. §2254 r. 3(a) (2006); 28 U.S.C. §2255 r. 3(a) (2006).

413. 28 U.S.C. § 1914(a) (2006).

414. Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rule 3(a)(2), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006); 28 U.S.C. §2254 r. 3(a)(2) (2006).

415. Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rule 3(a)(2), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006) (requiring an affidavit that the prisoner is unable to pay the filing fee in accordance with 28 U.S.C. § 1915); 28 U.S.C. §2254 r. 3(a)(2) (2006). See also 28 U.S.C. § 1915 (2006) (on general requirements for proceedings in forma pauperis).

416. Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rule 3(a)(2), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006); 28 U.S.C. §2254 r. 3(a)(2) (2006).

417. See Rules Governing § 2255 Cases, Rule 3 advisory committee's note, 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006) ("There is no filing fee required of a movant under these rules."); 28 U.S.C. § 2255 r. 3 advisory committee's note (2006).

418. See Rules Governing § 2255 Cases, Rule 3 advisory committee's note, 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006) (stating that affidavit for an in forma pauperis form will still be attached to the form provided for a § 2255 motion in case the movant will need the form at a later stage); 28 U.S.C. § 2255 r. 3 advisory committee's note (2006).

419. 28 U.S.C. § 1915 (2006) (general guidelines on proceedings in forma pauperis). For more information on when a federal prisoner should use 28 U.S.C. § 2241 instead of § 2255, see Part A(4), "Which Laws Apply to Federal Habeas Corpus?," of this Chapter.

420. Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rule 3(a), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006); Rules Governing § 2255 Cases, Rule 3(a), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2255 (2006); 28 U.S.C. §2254 r. 3(a) (2006); 28 U.S.C. §2255 r. 3(a) (2006).

421. Prison Litigation Reform Act of 1995, Pub. L. No. 104-134, 110 Stat. 1321 ((codified at 28 U.S.C. §1915(b)(1) (1996)). Please see Chapter 14 of the JLM for a full discussion of the PLRA.

422. See, e.g., United States v. Levi, 111 F.3d 955 (D.C. Cir. 1997) (per curiam) (holding that the PLRA filing fee provisions do not apply to habeas proceedings); Smith v. Angelone, 111 F.3d 1126, 1129-30 (4th Cir. 1997) (holding that the PLRA filing fee provisions do not apply to habeas proceedings); Reyes v. Keane, 90 F.3d 676, 678 (2d Cir. 1996) (holding that the PLRA filing fee provisions do not apply to habeas proceedings).

relief."[423] In other words, the court is supposed to give you the benefit of the doubt and assume the truth of your alleged facts when deciding whether to look at the evidence. However, the court may make its decision without you present.[424]

(a) Dismissal

After you file your habeas request, the judge may dismiss your entire petition. The judge will do so if it appears on the face of your petition that you are not entitled to relief, that is, if habeas law does not provide you with any relief even assuming your claims are true.[425] For instance, the court will dismiss your claim if in your federal habeas petition you complain about a harmless error. The court may also reject your claim if the facts of your case on the record are not fully developed (in other words, if you have not fully stated that you have a federal claim), or if it is clear that your petition was not filed within the one-year time limit.

(b) Order to Show Cause

If the judge decides that, assuming the truth of your claim, you may have a case, he or she will issue an "order to show cause" to the person who has you in custody.[426] If you are a state prisoner, this person is probably the superintendent of your prison.[427] If you are a federal prisoner, the United States Attorney (the prosecutor) is this person.[428] The "order to show cause" directs the warden or attorney to state why the judge should not issue a writ of habeas corpus.[429] The warden or attorney must then reply by filing an "answer" within a time limit fixed by the court,[430] and must supply you with a copy of his answer.[431] If you object to any statement of fact in the answer, you need to contest the statements in a document known as a "traverse."[432]

---

423. See Ciak v. United States, 59 F.3d 296, 307 (2d Cir. 1995) (requiring an evidentiary hearing where petitioner alleged trial counsel abandoned defense strategy because of conflict of interest); see also Shaw v. United States, 24 F.3d 1040, 1043 (8th Cir. 1994) (dismissing habeas petition as premature when discovery had not been completed on whether trial counsel failed to use exceptions to rape shield law); United States v. Blaylock, 20 F.3d 1458, 1465–69 (9th Cir. 1994) (requiring evidentiary hearing where defendant claimed counsel's failure to inform defendant of government's plea offer constituted ineffective counsel); Gov't of Virgin Is. v. Weatherwax, 20 F.3d 572, 573, 580 (3d Cir. 1994) (requiring evidentiary hearing where defendant claimed counsel's failure to seek voir dire constituted ineffective counsel because, if true, claim would be grounds for habeas corpus relief); Frazer v. United States, 18 F.3d 778, 781, 784–85 (9th Cir. 1994) (entitling prisoner to evidentiary hearing unless files and record of the case conclusively show that the prisoner is not entitled to relief).

424. See 28 U.S.C. § 2243 (2006) (state prisoners do not have to be present when the court is only dealing with issues of law); 28 U.S.C. § 2255 (2006) (federal prisoners do not have to be present at the hearing determining a § 2255 motion).

425. Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rule 4, 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006) ("If it plainly appears from the petition and any attached exhibits that the petitioner is note entitled to relief in the district court, the judge must dismiss the petition."); Rules Governing § 2255 Cases, Rule 4(b), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2255 (2006); 28 U.S.C. §2254 r. 4 (2006); 28 U.S.C. §2255 r. 4(b) (2006).

426. Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rule 4, 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006) ("If the petition is not dismissed, the judge must order the respondent to file an answer, motion or other response."); Rules Governing § 2255 Cases, Rule 4(b), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2255 (2006); 28 U.S.C. §2254 r. 4 (2006); 28 U.S.C. §2255 r. 4(b) (2006).

427. Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rule 2(a), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006); 28 U.S.C. § 2254 r. 2(a) (2006).

428. Rules Governing § 2255 Cases, Rule 4(b), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2255 (2006) ("If the motion is not dismissed, the judge must order the United States attorney to file an answer, motion, or other response."); 28 U.S.C. § 2255 r. 4(b) (2006).

429. Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rule 4, 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006). The state attorney or a district attorney will usually represent the warden. Rules Governing § 2255 Cases, Rule 4(b), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006); 28 U.S.C. § 2254 r. 4 (2006); 28 U.S.C. § 2255 r. 4(b) (2006).

430. Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rule 5(b), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006); Rules Governing § 2255 Cases, Rule 5(b), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2255 (2006); 28 U.S.C. § 2254 r. 5(b) (2006); 28 U.S.C. § 2255 r. 5(b) (2006).

431. Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rule 5 advisory note, 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006) ("Rule 5 does not indicate who the answer is to be served upon, but it necessarily implies that it will be mailed to the petitioner."); 28 U.S.C. § 2254 r. 5 advisory committee note (2006).

432. A "traverse" is your way of denying any important facts claimed by the warden. Under Rule 5 following § 2254 and § 2255, you may submit a "reply" in response to the other side's answer within a time fixed by the judge.

(c) Evidentiary Hearing

Under AEDPA, the habeas court is required to assume the facts as determined by the state court.[433] However, after receiving the petition, answer, and traverse, the habeas court may choose to hold an evidentiary hearing on the facts that were not fully developed in state trial court.[434] The habeas court's decision to hold a hearing may depend on why the facts were not developed in the trial court. In other words, whether a hearing will be held may be affected by (1) whether some error you are responsible for prevented the development of the facts, or (2) whether the state's error prevented the factual development.

6. Petitioner's Error

If you or your lawyer failed to fully develop the facts in state court, this is referred to as a "petitioner's error." AEDPA has severely limited the opportunities for evidentiary hearings in this situation. The rule states that you must show two things: "cause" and "innocence."[435]

You can show "cause" in one of two ways:

(1) By showing you are now relying on a retroactive right newly recognized by the Supreme Court;[436] or
(2) By showing you are now relying on newly discovered facts that could not be uncovered earlier during the state proceedings through "due diligence" (reasonable effort).[437]

In addition to showing cause, you must show "innocence." You can show innocence if the "facts underlying [your] claim would be sufficient to establish by clear and convincing evidence that but for the constitutional error, no reasonable fact-finder would have found [you] guilty of the underlying offense."[438] This means that you must prove that a "reasonable" juror would not have found you guilty of the crime of which you were convicted if the constitutional error you are alleging had never happened.

---

433. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(e)(1) (2006) ("a determination of a factual issue made by a State court shall be presumed to be correct."). Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rule 5(e), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006); Rules Governing § 2255 Cases, Rule 5(d), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2255 (2006); 28 U.S.C. § 2254 r. 5(e) (2006); 28 U.S.C. § 2255 r. 5(d) (2006).

434. See Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rule 8 advisory note, 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006) (stating that the judge may hold an evidentiary hearing where the material facts of the case are in dispute (citing Townsend v. Sam, 372 U.S. 293 (1963))); 28 U.S.C. § 2254 r. 8 advisory committee note (2006). See also 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d) (2006) (circumstances under which a hearing is mandatory). The federal district court may designate a magistrate to conduct hearings on your petition. Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rule 8(b), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006); Rules Governing § 2255 Cases, Rule 8(b), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2255 (2006); 28 U.S.C. § 2254 r. 8(b) (2006); 28 U.S.C. § 2255 r. 8(b) (2006). After the hearing, the magistrate will file findings of facts and recommendations with the court. The magistrate must mail you a copy of these findings and recommendations. Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rule 8(b), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006); Rules Governing § 2255 Cases, Rule 8(b), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2255 (2006); 28 U.S.C. § 2254 r. 8(b) (2006); 28 U.S.C. § 2255 r. 8(b) (2006). You must serve and file written objections to the magistrate's findings and recommendations within 10 days of receiving the magistrate's proposals. Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rule 8(b), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006); Rules Governing § 2255 Cases, Rule 8(b), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2255 (2006); 28 U.S.C. § 2254 r. 8(b) (2006); 28 U.S.C. § 2255 r. 8(b) (2006). While Rule 8(b) states only that you "may" file written objections, you should always file written objections if you disagree with any of the magistrate's findings or recommendations.

435. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(e)(2) (2000).

436. This means a newly recognized right that can be applied to past situations.

437. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(e)(2)(A) (2000). For a case providing an example of evidence not previously discoverable through "due diligence," see Michael Wayne Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 420, 120 S. Ct. 1479, 146 L. Ed. 2d 435 (2000). In that case, the Supreme Court held that in order to obtain an evidentiary hearing in federal court the petitioner must show he exercised due diligence in trying to develop the facts in state court. If the petitioner can show he was "diligent in developing the record and presenting, if possible, all claims of constitutional error," but facts remained inadequately developed, the petitioner may be entitled to a federal evidentiary hearing. Michael Wayne Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 420, 437, 120 S. Ct. 1479, 1491, 146 L. Ed. 2d 435, 452 (2000). Additionally, the requirement of due diligence does not depend on whether the efforts were successful, but on whether "the prisoner made a reasonable attempt, in light of the information available at the time, to investigate and pursue claims in state court." Michael Wayne Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 420, 435, 120 S. Ct. 1479, 1490, 146 L. Ed. 2d 435, 451 (2000). The Court also held that "in the usual case that the prisoner, [must] at a minimum, seek[] an evidentiary hearing in the state court in the manner prescribed by state law." Michael Wayne Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 420, 436, 120 S. Ct. 1479, 1490, 146 L. Ed. 2d 435, 452 (2000); see also Dobbs v. Zant, 506 U.S. 357, 359, 113 S. Ct. 835, 836, 122 L. Ed. 2d 103, 107 (1993) (finding that a trial transcript may not be excluded for delay in its discovery where the delay was a result of the state's error).

438. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(e)(2)(B) (2006); see Sawyer v. Whitley, 505 U.S. 333, 345, 112 S. Ct. 2514, 2522, 120 L. Ed. 2d 269, 284 (1992) (citing the "actual innocence" exception, but not allowing an exception based solely upon a showing of the existence of additional mitigating evidence that bore only on the discretionary decision between the death penalty and life imprisonment).

Only by showing both cause and innocence will you be granted an evidentiary hearing to further develop your facts. If you cannot show these two things, the court will proceed with the facts as they appear in the state court record. It is difficult to overcome your error using the cause and innocence standard. So, if the lack of factual development was caused by your error, the court probably will not grant you an evidentiary hearing. This is why it is so important to investigate and raise all the facts supporting all your constitutional claims in state court. It is also why you must ask the state court to appoint an investigator and all the experts you need to help you discover and identify facts supporting your constitutional claims. Be sure to request discovery of documents, and always request an evidentiary hearing at which you can present your witnesses and evidence and can prove your claims.

7. State's Error

If the state or the state court prevented the development of facts in your case, you will receive a mandatory hearing. In Townsend v. Sain, the Supreme Court listed six situations in which state errors require the federal court to hold an evidentiary hearing:[439]

(1) The merits of the factual dispute were not resolved in the state hearing;
(2) The state's factual determination is not fairly supported by the record as a whole;
(3) The state court's fact-finding procedure did not adequately provide a full and fair hearing;
(4) There is a substantial allegation of newly discovered evidence;
(5) The material facts were not adequately developed at the state court hearing;[440] or
(6) The state judge did not afford the applicant a full and fair hearing for any reason.

Remember that these situations afford you a hearing only if the state or the court was at fault for not developing the facts during the state proceedings.

8. How to Appeal

If you filed a petition for habeas corpus in federal district court and your petition was denied, you may appeal to the appropriate United States Court of Appeals (also called the circuit court).[441] Because AEDPA has severely restricted the opportunity to file a second or successive petition for habeas relief, the opportunity to appeal your first petition is even more important. Be sure to follow the procedures correctly. You must file a notice of appeal in the district court within thirty days of the district court judgment.[442] You must be sure to file on time because it is unlikely the circuit court will grant an extension.[443]

An appeal is not mandatory, and you do not have an automatic right to appeal a denial of your habeas petition. You must get permission to appeal by obtaining a "certificate of appealability" from a federal district or circuit court judge.[444] You do this by filing an application for a certificate of appealability with your notice of appeal in district court. If the district court denies your request for a certificate of appealability entirely, you may request one from the appeals court by filing an application for a certificate of

---

439. Townsend v. Sain, 372 U.S. 293, 313, 83 S. Ct. 745, 757, 9 L. Ed. 2d 770, 786 (1963), overruled on other grounds by Keeney v. Tamayo-Reyes, 504 U.S. 1, 5, 112 S. Ct. 1715, 1717–18, 118 L. Ed. 2d 318, 326–27 (1992).

440. Under Keeney v. Tamayo-Reyes, absent a showing of cause for failure to develop the facts in state court proceedings and actual prejudice resulting from the failure, a federal court will not provide a habeas petitioner with an evidentiary hearing where the petitioner had an adequate opportunity to develop the relevant facts in state court proceedings, unless a fundamental miscarriage of justice would result from the failure to hold a hearing. Keeney v. Tamayo-Reyes, 504 U.S. 1, 11, 112 S. Ct. 1715, 1721, 118 L. Ed. 2d 318, 330–31. But see Rhoden v. Rowland, 10 F.3d 1457, 1460 (9th Cir. 1993) (remanding for an evidentiary hearing because, unlike petitioner in Tamayo-Reyes, petitioner took all steps possible to develop a record of prejudice). Note that the standards of both Townsend and Keeney were superseded by the passage of the AEDPA in 1996.

441. 28 U.S.C. § 2253 (2006).

442. 28 U.S.C. § 2107(a) (2006).

443. While obtaining an extension is hard, a federal court may grant an extension under Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 4(a)(5)(A), which will allow the court to extend the time for filing if you can show excusable neglect or good cause. Fed. R. App. P. 4(a)(5)(A). In Mendez v. Knowles, 535 F.3d 973, 980–81 (9th Cir. 2008), the court granted an extension based on excusable neglect, when the defendant's mailed habeas petition arrived to the court a day late. The court believed it was permissible to grant an extension because it would not prejudice the other party, the defendant acted in good faith when he filed the petition for an extension, and the delay was only for one day and had no impact on the judicial proceedings. Note these are still very narrow circumstances, and different courts may be more or less open to granting extensions.

444. 28 U.S.C. § 2253(c)(1) (2006); see, e.g., Hogan v. Zavaras, 93 F.3d 711, 712 (10th Cir. 1996) (denying certificate of appealability for failure to show a substantial denial of a constitutional right after writ of habeas corpus was denied by federal district court).

appealability with that court's clerk.[445] If the district court grants a certificate for only some of your claims, you may ask the court of appeals to include additional claims the district court did not specify. [446]

The circuit judge will permit an appeal only upon a "substantial showing of the denial of a constitutional right."[447] To satisfy this "substantial showing" standard, you must specify the issue(s) involved in the violation of your federal constitutional rights.[448] Be sure to ask for a certificate of appealability on every issue you want to appeal. Your appeal will be limited to those issues on which the certificate is granted.

Some of the "appealable issues" that have been accepted in the past are listed below:

(1) Even if the parties consent, does a magistrate judge have the authority under 28 U.S.C. § 636 and Article III of the Constitution to make a final judgment in a habeas corpus case?[449]
(2) Did the trial court deny you the right to confront witnesses?[450]
(3) Did the prosecutor commit a Brady violation concerning blood-testing evidence?[451]
(4) Did the prosecutor commit a Brady violation by withholding witness statements at trial that were favorable to your case?[452]
(5) Was your confession coerced by police beatings?[453]
(6) Was your trial counsel constitutionally ineffective?[454]

If your petition was dismissed for procedural reasons, like failure to exhaust state remedies,[455] a certificate of appealability will issue only if reasonable jurors could debate whether (1) a constitutional violation occurred, and (2) the district court correctly dismissed your petition.[456] Issuing a certificate of appealability does not require showing that the appeal will succeed but that reasonable jurors could debate whether the petition should have been resolved differently.[457] The inquiry does not require full consideration of the factual or legal bases presented in support of the claim,[458] which makes getting a certificate of appealability a bit easier.

---

445. If the court of appeals denies your request for a certificate of appealability, you may try to appeal this denial to the Supreme Court. The Court has held that it has jurisdiction to hear such appeals. Hohn v. United States, 524 U.S. 236, 247, 118 S. Ct. 1969, 1975, 141 L. Ed. 2d 242, 256 (1998).

446. See, for example, Rule 22-1(e) of the Ninth Circuit Rules, which allows a defendant to present issues that did not appear in the application for the certificate of appealability and which submits this motion to expand the certificate of appealability to be decided by the merits panel. 9th Cir. R. 22–1(e).

447. 28 U.S.C. § 2253(c)(2) (2006).

448. 28 U.S.C. § 2253(c)(3) (2006); see Herrera v. United States, 96 F.3d 1010, 1012 (7th Cir. 1996) (requiring that the defendant specify the issues involved in order to obtain a certificate of appealability).

449. See Orsini v. Wallace, 913 F.2d 474, 476 (8th Cir. 1990) (finding that magistrate judges have the authority to order entry of judgment in a habeas case upon consent of the parties).

450. See Norris v. Schotten, 146 F.3d 314, 329–31 (6th Cir. 1998) (stating that an error in limiting cross-examination will allow for a grant of habeas relief only if the error rises to the level of a denial of fundamental fairness).

451. Norris v. Schotten, 146 F.3d 314, 334 (6th Cir. 1998) (stating Brady principles apply only when exculpatory information is not disclosed or when a tardy disclosure prejudices the defendant).

452. Mahler v. Kaylo, 537 F.3d 494, 504 (5th Cir. 2008) (reversing district court's denial of defendant's petition for habeas relief upon finding that state court unreasonably applied clearly established federal law under Brady when it found that evidence which was favorable to the defendant and withheld by the prosecutor was not material).

453. See Nelson v. Walker, 121 F.3d 828, 832 (2d Cir. 1997) (finding that defendant satisfied the requirement of substantial showing of a denial of a constitutional right, as the record indicated that further inquiry was necessary into his claim that his confession was involuntary).

454. See Part B(2) ("Standards and Tests for Claims of Violations") of this Chapter for more information on ineffective assistance of counsel.

455. See Part B(5) ("Successive Petitions") of this Chapter for more information on failure to exhaust.

456. Slack v. McDaniel, 529 U.S. 473, 484, 120 S. Ct. 1595, 1604, 146 L. Ed. 2d 542, 555 (2000) (reversing after determining defendant had shown reasonable jurists could conclude district court's procedural rulings were wrong). The Second Circuit applied the same standard in Matias v. Artuz, 8 Fed. Appx. 9, 11–12 (2d Cir. 2001).

457. Miller-El v. Cockrell, 537 U.S. 322, 327, 123 S. Ct. 1029, 1034, 154 L. Ed. 931, 944 (2003) ("A petitioner satisfies this standard by demonstrating that jurists of reason could disagree with the district court's resolution of his constitutional claims or that jurists could conclude the issues are adequate to deserve encouragement to proceed further.").

458. Miller-El v. Cockrell, 537 U.S. 322, 336, 123 S. Ct. 1029, 1039, 154 L. Ed. 931, 950 (2003) ("This threshold inquiry does not require full consideration of the factual or legal bases adduced in support of the claims. In fact, the statute forbids it.").

F. How to Get Help from a Lawyer

You do not have a constitutional right to a court-appointed lawyer in a federal habeas corpus proceeding. In non-capital cases, a court may provide you with a lawyer when the "interests of justice" require the court to do so.[459] If you are not appointed a lawyer, your right to access the courts includes at least some access to either a law library or "jailhouse" lawyers.[460] See JLM, Chapter 3, "Your Right to Learn the Law and Go to Court," for more information. It is important to note that even if you are appointed counsel for your habeas petition, you do not have a right to effective assistance of counsel.[461]

Generally, federal courts will appoint a lawyer to represent you if one of the following is true:

(1) Your case involves complex legal issues;[462]
(2) You are mentally or physically disabled;[463]
(3) You cannot investigate key facts, or the issues in your case require expert testimony to be resolved;[464]
(4) The court decides to hold a hearing to investigate the facts of your case;[465]
(5) The court allows you to conduct discovery;[466] or
(6) Your habeas petition is denied in district court but a certificate of appealability is granted to appeal in the court of appeals.

---

459. 18 U.S.C. § 3006A(a)(2)(B) (2006); 28 U.S.C. § 2255 (2006); Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rules 6(a), 8(c), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006); Rules Governing § 2255 Cases, Rule 6(a), 8(c), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2255 (2006); see also Reese v. Fulcomer, 946 F.2d 247, 263–64 (3d Cir. 1991) (describing the factors the court should consider before appointing counsel to an indigent habeas petitioner as: (1) whether the habeas claim is frivolous; (2) whether appointment of counsel will benefit the petitioner and the court; (3) the complexity of the legal or factual issues in the case; and (4) the ability of the petitioner to investigate facts and present claims). You should research when you are entitled to a lawyer.

460. See Bounds v. Smith, 430 U.S. 817, 828, 97 S. Ct. 1491, 1498, 52 L. Ed. 2d 72, 83 (1977) (holding that the right of access to the courts includes a right to either adequate law libraries or assistance from persons trained in the law). See also Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 351–53, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2180–81, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 617–19 (1996) (affirming prisoners' rights to access law libraries and librarian staff but limiting the Bounds decision by holding that prisoners need to show an actual injury suffered to prove a violation of the right to access to the courts).

461. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(i) (2006) ("The ineffectiveness or incompetence of counsel during Federal or State collateral post-conviction proceedings shall not be a ground for relief in a proceeding arising under § 2254.").

462. See, e.g., Battle v. Armontrout, 902 F.2d 701, 702 (8th Cir. 1990) (requiring appointment of counsel because the factual and legal issues were sufficiently complex and numerous; also finding that petitioner's ability to investigate the issues was significantly impaired by his imprisonment); United States ex rel. Jones v. Franzen, 676 F.2d 261, 267 (7th Cir. 1982) (appointing counsel for complex legal issues when allegations included withholding evidence, admission of co-defendant's statements, and improper jury sequestration). But see Williams v. Groose, 979 F.2d 1335, 1337 (8th Cir. 1992) (refusing to appoint counsel when petitioner had assistance in his earlier judicial proceedings that raised substantially similar claims as the habeas claim).

463. Merritt v. Faulkner, 697 F.2d 761, 764–66 (7th Cir. 1983) (appointing counsel to a recently blinded petitioner in a non-habeas petition that had the same requirements for appointment of counsel as habeas petitions). But see Phelps v. United States, 15 F.3d 735, 738 (8th Cir. 1994) (refusing to appoint counsel to petitioner committed to a mental health institution when the court found that he was "fully capable of arguing the issues" and there was "no inference that [petitioner] was unable to understand the legal proceedings in which he was participating").

464. See, e.g., Battle v. Armontrout, 902 F.2d 701, 702 (8th Cir. 1990) (requiring appointment of counsel because the factual and legal issues were sufficiently complex and numerous and because petitioner's imprisonment significantly impaired his ability to investigate the issues); United States ex rel. Wissenfeld v. Wilkins, 281 F.2d 707, 715 (2d Cir. 1960) (ruling that when complex factual data must be developed and prisoner does not have sufficient ability or training to recognize, organize, or elicit testimony to develop such data, appointment of counsel may be necessary); Al Odah v. United States, 346 F. Supp. 2d 1, 8 (D.D.C. 2004) (determining that prisoners who did not have access to a law library, had an "obvious language barrier," and were "almost certainly lack[ing] a working knowledge of the American legal system" were entitled to appointed counsel because it was "impossible" for them to investigate their claim); Lemeshko v. Wrona, 325 F. Supp. 2d 778, 788 (E.D. Mich. 2004) (finding counsel should be appointed in a habeas action where prisoner "has made a colorable claim, but lacks the means to adequately investigate, prepare, or present the claim").

465. The Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rule 8(c), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006) and the Rules Governing § 2255 Cases, Rule 8(c), 28 U.S.C fol. § 2255 (2006) require a court to appoint a lawyer if the court decides to hold a hearing to investigate the facts of your case. See also United States v. Duarte-Higareda, 68 F.3d 369, 370 (9th Cir. 1995) (finding court appointment of counsel mandatory when evidentiary hearings are required for habeas petitions under 28 U.S.C. § 2255 or 28 U.S.C. § 2254).

466. The Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rule 6(a), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 (2006) and the Rules Governing § 2255 Cases, Rule 6(a), 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2255 (2006) suggest that a court should provide you with a lawyer if the court allows you to use discovery and believes a lawyer is necessary for effective use of discovery proceedings. See Chapter 8 of the JLM, "Obtaining Information to Prepare Your Case: The Process of Discovery," for a discussion of discovery.

The federal district judge usually has full discretion in this matter, meaning that the appellate court normally will not overturn the district judge's decision about the appointment of counsel. However, at least one jurisdiction has made a general rule that counsel should be appointed whenever an indigent prisoner has a strong legal claim in a habeas petition.[467]

To request a court-appointed lawyer, you must prepare a motion for appointment of counsel, a brief memorandum stating the legal and factual reasons why the court should appoint a lawyer, and an in forma pauperis application, including the supporting documents discussed in Part E(4) of this Chapter.

You may file these papers at several different times during your habeas proceeding. For example, you may request a lawyer even before you file your petition, so that the lawyer can help you prepare the petition. Courts, however, are unlikely to appoint an attorney at this early stage because they do not know the nature or complexity of your claims. So, you may want to wait until you submit your petition or until a later stage in the proceeding, such as during discovery or a hearing, when the rules favor appointment of a lawyer.

G. Conclusion

This Chapter explains the writ of habeas corpus and lays out the procedures you will need to follow to petition for the writ. Remember, your imprisonment violates federal law if your arrest, trial, or sentence violated a federal statute, treaty, or the U.S. Constitution. But, the process and standards for your habeas claim will differ according to whether you are a federal or state prisoner. In either case, a federal habeas petition claims your imprisonment is illegal because your arrest, trial, or sentence violated federal law.

467. The court's rule extends to civil actions in general, not just habeas petitions. Hahn v. McLey, 737 F.2d 771, 774 (8th Cir. 1984) (holding that "when an indigent [person] presents a colorable civil claim to a court, the court, upon request, should order the appointment of counsel" if satisfied that the prisoner has alleged a prima facie case).

APPENDIX A:

THE NINE STEP APPEALS PROCESS

This chart represents the steps a state prisoner must take when appealing a decision, starting from the initial trial, all the way through to the habeas petition.

The first column, on the left, shows how you would make direct appeals. Box 1 is your initial trial. After this trial you make your direct appeals to the higher state courts, which is box 2. After your direct appeals to the higher state courts, you appeal to the United States Supreme Court, in box 3, as the last step in your direct appeals process.

The second column, in the middle of the chart, represents your state post-conviction proceedings, which you begin after your direct appeals are complete. Box 4 shows the first of the collateral attacks, and you begin this process in the same court where your trial was. In box 5, you appeal to the higher state courts. Finally, in box 6, you appeal to the United States Supreme Court, the last step in your state post-conviction proceedings.

The final step is to begin your federal habeas corpus petition, which you start in the appropriate federal district court, in box 7. You begin the federal habeas process after completing your direct appeals process, and after you have completed your state post-conviction proceedings. In box 8, you appeal to the appropriate circuit court, and finally, you appeal to the United States Supreme Court in the last box 9.

You can always ask the Supreme Court to hear your case, but it does not have to grant your request. If you do ask the Supreme Court to hear your case, it is called petitioning for a writ of certiorari. The Supreme Court will either grant your petition (hear your case) or deny your petition (refuse to hear your case). It is worth noting that the Supreme Court rarely grants these petitions. That said, it is important to file, even if you think you might not be successful.

DIRECT APPEAL	STATE POST-CONVICTION	FEDERAL HABEAS
(1) Trial in the Court	(4) Post-Conviction in Court Where Convicted	(7) Federal District Court
↓	↓	↓
(2) Direct Appeal to State Intermediate Court and State Supreme Court	(5) Appeal to State Intermediate Court and State Supreme Court	(8) Court of Appeal (Circuit Court)
↓	↓	↓
(3) U.S. Supreme Court	(6) U.S. Supreme Court	(9) U.S. Supreme Court

APPENDIX B:

CHECKLIST FOR FIRST-TIME FEDERAL HABEAS CORPUS PETITIONERS

Before submitting your habeas petition, make sure that you can answer "yes" to each of the following questions:

For state and federal prisoners:

(1) Have you tried to get help from an attorney?
(2) Does your conviction or sentence violate the Constitution, federal law, or treaties?
(3) Have you described how your conviction or sentence violates the Constitution, federal law, or treaties?
(4) Have you discussed every possible violation and included a detailed explanation of the facts for each violation?
(5) If the violation concerns the illegal search and seizure clause of the Fourth Amendment, have you shown that you were denied the opportunity to discuss this claim in the trial or appeals process?
(6) If possible, does your petition avoid relying on "new" law?
(7) Does the violation have a substantial effect on the verdict or sentence? Was the violation not "harmless?"
(8) Have you explained why the violation was not harmless?
(9) Can you file your habeas petition within one year from when your case became final?
(10) Have you written to the clerk to ask for a model form?
(11) Have you checked your petition to see if your arguments are logical and organized and have the correct spelling and grammar?
(12) If possible, have you asked someone to read and check your papers?
(13) Have you made four copies of the petition and kept one for yourself?

For state prisoners:

(1) Are you in state custody?
(2) Have you followed state procedures in exhausting the state remedies or have you challenged your procedural default?
(3) Have you chosen where you will file your petition?

For federal prisoners:

(1) Are you in federal custody?
(2) Have you finished your initial appeal motion to your sentencing court?

For state prisoners convicted of capital punishment:

(1) Have you sought the advice of an attorney?
(2) Have you applied for a stay of execution?
(3) If your state meets the guidelines in Section 2261 (if your state is an "opt-in" state), can you file your habeas petition within six months of the date your conviction becomes final?

A JAILHOUSE LAWYER'S MANUAL

Chapter 14:
The Prison Litigation Reform Act

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

CHAPTER 14

THE PRISON LITIGATION REFORM ACT*

A. Introduction

The Prison Litigation Reform Act ("PLRA") changes various parts of the United States Code that address civil rights litigation and in forma pauperis ("IFP") proceedings (proceedings where you file a lawsuit as a poor person and avoid paying many of the normal fees and costs). Overall, the PLRA is designed to make it harder for prisoners to file complaints in federal court.

This Chapter will inform you of the parts of the PLRA and court decisions applying it, offer some practical advice, and suggest ways to defend yourself in pro se litigation when the PLRA is raised by prison officials. Some of this advice is tentative and may be changed, because there are important questions about the PLRA that the courts have not yet settled.[1]

The PLRA makes it extremely important to be sure your legal claim has a firm basis before you file it. Under the PLRA, even if you proceed in forma pauperis, you have to pay the full $350 filing fee (and another $450 if you wish to appeal the court's decision) in installments. You also run the risk of getting a "strike" under the PLRA's "three strikes" provision, which says that if you have three cases dismissed as frivolous, malicious, or for failing to state a valid legal claim, you can no longer use the IFP procedure, and you will have to pay the entire filing fee in advance without the option of paying in installments. The PLRA also requires that you first try all of the procedures available to you in prison to address your problem. This is called exhausting your administrative remedies. This means that you must file a grievance (or other appropriate administrative remedy, such as a disciplinary appeal) and pursue all available appeals within the prison system before you can file a suit in federal court. You have to do this even if you are suing for money damages and the grievance system does not provide damages. These are only a few of the obstacles and restrictions the PLRA imposes.

Part B of this Chapter discusses the PLRA's effect on your responsibility for paying filing fees. Part C provides an overview of the PLRA's "three strikes" provision. Part D explains the new requirement that forces a court to dismiss any prisoner cases that it believes are frivolous or malicious, that fail to state a claim, or that seek damages from a defendant who is immune from such claims. Part E discusses at length one of the most important aspects of the PLRA: the requirement that you exhaust all administrative remedies before you will be allowed into court. Part F describes the physical injury requirement of the PLRA, which restricts you from bringing a federal civil action for mental or emotional injury without first showing a physical injury. Parts G through L briefly discuss the PLRA provisions that (1) limit the attorneys' fees prisoners can recover in a successful suit; (2) allow defendants in a prisoner suit not to respond to the prisoner's complaint unless the court tells them to do so; (3) allow for proceedings that happen before the trial to be conducted by telephone or video; (4) allow the court to order the loss of earned good-time credit if it finds that your claim was filed for a malicious or harassing purpose; (5) require that any damages awarded to a prisoner for a loss or injury he suffered be paid directly to satisfy any restitution orders (money owed by a prisoner for any damages to a victim); and (6) change how injunctions can be issued and maintained.

B. Filing Fees

The PLRA requires indigent prisoners who are granted IFP status in federal court to pay the filing fee in full or in installments, as they have the money in their prison accounts. You may wonder why you should bother seeking IFP status if you are going to have to pay the filing fees anyway. The reason is that if you do

---

* This Chapter was written by John Boston of The Legal Aid Society. If you would like to learn more or have questions about the PLRA, you are encouraged to write to The Legal Aid Society, Prisoners' Rights Project, 199 Water Street, New York, NY, 10038.

1. Unfortunately, many significant decisions interpreting the PLRA are unreported—that is, they do not appear in the Federal Reporter and Federal Supplement volumes available in prison law libraries. They are available on the Lexis and Westlaw computer services. Citations like "1999 WL 12345" are Westlaw citations. Citations like "1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 19764" are Lexis citations. Some jurisdictions do not allow you to cite to these decisions (use them to support your legal argument). For additional important information about unpublished cases, see Chapter 2 of the JLM, "Introduction to Legal Research."

not proceed IFP, you will have to pay the entire fee before you can file the case. Also, IFP litigants can have their summons and complaints served by the U.S. Marshals Service[2] and can be excused from payment of some costs (though not fees) on appeal.[3] Without IFP status, you will have to take care of service and pay appeal costs yourself.[4]

If you are seeking IFP status, you must submit certified statements[5] of your prison accounts for the preceding six months.[6] If a delay in your submissions results from prison authorities' inaction, your case will not be dismissed.[7] If prison officials fail or refuse to provide a certified statement, the court can order them to do so.[8] District courts in various states have different procedures for acquiring the certified statements.[9] You should obtain the necessary forms and instructions from the clerk of the court in which you plan to bring suit.[10]

If you are granted IFP status, you must pay the entire fee for filing either a complaint or an appeal[11] according to the following formula:

> (1) (b)(1) ... The court shall assess and, when funds exist, collect, as a partial payment of any court fees required by law, an initial partial filing fee of 20 percent of the greater of—
> (A) the average monthly deposits to the prisoner's account; or > (B) the average monthly balance in the prisoner's account for the 6-month period immediately preceding the filing of the complaint or notice of appeal.
> (2) After payment of the initial partial filing fee, the prisoner shall be required to make monthly payments of 20 percent of the preceding month's income credited to the prisoner's account. The agency having custody of the prisoner shall forward payments from the prisoner's account to the clerk of the court each time the amount in the account exceeds $10 until the filing fees are paid.[12]

Your case should not be dismissed if you cannot pay the initial fee. The statute says that the initial fee is to be collected "when funds exist," and it adds that prisoners shall not be prohibited from bringing suit or appealing a judgment because they cannot pay.[13] A case should not be dismissed for nonpayment without

---

2. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(d) (2006).

3. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(c) (2006).

4. See JLM, Chapter 6, "An Introduction to Legal Documents" for information on necessary documents.

5. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(a)(2) (2006).

6. See Spaight v. Makowski, 252 F.3d 78, 79 (2d Cir. 2001) (holding that the relevant time period on appeal is six months before filing the notice of appeal, not six months before moving for in forma pauperis status). As a practical matter, courts have accepted information supplied by prison officials that was a little out of date. See Jackson v. Wright, No. 99 C 1294, U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3487, at *1 n.2 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 10, 1999) (unpublished) (accepting statement ending the month before the complaint was filed in light of the small amounts involved); Lam v. Clark, No. 99 C 558, U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1573, at *2–3 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 10, 1999) (unpublished) (accepting account information ending three and a half weeks before the filing of the complaint, since there is a consistent pattern for the six months covered).

7. See Lawton v. Ortiz, No. 06-1167 (FSH), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 66905, at *2 (D.N.J. Sept. 19, 2006) (unpublished) (granting IFP status where prisoner said officials did not respond to his requests for an account statement and other evidence showed he was indigent). In addition, delay in submitting the financial information will not cause you to miss the statute of limitations as long as the complaint itself is submitted in time. See Garrett v. Clarke, 147 F.3d 745, 746 (8th Cir. 1998) ("[T]he prisoner should be allowed to file the complaint, and then supply a prison account statement within a reasonable time.") (citations omitted); but see Murray v. Dosal, 150 F.3d 814, 817 n.4 (8th Cir. 1998) (applying Garrett but noting strong disagreement).

8. See Stinnett v. Cook County Med. Staff, No. 99 C 1696, U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4605, at *2 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 19, 1999) (unpublished) (requiring prison officials to send a certified copy of prisoner's financial statement to the court).

9. In the New York federal courts, for example, three of the four district courts (the Southern, Eastern, and Northern Districts) obtain the certified statement directly from prison officials; prisoner plaintiffs must submit a form to the court authorizing the disclosure of this information and the payment of the fee from their prison accounts. In the Western District of New York, prisoners must sign such an authorization and must also obtain certification from the prison of their funds. The prison should include in the certification the average balances for the preceding six months.

10. The addresses of the federal district courts (organized by Circuit) are provided in Appendix I of the JLM.

11. The fee for filing a federal court civil complaint is $350.00. 28 U.S.C. § 1914(a) (2006). For appeals, there is a $450.00 filing fee (effective November 1, 2003). See U.S. Courts, Federal Court Fees, available at http://www.uscourts.gov/fedcourtfees/courtappealsfee_january2009.pdf (last visited Oct. 30, 2009).

12. 28 U.S.C. §§ 1915(b)(1)–(2) (2006).

13. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(b)(4) (2006); see Taylor v. Delatoor, 281 F.3d 844, 850–51 (9th Cir. 2002) (holding that a prisoner who cannot pay the initial fee must be allowed to proceed with his case and not merely be granted more time to pay).

first determining if the prisoner has had the ability to pay.[14] However, if you intentionally do not pay, or if you fail to take the necessary steps to pay, your case is likely to be dismissed.[15] Prisoners generally may not be stopped from bringing an action because they owe fees from a prior action.[16] However, one federal circuit has held that prisoners who try to avoid paying filing fees dishonestly or who fail to pay fees because they are subject to the "three strikes" provision[17] can be denied IFP status or be barred completely from filing.[18]

If you lose a case, a federal court may decide to charge you with the costs of the lawsuit.[19] Courts are free to choose whether they will make you pay the costs.[20] But, if a court decides to charge you with costs, you cannot appeal that decision.[21]

There are no exceptions to the fee requirement. Once your case is filed, you owe the fee. The court cannot defer payment until after your release.[22] You usually must pay these filing fees even if your case is dismissed immediately, if you fail to submit the necessary financial information,[23] or if mistakes by the lower court make an appeal necessary.[24] You cannot get the fee back by voluntarily withdrawing the complaint or appeal.[25] Prison officials must keep collecting fees if you remain within their legal custody, even if you are transferred to another jurisdiction.[26] They are required to prioritize these fees over other deductions that are taken out of your account.[27]

---

14. Redmond v. Gill, 352 F.3d 801, 804 (3d Cir. 2003) (holding that the district court abused its discretion in dismissing a case when the plaintiff failed to return an authorization form for payment of fees within 20 days, and requiring that the plaintiff be given more time); Hatchett v. Unknown Nettles, 201 F.3d 651, 652 (5th Cir. 2000) ("[I]t is an abuse of discretion for a district court to dismiss an action for failure to comply with an initial partial filing fee order without making some inquiry regarding whether the prisoner has complied with the order by submitting any required consent forms within the time allowed for compliance."); Beyer v. Cormier, 235 F.3d 1039, 1041 (7th Cir. 2000) (holding that the court should have communicated with prison officials or granted an extension of payment deadline). But see Cosby v. Meadors, 351 F.3d. 1324, 1332–33 (10th Cir. 2003) (holding that a court that issued repeated orders for the plaintiff to show cause could dismiss where the plaintiff did not document any reasons for his failure to pay).

15. See Cosby v. Meadors, 351 F.3d. 1324, 1332–33 (10th Cir. 2003) (affirming dismissal of case where plaintiff said he could not pay the fees but had spent his money on other items); Jackson v. N.P. Dodge Realty Co., 173 F. Supp. 2d 951, 952 (D. Neb. 2001) (rejecting prisoner's claim where he was clearly able to pay).

16. See Walp v. Scott, 115 F.3d 308 (5th Cir. 1997) (reversing a dismissal based on a pending action and stating that there is no requirement that a prisoner complete payment of fees before beginning another action).

17. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(g) (2006). For more information on the "three strikes" provision, see the next section .

18. See Campbell v. Clarke, 481 F.3d 967, 969–70 (7th Cir. 2007) (reasoning that a judge's discretion allows for the rejection of an action filed without fees when there is evidence of manipulation by the filing prisoner); Sloan v. Lesza, 181 F.3d 857, 859 (7th Cir. 1999) (barring a prisoner who had "struck out" under 28 U.S.C. § 1915(g) from filing further litigation until he paid the past-due filing fees). However, a recent decision held that a prisoner who is subject to the "three strikes" provision of the PLRA and who has not paid filing fees owed from prior suits cannot be barred from filing under the "imminent danger of serious physical injury" exception to that provision. Miller v. Donald, 541 F.3d 1091, 1096–97 (11th Cir. 2008).

19. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(f)(2) (2006). In one recent case, a prisoner was assessed $7989.90 in costs and $15,750 in attorneys' fees. See Sanders v. Seabold, 188 F.3d 509, 509 (6th Cir. 1999)

20. Feliciano v. Selsky, 205 F.3d 568, 572 (2d Cir. 2000) (noting "the ability of a court to require, as a matter of discretion, that the indigent prisoner pay the costs, or some part of them").

21. Whitfield v. Scully, 241 F.3d 264, 272–73 (2d Cir. 2001) ("[T]he 1996 amendments to § 1915 have undercut the ability of prisoners to appeal an award of costs on the ground of indigency").

22. Ippolito v. Buss, 293 F. Supp. 2d 881, 883 (N.D. Ind. 2003) (denying a prisoner's request to defer payments).

23. See McGore v. Wrigglesworth, 114 F.3d 601, 605 (6th Cir. 1997) (warning that failure to pay fees or to provide necessary affidavit of indigency or trust account statement may eventually result in dismissal of case); Leonard v. Lacy, 88 F.3d 181, 186 (2d Cir. 1996) ("[W]e will apply the PLRA to impose any required obligation for filing fees (subject to installment payments) upon all prisoners who seek to appeal civil judgments without prepayment of fees"); but see Smith v. District of Columbia, 182 F.3d 25, 29 (D.C. Cir. 1999) (not requiring prisoners to pay the full filing fee whenever their in forma pauperis application is denied)

24. Lebron v. Russo, 263 F.3d 38, 42 (2d Cir. 2001) (refusing to grant an exception to filing fee requirement even where plaintiff had to re-file due to a judicial error in the first filing).

25. Goins v. Decaro, 241 F.3d 260, 261 (2d Cir. 2001) ("The PLRA makes no provision for return of fees partially paid or for cancellation of the remaining indebtedness in the event that an appeal is withdrawn.").

26. Beese v. Liebe, 153 F. Supp. 2d 967, 970 (E.D. Wis. 2001) (holding that state officials are obligated "to put into place procedures for continuing the collection of the filing fees … The payments do not stop, nor are they even temporarily placed on hold, just because the Secretary has chosen to send [the prisoners] out-of-state.") (citation omitted).

27. Smith v. Huibregtse, 151 F. Supp. 2d 1040, 1043 (E.D. Wis. 2001) (finding "funds exist within the meaning of the PLRA whenever a prisoner has funds or receives income and prison officials must give payment of federal court filing

Filing fee payments are based on all money the prisoner receives (not just prison wages), and deductions from the fee may not be made for money spent on legal copies and postage.[28] The twenty percent monthly payment is to be made separately for each case. The Second Circuit has held that only one fee and one award of costs are to be collected at a time, so a prisoner will never be required to pay more than forty percent of his income.[29] Other courts in different parts of the country have held that all fees are to be collected at the same time.[30]

In class actions, only the prisoners who signed the complaint or notice of appeal are responsible for payment of fees.[31] In cases involving more than one plaintiff, the courts have disagreed about payment of filing fees. One federal appeals court held that each plaintiff must pay an equal amount of the fee saying that, "each prisoner should be proportionally liable for any fees and costs that may be assessed."[32] Another appeals court held that multiple prisoners joining similar claims in a single suit must each pay a filing fee, but also have to file separate complaints.[33] More recently, another federal appeals court agreed that each prisoner plaintiff must pay the full filing fee, but need not file a separate complaint.[34]

The last two holdings appear contrary to the recent Supreme Court decision in Jones v. Bock,[35] which held that courts should not interpret the exhaustion requirement to depart from usual procedural practices except when the PLRA actually says to do so.[36] The usual practice is to allow plaintiffs to file joint complaints under Rule 20 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and to our knowledge, only one filing fee is usually required when multiple plaintiffs join in the same complaint.[37] Therefore, assuming Jones covers fees priority").

---

28. Rutledge v. Romero, No. 99 C 3453, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9021, at *2–5 (N.D. Ill. June 3, 1999) (unpublished) (establishing that funds calculation is based on all money in the account, including money from third parties and money intended for legal communication). Courts have disagreed about whether money that is withheld from a prisoner's income and held until release should be counted in calculating the fees or used to pay the fees. Compare Cardew v. Gord, 26 F. App'x 48, 2001 U.S. App. LEXIS 24268, at *3 (2d Cir. 2001) (unpublished) (upholding a district court decision that "lag pay" should not be used for filing fees), with Spence v. McCaughtrey, 46 F. Supp. 2d 861, 862–63 (E.D. Wis. 1999) (holding prisoner's "release account" was a "prisoner's account" under the statute and should be used for filing fees purposes).

29. Whitfield v. Scully, 241 F.3d 264, 278 (2d Cir. 2001) ("28 U.S.C. § 1915(b)(2) permits the recoupment of up to 40 percent of a prisoner's monthly income at any given time—20 percent for filing fees under § 1915(b) and an additional 20 percent for costs under § 1915(f).").

30. Lefkowitz v. Citi-Equity Group, 146 F.3d 609, 612 (8th Cir. 1998) (holding the 20% assessment rate applies in every case); see also Miller v. Lincoln County, 171 F.3d 595, 596 (8th Cir. 1999) (declining to reduce the monthly payments for a prisoner with multiple cases).

31. Talley-Bey v. Knebl, 168 F.3d 884, 887 (6th Cir. 1999) ("[I]n cases involving class actions, ... the responsibility of paying the required fees and costs rests with the prisoner or prisoners who signed the complaint .... [O]n appeal, the prisoner or prisoners signing the notice of appeal are obligated to pay all appellate fees and costs.").

32. In re Prison Litigation Reform Act, 105 F.3d 1131, 1138 (6th Cir. 1997). One lower court has taken a different approach to dividing the filing fee, holding that the parties can divide the fee as they like. Every person is responsible if the fee goes unpaid, even if they have already paid more than their share. See Alcala v. Woodford, No. C 02-0072 TEH (pr), 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9504, at *2–3 (N.D. Cal. May 21, 2002) (unpublished) (holding that all parties are responsible for seeing that the fee is paid in full, and that all may be penalized for a failure to pay).

33. Hubbard v. Haley, 262 F.3d 1194, 1197 (11th Cir. 2001) (holding that the clear language of the PLRA requires each prisoner to bring a separate suit). A number of other courts have adopted Hubbard. See Caputo v. Belmar Municipality & County, No. 08-1975 (MLC), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 36883, at *5–6 (D.N.J. May 2, 2008) (unpublished); Kron v. Cook, No. H-07-4054, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4687, at *1 (S.D. Tex. Jan. 23, 2008) (unpublished); Lilly v. Ozmint, No. 2:07-1700-JFA-RSC, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 49153, at *2 (D.S.C. July 11, 2007) (unpublished); Osterloth v. Hopwood, No. CV 06-152-M-JCL, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 83461, at *2–3 (D. Mont. Nov. 15, 2006) (unpublished); Sharif v. Dallas County, No. 3:06-CV-0143-K ECF, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 73756, at *1 (N.D. Tex. Oct. 5, 2006) (unpublished).

34. Boriboune v. Berge, 391 F.3d 852, 854–56 (7th Cir. 2004); see Suarez v. A1, No. 06-2782 (JBS), U.S. Dist. LEXIS 93720, at *11–13 (D.N.J. Dec. 13, 2006) (unpublished) (acknowledging the difficulties of joint litigation, but holding different plaintiffs who sought the same remedy could proceed jointly though they each had to pay a separate filing fee).

35. Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 127 S. Ct. 910, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798 (2007).

36. Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 212, 127 S. Ct. 910, 919–20, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 811–12 (2007).

37. The relevant statute says: "The clerk of each district court shall require the parties instituting any civil action, suit or proceeding in such court, whether by original process, removal or otherwise, to pay a filing fee of $350 ... " 28 U.S.C. § 1914(a) (emphasis added). That language strongly suggests that only a single filing fee is required even if there are multiple plaintiffs. The statute continues: "The clerk shall collect from the parties such additional fees only as are prescribed by the Judicial Conference of the United States." 28 U.S.C. § 1914(b) (2006)..

filing fees, then prisoners should be allowed to pay only one filing fee even when there are multiple plaintiffs.

The joinder rules also permit plaintiffs to sue multiple defendants and bring multiple claims in the same lawsuit, but only as long as the injuries all arise out of the same "transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences" and when there is "any question of law or fact common to all defendants."[38] Those rules have sometimes been enforced loosely. However, some courts are now strongly enforcing the joinder rules against prisoners so that they cannot pay a single filing fee to litigate claims that strictly speaking call for separate complaints and payments.[39]

Many constitutional challenges to the filing fees provisions have been unsuccessful.[40] Courts have emphasized the fact that the filing fees provisions do not actually bar anyone from bringing suit.[41]

The filing fees provisions of the PLRA govern proceedings in federal court, and presumably have no application in state court. We are aware of no decisions on the issue.

The filing fees provisions only apply to civil actions. Habeas corpus petitions and other post-judgment proceedings are generally not considered civil actions.[42] Motions to vacate a criminal sentence under 28 U.S.C. § 2255 are also generally not considered civil actions.[43]

On the other hand, some courts have found that certain types of writs (motions) are considered civil actions and are thus subject to the PLRA. Such writs are considered civil when they seek relief that is similar to that in a civil action, as opposed to writs that are directed to criminal matters. For example, some courts consider writs of mandamus (motions commanding a public official to perform his or her duty) and other extraordinary writs to be civil actions.[44]

---

38. Fed. R. Civ. P. 20(a)(2) (joinder of defendants); see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 18 (joinder of claims).

39. See George v. Smith, 507 F.3d 605, 607–08 (7th Cir. 2007); see also Pope v. Miller, No. CIV-07-0284-F, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 61921, at *1–2 (W.D. Okla. Aug. 21, 2007) (unpublished) (holding the claims of two plaintiffs misjoined under the Federal Rules where they involved distinct factual issues as to exhaustion and merits). An example of how this works is Vasquez v. Schueler, No. 06-cv-00743-bbc, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 88193, at *5–6 (W.D. Wis. Nov. 29, 2007) (unpublished). The plaintiff in that case raised six different claims that arose at four different times. The court said that he had to pursue them in four separate lawsuits. The only claims that could be combined in the same lawsuit were claims of excessive force and of denial of medical or mental health care following the use of force.

40. Lefkowitz v. Citi-Equity Group, 146 F.3d 609, 612 (8th Cir. 1998) (rejecting an equal protection claim and holding the filing fee provision does not unconstitutionally restrict access to the courts); Lucien v. DeTella, 141 F.3d 773, 775–76 (7th Cir. 1998) (finding the statute does not violate prisoners' due process rights); Mitchell v. Farcass, 112 F.3d 1483, 1490 (11th Cir. 1997) (finding no equal protection violation); Nicholas v. Tucker, 114 F.3d 17, 21 (2d Cir. 1997) (holding the provisions constitutional both generally and as applied to the prisoner); Hampton v. Hobbs, 106 F.3d 1281, 1288 (6th Cir. 1997) ("[W]e find that the fee provisions of the Prison Litigation Reform Act violate neither a prisoner's constitutional right of access to the courts, nor his rights under the First Amendment, the Due Process Clause, the Equal Protection Clause, or the Double Jeopardy Clause of the United States Constitution.").

41. See, e.g., Nicholas v. Tucker, 114 F.3d 17, 21 (2d Cir. 1997) (upholding 28 U.S.C. § 1915(b)(4) (1996)).

42. See Skinner v. Wiley, 355 F.3d 1293, 1294 (11th Cir. 2004) (holding PLRA inapplicable to habeas petitions arising from prison disciplinary proceeding); Malave v. Hedrick, 271 F.3d 1139, 1140 (8th Cir. 2001) (holding that PLRA does not apply when challenging a delayed parole revocation hearing); Walker v. O'Brien, 216 F.3d 626, 633–36 (7th Cir. 2000) (holding that proper habeas actions are not civil actions governed by PLRA, regardless of subject matter); Blair-Bey v. Quick, 151 F.3d 1036, 1039–41 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (holding that PLRA does not apply to challenges to parole procedures), on reh'g, 159 F.3d 591 (D.C. Cir. 1998); Anderson v. Singletary, 111 F.3d 801, 805 (11th Cir. 1997) (holding that the filing fee requirement of PLRA does not apply to in forma pauperis habeas petitions or appeals). But see Kincade v. Sparkman, 117 F.3d 949, 952 (6th Cir. 1997) (stating that prisoners may not "cloak" civil actions as habeas/post-conviction cases).

A habeas petition challenges your custody in some fashion. Most courts hold you cannot challenge prison conditions via federal habeas corpus. See, e.g., Beardslee v. Woodford, 395 F.3d 1064, 1068–69 (9th Cir. 2005), cert. denied, 543 U.S. 1096 (2005). The main exceptions to this rule involve confinement, segregation, and disciplinary proceedings. Some courts have held that getting out of segregation, like getting out of prison entirely, may be pursued by habeas. See, e.g., Medberry v. Crosby, 351 F.3d 1049, 1053 (11th Cir. 2003). Others have held that it cannot. See, e.g., Montgomery v. Anderson, 262 F.3d 641, 643–44 (7th Cir. 2001). Disciplinary proceedings resulting in loss of good time instead of or in addition to placement in segregation must be challenged by petitioning for habeas corpus. See Edwards v. Balisok, 520 U.S. 641, 644, 117 S. Ct. 1584, 1587, 137 L. Ed. 2d 906, 911 (1997).

43. Kincade v. Sparkman, 117 F.3d 949, 950 (6th Cir. 1997) (examining the history and purpose of the Prison Litigation Reform Act); United States v. Cole, 101 F.3d 1076, 1077 (5th Cir. 1996) (determining that the absense of filing fees in the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act shows that the PLRA was not meant to apply to motions to vacate under § 2255).

44. See Santee v. Quinlan, 115 F.3d 355, 357 (5th Cir. 1997) (finding writ of mandamus filed by prisoner

Bankruptcy cases and challenges to seizures of property, despite their relation to criminal proceedings, have been treated as civil actions and are subject to the filing fees provisions.[45] However, in non-bankruptcy and property-seizure contexts, courts are divided on the issue of whether motions made within criminal prosecutions to address conditions of confinement related to the prosecution are civil actions.[46]

The filing fees provisions apply only to "prisoners." Under the PLRA, a prisoner is defined as "any person incarcerated or detained in any facility who is accused of, convicted of, sentenced for, or adjudicated delinquent for, violations of criminal law or the terms and conditions of parole, probation, pretrial release, or diversionary program."[47] This definition includes pretrial detainees as well as military prisoners,[48] and prisoners in privately operated prisons and jails,[49] juvenile facilities,[50] and "halfway houses," or drug treatment programs when the prisoner is confined to the program as a result of a criminal charge or conviction.[51] If you are incarcerated as a result of civil proceedings, you are not a prisoner under the PLRA,[52] essentially civil, and therefore covered by PLRA); In re Smith, 114 F.3d 1247, 1250 (D.C. Cir. 1997) (holding writ of prohibition in question was within the scope of PLRA because it contained "underlying claims that are civil in nature"); In re Tyler, 110 F.3d 528, 529 (8th Cir. 1997) ("[A] mandamus petition arising from an ongoing civil rights lawsuit falls within the scope of the PLRA."); In re Washington, 122 F.3d 1345, 1345 (10th Cir. 1997) (determining that writs for mandamus are civil actions under PLRA). Contra Madden v. Myers, 102 F.3d 74, 76 (3d Cir. 1996) (finding "a writ of mandamus is by its very nature outside the ambit of [PLRA]"); Martin v. United States, 96 F.3d 853, 854 (7th Cir. 1996) (holding "a petition for mandamus in a criminal proceeding is not a form of prisoner litigation" and thus is not covered by PLRA); In re Nagy, 89 F.3d 115, 116 (2d Cir. 1996) (denying PLRA coverage "to writs directed at judges conducting criminal trials").

---

45. See United States v. Howell, 354 F.3d 693, 695–96 (7th Cir. 2004) (holding that prisoners challenging administrative forfeiture are required to abide by the limitations imposed by PLRA); United States v. Jones, 215 F.3d 467, 469 (4th Cir. 2000) (holding that a motion under the Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 41(e) for the return of seized property is a civil action); Lefkowitz v. Citi-Equity Group, 146 F.3d 609, 612 (8th Cir. 1998) (concluding that "under the plain language of [PLRA], the phrase 'civil action or appeal' is not limited to challenges to conditions of confinement, and encompasses the instant commercial litigation."); Pena v. United States, 122 F.3d 3, 4 (5th Cir. 1997) (holding that a motion under Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 41(e) for the return of seized property is a "civil action" subject to the PLRA filing fee requirements).

46. See United States v. Lopez, 327 F. Supp. 2d 138, 140–42 (D.P.R. 2004) (finding that a motion challenging placement in administrative segregation after the government decided to seek the death penalty against the defendant was not a civil action); United States v. Hashmi, 621 F. Supp. 2d 76, 85–86 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 16, 2008) (holding that a motion in a criminal case contesting "Special Administrative Measures" ("SAM"s) affecting communication between the defendant and his counsel was not governed by PLRA). Contra United States v. Antonelli, 371 F.3d 360, 361 (7th Cir. 2004) (holding that a motion in a long-completed criminal case challenging a prison policy forbidding prisoners from retaining possession of pre-sentence reports should have been treated as a separate civil action); U.S. v. Khan, 540 F. Supp. 2d 344, 349–52 (E.D.N.Y. 2007) (finding PLRA applies to motion challenging SAMs and other pretrial jail restrictions).

47. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(b) (2006) (requiring prisoners to pay a filing fee); see also 28 U.S.C. § 1915 (h) (2006) (defining "prisoner").

48. See Marrie v. Nickels, 70 F. Supp. 2d 1252, 1262 (D. Kan. 1999) (finding PLRA applies to military prisoners).

49. See e.g., Roles v. Maddox, 439 F.3d 1016, 1017–18 (9th Cir. 2006) (holding the PLRA applicable to persons held in private prisons); Boyd v. Corr. Corp. of Am., 380 F.3d 989, 993–94 (6th Cir. 2004) (same); Ross v. County of Bernalillo, 365 F.3d 1181, 1184 (10th Cir. 2004) (same)

50. See Christina A. ex rel. Jennifer A. v. Bloomberg, 315 F.3d 990, 994–95 (8th Cir. 2003) (holding attorneys' fees provisions apply to juveniles); Lewis v. Gagne, 281 F. Supp. 2d 429, 433 (N.D.N.Y. 2003) (holding exhaustion requirement applies to juveniles).

51. See Jackson v. Johnson, 475 F.3d 261, 266–67 (5th Cir. 2007) (holding that parolee in a halfway house, which he could not leave without permission as a result of his criminal conviction was a prisoner); Ruggiero v. County of Orange, 467 F.3d 170, 174–75 (2d Cir. 2006) (holding that, despite state law, a "drug treatment campus" was a "jail, prison, or other correctional facility" under 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(a), even though state law said it was not a correctional facility, because that term "includes within its ambit all facilities in which prisoners are held involuntarily as a result of violating the criminal law"); Witzke v. Femal, 376 F.3d 744, 752–53 (7th Cir. 2004) (holding "intensive drug rehabilitation halfway house" was an "other correctional facility" under PLRA).

52. See Michau v. Charleston County, S.C., 434 F.3d 725, 727–28 (4th Cir. 2006) (holding that a person was civilly detained pursuant to sexually violent predator statute); Perkins v. Hedricks, 340 F.3d 582, 583 (8th Cir. 2003) (holding that a person was civilly detained in prison Federal Medical Center); Kolocotronis v. Morgan, 247 F.3d 726, 728 (8th Cir. 2001) (holding person committed after finding of not guilty by reason of insanity is not a "prisoner" under the PLRA); LaFontant v. INS, 135 F.3d 158, 165 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (finding immigration detainees not "prisoners" subject to fee provisions of PLRA).

unless you are civilly committed in connection with pending criminal charges continue to be pretrial detainees, in which case you would be subject to the PLRA as a pretrial detainee.[53]

Ex-prisoners, including parolees,[54] who file complaints or notices of appeal after they are released are not considered prisoners under the PLRA and are not bound by the PLRA filing fees provisions.[55] If indigent, ex-prisoners can proceed without any prepayment or installment payment of fees, like any other poor person.

In addition, courts have disagreed about prisoners released after filing a complaint or notice. Some courts (including the Second Circuit) say that the obligation to pay ends on the prisoner's release.[56] Other courts say that a released prisoner must pay any fees that were due before release.[57] One court has said that a released prisoner must pay the full filing fee regardless of release, but does not explain how payments should be assessed against a released prisoner.[58]

C. The "Three Strikes" Provision

Filing fees are also addressed by the "three strikes" provision, one of the harshest aspects of the PLRA, which provides:

> In no event shall a prisoner bring a civil action or appeal a judgment in a civil action or proceeding under this section [in forma pauperis] if the prisoner has, on 3 or more prior occasions, while incarcerated or detained in any facility, brought an action or appeal in a court of the United States that was dismissed on the grounds that it is frivolous, malicious, or fails to state a claim upon which relief may be granted, unless the prisoner is under imminent danger of serious physical injury.[59]

This provision means that if you have had three complaints or appeals dismissed as frivolous, malicious, or failing to state a claim, you cannot proceed in forma pauperis ("IFP") unless you can show you are in imminent danger of serious injury.[60] Thus, you have to pay the entire filing fee up front, or your case will

---

53. See Kalinowski v. Bond, 358 F.3d 978, 979 (7th Cir. 2004) (holding that persons committed under the Illinois Sexually Dangerous Persons Act are prisoners); Gibson v. Commissioner of Mental Health, No. 04 Civ. 4350 (SAS), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27428, at *10–11 (S.D.N.Y. May 8, 2006) (unpublished) (holding a person held civilly as incompetent to stand trial was a prisoner).

54. As pointed out above, persons who are paroled to institutions and are not free to leave such institutions, may remain prisoners under PLRA. However, normal parole restrictions do not make you a prisoner. See Bisgeier v. Michigan Dept. of Corr., No. 07-13625, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5460, at *4 (E.D. Mich. Jan. 25, 2008) (unpublished) ("While there may be certain conditions imposed upon Plaintiff as a parolee, there can be no doubt that he is neither 'confined,' 'incarcerated,' nor 'detained in' any jail, prison, or other correctional facility.").

55. See, e.g., Cox v. Mayer, 332 F.3d 422, 425 (6th Cir. 2003); Ahmed v. Dragovich, 297 F.3d 201, 210 (3d Cir. 2002); Dixon v. Page, 291 F.3d 485, 488-89 (7th Cir. 2002); Robbins v. Switzer, 104 F.3d 895, 897 (7th Cir. 1997); Gibson v. Commissioner of Mental Health, No. 04 Civ. 4350 (SAS), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27428, at *10–11 (S.D.N.Y. May 8, 2006) (unpublished) ("[C]ourts have determined that the PLRA does apply to a prisoner who filed a suit during his confinement and thereafter was released from prison.")

56. See, e.g., DeBlasio v. Gilmore, 315 F.3d 396, 398–99 (4th Cir. 2003) (holding released prisoner need not pay fees due before release because "[a] released prisoner should not have to shoulder a more difficult financial burden than the average indigent plaintiff in order to continue his lawsuit") (citations omitted); McGann v. Comm'r, Soc. Sec. Admin., 96 F.3d 28, 29–30 (2d Cir. 1996) (holding that the PLRA fee requirements do not apply to a released prisoner, but dismissing the suit as frivolous).

57. See, e.g., In re Smith, 114 F.3d 1247, 1251–52 (D.C. Cir. 1997) (holding that the PLRA merely excuses the prepayment of fees and not the payment of fees at all); Robbins v. Switzer, 104 F.3d 895, 898–99 (7th Cir. 1997) (denying that release from prison eliminates the obligation that would have been met while the imprisonment continued).

58. See Gay v. Tex. Dept. of Corr. State Jail Div., 117 F.3d 240, 242 (5th Cir. 1997).

59. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(g) (2000). As with the filing fees provisions discussed in the previous Section, this provision does not apply to a person who is not a prisoner when he or she files suit. See Kolocotronis v. Morgan, 247 F.3d 726, 728 (8th Cir. 2001) (holding the provision does not apply to person who was committed after finding of a not guilty by reason of insanity).

60. One court has held that a prisoner with three strikes is barred from intervening in an already filed civil action. Holloway v. Magness, No. 5:07CV00088 JLH/BD, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44823, at *9 (E.D. Ark. June 6, 2008) (unpublished). The court does not explain how it gets from the the statutory language, "bring a civil action or appeal a judgment in a civil action or proceeding," to intervention, which is neither "bringing a civil action" nor "appealing a judgment."

probably be dismissed,[61] and you will still have to pay the fee in installments.[62] If you have not paid the fee, and the court rules that you are subject to the three strikes provision, most courts say you should have an opportunity to pay in order to avoid dismissal.[63] One court, however, has said that a prisoner who sought IFP status, even though he had already been found to have three strikes, had committed "a fraud on the federal judiciary," and so his appeal was dismissed.[64] That same court has also held that a litigant with three strikes can be barred from filing any further papers in court until all previously incurred fees have been paid.[65] However, that rule cannot be extended to bar IFP filings by prisoners whose cases satisfy the "imminent danger of serious physical injury" exception to § 1915(g).[66]

The three strikes provision makes it crucial for you to be sure that the facts that you assert amount to a violation of law in any complaint you file. If you file lawsuits based just on your general feeling that someone has mistreated you, you will probably be assessed strikes and may not be able to proceed IFP in the future.

The three strikes provision, like the filing fees provisions, only applies to prisoners who are incarcerated when they file suit.[67] It applies to civil actions or appeals, categories that generally do not include habeas corpus or other challenges to criminal convictions or sentences.[68]

Rule 60(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure can sometimes be used to remove a strike, although courts are unlikely to do so except in very unusual circumstances.[69]

The three strikes provision of the PLRA governs actions brought in federal court, and is not binding on state courts,[70] so an indigent prisoner with three strikes may prefer to file in state court if the state law permits. However, some federal courts have suggested that it is inappropriate, or even sanctionable, for

---

61. See Jones v. Federal Bureau of Prisons, No. 5:07cv158, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47775, at *3 (E.D. Tex. June 19, 2008) (unpublished) (rejecting request for a "payment plan," since that would amount to proceeding in forma pauperis). On the other hand, one decision does state that district courts have the discretion to allow a litigant with three strikes to pay fees over time. Dudley v. United States, 61 Fed. Cl. 685, 688, 2004 U.S. Claims LEXIS 221, at *10–11 (Fed. Cl. Aug. 12, 2004) (unpublished). In addition, a timely notice of appeal confers appellate jurisdiction even if the filing fee is not tendered on time. Daly v. United States, No. 03-1445, 109 F. App'x 210, 212, 2004 U.S. App. LEXIS 15794, at *4 (10th Cir. July 30, 2004) (unpublished). This might mean that if you have not paid the filing fee within the 30 days during which a notice of appeal must be filed, you will have some additional time to pay the fee. This question has not been answered to our knowledge.

62. Jerelds v. Smith, No. 1:07-cv-00111-MP-AK, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21562, at *1 (N.D. Fla. Mar. 6, 2008) (unpublished) (stating that a plaintiff whose suit was dismissed for three strikes could not get a refund of his partial fee payment, "since by filing an action he agreed to a full payment of the filing fees").

63. See Smith v. District of Columbia, 182 F.3d 25, 29–30 (D.C. Cir. 1999) (stating that a person barred from filing as a poor person has 14 days to pay the filing fee so his suit may proceed); Craig v. Cory, No. 98-1128, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 26602, at *4, 1998 Colo. J. C.A.R. 5453, 5453 (10th Cir. Oct. 20, 1998) (unpublished) (holding that PLRA does not bar prisoner with three strikes from suing, provided he pays the filing fee). But see Dupree v. Palmer, 284 F.3d 1234, 1236 (11th Cir. 2002) (holding a suit must be dismissed without prejudice and refiled, since the statute says fees must be paid when the suit begins).

64. Sloan v. Lesza, 181 F.3d 857, 859 (7th Cir. 1999) ("Litigants to whom [the three strikes provision] applies take heed! An effort to bamboozle the court by seeking permission to proceed in forma pauperis after a federal judge has held that § 1915(g) applies to a particular litigant will lead to immediate termination of the suit.").

65. Sloan v. Lesza, 181 F.3d 857, 859 (7th Cir. 1999).

66. Miller v. Donald, 541 F.3d 1091, 1098–99 (11th Cir. 2008). Subsection C(1)(a) below discusses that exception.

67. Jackson v. Johnson, 475 F.3d 261, 266–67 (5th Cir. 2007) (noting that persons released on parole into the general public are not "prisoners" under PLRA, but holding that a person confined to a halfway house remained a prisoner subject to the three strikes provision).

68. See Jennings v. Natrona County Det. Ctr. Med. Facility, 175 F.3d 775, 779 (10th Cir. 1999) (finding habeas corpus petitions are not "civil actions" for purposes of 28 U.S.C. § 1915); In re Crittendom, 143 F.3d 919, 920 (5th Cir. 1998) (deciding the character of a writ of mandamus depends on the underlying suit; here, because it was a civil action, the three strikes rule required the prisoner to pay the filing fee first). See Part B of this Chapter for the definition of civil actions.

69. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 60(b) (stating that there are certain grounds where a court may "relieve a party or its legal representative from a final judgement, order, or proceeding"); see also Dalvin v. Beshears, 943 F. Supp. 578, 579 n.3 (D. Md. 1996) (holding plaintiff's suit to obtain a standing order of the court was not frivolous for PLRA purposes because it was the only way he could get it). Prisoners who have been charged with a strike for failure to exhaust administrative remedies may wish to pursue this remedy in light of the Supreme Court's decision that failure to exhaust is not a failure to state a claim. See Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 213–15, 127 S. Ct. 910, 920–21, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 812–13 (2007). For more information on exhaustion, see Part E of this Chapter.

70. See Lakes v. State, 333 S.C. 382, 387, 510 S.E.2d 228, 231 (S.C. Ct. App. 1998) (holding that a prisoner could proceed IFP, since South Carolina has no analogy to PLRA's three strikes provision).

prisoners to do so in cases when defendants can remove to federal court.[71] This view seems wrong to us. Section 1915(g) applies only to persons with three strikes who "bring" an action under the federal in forma pauperis statute. Prisoner plaintiffs should hardly be penalized for the actions of defendants, especially in light of the Supreme Court's warning that courts should not expand the PLRA's requirements according to their policy views.[72]

1. What is a Strike?

The PLRA is very specific about which dismissals count as strikes: dismissals for failure to state a claim, frivolousness, or maliciousness. Failure to state a claim means that even if all facts in your complaint are true, they still do not establish a violation of law the court could remedy.[73] A legally frivolous suit is one that fails to raise an "arguable question of law,"[74] one based on an "indisputably meritless legal theory,"[75] or one in which the complaint itself makes clear that the case is barred by a defense, like the statute of limitations or the immunity doctrines.[76] A factually frivolous suit is one alleging "fantastic or delusional scenarios."[77] A malicious suit is one filed for an improper purpose or amounting to an abuse of the legal system.[78]

A case dismissed on grounds other than frivolousness, maliciousness, or failure to state a claim is not a strike.[79] Dismissals are not automatically strikes if they are on grounds such as lack of prosecution,[80] lack of jurisdiction,[81] or expiration of the statute of limitations.[82]

A grant of summary judgment—which is partly based on the absence of material issues of fact—on part or all of a case is generally not a strike.[83] One reason this is particularly important is that government lawyers often improperly file motions to dismiss claims that raise disputed factual issues. The court should treat these as summary judgment motions, even though the government called them motions to dismiss for

---

71. Crooker v. Burns, 544 F. Supp. 2d 59, 62 (D. Mass. Apr. 10, 2008) (citing prior unpublished opinion where the court said it was inappropriate for the prisoner to file in state court when he knew the case would be removed to federal court).

72. See Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 212–13, 220–24, 127 S. Ct. 910, 919–20, 924–26, 66 L. Ed. 2d 798, 810–12, 816–18 (2007); Miller v. Donald, 541 F.3d 1091, 1099 (11th Cir. 2008) (applying Jones prohibition on judicial supplementation of PLRA to three strikes provision).

73. See Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 212–13, 127 S. Ct. 910, 920–21, 66 L. Ed. 2d 798, 812–13 (2007); Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45–46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 102, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 84 (1957) (holding a case should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it is "beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief").

74. Neitzke v. Williams, 490 U.S. 319, 328, 109 S. Ct. 1827, 1833, 104 L. Ed. 2d 338, 349 (1989).

75. Neitzke v. Williams, 490 U.S. 319, 327, 109 S. Ct. 1827, 1833, 104 L. Ed. 2d 338, 348 (1989).

76. See Neitzke v. Williams, 490 U.S. 319, 327–28, 109 S. Ct. 1827, 1833, 104 L. Ed. 2d 338, 348–49 (1989); Street v. Vose, 936 F.2d 38, 39 (1st Cir. 1991) (holding that dismissal of a claim on grounds of frivolousness where statute of limitations had expired is appropriate).

77. Neitzke v. Williams, 490 U.S. 319, 328, 109 S. Ct. 1827, 1833, 104 L. Ed. 2d 338, 348 (1989).

78. See Pittman v. Moore, 980 F.2d 994, 994-995 (5th Cir. 1993) (stating that repetitive litigation is malicious); Spencer v. Rhodes, 656 F. Supp. 458, 464 (E.D.N.C. 1987) (holding that a case filed out of desire for vengeance and not to remedy a violation of legal rights was malicious), aff'd, 826 F.2d 1061 (4th Cir. 1987).

79. See Tafari v. Hues, 473 F.3d 440, 443 (2d Cir. 2007) (refusing to treat an appeal dismissed as premature as a strike, stating the PLRA "was designed to stem the tide of egregiously meritless lawsuits, not those temporarily infected with remediable procedural or jurisdictional flaws"); Fortson v. Kern, No. 05-CV-73223-DT2005, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38466, at *4–5 (E.D. Mich. Dec. 19, 2005) (unpublished) (holding dismissal for failure to pay initial filing fee is not a strike); Maree-Bey v. Williams, No. 04-1759 (RCL), 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35722, at *7 (D.D.C. Aug. 1, 2005) (unpublished) (holding that dismissal under Rule 8 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure is not a strike).

80. Butler v. Department of Justice, 492 F.3d 440, 443–45 (D.C. Cir. 2007) (holding that dismissal for lack of prosecution is not a strike); Harden v. Harden, No. 8:07CV68, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 56922, at *3 (D. Neb. Aug. 3, 2007) (unpublished) (holding that dismissals for lack of jurisdiction or failure to prosecute are not strikes).

81. Thompson v. Drug Enforcement Admin., 492 F.3d 428, 437 (D.C. Cir. 2007) (holding that "[d]ismissals for lack of jurisdiction do not count as strikes unless the court expressly states that the action or appeal was frivolous or malicious.").

82. Myles v. U.S., 416 F.3d 551, 553 (7th Cir. 2005) (noting that dismissal based on statute of limitations is not a strike since it is based on an affirmative defense).

83. See Stallings v. Kempker, No. 04-1585, 109 F. App'x 832, 2004 U.S. App. LEXIS 19312, at *4 (8th Cir. 2004) (unpublished) (modifying a judgment to remove the strike from a case ended by summary judgment); Chappell v. Pliler, No. CIV S-04-1183 LKK DAD P, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92538, at *9 (E.D. Cal. Dec. 21, 2006) (unpublished) ("The granting of summary judgment on some claims precludes a determination that the case was dismissed for failure to state a claim on which relief could be granted.").

failure to state a claim.[84] If this happens to you, it is very important that you alert the court that there is a disputed factual issue. That way, even if you lose, you will lose by summary judgment, and you will not gain a strike.

The failure to exhaust administrative remedies is not a failure to state a claim unless apparent on the face of the complaint.[85] That means dismissal for non-exhaustion should generally not be a strike.[86] Most courts have held a partial dismissal—that is, an order throwing out some claims or some defendants, but letting the rest of the case go forward—is not a strike,[87] nor is a case where some claims are dismissed on grounds specified in Section 1915(g) but other claims are dismissed on other grounds.[88] But, there are some recent decisions to the contrary. For example, the Seventh Circuit appeals court has held that if any claim is dismissed, the prisoner can be charged a strike.[89] Other circuits have held that a prisoner can be charged a strike if part of the case is dismissed on "three strikes grounds," even if the rest of it is dismissed for failure to exhaust administrative remedies.[90]

A case that is voluntarily withdrawn is not a strike.[91] An action that was never accepted for filing cannot be a strike.[92] Only federal court dismissals count as strikes, since a state court is not a "court of the United States" under the statute.[93] At least one court has charged the plaintiff a strike in a case filed in state court

---

84. Motions to dismiss for failure to state a claim are distinct from motions for summary judgment as a matter of law. Compare Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) (motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted) with Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 (summary judgment).

85. Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 212–13, 127 S. Ct. 910, 920–21, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 812–13 (2007) ("[T]he usual practice under the Federal Rules is to regard exhaustion as an affirmative defense."). Id. at 216 ("[T]here is no basis for concluding that Congress implicitly meant to transform exhaustion from an affirmative defense to a pleading requirement….").

86. Some courts have held a case dismissed for non-exhaustion is a strike because it seeks "relief to which [the plaintiff] is not entitled" and is therefore frivolous. See, e.g., Wallmark v. Johnson, No. 2:03-CV-0060, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7088, at *4 (N.D. Tex. Apr. 28, 2003) (unpublished). You can argue that these courts are wrong because an unexhausted case does not necessarily fail to raise "an arguable question of law" or rest on an "indisputably meritless legal theory," which, as discussed above, is what "frivolous" means. Further, as the Second Circuit has said, PLRA "was designed to stem the tide of egregiously meritless lawsuits, not those temporarily infected with remediable procedural or jurisdictional flaws." Tafari v. Hues, 473 F.3d 440, 443 (2d Cir. 2007). Certainly, if you had an argument in an earlier case that what you did should have satisfied the exhaustion requirement, or that no administrative remedy was really available to you, that case should not be seen as frivolous and treated as a strike.

87. Thompson v. Drug Enforcement Admin., 492 F.3d 428, 432 (D.C. Cir. 2007) (statute does not apply to actions "containing at least one claim falling within none of the three strike categories"); Tafari v. Hues, 539 F. Supp. 2d 694, 701–02 (S.D.N.Y. 2008) (extensive discussion and review of case law).

88. See Juarez v. Frank, No. 05-C-738-C, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 571, at *14 (W.D. Wis. Jan. 6, 2006) (unpublished) (holding that where state law claim was dismissed because court declined to exercise supplemental jurisdiction, case was not a strike); Fortson v. Kern, No. 05-CV-73223-DT2005, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38466, at *5 (E.D. Mich. Dec. 19, 2005) (unpublished) (holding that a case deemed frivolous as to one defendant and otherwise dismissed for failure to pay filing fee was not a strike); Barela v. Variz, 36 F. Supp. 2d 1254, 1259 (S.D. Cal. 1999) (holding that a case was not a strike where some claims were dismissed for failure to state a claim and defendants were granted summary judgment in others). But see Jones v. Cimarron Corr. Facility, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21982, at *3 (W.D. Okla. Aug. 25, 2005) (holding that a case was a strike even though one claim was dismissed without prejudice for failure to exhaust).

89. George v. Smith, 507 F.3d 605, 607–08 (7th Cir. 2007) (plaintiff in this case asserted 50 distinct claims against 24 defendants in a single suit). The Seventh Circuit has also held that in cases involving multiple plaintiffs, every plaintiff is charged a strike if a claim involving any one of the plaintiffs is a strike. Boriboune v. Berge, 391 F.3d 852, 855–56 (7th Cir. 2004).

90. Pointer v. Wilkinson, 502 F.3d 369, 376 (6th Cir. 2007); Banks v. United State Marshal, 274 Fed. Appx. 631, 635 (10th Cir. 2008).

91. Armentrout v. Tyra, No. 98-3161, 1999 U.S. App LEXIS 1769, at *1 (8th Cir. Feb. 9, 1999) (unpublished). However, one court has held that a prisoner who receives a magistrate judge's recommendation for dismissal cannot avoid a strike by dismissing voluntarily. See Johnson v. Edlow, 37 F. Supp. 2d 775, 776–78 (E.D. Va. 1999) (citing prior pattern of seeking voluntary dismissal after court and defendants had expended substantial resources on the case; dismissing as malicious); Sumner v. Tucker, 9 F. Supp. 2d 641, 644 (E.D. Va. 1998) (holding that an action may be dismissed, without prejudice, by the plaintiff without order of the court at any time before service by the adverse party of an answer or a motion for summary judgment).

92. Wilson v. Yaklich, 148 F.3d 596, 603 (6th Cir. 1998) (finding cases never filed do not count as strikes).

93. Freeman v. Lee, 30 F. Supp. 2d 52, 54 (D.D.C. 1998) (holding actions dismissed from state and local courts do not count for purposes of strikes).

and removed to federal court by the defendants.[94] This appears to be wrong, since § 1915(g) applies to those who on three occasions brought suit or filed an appeal "in a court of the United States" that was dismissed as frivolous, malicious, or failing to state a claim.

A motion filed in an already filed case is not a strike.[95] A dismissal without prejudice is a strike if it is on the grounds stated in the three strikes provision.[96] The courts have not yet determined whether the prisoner is given a second strike if the case is re-filed (for example, with an amended complaint designed to correct the problems that led to dismissal) and is then dismissed again.[97]

A dismissal is not a strike if it is impossible to tell what caused the dismissal.[98] Some decisions have held that prisoners should not be given a strike based on law that was unclear or that changed after they filed.[99] Dismissals may be strikes even if they were not IFP cases.[100] Cases filed or dismissed before the PLRA was enacted have been counted as strikes.[101]

A dismissal in a habeas corpus action is not a strike.[102] Courts have disagreed over whether actions dismissed because they were mistakenly filed under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, but should have been filed as habeas petitions, count as strikes.[103] Similarly, a case that should have been filed under Section 1983 but was filed as a habeas petition to avoid the three strikes provision may be counted as a strike.[104] Courts have sometimes just treated habeas petitions that should have been filed under Section 1983 as Section 1983 cases and gone forward with them.[105] One court has warned that this should not automatically be done because prisoners could end up being charged a strike so they should have a chance to think it over before proceeding.[106] In a class action, only named plaintiffs are subject to the three strikes provision.[107]

---

94. See Olmsted v. Sherman, No. 08-cv-439-bbc, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 61368, at *1 (W.D. Wis. Aug. 12, 2008) (unpublished). You can argue that this is wrong because § 1915(g) applies to those who on three occasions brought suit or filed an appeal "in a court of the United States" that was dismissed as frivolous, malicious, or failing to state a claim. However, the court in Olmstead found: "Section 1915A does not distinguish between cases filed by prisoners and cases removed by defendants. The statute requires screening of all complaints "in which a prisoner seeks redress from a governmental entity or officer or employee of a governmental entity," without regard to how the complaint came before the court." 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 61368, at *2-3.

95. Belton v. U.S., No. 07-C-925, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68964, at *34–35 (E.D. Wis. June 2, 2008) (unpublished) (motion under Rule 60(b) is not a strike; statute "does not apply to motions, only 'actions' or 'appeals'").

96. Day v. Maynard, 200 F.3d 665, 667 (10th Cir. 1999) (per curiam) ("Moreover, a dismissal without prejudice counts as a strike, so long as the dismissal is made because the action is frivolous, malicious, or fails to state a claim."); O'Neal v. Price, 531 F.3d 1146, 1154-56 (9th Cir. 2008) (declining to read a with-prejudice requirement into the PLRA); but see McLean v. United States, 566 F.3d 391, 396-97 (4th Cir. 2009) (holding that since a dismissal without prejudice is not an adjudication on the merits, it does not count as a strike under 1915(g).. Price, 531 F.3d 1146, 1154-56 (9th Cir. 2008); but see McLean v. United States, 566 F.3d 391, 396-97 (4th Cir. 2009).

97. See Day v. Maynard, 200 F.3d 665, 667 n.1 (10th Cir. 1999) (per curiam).

98. See Andrews v. King, 398 F.3d 1113, 1120 (9th Cir. 2005) (defendants must produce court records or documentation to allow district courts to determine whether a prior case was dismissed because it was "frivolous, malicious, or failed to state a claim."); Freeman v. Lee, 30 F. Supp. 2d 52, 54 (D.D.C. 1998) (finding no strike when order dismissing prisoner's action did not explain the reason for dismissal , because "[the court] is unaware of any principle that would permit [it] to presume that the dismissal was on one of the grounds referenced in § 1915(g)").

99. See Clemente v. Allen, 120 F.3d 703, 705 n.1 (7th Cir. 1997) (holding appeal was not a strike in the absence of published law on the question before the court ruled); Hairston v. Falano, No. 99-C-2750, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9027, at *3–4 (N.D. Ill. May 28, 1999) (unpublished) (holding dismissal was not a strike where plaintiff's claim, valid when filed, was dismissed based on a later Supreme Court decision).

100. Duvall v. Miller, 122 F.3d 489, 490 (7th Cir. 1997) (holding dismissals that were not brought in forma pauperis still count for strikes).

101. See, e.g., Welch v. Galie, 207 F.3d 130, 131 (2d Cir. 2000) (holding strikes provision can apply retroactively).

102. Andrews v. King, 398 F.3d 1113, 1122–23 & n.12 (9th Cir. 2005) and cases cited.

103. See Bure v. Miami-Dade Police Dept., No. 08-20483-CV-UNGARO, 2008 WL 2374149, at *3 (S.D. Fla. June 6, 2008) (unpublished) (mistakenly filed § 1983 is a strike); Grant v. Sotelo, No. 2:98-CV-0347, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16798, at *3–5 (N.D. Tex. Oct. 17, 1998) (unpublished) (holding § 1983 case that should have been filed under habeas corpus is frivolous; citing cases); Rogers v. Wis. Dept. of Corr., No. 04-C-980, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1864, at *6 (W.D. Wis. Feb. 3, 2005) (unpublished) (holding that dismissal of a § 1983 action that should have been filed as a habeas petition is not a strike because "dismissal ... for failure to use the proper avenue for relief" is not a ground listed in the statute). See also Patton v. Jefferson Corr. Ctr., 136 F.3d 458, 464 (5th Cir. 1998) (holding that § 1983 actions that should have been filed as habeas petitions but would have been frivolous as such were strikes).

104. Andrews v. King, 398 F.3d 1113, 1123 n. 12 (9th Cir. 2005).

105. See Carson v. Johnson, 112 F.3d 818, 819 (5th Cir. 1997) (construing habeas corpus petition as a § 1983 case).

106. Pischke v. Litscher, 178 F.3d 497, 500 (7th Cir. 1999) (dismissing habeas corpus actions and indicating

At least one court has held that a dismissal counts as a strike even if the case was filed by an ex-prisoner after release, if the plaintiff later returns to prison.[108] However, this holding seems contrary to the statutory language, which refers to prior actions brought "while incarcerated or detained."[109]

Appeals count as separate strikes under Section 1915(g) only if they are "dismissed ... [as] frivolous, malicious, or fail[ing] to state a claim upon which relief may be granted."[110] If the appeals court merely affirms a district court decision that was dismissed for one of the reasons stated in Section 1915(g), the appeal is not usually considered to be a separate strike.[111] An appeal that is dismissed on grounds other than those stated in Section 1915(g) cannot be a separate strike even if the district court decision counts as a strike.[112]

Most courts have held that "[a] dismissal should not count against a petitioner until he has exhausted or waived his appeals."[113] Thus, if you receive a third strike in a district court decision, you should still be able to appeal that decision IFP without being barred by the three strikes provision.[114] If an appeals court finds that your claim was not frivolous, the strike will be eliminated.[115]

The defendants bear the burden of producing sufficient evidence to show that you have three strikes. If they do, the burden shifts to you to show that you do not have three strikes.[116] Defendants do not meet their plaintiffs may re-file complaints as civil rights claims).

---

107. Meisberger v. Donahue, 245 F.R.D. 627, 630 (S.D. Ind. 2007) (finding no authority for the argument that unnamed class members can receive strikes).

108. See Robbins v. Switzer, 104 F.3d 895, 897 (7th Cir. 1997) (holding dismissal would count as strike if released petitioner ever returns to prison).

109. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(g) (2000). See Arvie v. Lastrapes, 106 F.3d 1230, 1232 (5th Cir. 1997) (per curiam) (remanding to determine whether the plaintiff was a prisoner when he filed his previous actions).

110. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(g) (2000). See Newlin v. Helman, 123 F.3d 429, 433 (7th Cir. 1997) (holding that frivolous appeal of a dismissed claim counts as a second strike). Compare with Andrews v. King, 398 F.3d 1113, 1120–21 (9th Cir. 2005) (holding that an appeal dismissed for lack of jurisdiction is not a strike).

111. Jennings v. Natrona County Det. Ctr. Med. Facility, 175 F.3d 775, 780 (10th Cir. 1999) ("Under the plain language of the statute, only a dismissal may count as strike, not the affirmance of an earlier decision to dismiss."); Adepegba v. Hammons, 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 41289, at *11 (5th Cir. Dec. 31, 1996) ("It is straightforward that affirmance of a district court dismissal as frivolous counts as a single 'strike.'"). Courts are not always careful in dealing with this issue. See Montanez v. DeTella, No. 97-3698, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 628, at *6 (7th Cir. Jan. 14, 1999) (unpublished) (stating affirmance of appeal from dismissal is itself a second strike, without discussing contrary authority); Rice v. Christopher, No. 98-1295, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 2040, at *5–6 (10th Cir. Feb. 9, 1999) (unpublished) ("Because a complaint dismissed under § 1915(e)(2)(B)(i) and affirmed on appeal counts as two prior occasions for purposes of § 1915(g), two 'strikes' are recorded against Mr. Rice."). If you get a decision like this, be sure to ask the court to reconsider charging you with the second strike.

112. Tafari v. Hues, 473 F.3d 440, 442–44 (2d Cir. 2007) (holding an appeal dismissed as premature was not a strike); Cosby v. Knowles, No. 97-1400, 145 F.3d 1345, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 7845, at *4–5 (10th Cir. Apr. 23, 1998) (unpublished) (noting that dismissal based on denial of in forma pauperis status, not the merits, is not a strike even though merits were frivolous).

113. Thompson v. Drug Enforcement Admin., 492 F.3d 428, 432 (D.C. Cir. 2007) ("A contrary rule would, within those narrow set of cases in which the third strike is appealed, effectively eliminate our appellate function. Had Congress intended such an unusual result, we expect it would have clearly said so."); Campbell v. Davenport Police Dept., 471 F.3d 952, 953 (8th Cir. 2006) ("The three section 1915A(b) dismissals could not be counted as strikes when the district court cited them (or when this appeal was filed), because Campbell had not yet exhausted or waived his appeals in those cases."). Once the time for appeal has passed, filing a late notice of appeal will not keep the dismissal from being a strike. Smith v. District of Columbia, 182 F.3d 25, 27–28 (D.C. Cir. 1999).

114. Jennings v. Natrona County Det. Ctr. Med. Facility, 175 F.3d 775, 780 (10th Cir. 1999); Adepegba v. Hammons, 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 41289, at *13-14 (5th Cir. Dec. 31, 1996). The Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals, however, has made matters more complicated, holding that a prisoner cannot directly appeal a decision that counts as a third strike. Instead, the prisoner must first apply to the appeals court for in forma pauperis status. The appeals court will then decide whether the lower court was correct in issuing the third strike to the prisoner, or whether the lower court was incorrect and should not have issued the third strike. In other words, the appeals court will decide the merits of the appeal in the course of determining whether the prisoner can proceed IFP. Robinson v. Powell, 297 F.3d 540, 541 (7th Cir. 2002).

115. Jennings v. Natrona County Det. Ctr. Med. Facility, 175 F.3d 775, 780 (10th Cir. 1999) (concluding that "[i]f we reverse a district court dismissal under 28 U.S.C. § 1915(e)(2)(B), the district court dismissal does not count as a strike"); Adepegba v. Hammons, 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 41289, at *13-14 (5th Cir. Dec. 31, 1996) ("[W]e find it plain that reversal of a dismissal as frivolous nullifies the 'strike.'").

116. Andrews v. King, 398 F.3d 1113, 1116, 1120 (9th Cir. 2005); accord Thompson v. Drug Enforcement Admin., 492 F.3d 428, 435-36 (D.C. Cir. 2007); Green v. Morse, No. 00-CV-6533-CJS, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 52085, at *7–9 burden just by showing dismissals; they must also show the reasons for the dismissals.[117] When applying the three strikes rule, a court must clearly identify each dismissal it used.[118]

The three strikes provision cannot be applied to revoke IFP status in a case filed before the plaintiff had three strikes, since the statute is a limit on prisoners' ability to "bring" suit, not on their ability to maintain suits already brought.[119] A case is "brought" for these purposes when the plaintiff submits the complaint to the court.[120] The three strikes provision also does not prevent a plaintiff from filing an amended complaint in a suit filed before he had three strikes.[121] One federal court has held that when multiple plaintiffs join in one lawsuit, each plaintiff's claims must be treated as a separate "action," and each plaintiff must be charged a strike for every plaintiff whose "action" is dismissed in its entirety.[122] This decision appears contrary to the statute.[123]

(a) The "Imminent Danger of Serious Physical Injury" Exception

The three strikes provision does not bar a prisoner from proceeding in forma pauperis if he is in "imminent danger of serious physical injury."[124] The existence of such a danger is judged at the time the suit was filed or when the prisoner makes an IFP application in the district court or on appeal.[125]

Any credible allegation of imminent danger of serious physical injury meets the statutory requirement,[126] but many allegations have been dismissed as incredible or insubstantial.[127] If serious

---

(W.D.N.Y. May 26, 2006) (unpublished). In practice, courts often raise three strikes on their own at initial screening.

117. Andrews v. King, 398 F.3d 1113, 1120 (9th Cir. 2005); see Thompson v. Drug Enforcement Admin., 492 F.3d 428, 436(D.C. Cir. 2007) (holding that once the burden of evidence shifts to the prisoner, he must "explain why the past dismissals should not count as strikes) (emphasis added).

118. See Evans v. Ill. Dept. of Corr., 150 F.3d 810, 812 (7th Cir. 1998) ("[I]n the order denying leave to proceed in forma pauperis the district court must cite specifically the case names, case docket numbers, districts in which the actions were filed, and the dates of the orders dismissing the actions."); Jennings v. Dist. Ct. for Seventh Judicial Dist., No. 98-8068, 172 F.3d 879, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 2386, at *2–3 (10th Cir. Feb. 16, 1999) (unpublished) (remanding because district court did not specify which prior actions or appeals were frivolous).

119. Nicholas v. Am. Detective Agency, No. 07-2018, 254 F. App'x 116, 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 26185, at *1–3 (3d Cir. Nov. 9, 2007) (unpublished); Cruz v. Marcial, No. 3:01cv406, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7307, at *3–4 (D. Conn. Apr. 18, 2002) (unpublished). Contra Nichols v. Rich, No. 2:01-CV-0369, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5766, at *2 (N.D. Tex. Apr. 7, 2004) (unpublished) (citing goals of the statute but not addressing its actual language).

120. O'Neal v. Price, 531 F.3d 1146, 1151–52 (9th Cir. 2008).

121. Elkins v. Schrubbe, No. 04-C-85, 2005 WL 1154273, at *1 (E.D. Wis. Apr. 20, 2005) (unpublished).

122. Boriboune v. Berge, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11480, at *15-20 (W.D. Wis. June 1, 2005) (unpublished) (declaring that several plaintiffs received three strikes from this single multi-plaintiff lawsuit). The court does not claim to find the basis for its holding in the statutory language; rather, it says it is interpreting a Seventh Circuit opinion remanding the case, and expresses hope that the court of appeals will clarify the matter. That has not happened.

123. See Swenson v. McDonald, No. CV 05-93-GF-CSO, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5784, at *7-12 (D. Mont. Jan. 30, 2006) (unpublished) (criticizing logic of Boriboune). Swenson points out that Boriboune's penalty of strikes based on the separate claims of individual plaintiffs contradicts the statute's reference to "action[s]" rather than claims; that its view that each prisoner litigant is responsible under Rule 11 for statements other plaintiffs make is inconsistent with the lack of authority of pro se litigants to make representations for anyone other than themselves and with pro se prisoners' limited ability to investigate the merits of others' claims; and that the practical difficulties of multi-plaintiff prisoner litigation does not lend itself to assuming each litigants' responsibility for all actions and decisions in the litigation. See also Part B of this Chapter on filing fees for helpful analogies concerning joint actions.

124. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(g) (2000).

125. Polanco v. Hopkins, 510 F.3d 152, 156 (2d Cir. 2007) (rejecting argument that time-of-filing rule denies court access to those who cannot get their claims in during the time they are in danger); Ibrahim v. District of Columbia, 463 F.3d 3, 6–7 (D.C. Cir. 2006); Heimermann v. Litscher, 337 F.3d 781, 782 (7th Cir. 2003); Martin v. Shelton, 319 F.3d 1048, 1050 (8th Cir. 2003); Abdul-Akbar v. McKelvie, 239 F.3d 307, 312–16 (3d Cir. 2001) (en banc); Ashley v. Dilworth, 147 F.3d 715, 717 (8th Cir. 1998) (all holding danger must exist at the time of filing the complaint).
Some courts have said that a danger that arose after the case was filed, and was ongoing, did not fit the exception. Trice v. Vazquez, No. CV206-185, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 79700, at *1 (S.D. Ga. Nov. 1, 2006) (unpublished).

126. See Ciarpiaglini v. Saini, 352 F.3d 328, 330–31 (7th Cir. 2003) (holding allegations of panic attacks leading to heart palpitations, chest pains, labored breathing, choking sensations, and paralysis meet the imminent danger standard; disapproving extensive inquiry into seriousness of allegations at pleading stage); Gibbs v. Cross, 160 F.3d 962, 964 (3d Cir. 1998) (holding allegation that plaintiff was subjected to "dust, lint and shower odor" via cell vent, resulting in severe headaches, change in voice, mucus full of dust and lint, and watery eyes sufficiently alleged imminent danger of serious injury).

127. See, e.g., Merriweather v. Reynolds, No. 2:07-3418-PMD-RSC, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38175, at *9 (D.S.C.

allegations are disputed, the court may hold a hearing or rely on affidavits and depositions to resolve the question.[128] Some courts, however, seem to just make ad hoc judgments about the credibility of the prisoner's claim based on no more than the pro se complaint's allegations.[129] The risk of future injury can be sufficient to invoke the imminent danger exception.[130] The "imminent danger" requirement has been held to be satisfied by allegations that prison staff refused protective custody to a prisoner targeted by gangs;[131] disclosed a prisoner's history as an informant, resulting in threats and assaults;[132] or repeatedly placed a prisoner near known enemies.[133] Courts have also found imminent danger where the plaintiff was denied treatment for an ongoing serious medical problem,[134] disability,[135] or subjected the plaintiff to environmental conditions that caused or aggravated such problems.[136]

If a plaintiff's allegations meet the statutory standard, the relevant claim should be allowed to go forward without being restricted to the precise defendants and allegations currently responsible for the danger.[137] However, a risk not at all related to the allegations in the complaint does not fall within the exception.[138] A claim of imminent danger does not excuse the prisoner from meeting the PLRA's administrative exhaustion requirement.[139]

May 11, 2008) (unpublished) (rejecting allegations of threats, enemies, danger from prison gangs, etc.; "unsupported, vague, self-serving, conclusory speculation" does not establish imminent danger); Althouse v. Roe, 542 F. Supp. 2d 543, 546 (E.D. Tex. 2008) (holding claim that attention deficit hyperactivity disorder might lead the plaintiff impulsively to put himself in danger was too speculative to show imminent danger); Burghart v. Corr. Corp. of Am., No. CIV-08-62-C, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16732, at *2–3 (W.D. Okla. Mar. 4, 2008) (unpublished) (complaints of migraine headaches, fatigue, depression, weight gain and sleeping disorders did not meet standard); Johnson v. Ala. Dept. Of Corr., No. 2:07-cv-0767-WKW (WO), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6669, at *2–3 (M.D. Ala. Jan. 29, 2008) (unpublished) (pleading the discontinuance of hormone treatment for gender identity disorder, allegedly causing "excessive weight gain, complete body fat redistribution, dizzy spells, fainting spells, headaches, hot-flashes, anxiety, severe depression, more depression than usual, ... [and] the growth of first time facial hair," did not meet the imminent danger standard).

128. Gibbs v. Roman, 116 F.3d 83, 86 (3d Cir. 1997) (instructing the district court to explore allegations and the states response before dismissal).

129. See, e.g., Pruden v. Mayer, No. 3:CV-08-0559, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26700, at *3–4 (M.D. Pa. Apr. 2, 2008) (unpublished) (concluding that prisoner's medical care claims did not pose imminent danger because they had occurred over a long period of time).

130. Gibbs v. Cross, 160 F.3d 962, 966–67 (3rd Cir. 1998) (relying on alleged environmental hazards in prison); see Ibrahim v. District of Columbia, 463 F.3d 3, 6–7 (D.C. Cir. 2006) (holding that deterioration from lack of treatment for Hepatitis C sufficiently pled imminent danger of serious physical injury).

131. Cain v. Jackson, No. C-07-354, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 70495, at *2 (S.D. Tex. Sept. 24, 2007) (unpublished) (alleging that plaintiff had been assaulted repeatedly by gang members and denied protective custody).

132. See Malik v. McGinnis, 293 F.3d 559, 562 (2d Cir. 2002); Gibbs v. Roman, 116 F.3d 83, 84–86 (3d. Cir. 1997).

133. See Ashley v. Dilworth, 147 F.3d 715, 717 (8th Cir. 1998) (finding that having repeatedly been attacked by a prisoner housed nearby and filing only days after an attack proved imminent danger).

134. See Ibrahim v. District of Columbia, 463 F.3d 3, 6–7 (D.C. Cir. 2006) (holding that deterioration from lack of treatment for Hepatitis C sufficiently pleaded imminent danger of serious physical injury); Brown v. Johnson, 387 F.3d 1344, 1350 (11th Cir. 2004) (holding that a prisoner who alleged that lack of treatment was worsening his illnesses sufficiently pleaded imminent danger of serious physical injury); McAlphin v. Toney, 281 F.3d 709, 711 (8th Cir. 2002) (prisoner's complaint alleging denial of treatment for medical/dental condition posed imminent danger was sufficient to permit him to proceed in forma pauperis despite the fact that he had three strikes).

135. Fuller v. Wilcox, No. 08-3077, 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 16581, at *3 (10th Cir. Aug. 4, 2008) (unpublished) (denial of a wheelchair, meaning that plaintiff must crawl, and could not walk to the shower or lift himself to his bed, "could result in a number of serious physical injuries").

136. Smith v. Ozmint, No.:0:07-3644-PMD-BM, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 33608, at *10–12 (D.S.C. Apr. 23, 2008) (unpublished) (finding imminent danger standard met by allegations of use of hazardous Chinese products, 24-hour illumination in cells, exposure to deranged behavior and unsanitary conditions from mentally ill prisoners in the segregation unit, deprivation of sunlight, and exposure to mold).

137. See Andrews v. Cervantes, 493 F.3d 1047, 1052 (9th Cir. 2007) ("[Q]ualifying prisoners can file their entire complaint IFP; the exception does not operate on a claim-by-claim basis or apply to only certain types of relief."); Ciarpiaglini v. Saini, 352 F.3d 328, 330 (7th Cir. 2003) (holding damages claim could go forward even though injunctive claim on which "imminent danger" allegation was based was moot). But see McAlphin v. Toney, 375 F.3d 753, 755–56 (8th Cir. 2004) (holding that a complaint that satisfies the imminent danger exception cannot be amended to include claims that do not involve imminent danger).

138. Fuller v. Johnson County Bd. of County Com'rs, No. 07-3001-SAC, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12179, at *2 (D. Kan. Aug. 8, 2007) (unpublished) (complaints about the ventilation system did not meet the imminent danger standard where the plaintiff's claim addressed accessibility for the disabled).

139. McAlphin v. Toney, 375 F.3d 753, 755 (8th Cir. 2004) (upholding the rule that prisoners must fulfill the

One court has held that self-inflicted injury cannot meet the imminent danger standard because "[e]very prisoner would then avoid the three strikes provision by threatening suicide."[140] However, many prison suicides and attempted suicides result directly from serious mental illness.[141] For this reason, arguments can be made that mentally-ill prisoners should be able to go to court to get treatment for their mental illness.

The federal circuits have upheld the three strikes provision as constitutional.[142] Furthermore, while no circuit court has held that the three strikes provision is unconstitutional on First Amendment grounds, some prisoners' advocates have unsuccessfully argued that the provision is unconstitutional because the right to access and petition the courts is protected by the First Amendment.[143]

D. Screening and Dismissal of Prisoner Cases

The PLRA requires federal courts to screen all suits by prisoners against government employees and all in forma pauperis ("IFP") cases at the litigation's outset. The PLRA mandates that a court must dismiss cases that are frivolous or malicious, that fail to state a claim on which relief may be granted, or that seek damages from a defendant immune from damage claims.

If a court does not immediately dismiss such claims, the court must dismiss them as soon as they come to the court's attention. This power of dismissal, which used to be limited to in forma pauperis cases, now extends to all prisoner cases.[144] The courts' ability to dismiss cases sua sponte (without a motion by the defendant) used to be limited to frivolous and malicious cases, but has now been extended to cases failing to administrative exhaustion requirement).

---

140. Wallace v. Cockrell, No. 3:02-CV-1807-M, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3602, at *10 (N.D. Tex. Mar. 10, 2003) (unpublished), approved as supplemented, No. 3:02-CV-1807-M, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4897, at *1–4 (N.D. Tex. Mar. 27, 2003) (unpublished). This case appears to be on the periphery of the law, and can perhaps be limited to its facts.

141. See Sanville v. McCaughtry, 266 F.3d 724, 728 (7th Cir. 2001) (alleging prison officials' failure to medicate mentally-ill prisoner resulted in prisoner's suicide); Eng v. Smith, 849 F.2d 80 (2d Cir. 1988) (affirming injunction based on findings that state prison's policies for treatment of mentally-ill prisoners were insufficient for prisoners' protection).

142. See Polanco v. Hopkins, 510 F.3d 152, 156 (2d Cir. 2007) (rejecting claims of unconstitutionality); Lewis v. Sullivan, 279 F.3d 526, 528 (7th Cir. 2002) (rejecting access to courts claim); Higgins v. Carpenter, 258 F.3d 797, 799–801 (8th Cir. 2001) (rejecting equal protection and access to courts claims); Medberry v. Butler, 185 F.3d 1189, 1192 (11th Cir. 1999) (rejecting Ex Post Facto Clause argument); Rodriguez v. Cook, 169 F.3d 1176, 1178–82 (9th Cir. 1999) (rejecting due process, equal protection, access to courts, Ex Post Facto Clause, and separation of powers arguments); White v. Colorado, 157 F.3d 1226, 1233–34 (10th Cir. 1998) (rejecting access to courts and equal protection challenges); Wilson v. Yaklich, 148 F.3d 596, 604–06 (6th Cir. 1998) (rejecting equal protection, due process, and other claims); Rivera v. Allin, 144 F.3d 719, 723–29 (11th Cir. 1998) (stating IFP status is "a privilege, not a right"; upholding provision against 1st Amendment, access to courts, separation of powers, due process, and equal protection challenges) (abrogated on other grounds by Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 214–15 , 127 S. Ct. 910, 919–20 (2007)).

143. In other contexts, the Supreme Court has found that the right to court access "is part of the right of petition protected by the First Amendment." Cal. Motor Transp. Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 513, 92 S. Ct. 609, 612, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 648 (1972). See also Legal Servs. Corp. v. Velazquez, 531 U.S. 533, 542–43, 121 S. Ct. 1043, 1049–50, 149 L. Ed. 2d 63, 72–73 (2001) (stating that advocacy in litigation is speech); Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 403, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1876, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 466 (1989) (arguing the three strikes provision addresses the conduct of litigation in court and not the internal operations of prisons; it is governed by the same First Amendment standards as other "free world" free speech claims); N.Y. Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 272, 84 S. Ct. 710, 721, 11 L. Ed. 2d 686, 701 (1964) (finding that the First Amendment requires "breathing space," and a margin for error is required for inadvertent false speech, or true speech will be deterred). This principle has been applied in other areas of law. See Cal. Motor Transp. Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 511, 92 S. Ct. 609, 611, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 646 (1972) (applying rule in antitrust context); Bill Johnson's Rests., Inc. v. NLRB, 461 U.S. 731, 741, 103 S. Ct. 2161, 2169, 76 L. Ed. 2d 277, 287 (1983) (applying rule in labor context). Thus, sanctions may not be imposed under the relevant statutes against persons who bring litigation unless the litigation is both objectively and subjectively baseless. Prof'l Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 60–61, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 1929, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611, 624–25 (1993) (requiring both subjective and objective intent). Applied to the three-strikes provision, the "breathing space" principle would mean that prisoners could only be punished for knowing falsehood or intentional abuse of the judicial system—a category far narrower than the scope of the provision.

144. Plunk v. Givens, 234 F.3d 1128, 1129 (10th Cir. 2000) (holding that the power to dismiss "applies to all prison litigants, without regard to their fee status, who bring civil suits against a governmental entity, officer, or employee"); Carr v. Dvorin, 171 F.3d 115, 116 (2d Cir. 1999) (same); Rowe v. Shake, 196 F.3d 778, 781 (7th Cir. 1999) (same); Martin v. Scott, 156 F.3d 578, 579–80 (5th Cir. 1998) (same); McGore v. Wrigglesworth, 114 F.3d 601, 608 (6th Cir. 1997) (same) (reversed on other grounds).

state a claim and cases suing immune defendants.[145] The Second and Tenth Circuits have held that such dismissals may be done without prior notice or an opportunity to respond,[146] but the Second Circuit has cautioned this ought to be done only where "it is unmistakably clear that the court lacks jurisdiction, or that the complaint lacks merit or is otherwise defective."[147]

Most courts have held that pro se litigants are allowed an opportunity to amend deficient complaints before the court dismisses them under the PLRA.[148] One court has held that the PLRA prohibits this practice, but that holding is probably undermined by Jones v. Bock.[149] Additionally, administrative exhaustion is not a pleading requirement, so failure to include it in the complaint is not a failure to state a claim.[150]

The way in which appeals courts review PLRA dismissals has not been fully settled. Some courts have held that dismissal under the PLRA is subject to de novo review, which means that the appeals court may decide the matter however it thinks best.[151] However, some courts have limited de novo review to dismissals for failure to state a claim, and have held that dismissals deemed frivolous or malicious remain subject to an "abuse of discretion" standard (which means that the appeals court will not overrule the district court's decision unless it thinks the district court made a very big mistake).[152] Other courts have not fully addressed the question.[153] The Second Circuit has held that the de novo standard applies under 28 U.S.C. § 1915A and 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(c)(2),[154] but has not addressed dismissal under 28 U.S.C. § 1915(e).[155]

---

145. These requirements appear in three overlapping statutory provisions: 28 U.S.C. § 1915(e)(2) (2006); 28 U.S.C. § 1915A (2006); and 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(c)(1) (2006).

146. Plunk v. Givens, 234 F.3d 1128, 1129 (10th Cir. 2000) (upholding lower court sua sponte dismissal where no hearing was provided); Carr v. Dvorin, 171 F.3d 115, 116 (2d Cir. 1999) (per curiam) ("The statute clearly does not require that process be served or that the plaintiff be provided an opportunity to respond before dismissal.").

147. Giano v. Goord, 250 F.3d 146, 151 (2d Cir. 2001) (quoting Carr v. Dvorin, 171 F.3d 115, 116 (2d Cir. 1999)) ("We do note that '[w]here a colorable claim is made out, [sua sponte] dismissal is improper prior to service of process and the defendants' answer.").

148. Gomez v. USAA Fed. Sav. Bank, 171 F.3d 794, 795–96 (2d Cir. 1999) (holding dismissal of a pro se complaint under § 1915(e)(2)(B) should be done with leave to amend "unless the court can rule out any possibility, however unlikely it might be, that an amended complaint would succeed in stating a claim"); Brown v. Johnson, 387 F.3d 1344, 1348–49 (11th Cir. 2004) (same); Grayson v. Mayview State Hosp., 293 F.3d 103, 111 (3d Cir. 2002) (same); Razzoli v. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, 230 F.3d 371, 377 (D.C. Cir. 2000) (same); Perkins v. Kansas Dept. of Corr., 165 F.3d 803, 806 (10th Cir. 1999). Compare McGore v. Wrigglesworth, 114 F.3d 601, 612 (6th Cir. 1997) (holding that, under the PLRA, courts do not have the discretion to allow an opportunity to amend deficient complaints).

149. In McGore v. Wrigglesworth, 114 F.3d 601, 612 (6th Cir. 1997), the court said: "Under the Prison Litigation Act, courts have no discretion in permitting a plaintiff to amend a complaint to avoid a sua sponte dismissal." However, the Supreme Court has held that the screening requirement "does not—explicitly or implicitly—justify deviating from the usual procedural practice beyond the departures specified by the PLRA itself." Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 206, 127 S. Ct. 910, 916, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 807 (2007). Since a plaintiff's right to amend the complaint freely—and without even asking the court's permission, if an answer has not been filed—is part of the "usual procedural practice," it seems that the basis for the Sixth Circuit's holding has been undermined. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a).

150. See Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 213–15, 127 S. Ct. 910, 920–21, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 812–13 (2007) (finding that "failure to exhaust is an affirmative defense under the PLRA, and that inmates are not required to specially plead or demonstrate exhaustion in their complaints.") For more information on Exhaustion, see Part E of this Chapter.

151. See Barren v. Harrington, 152 F.3d 1193, 1194 (9th Cir. 1998) (holding that dismissals for failure to state a claim are reviewed de novo); Black v. Warren, 134 F.3d 732, 733 (5th Cir. 1998) (same); Mitchell v. Farcass, 112 F.3d 1483, 1489–90 (11th Cir. 1997) (same); McGore v. Wrigglesworth, 114 F.3d 601, 604 (6th Cir. 1997) (same); Atkinson v. Bohn, 91 F.3d 1127, 1128 (8th Cir. 1996) (same).

152. See Bilal v. Driver, 251 F.3d 1346, 1348–49 (11th Cir. 2001) (holding that abuse of discretion standard was proper for review of dismissal based on frivolity); Harper v. Showers, 174 F.3d 716, 718 n.3 (5th Cir. 1998) (stating that de novo review is only appropriate for dismissals for failure to state a claim on which relief may be granted). In practice, the "abuse of discretion" standard makes it very unlikely that an appellate court will overturn the district court's ruling.

153. See Jackson v. Ward, No. 98-7181, 185 F.3d 874, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 25909, at *1 (10th Cir. July 15, 1999) (unpublished) (holding that dismissals under § 1915(e)(2)(B)(i) as frivolous or malicious are reviewed for abuse of discretion, but the court should "consider, inter alia, whether the plaintiff is proceeding pro se and whether the district court inappropriately resolved genuine issues of material fact").

154. Liner v. Goord, 196 F.3d 132, 134 (2d Cir. 1999) (holding that "28 U.S.C. § 1915A and 42 U.S.C. § 1999e(c)(2) dismissals are subject to de novo review").

155. Fitzgerald v. First E. Seventh St. Tenants Corp., 221 F.3d 362, 364 n.2 (2d Cir. 2000) (indicating that the standard of review for § 1915(e) is unsettled law).

Despite differences in the way in which appeals courts review PLRA dismissals, the PLRA screening provision does not affect the rule that a court reviewing a motion for summary judgment must accept all allegations of material fact as true, and construe them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, or the rule that courts must construe pro se pleadings liberally when determining whether the plaintiff has stated a claim.[156]

The screening provisions have been held not to violate due process,[157] equal protection,[158] or the right of access to the courts.[159]

E. Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies

The PLRA exhaustion requirement says:

> No action shall be brought with respect to prison conditions under [42 U.S.C. § 1983] ... or any other Federal law, by a prisoner confined in any jail, prison, or other correctional facility until such administrative remedies as are available are exhausted.[160]

More prisoners lose their cases because of failure to exhaust administrative remedies than from any other part of the PLRA.

The bottom line: if something happens to you that you may want to bring suit about,

(1) Find out what remedies are available right away, because time deadlines are often very short. If you wait until you have firmly decided whether to sue, it may be too late to exhaust your administrative remedies.
(2) Always use the prison grievance system or any other available remedy, such as a disciplinary appeal.
(3) If you think there is a reason why you should not have to exhaust your administrative remedies, forget it. Exhaust them anyway.
(4) Take all the available appeals, even if you get what you think is a good decision.
(5) If you do not get an answer to a grievance, try to appeal anyway. Many grievance systems say that if a certain amount of time passes and there's no decision, you can treat the non-response as a denial of the grievance, and appeal.
(6) If you're not sure which remedy to use, try all available remedies.
(7) If prison employees tell you an issue is not grievable but you think it is, request that they process your grievance anyway so you will have a record. And, if there is a way to appeal or grieve a decision that something is not grievable, do it too!
(8) If prison employees tell you something will be taken care of and you do not need to file a grievance, exhaust anyway if you think there is any chance you may wish to file suit.
(9) Follow the rules of the grievance system or other remedy as best you can.
(10) If the people running the grievance system or in charge of the remedy tell you that you filed your grievance incorrectly and you need to do something differently to fix it, follow their instructions and make a record of what you were told.
(11) If you make a mistake, like missing a time deadline, do not give up. File the grievance anyway, explain the reasons, and ask that your grievance be considered despite your mistake, and appeal as far as you can if you lose.

Always remember that once you file suit, prison officials and their lawyers will use anything they can find to get your case thrown out of court, and they will look for any possible basis to say that you filed

---

156. See Resnick v. Hayes, 213 F.3d 443, 446 (9th Cir. 2000) (agreeing with district court's liberal construction of pro se pleading); Gomez v. USAA Fed. Sav. Bank, 171 F.3d 794, 795–96 (2d Cir. 1999) (per curiam) (noting that pro se complaints must be read liberally).

157. Vanderberg v. Donaldson, 259 F.3d 1321, 1324 (11th Cir. 2001) ("The complained of procedure did not deny Plaintiff due process."); Curley v. Perry, 246 F.3d 1278, 1283–84 (10th Cir. 2001) (finding no due process violation).

158. Vanderberg v. Donaldson, 259 F.3d 1321, 1324 (11th Cir. 2001) (holding that section 1915(e)(2)(B)(ii) does not violate the Equal Protection Clause); Curley v. Perry, 246 F.3d 1278, 1285 (10th Cir. 2001) (finding no equal protection violation).

159. Martin v. Scott, 156 F.3d 578, 580 n.2 (5th Cir. 1998) (finding provision does not unconstitutionally restrict access to federal courts).

160. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(a) (2006).

incorrectly and should not be allowed to sue. You want to show the court that you did everything you could to comply with the exhaustion requirement, including following the prison's rules for grievances and other complaints or appeals.

The PLRA makes exhaustion of the grievance system mandatory.[161] That is true even if you are suing for damages and the grievance system does not provide damages.[162] If you do not exhaust your administrative remedies, your case will be dismissed rather than stayed (held pending exhaustion),[163] although you can make an argument for your case being stayed, based on a recent Supreme Court case, Jones v. Bock.[164] You must exhaust before you file suit, not afterward, or your case will be dismissed.[165] Dismissal for non-exhaustion is supposed to be "without prejudice."[166] Dismissal without prejudice means that you can come back to court after you pursue your grievance. However, dismissal without prejudice may also mean that you have a short amount of time to pursue your grievance. See Part E(6) of this Chapter for more information about time limits. If the statute of limitations (time limit) has run on your claim when it is dismissed, your case may be permanently barred for that reason too.[167] So, it is very important to exhaust correctly the first time, since you may not get a second chance.

If you do manage to exhaust after a dismissal, you may have to pay a new fee to re-file your case, though courts have not completely resolved this issue.[168] In addition, you may be charged a "strike," which may

---

161. Porter v. Nussle, 534 U.S. 516, 524, 122 S. Ct. 983, 988, 152 L. Ed. 2d 12, 21 (2002) (requiring "exhaustion in cases covered by [U.S.C.] § 1997e(a)"). Though mandatory, exhaustion is not jurisdictional. Woodford v. Ngo, 548 U.S. 81, 101, 126 S. Ct. 2378, 2392, 165 L. Ed. 2d 368, 385 (2006). That means if you didn't exhaust and you think you have a good enough reason, the court at least has the power to consider your argument—though such arguments rarely succeed, as discussed throughout this Chapter.

162. Booth v. Churner, 532 U.S. 731, 738–39, 121 S. Ct. 1819, 1823–24, 149 L .Ed. 2d 958, 964–65 (2001).

163. Neal v. Goord, 267 F.3d 116, 121–23 (2d Cir. 2001); Perez v. Wis. Dept. of Corr., 182 F.3d 532, 534–35 (7th Cir. 1999). A few decisions have granted stays pending exhaustion under very unusual circumstances. See Kennedy v. Mendez, No. 3:CV-03-1366, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20170, at *5–6 (M.D. Pa. Oct. 7, 2004) (unpublished) (stating that a stay was appropriate because exhaustion was raised when the litigation was at an advanced state and claims that were not exhausted were closely related to those that had been exhausted); Campbell v. Chaves, 402 F. Supp. 2d 1101, 1108–09 (D. Ariz. 2005) (directing the prison system to consider a grievance where a staff member had told the prisoner to file a tort claim rather than a grievance. The tort claim had been rejected for jurisdictional reasons, while the grievance system rules had been changed so the matter would have been grievable).

164. In Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 214, 127 S. Ct. 910, 920, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 812 (2007), the Supreme Court held that the PLRA did not overturn usual litigation practices except to the extent it did so explicitly. The discretion to grant a stay is part of usual litigation practice. Congress did not say anything in the PLRA about stays pending exhaustion—so it can be argued that courts retain their usual discretion to stay cases. See Cruz v. Jordan, 80 F. Supp. 2d 109, 124 (S.D.N.Y. 1999) ("There is simply no evidence that Congress intended by Section 1997e(a) to remove every aspect of the district court's traditional equity jurisdiction."). Even if a court were persuaded by this argument, we would expect it would grant a stay only if the prisoner had a pretty good reason for not having exhausted before filing, as in the cases in the previous footnote.

165. Neal v. Goord, 267 F.3d 116, 122 (2d Cir. 2001); Jackson v. District of Columbia, 254 F.3d 262, 269 (D.C. Cir. 2001).

166. Giano v. Goord, 380 F.3d 670, 679–80 (2d Cir. 2004) (holding that a prisoner's claim should be dismissed without prejduce if administrative remedies were still available to him). Some courts have held that dismissal may be with prejudice if you had the opportunity to exhaust administrative remedies but did not do so and did not have any special circumstances that justified your not acting. See, e.g., Berry v. Kerik, 366 F.3d 85, 88 (2d Cir. 2004). One federal appeals court has held that all dismissals for non-exhaustion should be without prejudice, since states may allow litigants to cure failure to exhaust, or plaintiffs may be able to proceed without exhaustion in state court, and defenses to a new suit should be addressed in that suit. Ford v. Johnson, 362 F.3d 395, 401 (7th Cir. 2004).

167. There may be "tolling" provisions of state law suspending the operation of the statute of limitations when you bring a suit, it is dismissed, and you have to re-file it. See Part E(6) of this Chapter for more information about tolling.

168. Courts have generally said that a new case must be filed after dismissal for non-exhaustion, rather than reopening the dismissed case. See Williams v. Ramirez, No. CIV S-06-1882 MCE DAD P, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 61617, at *3–4 (E.D. Cal. Aug. 28, 2006) (unpublished) (advising plaintiff that a new post-exhaustion complaint should not bear the docket number of the dismissed action; a new in forma pauperis application is required). Some courts, however, may allow prisoners to reopen their cases after exhaustion of administrative remedies. See Roberts v. Taminga, 20 Fed. Appx. 455, 456–57, *2001 U.S. App. LEXIS 21287, at 5 (6th Cir. 2001) (unpublished) (discussing the District Court's order that the prisoner be able to reopen his case but finding that the prisoner had still not exhausted administrative remedies in the six months the court had given him). Ordinarily, filing a new case would require a new filing fee. However, the only federal circuit to actually focus on the filing fee question has held that a plaintiff need not pay a new filing fee when re-filing a claim that was previously dismissed for non-exhaustion. Owens v. Keeling, 461 F.3d 763, 772–74 (6th Cir. 2006). Other courts have suggested that prisoners will still have to pay a filing fee if the complaints were not exactly the same.

affect your ability to proceed in forma pauperis in the future.[169] (See Part C above for more information on the PLRA's "three strikes" provision.) One federal circuit has held dismissal for failure to exhaust is with prejudice as to your ability to proceed in forma pauperis—that is, you will have to pay the filing fee up front if you exhaust and re-file your case.[170] This holding appears contrary to the Supreme Court's recent opinion in Jones v. Bock, which stated that courts cannot just make up rules under the PLRA contrary to usual federal litigation practice.[171]

The exhaustion provision of the PLRA applies to any case brought by "a prisoner confined in any jail, prison, or other correctional facility" about prison conditions under federal law.[172] A case is "brought by a prisoner" if the plaintiff is a prisoner at the time of filing. If you are no longer a prisoner, you need not have exhausted your administrative remedies.[173] PLRA exhaustion does not apply to petitions for habeas corpus, though habeas has its own slightly different exhaustion requirement.[174] PLRA exhaustion, however, has been applied in Section 1983 actions filed in state court, including those later removed to federal court.[175]

Most courts have held there is no emergency exception to the exhaustion requirement.[176] There are a few decisions that have allowed cases to go forward without exhaustion to avoid irreparable harm,[177] but they do not provide much legal justification for disregarding the exhaustion requirement. The strongest basis for requesting court intervention without waiting for exhaustion is to appeal to a court's traditional powers of discretion.[178] No one seems to have obtained relief on that basis yet (though one court threatened to grant it,

---

See Barrett v. Pearson, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9156, at *3–4 (E.D. Okla. 2008) (unpublished) (holding, in part, that because the prisoner charged different people in each complaint, he had to pay a second filing fee).

169. For more information about this issue, see Part C(1) of this Chapter. As explained there, if your complaint is dismissed because non-exhaustion is apparent on the face of the complaint, the dismissal may be a strike. Otherwise, it should not be, but some courts have used other questionable justifications for charging prisoners a strike for exhaustion-related dismissals.

170. Underwood v. Wilson, 151 F.3d 292, 296 (5th Cir. 1998).

171. See Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 212–14, 127 S. Ct. 910, 919–20 (2007). It is also contrary to the decision in Owens v. Keeling, which held that if you exhaust and re-file after a dismissal for non-exhaustion, you do not have to pay a new fee at all. Owens v. Keeling, 461 F.3d 763, 772–74 (6th Cir. 2006). Courts in the Fifth Circuit seem not to have re-examined the Underwood holding in light of Jones. See Barnes v. Brownlow, No. 6:08cv194, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 51504, at *2 (E.D. Tex. July 7, 2008) (unpublished); McGrew v. Teer, No. 07-702-JVP DLD, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43354, at *2 (M.D. La. June 3, 2008) (unpublished) Johns v. Edwards, No. 06-3767, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47890, at *3 (E.D. La. June 28, 2007) (unpublished) (all following Underwood without question).

172. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(a) (2006). For more discussion of when a person is a prisoner for PLRA purposes, see footnotes 48–59 and text accompanying them.

173. Ahmed v. Dragovich, 297 F.3d 201, 210 n.10 (3d Cir. 2002) (citing cases); Greig v. Goord, 169 F.3d 165, 167–68 (2d Cir. 1999); see also Jasperson v. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, 460 F. Supp. 2d 76, 87 (D.D.C. 2006) (plaintiff who filed a challenge to restrictions on placement in halfway house before he surrendered to the Bureau of Prisons did not have to exhaust because he was not yet confined, even if he was legally in Bureau's custody). PLRA's administrative exhaustion requirement, discussed in Part E of this Chapter, applies to "a prisoner confined in any jail, prison, or other correctional facility." 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(a) (2006). The difference in phrasing does not seem to make any substantive difference.

174. United States v. McGriff, 468 F. Supp. 2d 445, 447 (E.D.N.Y. 2007) (noting habeas exhaustion requirement can be dispensed with on grounds of futility or prevention of irreparable harm, unlike the PLRA requirement). For more information on habeas corpus claims, see Chapter 13 of the JLM.

175. See, e.g., Johnson v. State of La. ex rel. Dept. of Public Safety & Corr., 468 F.3d 278, 280 (5th Cir. 2006) ("The PLRA's exhaustion requirement applies to all Section 1983 claims regardless of whether the inmate files his claim in state or federal court.").

176. See, e.g., Bovarie v. Giurbino, 421 F. Supp. 2d 1309, 1314 (S.D. Cal. 2006) (holding as "irrelevant" prisoner's claim that the time constraints imposed on him by litigation did not allow for completion of grievance process concerning law library access).

177. See Evans v. Saar, 412 F. Supp. 2d 519, 527 (D. Md. 2006) (declining to dismiss the case for non-exhaustion, because "given the shortness of time, [the] Court [was] unprepared to decide whether [plaintiff's] failure to exhaust [was] attributable to his delay in filing his administrative claim or the State's delay in deciding it."); Howard v. Ashcroft, 248 F. Supp. 2d 518, 533–34 (M.D. La. 2003) (holding that prisoner fighting transfer from community corrections to a prison need not exhaust where it was clear that her claim would be rejected, her appeal would take months, and that prison officials wanted to transfer her despite her pending appeal).

178. Jackson v. District of Columbia, 254 F.3d 262, 267–68 (D.C. Cir. 2001) (stating that the PLRA does not specifically disallow the courts from exercising their traditional equitable power to grant injunctions preventing irreparable harm while the exhaustion of administrative remedies is pending, but that the lower court was not required to recognize an irreparable injury exception to the PLRA's exhaustion requirement).

and jail officials hastily addressed the problem),[179] but the argument may have been strengthened by the Jones v. Bock decision, which held that courts should not deviate from the usual practices of litigation unless the PLRA explicitly says so.[180] Nevertheless, this argument is unlikely to succeed except in extreme cases. If you are arguing for relief "pending" exhaustion, you should have the grievance process underway when you do.

For information about the New York State prison grievance system, see JLM, Chapter 15, "Inmate Grievance Procedures."

1. What Is Exhaustion?

Exhaustion under the PLRA means "proper exhaustion," which is "compliance with an agency's deadlines and other critical procedural rules."[181] Part C(5) of this Chapter discusses this point in detail.

Exhaustion also means taking your complaint all the way to the top of the internal prison complaint process that applies to your problem, whatever that process may be (usually the grievance system). You must take every appeal available to you,[182] and finish the process before you file suit.[183] Once the deadline for final decision of your last appeal has passed, you can file suit even if you have not heard the decision.[184] As long as you file suit after the time limit for a decision has passed, you have exhausted your administrative remedies, even if the authorities then issue a late decision.[185] It is not clear how long you

---

179. Tvelia v. Dept. of Corr., No. Civ. 03-537-M, U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2227, at *5 (D.N.H. Feb. 13, 2004) (unpublished) (stating that notwithstanding the exhaustion requirements of the PLRA, federal courts have the equitable power to stop ongoing conduct that violates an inmate's constitutional rights, but holding that in this case the inmate already received relief for the violation). Several courts have rejected the idea of granting relief pending exhaustion. See, e.g., Blain v. Bassett, No. 7:07-cv-00552, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86167, at *6–7 (W.D. Va. Nov. 21, 2007) (unpublished) (refusing to order delay of new prison rule pending plaintiff's exhaustion and dismissing action).

180. Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 212–14, 127 S. Ct. 910, 919–20, 166 L. Ed. 798, 810–12 (2007) (stating that courts should generally not depart from the usual practice under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure on the basis of perceived policy concerns). Injunctions, including preliminary injunctions, are governed by Fed. R. Civ. P. 65.

181. Woodford v. Ngo, 548 U.S. 81, 90–91, 126 S. Ct. 2378, 2385–86, 165 L. Ed. 2d. 368, 378 (2006).

182. See Wright v. Hollingsworth, 260 F.3d 357, 358 (5th Cir. 2001) (holding that PRLA required inmate to make use of all the administrative remedies available to him and that his failure to do so prevented him from going forth with his lawsuit); White v. McGinnis, 131 F.3d 593, 595 (6th Cir. 1997) (affirming dismissal for failing to appeal denial of grievance). See also Lopez v. Smiley, No. 3:02CV1020 (RNC), 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16724, at *4 (D. Conn. Sept. 22, 2003) (unpublished) (holding that a prisoner who appealed, but whose appeal was not received and was told it was too late to file another, had exhausted).

183. Johnson v. Jones, 340 F.3d 624, 627–28 (8th Cir. 2003) (stating that by the time of the filing of the lawsuit, inmates must have exhausted their administrative remedies); Neal v. Goord, 267 F.3d 116, 122 (2d Cir. 2001) (stating that it is mandatory to exhaust administrative remedies prior to the commencement of an action). Some courts have held that prisoners cannot add additional claims by amending their complaints unless the new claims were exhausted before the initial complaint was filed. See, e.g., Harbin-Bey v. Rutter, 420 F.3d 571, 580 (6th Cir. 2005) (holding that an inmate could not add claims that were filed after the original complaint and for which the administrative remedies had been exhausted after the filing of the original complaint). Most courts, however, have said that as long as the new issues were exhausted before you try to add them to the case, you can amend to add them. See Cannon v. Washington, 418 F.3d 714, 719–20 (7th Cir. 2005) (rejecting defendants' argument that new claims could not be added by amendment even if the administrative remedies had been exhausted). That view is consistent with Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 210–12, 127 S. Ct. 910, 918–19, 166 L. Ed. 2d. 798, 810–11 (2007) (endorsing the view of the majority of courts that the failure to exhaust is an affirmative defense) The free amendment of complaints is part of normal federal procedural practice. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a).

184. Whitington v. Ortiz, 472 F.3d 804, 807–08 (10th Cir. 2007) (when prison officials fail to timely respond to a grievance, the prisoner has exhausted "available" administrative remedies under the PLRA), dismissed on other grounds, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 30561 (D. Colo. Apr. 25, 2007); Powe v. Ennis, 177 F.3d 393, 393 (5th Cir. 1999) (per curiam) ("A prisoner's administrative remedies are deemed exhausted when a valid grievance has been filed and the state's time for responding thereto has expired.").

185. See, e.g., Magee v. Chavez, No. 1:05-cv-01563-OWW-DLB PC, 2008 WL 2283133, at *3 (E.D. Cal. May 30, 2008) (unpublished) (holding that inmate had exhausted his administrative remedies even though he had not received a response to his administrative grievance because the period to response had lapsed), dismissed on other grounds, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17972 (E.D. Cal. Mar. 10, 2009) (unpublished) (adopting the magistrate's recommendation to dismiss without prejudice upon finding that inmate had indeed filed the lawsuit prior to the expiration of the 30-day time allowed for a response). But see Sergent v. Norris, 330 F.3d 1084, 1085–86 (8th Cir. 2003) (affirming dismissal for non-exhaustion where time for response had passed before suit was filed, and prisoner had not made that clear to the district court).

have to wait if the system has no deadline for deciding your final appeal.[186] A number of decisions have said that if you do not get a response to your initial grievance, you have exhausted.[187] However, other courts have said that if the grievance system allows you to treat a non-response as a denial and appeal it, you must do so.[188] When in doubt, try to appeal, even if officials have failed to respond. Prison officials cannot keep you out of court by ignoring your grievances,[189] but once you bring suit, they may argue that you did not try hard enough to exhaust your remedies.

Courts have said that if you win your grievance before the final stage and do not appeal, you have exhausted, since it makes no sense to appeal if you win.[190] You are best advised not to rely on that statement, however, because some courts have also held that if you do not win all possible relief in the grievance, you have not exhausted all available remedies.[191] Prison officials and their lawyers will almost always be able to think of some relief you could possibly have obtained, and the court may accept their arguments.[192] Courts have held that if you have been "reliably informed by an administrator that no remedies are available," you are not required to pursue the process any further.[193] If you do not have such an

---

186. See McNeal v. Cook County Sheriff's Dept., 282 F. Supp. 2d 865, 868 n.3 (N.D. Ill. 2003) (holding 11 months is long enough to wait and citing cases holding that seven months is long enough but one month is not). However, the Seventh Circuit said, in connection with a grievance system that called for appeal decisions within 60 days "whenever possible," that the remedy did not become "unavailable" because it took six months to get a decision. Ford v. Johnson, 362 F.3d 395, 400 (7th Cir. 2004).

187. See, e.g., Brengettcy v. Horton, 423 F.3d 674, 682 (7th Cir. 2005) (holding prisoner who received no decision had exhausted his remedies where the grievance policy did not say what to do absent a decision); Boyd v. Corr. Corp. of Am., 380 F.3d 989, 996 (6th Cir. 2004) (holding that "administrative remedies are exhausted when prison officials fail to timely respond to a properly filed grievance," though distinguishing a case where the prisoner could proceed without a decision).

188. See Turner v. Burnside, 541 F.3d 1077, 1083–84 (11th Cir. 2008) (where prisoner alleged that the warden tore up his grievance, he would have been obliged to file an appeal from the lack of a decision, except that the warden also threatened him); Cox v. Mayer, 332 F.3d 422, 425 n.2 (6th Cir. 2003); Clarke v. Thornton, 515 F. Supp. 2d 435, 438–41 (S.D.N.Y. 2007). The New York State grievance rules provide that issues not decided within the prescribed time limits can be appealed unless the prisoner has consented to an extension of time. State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040 § V(G), Inmate Grievance Program (1998) (as revised Aug. 22, 2003); N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.8 (2001). The New York City grievance rules say essentially the same thing. See City of New York, Department of Corrections, Directive No. 3375R § III.6, Inmate Grievance Program (1998) (as revised Mar. 4, 1985).

189. See Duke v. Hardin County, No. 3:05CV-496-S, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25701, at *4–5 (W.D. Ky. Mar. 31, 2008) (holding prisoner exhausted remedies where he received a response stating the matter had been investigated and turned over to the Jailer, and the Jailer never responded); John v. N.Y.C. Dept. of Corr., 183 F. Supp. 2d 619, 625 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) (rejecting argument that after three years, prisoner must continue waiting for a decision). In Dole v. Chandler, 438 F.3d 804, 811–12 (7th Cir. 2006), the court held a prisoner had exhausted remedies when he did everything necessary to exhaust but his grievance simply disappeared, and he received no instructions as to what, if anything, to do about it.

190. See Brown v. Valoff, 422 F.3d 926, 935 (9th Cir. 2005) (holding "a prisoner need not press on to exhaust further levels of review once he has either received all 'available' remedies at an intermediate level of review or been reliably informed by an administrator that no remedies are available."); Abney v. McGinnis, 380 F.3d 663, 669 (2d Cir. 2004) (holding a prisoner who repeatedly got favorable decisions that later were not carried out had exhausted despite failure to appeal the favorable decisions); Sulton v. Wright, 265 F. Supp. 2d 292, 298–99 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (prisoner not required to complain after his grievance has been addressed but not corrected).

191. Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 218, 127 S. Ct. 910 (2007) ("Compliance with prison grievance procedures, therefore, is all that is required by the PLRA to "properly exhaust." The level of detail necessary in a grievance to comply with the grievance procedures will vary from system to system and claim to claim, but it is the prison's requirements, and not the PLRA, that define the boundaries of proper exhaustion.") (emphasis in original); see also Rivera v. Pataki, No. 01 civ. 5179 (MBM), 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11266, at *27 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 14, 2005) (noting it "made sense" for a prisoner to appeal when prisoner had been granted partial relief but the relief did not change the challenged policy).

192. See, e.g., Macias v. Zenk, 495 F.3d 37, 44 (2d Cir. 2007) (holding that notice alone is insufficient because "[t]he benefits of exhaustion can be realized only if the prison grievance system is given a fair opportunity to consider the grievance" and "[t]he prison grievance system will not have such an opportunity unless the grievant complies with the system's critical procedural rules) (emphasis in original); accord Ruggiero v. County of Orange, 467 F.3d 170, 178 (2d Cir. 2006) (holding prisoner who prevailed informally needed to exhaust grievances because of "the larger interests at stake"). Another circuit has rejected this idea, stating that "we do not think it [is the prisoner's] responsibility to notify persons higher in the chain when this notification would be solely for the benefit of the prison administration." Thornton v. Snyder, 428 F.3d 690, 696–97 (7th Cir. 2005).

193. Brown v. Valoff, 422 F.3d 926, 935 (9th Cir. 2005); Cahill v. Arpaio, No. CV 05-0741-PHX-MHM (JCG), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 80772, at *7–8 (D. Ariz. Nov. 2, 2006) (unpublished) (holding plaintiff reasonably relied on grievance assurance and you want to bring suit, you should probably appeal any decision all the way up, no matter what. If you have to explain why you are appealing a positive decision, you could say something like "to exhaust my administrative remedies by calling this problem to the attention of high-level officials so they can take whatever action is necessary to make sure it never happens again."[194]

Exhaustion generally means using whatever formal complaint procedure is available (usually a grievance system or administrative appeal). You must follow all the rules of the prison procedure ("proper exhaustion").[195] If you do that, courts cannot require you to do more.[196] Letters and other informal means of complaint, such as participating in an internal affairs or inspector general investigation, generally will not be considered exhaustion[197] unless the prison rules identify them as an alternative means of complaint,[198] or unless there are "special circumstances" justifying your failure to exhaust properly.[199] In a few cases, courts have held that non-grievance complaints that were in fact reviewed at the highest levels of the agency satisfied the exhaustion requirement in the particular circumstances of those cases,[200] though it is not clear whether these cases are good law after the Woodford "proper exhaustion" holding.

The Second Circuit has questioned the idea of informal exhaustion. It has held that a prisoner who got what he asked for in an informal process should have filed a formal grievance anyway because that process could have provided other relief, like changes in policy or discipline of staff.[201] So, if you solve your problem hearing officer telling him that "(1) the matter was under investigation and he would not be notified of the results, (2) he could not appeal and would not be given a form, and (3) he should proceed to federal court," notwithstanding that the preprinted decision form said it could be appealed). Similarly, courts have held that if a prisoner's grievance is rejected on the ground that the prisoner has already received the relief sought, he has exhausted. Elkins v. Schrubbe, No. 04-C-85, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43157, at *154–55 (E.D. Wis. June 15, 2006) (unpublished) (holding prisoner had no remaining "available" remedy where grievances were rejected as moot because the issue had already been resolved in his favor in that he received the requested relief).

---

194. See Ruggiero v. County of Orange, 467 F.3d 170, 177 (2d Cir. 2006) (holding prisoner who obtained what he wanted informally was still required to exhaust because a grievance "still would have allowed prison officials to reconsider their policies and discipline any officer who had failed to follow existing policies").

195. Woodford v. Ngo, 548 U.S. 81, 106, 126 S. Ct. 2378, 2394, 165 L. Ed. 2d 368, 387 (2006) ("[T]he Court concludes that the 'PLRA exhaustion requirement requires proper exhaustion.'") (Stevens, J., dissenting).

196. Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 217–19, 127 S. Ct. 910, 922–23, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 815 (2007) ("Compliance with prison grievance procedures ... is all that is required by the PLRA to 'properly exhaust.'")

197. See Ruggiero v. County of Orange, 467 F.3d 170, 177 (2d Cir. 2006) (holding that talking with Sheriff's Department investigators rather than filing a jail grievance did not satisfy the exhaustion requirement); Panaro v. City of North Las Vegas, 432 F.3d 949, 953 (9th Cir. 2005) (holding that participation in an internal affairs investigation did not exhaust because it did not provide a remedy for the prisoner, even though the officer was disciplined); Scott v. Gardner. 287 F. Supp. 2d 477, 488 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (holding that letters of complaint are not part of the grievance process).

198. In Pavey v. Conley, 170 F. App'x 4, 8, (7th Cir. 2006), the plaintiff alleged that prison staff had broken his arm and he couldn't write, and the grievance rules said that prisoners who couldn't write could be assisted by staff. The court held that any memorialization of his complaint by investigating prison staff might qualify as a grievance—and even if they did not write it down, he might have "reasonably believed that he had done all that was necessary to comply with" the policy. See also Carter v. Symmes, No. 06-10273-PBS, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7680, at *8 (D. Mass. Feb. 4, 2008) (unpublished) (holding that a timely letter from counsel served to exhaust remedies where grievance rules did not specify use of a form, and the letter was considered as part of prisoners' grievance raising other issues); Shaheed-Muhammad v. Dipaolo, 393 F. Supp. 2d 80, 96–7 (D. Mass. 2005) (concluding that letters to officials are considered grievances under state law).

199. For information about what counts as a "special circumstance," see Part E(5) of this Chapter, "What if You Make a Mistake Trying to Exhaust?"

200. See Camp v. Brennan, 219 F.3d 279, 280 (3d Cir. 2000) (holding that use of force allegation reportedly investigated and rejected by Secretary of Correction's office needed no further exhaustion) If you are in the position where you must argue that another kind of complaint meets the exhaustion requirement, be sure to remind the court that the Supreme Court has said that "Congress afforded corrections officials time and opportunity to address complaints internally before allowing the initiation of a federal case." Porter v. Nussle, 534 U.S. 516, 525, 122 S. Ct. 983, 988, L. Ed. 2d. 12, 22 (2002). You can then argue that if prison officials actually reviewed your complaint, they had the opportunity to address the complaint internally, and exhaustion was therefore satisfied. The likelihood of success with this argument is not good and you should not bypass normal exhaustion procedures. See, e.g., Macias v. Zenk, 495 F.3d 37, 43–44 (2d Cir. 2007) (holding "after Woodford, notice alone is insufficient"; the PLRA requires both "substantive exhaustion" (notice to officials) and "procedural exhaustion" (following the rules)).

201. Ruggiero v. County of Orange, 467 F.3d 170, 177 (2d Cir. 2006) (holding prisoner beaten in jail, who talked to Sheriff's Department investigators and then was transferred, did not exhaust).

informally but still want to bring suit about what happened, you should file a grievance and pursue it all the way to the top.

The Second Circuit has held if a prisoner uses the wrong remedy through a reasonable misunderstanding of the rules, the prisoner is justified in failing to exhaust correctly. If the correct administrative remedy is still available, the prisoner must try to use it, but if it is no longer available, the prisoner's case may go forward without exhaustion.[202] A prisoner may also be justified in failing to exhaust the correct procedures because of threats or intimidation by prison staff.[203] These rules appear to still be good law after the Woodford "proper exhaustion" ruling, since they address fact situations different than those before the Supreme Court in Woodford. But the Second Circuit has not yet ruled on that question.[204]

The exhaustion requirement refers only to administrative remedies; you do not need to exhaust judicial remedies (i.e., go to state court) before you go to federal court. That means you do not have to appeal to the judiciary from administrative decisions in states that have such procedures.[205] The administrative remedies Congress had in mind when it passed the PLRA are internal prison grievance procedures.[206] A prisoner is not required to exhaust state or federal tort claim procedures, unless the prisoner wishes to sue under the tort claims system.[207] Several New York federal courts have held that prisoners making disability-related complaints must exhaust the U.S. Department of Justice's disability complaint procedure in addition to the prison grievance procedure.[208] At least one court has disagreed.[209] The New York state prison system has rejected that additional requirement,[210] although other state agencies continue to support it.[211]

2. What Are Prison Conditions?

The exhaustion requirement applies to cases filed by prisoners about "prison conditions." The Supreme Court has said the phrase applies "to all inmate suits about prison life, whether they involve general circumstances or particular episodes, and whether they allege excessive force or some other wrong."[212] In other words, if it happened to you in prison, it is probably covered by the exhaustion requirement.[213] One

---

202. Giano v. Goord, 380 F.3d 670, 678–80 (2d Cir. 2004) (holding that prisoner who used a disciplinary appeal rather than a grievance for his issues did so reasonably, and had therefore exhausted).

203. Hemphill v. New York, 380 F.3d 680, 688, 690 (2d Cir. 2004) (noting that a prisoner afraid to file an internal grievance but not to appeal "directly to individuals in positions of greater authority within the prison system, or to external structures of authority such as state or federal courts" might have been justified in failing to exhaust).

204. Other courts, however, have endorsed the Hemphill holding in post-Woodford decisions. See Kaba v. Stepp, 458 F.3d 678, 684–85 (7th Cir. 2006) (adopting Hemphill analysis); Stanley v. Rich, No. CV 605-075, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35916, at *5 (S.D. Ga. June 1, 2006) (unpublished) (stating "threats of violent reprisal may, in some circumstances, render administrative remedies 'unavailable' or otherwise justify an inmate's failure to pursue them").

205. See Jenkins v. Morton, 148 F.3d 257, 259–60 (3d Cir. 1998) (finding prisoner not required to exhaust his state judicial remedies prior to bringing an action covered by PLRA). New York does not have that kind of judicial review procedure. Instead, New York permits review of administrative decisions by Article 78 proceedings. For more information on Article 78 proceedings, see JLM, Chapter 22.

206. See Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 217–19, 127 S. Ct. 910, 922–23, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 815 (2007) ("Compliance with prison grievance procedures, therefore, is all that is required by the PLRA to 'properly exhaust.'"); Porter v. Nussle, 534 U.S. 516, 524–25, 122 S. Ct. 983, 988, 152 L. Ed. 2d 12, 21 (2002) (stating the exhaustion requirement was intended to give corrections officials the opportunity to solve problems before suit was filed).

207. See Macias v. Zenk, 495 F.3d 37, 42–44 (2d Cir. 2007). For information on tort claims generally, review Chapter 17 of the JLM, "The State's Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions."

208. William G. v. Pataki, No. 03 Civ. 8331 (RCC), 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16716, at *20 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 12, 2005) (unpublished); Burgess v. Garvin, No. 01 Civ. 10994 (GEL), 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14419, at *8 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 19, 2003) (unpublished), on reconsideration, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4122, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. March 16, 2004) (unpublished).

209. Veloz v. State of New York, 339 F. Supp. 2d 505, 517–519 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 30, 2004).

210. Rosario v. Goord, 400 F.3d 108 (2d Cir. 2005) (per curiam).

211. William G. v. Pataki, No. 03 Civ. 8331 (RCC), 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16716 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 12, 2005) (unpublished) (accepting argument in action defended by state Division of Parole and Office of Mental Health).

212. Porter v. Nussle, 534 U.S. 516, 532, 122 S. Ct. 983, 992, 152 L. Ed. 2d 12, 26 (2002).

213. See Krilich v. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, 346 F.3d 157, 159 (6th Cir. 2003) (holding that intrusions on attorney-client correspondence and telephone conversations are prison conditions notwithstanding argument that attorney-client relationship "transcends the conditions of time and place"); United States v. Carmichael, 343 F.3d 756, 762 (5th Cir. 2003) (holding that statutorily required DNA collection is a prison condition); Castano v. Neb. Dept. of Corr., 201 F.3d 1023, 1024 (8th Cir. 2000) (failure to provide interpreters for Spanish-speaking prisoners is a prison condition); but see Ayyad v. Gonzales, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 62863 (D. Colo. July 31, 2008) (unpublished) (holding that denial of a prisoner's ability to meet with clinical law students was not a matter of prison conditions because the administrative major exception for New York City prisoners is use-of-force cases. You cannot bring "complaints pertaining to an alleged assault" under that system's grievance procedure, and therefore you do not need to exhaust use-of-force or prisoner assault claims.[214] However, you would need to exhaust other claims arising out of those incidents, like prison staff preventing you from receiving medical care for injuries.

Actions of persons or agencies outside the prison system are generally not prison conditions.[215] Occurrences or conditions in police custody are generally not prison conditions.[216] The same might be true of medical facilities outside the prison.[217] Disputes over whether you should be in prison at all are not about prison conditions.[218] Courts have reached differing decisions on matters related to parole release or revocation.[219] Complaints that arise in halfway houses or residential treatment programs are likely to be considered as being about prison conditions as long as you are there because of a criminal conviction or charge and you are not free to leave.[220] However, courts have held issues about placement in or removal from such programs are not about prison conditions.[221] For example, one court has held that a claim that prisoners with mental illness were discharged without receiving psychiatric medication and referrals is not about prison conditions.[222] dictates were made by the Attorney General, not the Bureau of Prisons).

---

214. City of New York, Department of Corrections, Directive No. 3375R § II.B, Inmate Grievance Program (1998) (as revised Mar. 4, 1985). This directive has recently been revised but the substance of this point is unchanged: "Inmate allegations of assault or harassment by either staff or inmates are not grievable under the grievance mechanism." City of New York, Department of Corrections, Directive 3375R-A, Inmate Grievance Resolution Program at § II.C.2 (Mar. 13, 2008), available at http://www.nyc.gov/html/doc/downloads/pdf/3375R-A.pdf. If a complaint is not grievable, and there is no other applicable administrative remedy, then there is no exhaustion requirement.

215. For example, one court held that the Department of Homeland Security's placement of a prisoner on a "watch list" was not a prison condition requiring exhaustion; however, the prison's actions in placing him in segregation or depriving him of telephone privileges required exhaustion. Almahdi v. Ridge, No. 04-3120, 201 F. App'x 865, 868, 2006 U.S. App. LEXIS 26938, at *6 (3d Cir. Oct. 27, 2006) (unpublished). See Johnson v. Quinn, No. 96 C 6598, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2434, at *8 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 26, 1999) (unpublished) (holding that prisoner who alleged that prosecutors and investigators were conspiring to harm him in jail because he had information about official corruption did not have to exhaust because claim was not about prison conditions).

216. See Bowers v. City of Philadelphia, No. 06-CV-3229, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5804, at *116, n.40 (E.D. Pa. Jan. 25, 2007) (unpublished) (holding police holding cells were not prisons for purpose of prisoner release provisions of PLRA).

217. In Borges v. Adm'r for Strong Mem. Hosp., No. 99-CV-6351Fe, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18596, at *11 (W.D.N.Y. Sept. 30, 2002) (unpublished), the court expressed doubt that a claim made by prisoners injured by dentists at an outside hospital involved prison conditions, since the grievance system probably could not take any action against defendants. The court reached the opposite conclusion in Abdur-Raqiyb v. Erie County Med. Ctr., 536 F. Supp. 2d 299, 304 (W.D.N.Y. 2008), reasoning that the statute is supposed to be read broadly and the plaintiff was clearly a prisoner.

218. Fuller v. Kansas, No. 04-2457-CM, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18977, at *5 (D. Kan. Aug. 8, 2005) (unpublished) (holding claims of false arrest and imprisonment are not prison conditions claims under the statute), aff'd, 175 F. App'x 234 (10th Cir. 2006); Wishom v. Hill, No. 02-2291-KHV, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2172, at *34 (D. Kan. Feb. 13, 2004) (unpublished) (holding detention without probable cause not a prison condition); Monahan v. Winn, 276 F. Supp. 2d 196, 204 (D. Mass. 2003) (holding a Bureau of Prisons rule revision abolishing its discretion to designate some offenders to community confinement facilities did not involve prison conditions).

219. Compare L.H. v. Schwarzenegger, 519 F. Supp. 2d 1072, 1081 n.9 (E.D. Cal. Sept. 19, 2007) (holding parole violation procedures are not prison conditions) with Morgan v. Messenger, No. 02-319-M, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14892, at *8 (D.N.H. Aug. 27, 2003) (unpublished) (holding sex offender treatment director's disclosure of private information from plaintiff's treatment file to parole authorities and prosecutor involved prison conditions, since the director was a prison employee and the action affected the duration of his prison confinement)

220. Ruggiero v. County of Orange, 467 F.3d 170, 174–75 (2d Cir. 2006) (holding that a "drug treatment campus" was a "jail, prison, or other correctional facility" and that term "includes within its ambit all facilities in which prisoners are held involuntarily as a result of violating the criminal law"); William G. v. Pataki, No. 03 Civ. 8331 (RCC), 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16716, at *11 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 12, 2005) (unpublished) (holding that thequestion whether persons incarcerated pending parole revocation proceedings were entitled to be placed in less restrictive residential treatment programs for mental illness and chemical addition involved prison conditions).

221. See Monahan v. Winn, 276 F. Supp. 2d 196, 204 (D. Mass. 2003) (holding that a Bureau of Prisons rule revision that abolished its discretion to designate certain offenders to community confinement facilities did not involve prison conditions).

222. See Bolden v. Stroger, No. 03 C 5617, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7473, at *4 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 1, 2005) (unpublished) (holding that a claim of exclusion of persons with mental illness from pre-release programs was about conditions).

3. What Are "Available" Remedies?

The PLRA says you must exhaust "available" remedies. A remedy is "available" if it has any "authority to provide any relief or to take any action whatsoever in response to a complaint."[223] You may believe that the grievance system in your prison is unfair or a complete waste of time, but you still must exhaust your administrative remedies. [224]

The "available" remedy that you must exhaust will usually be the prison grievance procedure.[225] However, if an issue is not "grievable" under grievance rules, you should not be required to exhaust the grievance system because it is not available for your issue.[226] For example, the New York State grievance directive states

(1) An individual decision or disposition of any current or subsequent program or procedure having a written appeal mechanism which extends review to outside the facility shall be considered non-grievable.
(2) An individual decision or disposition of the temporary release committee, time allowance committee, family reunion program or media review committee is not grievable. Likewise, an individual decision or disposition resulting from a disciplinary proceeding, inmate property claim (of any amount), central monitoring case review or records review (freedom of information request, expunction) is not grievable.
(3) The policies, rules, and procedures of any program or procedure, including those above, are grievable.[227]

So, for example, your complaint about the denial of temporary release would not be grievable, but your complaint that the Temporary Release Committee used unfair procedures would be grievable.

The New York City jail grievance directive lists the following "non-grievable issues:"

(1) matters under investigation by the Inspector General;
(2) complaints pertaining to an alleged assault or verbal harassment;
(3) complaints pertaining to matters in litigation;
(4) complaints where there is already an existing appeal mechanism within the Department of Correction (that is, determinations of disciplinary hearings and classification);
(5) matters outside the jurisdiction of the Department of Correction; and
(6) complaints that do not directly affect the prisoner.[228]

If no remedies are available from the grievance system, then the PLRA does not require exhaustion.[229] Also, an issue may be grievable on paper but non-grievable in reality because of how the grievance system operates.[230]

---

223. Booth v. Churner, 532 U.S. 731, 736, 121 S. Ct. 1819, 1823, 149 L. Ed. 2d 958, 963 (2001).

224. Booth v. Churner, 532 U.S. 731, 741 n.6, 121 S. Ct. 1819, 1825 n.6, 149 L. Ed. 2d 958, 966 n.6 (2001) ("[W]e will not read futility or other exceptions into statutory exhaustion requirements where Congress has provided otherwise."). This means, for example, that if another prisoner has just grieved the same issue and lost, you still need to grieve it yourself, even though you are certain that you will get the same ruling. See Hattie v. Hallock, 16 F. Supp. 2d 834. 836 (N.D. Ohio June 23, 1998) (dismissing prisoner's action because he had not exhausted his remedies before filing).

225. Acosta v. United States Marshals Serv., 445 F.3d 509, 512–13 (1st Cir. 2006) (prisoner must use the administrative procedure of the institution or system where his or her problem arose).

226. See Owens v. Keeling, 461 F.3d 763, 769 (6th Cir. 2006) (holding grievance system was not an available remedy for classification complaint where prison required use of a separate classification appeal procedure); Mojias v. Johnson, 351 F.3d 606, 610 (2d Cir. 2003) (courts must establish that the prisoner's claim does not fall into an exception to the administrative remedy).

However, if you think that you do not have to exhaust, but you turn out to be wrong, your case will likely be dismissed for lack of exhaustion. So, if you have any doubts whatsoever that your issue is grievable, file the appropriate grievance. See Steele v. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, 355 F.3d 1204, 1214 (10th Cir. 2003) (quoting Beaudry v. Corr. Corp. of Am., 331 F.3d 1164, 1166 (10th Cir. 2003)).

227. State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040 § 701.3(e), Inmate Grievance Program (2003) (as revised July 1, 2006). The state regulations say the same thing. See N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.3 (2006).

228. City of New York, Department of Corrections, Directive No. 3375R § II(B) Inmate Grievance Program (1998) (as revised Mar. 4, 1985). This directive has recently been revised, but the list of non-grievable issues remains substantially the same. See New York City, Deparment of Corrections, Directive 3375R-A, Inmate Grievance Resolution Program at § II.C. (Mar. 13, 2008), available at http://www.nyc.gov/html/doc/downloads/pdf/3375R-A.pdf.

Often, there is a separate, specialized remedy for a non-grievable issue. If so, you must use it.[231] This is most often an issue with disciplinary proceedings and issues related to them: to satisfy the "proper exhaustion" requirement,[232] you must choose correctly between appealing a disciplinary action and filing a separate grievance—and sometimes you may need to do both.

Generally, a suit that attacks the conduct of the disciplinary hearing itself is exhausted by a disciplinary appeal.[233] A suit about the incident that leads to disciplinary charges against you will generally not be exhausted by a disciplinary appeal and will require a separate grievance.[234] However, in all cases it is the prison's rules governing grievances and appeals that will determine which remedy is the correct remedy.[235] The problem is that prison rules are often unclear to the point where even prison officials cannot keep them straight. For example, in one New York State case, the defendants argued that a prisoner who alleged that evidence used against him at a disciplinary hearing was falsely created should have filed a separate grievance and not a disciplinary appeal to exhaust that issue. The Second Circuit held that the prisoner was justified by special circumstances[236] in filing only a disciplinary appeal because the rule was unclear and he had a reasonable belief that his complaint could only be pursued by appeal.[237] New York state not only failed to clarify the rule,[238] but also in a later case made exactly the opposite argument: the prisoner had filed a

---

229. See Farnworth v. Craven, No. CV05-493-S-MHW, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19412, at *14 (D. Idaho Mar. 14, 2007) (unpublished) (holding prisoner seeking a new parole hearing need not exhaust the grievance system because it had no authority over the Parole Commission); Bumgarden v. Wackenhut Corrections Corp., 645 So. 2d 655, 657-658 (3d Cir. 1994) (holding the exhaustion of grievance procedures is only required when the procedures have a realistic chance of resolving the dispute); Handberry v. Thompson, 92 F. Supp. 2d 244, 247–48 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (holding that prisoners need not grieve failure to deliver educational services).

230. See Marshall v. Knight, No. 3:03-CV-460 RM, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 84040, at *7 (N.D. Ind. Nov. 17, 2006) (unpublished) (holding that instructions to grievance personnel to respond to grievances about law library hours only by sending prisoners a copy of a memo deprived grievance staff of authority to act on those grievances and made the remedy unavailable); Scott v. Gardner, 287 F. Supp. 2d 477, 491 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (holding that allegations that grievance staff refused to process and file grievances about occurrences at other prisons, claiming they were not grievable, sufficiently alleged lack of an available remedy).

231. See Owens v. Keeling, 461 F.3d 763, 769–72 (6th Cir. 2006) (holding prisoner who filed classification appeal exhausted, notwithstanding failure to complete inapplicable grievance procedure); Timley v. Nelson, No. 99-3038-JWL, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10117, at *4–5 (D. Kan. Feb. 16, 2001) (unpublished) (prisoner's failure to pursue "religious accommodation" exception procedure meant that administrative remedies were not exhausted); Wallace v. Burbury 305 F. Supp. 2d 801, (N.D. Ohio 2003) (holding where a prisoner is notified that a document relating to his grievance has been lost or misfiled, failure to refile is considered a failure to exhaust the administrative remedy).

232. This rule is discussed in Part E(5), "What If You Make a Mistake Trying To Exhaust?"

233. Jenkins v. Haubert, 179 F.3d 19, 23 n.1 (2d Cir. 1999) (holding that disciplinary appeals exhausted plaintiff's challenge to the resulting disciplinary sanctions); Portley-El v. Steinbeck, No. 06-cv-02096-MSK-MJW, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20236, at *2 (D. Colo. Mar. 14, 2008) (unpublished) (holding that a disciplinary appeal exhausted due process claims under rule stating that grievance procedure may not be used to seek review of disciplinary convictions).

234. Rodney v. Goord, 00 Civ. 3724 (WK), 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8176, at *19 (S.D.N.Y. May 5, 2003) (unpublished) (holding an allegation of false disciplinary charges had to be grieved in addition to appealing the disciplinary conviction); but see Mitchell v. Horn, 318 F.3d 523, 531 (3d Cir. 2003) (holding that a prisoner who claimed retaliatory discipline exhausted by appealing the disciplinary decision to the highest level.

235. Woodford v. Ngo, 548 U.S. 81, 90, 126 S. Ct. 2378, 2385, 165 L. Ed. 2d 368, 378 (2006)(holding that under the Prison Litigation Reform Act, prisoners must exhaust all available remedies, even if the relief sought cannot be granted by the administrative process). If the designated remedy is a disciplinary appeal, but the prisoner cannot appeal because he pled guilty to the offense, the remedy is not available. Marr v. Fields, No. 1:07-cv-494, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24993, at *1 (W.D. Mich. Mar. 27, 2008) (unpublished).

236. In the Second Circuit, such a finding means the prisoner has not exhausted, but must seek to exhaust remedies if they remain available. If the remedies are no longer available, the prisoner may proceed with the litigation. Giano v. Goord, 380 F.3d 670, 680 (2d Cir. 2004)(holding that special circumstances may excuse a prisoner's failure to exhaust, but in the absence of any justification for not pursuing available remedies, dismissal with prejudice is required.); Hemphill v. New York, 380 F.3d 680, 690–91 (2d Cir. 2004)(holding that where a prisoner lacked available administrative remedies, the exhaustion requirement of Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) does not apply).

237. Giano v. Goord, 380 F.3d 670, 679 (2d Cir. 2004) (stating that even if the plaintiff was wrong, "his interpretation was hardly unreasonable;" the regulations "do not differentiate clearly between grievable matters relating to disciplinary proceedings, and non-grievable issues concerning the 'decisions or dispositions' of such proceedings"); accord Johnson v. Testman, 380 F.3d 691, 696–97 (2d Cir. 2004) (remanding claim when [plaintiff] reasonably believed that raising his complaints during his disciplinary appeal sufficed to exhaust his available administrative remedies," since it "cannot be dismissed out of hand, especially since the district court has not had the opportunity to examine it").

238. New York has, seemingly, attempted to shift the cost of unclear rules to the prisoners. The most recent grievance about retaliatory false discipline, and the defendants argued he should have pursued a disciplinary appeal.[239] In some cases, prison officials appear to have stretched the rules to reject grievances that were related to disciplinary proceedings even though the rules did not actually require such rejection.[240] In some prison systems, the rules do bar grievances that have any relationship to a disciplinary incident.[241] The bottom line is that you must read the rules very carefully to determine whether a particular issue calls for a grievance or a disciplinary appeal. In some cases both will be required if you wish to raise multiple issues.[242] If the rules are not absolutely clear, it may be wise to file both a grievance and a disciplinary appeal to protect yourself from an argument later that whatever you did was wrong. If prison officials reject your use of a particular remedy, it is harder for them to say later that you should have used it.

A remedy may not be available because of circumstances peculiar to a particular case. For example, a prisoner may be unable to file a grievance because of a medical condition.[243] Courts have made a number of decisions concerning mental illness or retardation, some favoring prisoners[244] and some favoring prison officials,[245] without settling on any clear standard for such cases. Courts have also not taken any consistent position concerning prisoners who may be unable to use the grievance system properly because of other disabilities,[246] illiteracy or lack of education,[247] inability to speak or write English,[248] or youth.[249] revision to its grievance policy states: "Note: If an inmate is unsure whether an issue is grievable, he/she should file a grievance and the question will be decided through the grievance process in accordance with section 701.5, below." Appendix D, New York State, Department of Correctional Services, Directive 4040, Inmate Grievance Program at § 701.3(e) (July 1, 2006). This provision, however, does not deal with the situation addressed in Giano where the prisoner reasonably believes the issue is not grievable.

---

239. Larkins v. Selsky, No. 04 Civ. 5900 (RMB) (DF), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 89057, at *24 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 6, 2006) (unpublished) (stating that Giano "nearly mirrors this case").

240. Woods v. Lozer, No. 3:05-1080, 2007 LEXIS 4923, at *3 (M.D. Tenn. Jan. 18, 2007) (unpublished) (holding a prisoner exhausted when he appealed a decision that his use of force claim was not grievable because it was mistakenly said to seek review of disciplinary procedures and punishments); Livingston v. Piskor, 215 F.R.D. 84, 86–87 (W.D.N.Y. 2003) (holding that evidence of grievance personnel refusal to process grievances where a disciplinary report had been filed covering the same events created a factual issue preventing summary judgment).
The above cited cases involved misapplication of prison policy, or prison staff making up an unauthorized rule. In some prison systems, any overlap with a disciplinary proceeding makes the matter non-grievable or not immediately grievable.

241. See Vasquez v. Hilbert, No. 07-cv-00723-bbc, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42011, at *9 (W.D. Wis. May 28, 2008) (unpublished) (citing rule that a grievance raising "any issue related to the conduct report" must await completion of the disciplinary process).

242. For example, in some prison systems, appealing a disciplinary conviction and challenging the rule under which you were convicted require, respectively, a disciplinary appeal and separate grievance. See Singh v. Goord, 520 F. Supp. 2d 487, 497–98 (S.D.N.Y. 2007) (holding successful disciplinary appeal challenging discipline for refusing work contrary to religious beliefs did not exhaust plaintiff's challenge to the underlying disciplinary rule; a separate grievance was required).

243. Days v. Johnson, 322 F.3d 863, 867 (5th Cir. 2003) (noting that "one's personal ability to access the grievance system could render the system unavailable"). But see Ferrington v. La. Dept. of Corr., 315 F.3d 529, 532 (5th Cir. 2002) (holding plaintiff's near blindness did not exempt him from exhausting, since he had managed to file the lawsuit).

244. See, e.g., Whitington v. Sokol, 491 F. Supp. 2d 1012, 1019 (D. Colo. 2007) (refusing to dismiss for non-exhaustion where plaintiff alleged he had no remedies because he was mentally incapacitated and was transferred to a mental institution shortly after the incident he sued about).

245. See Fleming v. Dettloff, No. 07-12511, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 48258, at *4–5 (E.D. Mich. June 24, 2008) (unpublished) (dismissing for non-exhaustion despite plaintiff's allegation of mental incompetence and his participation in the prison Mental Health Program, since he presented "no evidence of mental incompetency beyond allegations and conclusory statements in the pleadings").

246. See Elliott v. Monroe Corr. Complex, No. C06-0474RSL, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5242, at *10–11 (W.D. Wash. Jan. 23, 2007) (unpublished) (dismissing for non-exhaustion where plaintiff with cerebral palsy was provided with assistance and had filed numerous grievances, though none of which was exhausted).

247. Langford v. Ifediora, No. 5:05CV00216WRW/HLJ, 2007 LEXIS 34915, at *1 (E.D. Ark. May 11, 2007) (unpublished) (holding plaintiff's age, deteriorating health, and lack of general education, combined with failure to provide him assistance in preparing grievances, raised a factual issue concerning the availability of the remedy to him). See also Ramos v. Smith, No. 05-5278, 187 F. App'x 152, 154 (3d Cir. June 2, 2006) (unpublished) (rejecting claim of illiteracy, since federal regulations require assistance to illiterate prisoners, and he did not allege that he asked for such assistance).

248. Several courts have denied summary judgment to prison officials where a monolingual Spanish-speaking plaintiff alleged he could not understand or follow the grievance procedures because he could not get them, or get help with them, in Spanish. See Ramos v. Rosevthal, No. 4:06cv3158, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 37360, at *3 n.1 (D. Neb. May

A remedy may be unavailable because the prisoner has been transferred out of the particular prison or jail system,[250] unless the system provides a way to pursue grievances after transfer.[251] Also, if a prisoner had time to file a grievance before transfer and failed to do so, he or she will probably be considered to not have exhausted this option.[252] Be careful with this issue. Courts sometimes assume that a remedy remains available after transfer whether or not there is any evidence that the remedy was actually available.[253] If you get transferred before you can file a grievance, or while a grievance is pending, you should do your best to pursue the grievance. Maybe you will succeed. If you do not succeed, you will be able to demonstrate that the remedy was not available to you. In any case, you will need to show the court good reasons why you could not exhaust the remedies available after transfer.[254]

A remedy may be made unavailable by the acts or omissions of prison personnel. The Second Circuit, along with other courts, has held that if prison personnel threaten or assault you in order to prevent you from complaining, this can make remedies unavailable, even if remedies and the ability to complain are technically available. The governing standard is the same as that applied to allegations of retaliation for First Amendment-protected activity: "[whether] 'a similarly situated individual of ordinary firmness' [would] have deemed [the remedy] available."[255]

Remedies may be made unavailable by other forms of obstruction by prison staff, whether the prison staff is deliberately making it hard for you to access a remedy or not.[256] For example, a rule denying postage

---

17, 2007) (unpublished); Gonzalez v. Lantz, No. 3:03-cv-2264 (SRU)(WIG), 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14702, at *8–10 (D. Conn. July 20, 2005) (unpublished).

249. One appeals court has rejected the argument that a juvenile prisoner complaining of excessive force should be excused from failure to use the grievance process in part because he was a juvenile. Brock v. Kenyon County, Ky., No. 02-5442, 2004 LEXIS 5984, at *4 (6th Cir. Mar. 23, 2004) (unpublished). By contrast, in Lewis v. Gagne, 281 F. Supp. 2d 429, 433–35 (N.D.N.Y. 2003), the court held that a juvenile detainee's mother, who had complained to facility staff and contacted an attorney, family court, and the state Child Abuse and Maltreatment Register, and whose complaints were known to the facility director and agency counsel, had made sufficient "reasonable efforts" to exhaust his remedies

250. Rodriguez v. Westchester County Jail Corr. Dept., 372 F.3d 485, 488 (2d Cir. 2004) (holding that failure to exhaust may sometimes be excused); Ammouri v. Adappt House, Inc., No. 05-3867, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47129, at *10–12 (E.D. Pa. June 12, 2008) (unpublished) (noting that plaintiff was repeatedly told he could not file a grievance about matters from his previous institution).

251. Soto v. Belcher, 339 F. Supp. 2d 592, 595 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (holding transfer did not excuse exhaustion since regulations permit grievances after transfer).

In Brownell v. Krom, 446 F.3d 305, 312–13 (2d Cir. 2006), the court found special circumstances justifying the plaintiff's failure to exhaust correctly where grievance regulations did prescribe the handling of grievances following a transfer, but prison staff did not follow their own rules.

252. James v. Williams, No. 1:04CV69-1-MU, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10076, at *6 (W.D.N.C. May 24, 2005) (unpublished) (noting prisoner had 11 days to file a new grievance after his first was rejected and under the grievance policy he could have filed it at the new prison too).

253. Blakey v. Beckstrom, No. 06-163-HRW, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5181, at *4 (E.D. Ky. Jan. 24, 2007) (unpublished) (holding that transfer did not make grievance procedures unavailable if the plaintiff did not take advantage of the administrative remedies); Mills v. United States, No. CV-02-5597 SJF LB, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 82903, at *7 (E.D.N.Y. Oct. 26, 2006) (holding transfer "does not relieve [prisoner] of the obligation to pursue the grievance procedures available in the facility where the conduct occurred").

254. See Mellender v. Dane County, No. 06-C-298-C, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 80103, at *7–12 (W.D. Wis. Oct. 27, 2006) (unpublished) (noting that after transfer, plaintiff tried to mail a grievance from prison to the jail and then to use the prison's grievance system to complain about the jail).

255. Hemphill v. New York, 380 F.3d 680, 688 (2d Cir. 2004) (stating that it is possible for the threat of retaliation to make administrative remedies unavailable); accord Turner v. Burnside, 541 F.3d 1077, 1084 (11th Cir. 2008) ("Remedies that rational inmates cannot be expected to use are not capable of accomplishing their purposes, and so are not available"; following Hemphill and Kaba); Kaba v. Stepp, 458 F.3d 678, 684–85 (7th Cir. 2006) (adopting Hemphill analysis and stating that if administrative remedies are not "available" to a prisoner, then the prisoner cannot be required to exhaust them).

Threats or intimidation "may well deter a prisoner of 'ordinary firmness' from filing an internal grievance, but not from appealing directly to individuals in positions of greater authority within the prison system, or to external structures of authority such as state or federal courts." Hemphill v. New York, 380 F.3d 680, 688 (2d Cir. 2004); accord Turner v. Burnside, 541 F.3d 1077, 1084–85 (11th Cir. 2008). Thus, the fact that a prisoner has, for example, written a letter of complaint to the Superintendent (as in Hemphill) does not establish that he was not deterred from filing an ordinary grievance.

256. Dole v. Chandler, 438 F.3d 804, 809, 812 (7th Cir. 2006) ("Prison officials may not take unfair advantage of the exhaustion requirement, ... and a remedy becomes 'unavailable' if prison employees do not respond to a properly filed grievance or otherwise use affirmative misconduct to prevent a prisoner from exhausting"; prisoner whose properly filed to prisoners who can not afford to mail a grievance appeal may make the appeal unavailable,[257] as may refusing to give the prisoners writing materials or documentation to prisoners in a segregation unit.[258] Sometimes prisoners in a particular status or situation are simply excluded from using the grievance system.[259] Rules specifically designed to limit prisoners' use of the grievance system may make the remedy unavailable for some prisoners, depending on the severity of the limit.[260] A system of "modified grievance access," in which the prison administration requires the prisoner to receive prior permission in order to file a grievance, makes the remedy unavailable if permission is not granted.[261] Remedies may also be not available because of actions by supervisors or grievance staff with respect to particular grievances or individuals who have a grievance,[262] purposeful misconduct,[263] neglect or accident,[264] or events that are merely grievance simply vanished, and who received no instructions what to do about it, did "all that was reasonable to exhaust"); Miller v. Norris, 247 F.3d 736, 740 (8th Cir. 2001) ("We believe that a remedy that prison officials prevent a prisoner from 'utiliz[ing]' is not an 'available' remedy under § 1997e(a) ..."). Frost v. McCaughtry, No. 99-2061, 2000 U.S. App. LEXIS 14702, at *2–4 (7th Cir. June 12, 2000) (unpublished) (holding allegation that no grievance appeal was available to plaintiff because of ongoing administrative changes during the relevant time period raised a factual question as to availability); Brookins v. Vogel, No. 1:05-CV-0413-0WW-DLB-P, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86252, at *7–9 (E.D. Cal. Nov. 28, 2006) (unpublished) (holding that defendants prevented plaintiff from exhausting the administrative remedies and therefore the situation was an exception to the exhaustion rule.).

---

257. Cordova v. Frank, No. 07-C-172-C, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 54789, at *15–16 (W.D. Wis. July 26, 2007) (unpublished) (noting that "insofar as defendants have devised a grievance system that prevents indigent prisoners from filing appeals of their inmate grievances, they have made the grievance process unavailable to those inmates").

258. Woods v. Carey, No. CIV S-04-1225 LKK GGH P, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 69832, at *1–2 (E.D. Cal. Sept. 13, 2007) (unpublished) (vacating recommendation for exhaustion dismissal pending inquiry into plaintiff's access to his legal property, which he said impeded his timely appeal).

259. Daker v. Ferrero, No. 1:03-CV-2526-RWS, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 30591, at *6–7 (N.D. Ga. Nov. 24, 2004) (unpublished) (prisoner placed in "sleeper" status, meaning he remained officially assigned to another prison and was not allowed to file grievances where he was actually located, lacked an available remedy); see Sease v. Phillips, No. 06 Civ. 3663 (PKC), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60994, at *16 (S.D.N.Y. July 25, 2008) (unpublished) (summary judgment denied where prisoner in "transient status" was told his grievance could not be processed, and when he filed one it was never processed).

If the available remedy is a disciplinary appeal, but the prisoner cannot appeal because he pled guilty to the offense, the remedy is not available. Marr v. Fields, No. 1:07-cv-4942008, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24993, at *5–7 (W.D. Mich. Mar. 27, 2008) (unpublished); Flory v. Claussen, No. C06-1046-RSL-JPD, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 85705, at *4 (W.D. Wash. Nov. 21, 2006) (holding that prisoner's efforts to exhaust with the wrong entity deemed to be proper exhaustion where prison policy was unclear and prisoner relied on defendants' advice).

260. Rules limiting prisoners to a certain number of grievances may make the remedy unavailable for prisoners who are over the limit. Rhodan v. Schofield, No. 1:04-CV-2158-TWT, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44593, at *19–20 (N.D. Ga. June 19, 2007) (unpublished) (holding prisoner who said he was told he could not have two grievances pending at once raised a factual issue as to availability of remedies); Wood v. Idaho Dept. of Corr., No. CV-04-99-C-BLW, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14711, at *21 (D. Idaho Mar. 16, 2006) (unpublished) (holding that a prisoner whose grievance was returned because he was only allowed to have three pending at one time had exhausted).

261. Dawson v. Norwood, No. 1:06-cv-914, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 82205, at *9 (W.D. Mich. Nov. 6, 2007) (unpublished) (holding that a prisoner placed on modified access to the grievance procedure, who then attempts to file a grievance later deemed to be non-meritorious, has exhausted his 'available' administrative remedies as required by § 1997e(a)). A rule requiring prisoners on modified grievance status to submit a notarized affidavit with a grievance may make the remedy unavailable if the prisoner cannot get access to a notary. Thomas v. Guffy, No. CIV-07-823-W, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 56901, at *7 (W.D. Okla. July 25, 2008) (unpublished).

262. Howard v. Hill, 156 F. App'x 886, 886 (9th Cir. Nov. 21, 2005) (unpublished) (holding that a prisoner who had been told he would not receive responses to his grievances had no remedy available); Baylis v. Taylor, 475 F. Supp. 2d 484, 488 (D. Del. 2007) (holding officials' withdrawal of plaintiff's grievances because of litigation meant that he had exhausted, since no further remedies were available).

263. Smith v. Westchester County Dept. of Corr., No. 07 Civ. 1803(SAS), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11049, at *10 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 7, 2008) (unpublished) (remedies were unavailable if supervisors refused to accept plaintiff's grievance); Collins v. Goord, 438 F. Supp. 2d 399, 415 (S.D.N.Y. 2006) (holding allegations that facility personnel invented a screening procedure and did not allow him to file his grievance raised a material issue under "an exception to the PLRA's exhaustion requirement where prison authorities actively obstruct an inmate's ability to 'properly' file a prison grievance).

264. Pavey v. Conley, 170 F. App'x 4, 9 (7th Cir. Mar. 3, 2006) (unpublished) (holding that isolating and failing to assist a prisoner who couldn't write could render the remedy unavailable); Warren v. Purcell, No. 03 Civ. 8736(GEL), 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17792, at *20 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 3, 2004) (unpublished) (holding "baffling" grievance response that left prisoner with no clue what to do next barred defendants from claiming the non-exhaustion defense).

unexplained.[265] However, courts are unlikely to be persuaded by vague claims of obstruction, unless clearly supported by facts.[266] In complaints where a prisoner alleges that he was denied necessary grievance forms, though, many courts have refused to dismiss because of non-exhaustion of remedies.[267] Still, courts are suspicious of such claims. Courts may dismiss if the claim is not supported by facts, if there is no evidence that the prisoner tried to get the forms,[268] or if the prisoner filed other grievances around the same time.[269]

A remedy is unavailable, and you cannot be penalized for not exhausting that remedy, if officials failed to tell you that the remedy or rules exist.[270] If you were misinformed about the availability or operation of a remedy by a prison official, that may make the remedy unavailable as well.[271] Some courts have denied dismissal of claims for non-exhaustion of remedies where a prisoner relied on a statement by a prison official that his issue was not grievable.[272] However, if a prisoner had some way to know about the remedy (for example, like in an inmate handbook), the prisoner cannot claim he did not know the remedy existed.[273]

---

265. Dole v. Chandler, 438 F.3d 804, 809, 812 (7th Cir. 2006) (holding prisoner whose properly filed grievance simply vanished, and who received no instructions about what else to do, did "all that was reasonable to exhaust").

266. See, e.g., Stine v. Wiley, No. CIVA 06CV-02105-BNB, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2113, at *3–4 (D. Colo. Jan. 10, 2007) (unpublished) (requiring further information regarding complainant's failure to exhaust administrative remedies); Djukic v. Arpaio, No. CV 05-4042-PHX-MHM (MEA), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 72239, at *6–7 (D. Ariz. Sept. 26, 2006) (unpublished) (dismissing for lack of evidence that the grievance system was unavailable).

267. Pavey v. Conley, 170 Fed. App'x. 4, 9 (7th Cir. 2006) (denying dismissal where plaintiff, who could not write, reasonably relied on assurances that his oral complaint would be investigated); Dale v. Lappin, 376 F.3d 652, 654–56 (7th Cir. 2004) (per curiam) (not dismissing for failure to exhaust when prison officials "made administrative remedies so unavailable as to deprive Dale of his rightful access to the grievance process."); Mitchell v. Horn, 318 F.3d 523, 529 (3d Cir. 2003) (noting that a claim was improperly dismissed where allegations that the plaintiff was denied grievance forms had not been considered); Miller v. Norris, 247 F.3d 736, 740 (8th Cir. 2001) (holding that a remedy is unavailable if a prisoner is prevented from using it).

268. See, e.g., Beasley v. Kontek, No. 3:05CV7262, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96302, at *4 (N.D. Ohio Nov. 5, 2007) (unpublished) ("A prisoner may not be excused from exhausting internal remedies if his failure resulted from a form not being provided to him, unless he alleges that there was no other source for the form or that he can prove that he made other attempts to 'obtain a form or file a grievance.'"), quoting Jones v. Smith, 266 F.3d 399, 400 (6th Cir.2001).

269. See, e.g., Guel v. Larkin, No. 06-5091, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 37145, at *13–14 (W.D. Ark. May 6, 2008) (unpublished) (rejecting a denial of form defense when the complainant filed separate grievances one and two days after the incident in question).

270. Goebert v. Lee County, 510 F.3d 1312, 1322–23 (11th Cir. 2007) (holding that an appeal procedure not described in the inmate handbook but only in the operating procedures the inmates did not have access to, was not an available remedy); Westefer v. Snyder, 422 F.3d 570, 580 (7th Cir. 2005) (holding that defendants did not show remedies were available where there was no "clear route" for challenging certain decisions); Jackson v. Ivens, 244 F. App'x 508, 514 (3d Cir. 2007) (unpublished) (denying an exhaustion defense when claimant failed to comply with "unwritten or 'implied' requirements."), citing Spruill v. Gillis, 372 F.3d 218, 234 (3d Cir. 2004).

271. Pavey v. Conley, 170 F. Appx. 4, 8–9 (7th Cir. 2006) (holding that plaintiff, who could not write, reasonably relied on assurances that his oral complaint would be investigated; "inmates may rely on the assurances of prison officials when they are led to believe that satisfactory steps have been taken to exhaust administrative remedies .... [P]rison officials will be bound by their oral representations to inmates concerning compliance with the grievance process"); Brown v. Croak, 312 F.3d 109, 112–13 (3d Cir. 2002) (holding that if security officials told the plaintiff to wait for completion of an investigation before grieving, and then never informed him of its completion, the grievance system was unavailable to him).

272. Flory v. Claussen, No. C06-1046-RSL-JPD, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 85705, at *4 (W.D. Wash. Nov. 21, 2006) (prisoner's efforts to exhaust with the wrong entity deemed to be proper exhaustion where prison policy was unclear and prisoner relied on defendants' advice); Lane v. Doan, 287 F. Supp. 2d 210, 212 (W.D.N.Y. 2003) (holding that exhaustion is excused where the plaintiff is led to believe the complaint is not a grievance matter or would otherwise be investigated, or that administrative remedies are unavailable). But see Gibson v. Weber, 431 F.3d 339, 341 (8th Cir. 2005) (holding that even if prison personnel "made it clear" that prisoners should make medical complaints informally to medical personnel, this did not excuse the prisoners from failing to exhaust a grievance procedure they admitted having been informed of); Singh v. Goord, 520 F. Supp. 2d 487, 496 (S.D.N.Y. 2007) (denying plaintiff's claim that the designation of a particular staff member to deal with his concerns established an "'idiosyncratic' grievance system" that excused non-exhaustion when plaintiff was not instructed otherwise).

273. Gibson v. Weber, 431 F.3d 339, 341 (8th Cir. 2005) (holding that prisoners who admitted receiving a guidebook that explained a grievance procedure were not excused from following the procedure even if prison personnel had "made it clear" that they should instead voice complaints informally to medical personnel); Boyd v. Corr. Corp. of Am., 380 F.3d 989, 999 (6th Cir. 2004) (rejecting a plaintiff's argument that he was unaware of the appropriate grievance procedure when it was set forth in the inmate handbook).

Prison officials' statements that do not directly misrepresent the operation of the grievance system generally are not held to excuse the failure to exhaust, even if a prisoner relies on them.[274]

If there is some reason outside your control that you cannot exhaust in a timely and procedurally correct manner, you might think this means that the remedy is not available to you and you therefore do not have to exhaust. Do not assume this. A number of courts have held, for example, that if prisoners are prevented from filing grievances at the correct time, they must file them whenever they can, even if the grievances will be denied for not being on time.[275] This might not make sense under the "proper exhaustion" rule, but courts do it anyway, so do not fall into the trap. Some courts have held that if your grievance or appeal just "disappears," it's not enough just to say that when you go to court; you must take some action to follow up on the grievance that has gone missing.[276] One federal appeals court has recently held that if the failure to exhaust was "innocent," the prisoner "must be given another chance to exhaust (provided that remedies exist that prison authorities will permit him to exhaust)."[277]

Courts will be very skeptical of a claim that you have exhausted your remedies or of a claim that you were not informed or were misinformed about the grievance process when there is no evidence that you have exhausted your remedies or that you were misinformed.[278] You are therefore best advised to do everything you can to exhaust even if you know the effort is going to fail—and keep records so you can prove you tried. For example, if prison staff refuses to provide you with grievance forms, write your grievance on a sheet of paper, explain that you cannot get the forms, and appeal if they reject the grievance for not being on the right form.[279] If prison staff tells you that you do not need to file a grievance, file a grievance anyway; if they tell you that the issue is not "grievable"—that is, if the grievance system is not available to you for that issue—file the grievance anyway, so that you will get a decision in writing telling you that it isn't grievable.[280] If they refuse to accept your grievance, write to the Warden or Superintendent, tell him or her that you were not allowed to file your grievance, and ask that it either be investigated as a non-grievance complaint or treated as a grievance in case you were misinformed by the lower-level staff. You should also file a grievance about a refusal to accept your grievance. It is extremely important to keep copies of everything that you file so that you can later prove that you did in fact file those documents.

---

274. Overton v. Davis, 460 F. Supp. 2d 1008, 1009–10 (S.D. Iowa 2006) (holding that a Grievance Officer's declaration that a matter was non-grievable did not excuse failure to exhaust the grievance process); Lyon v. Vande Krol, 305 F.3d 806, 809 (8th Cir. 2002) (holding that warden's statement that a decision about religious matters rested in the hands of "Jewish experts" did not excuse non-exhaustion, but was at most a prediction that the plaintiff would lose; courts will not consider prisoners' subjective beliefs in determining whether procedures are "available"); Jackson v. District of Columbia, 254 F.3d 262, 269–70 (D.C. Cir. 2001) (holding that a plaintiff who complained to three prison officials and was told by the warden to "file it in the court" had not exhausted).

275. For more information about time limits, see Part E(6) of this Chapter.

276. Boyer v. Farlin, No. 04-1042, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 88940, at *10–12 (C.D. Ill. Dec. 8, 2006) (holding that a prisoner didn't exhaust because he failed to explain why he didn't take any action for two months when he didn't receive a notice that his appeal had been received). However, the Seventh Circuit has held that a remedy becomes "unavailable" if prison employees take unfair advantage of the exhaustion requirement by not responding to a grievance or otherwise preventing a prisoner from exhausting. Dole v. Chandler, 438 F.3d 804, 809, 812 (7th Cir. 2006).

277. Pavey v. Conley, 544 F.3d 739, 742 (7th Cir. 2008).

278. See Gaughan v. U.S. Bureau of Prisons, No. 02-C-0740, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23297, at *3–5 (N.D. Ill. Dec 30, 2003) (unpublished) (rejecting claim that prisoner had exhausted but defendants had not made a record of it); Thomas v. N.Y. State Dept. of Corr. Servs., No. 00 Civ. 7163 (NRB), 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20286, at *13 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 10, 2003) (unpublished) (dismissing case for failure to exhaust remedies where prison staff told the prisoner a grievance was unnecessary, but did not tell him he could not file a grievance).

279. Kendall v. Kittles, No. 03 Civ. 628 (GEL), 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16129, at *10–13 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 15, 2003) (unpublished) (declining to dismiss where prisoner said he could not get grievance forms; the fact that he filed grievances at other times showed only that forms were available on the dates those grievances were filed, and not that such forms were always available). This is not an issue in the New York State grievance system. The directive states that if forms are not available, the grievance can be submitted on plain paper. See State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040 § 701.5(a)(1), Inmate Grievance Program (2003) (as revised July 1, 2006); N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(a)(1) (2009). The New York City grievance directive does not address this issue.

280. Some courts have refused to accept prisoners' statements that an unidentified person told them that their issues were not grievable. See, e.g., Perez v. Arpaio, No. CV 06-0038-PHX-SMM (ECV), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86559, at *5–6 (D. Ariz. Nov. 21, 2006) (unpublished).

4. What Must You Put in Your Grievance or Administrative Appeal?

Exhausting requires you to raise all of the issues that you intend to raise in a lawsuit. Issues you do not include in your grievance or appeal cannot be litigated.[281] Sometimes you have to use more than one remedy to exhaust all your issues.[282]

How specific and detailed must you be in a grievance or appeal to satisfy the exhaustion requirement? The Supreme Court recently held that courts could not require prisoners to have named all the defendants in their grievances that they later named in their court complaints if the grievance system itself did not have such a requirement.[283] The Court said: "The level of detail necessary in a grievance to comply with the grievance procedures will vary from system to system and claim to claim, but it is the prison's requirements, and not the PLRA, that define the boundaries of proper exhaustion."[284] So if the prison does require you to name the responsible employees in a grievance, you have to do it to the extent that you have the information.

Currently, most grievance systems do not have such specific requirements. Either they say nothing about the level of detail required in grievances, or the requirement is very general.[285] One court has said that if the policy does not have more specific requirements, a "grievance suffices if it alerts the prison to the nature of the wrong for which redress is sought. As in a notice-pleading system, the grievant need not lay out the facts, articulate legal theories, or demand particular relief. All the grievance need do is object intelligibly to some asserted shortcoming."[286] This makes sense because the purpose of the PLRA exhaustion requirement is to give prison officials time and opportunity to resolve problems before they turn into lawsuits.[287] An example of a grievance that meets the "object intelligibly" standard (though just barely) is found in a sexual assault case where the prisoner said only: "[T]he administration don't do there [sic] job. [A sexual assault] should've never happen [sic] again," and requested that the assailant be criminally prosecuted.[288]

Even courts that do not cite the "object intelligibly" standard have generally not required grievances to be very specific or detailed,[289] and have not accepted prison officials' overly technical arguments that grievances were inadequate.[290] They have held grievances inadequate, at least in part, when they were so

---

281. Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 218–19, 127 S. Ct. 910, 923, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 816 (2007); see Johnson v. Johnson, 385 F.3d 503, 517–19 (5th Cir. 2004) (holding a prisoner who complained of sexual assault and referred to his sexual orientation in his grievance, but said nothing about his race, did not exhaust his racial discrimination claim).

282. This is most often the case in connection with disciplinary proceedings.

283. Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 211; 127 S. Ct. 910, 919; 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 811 (2007).

284. Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 218-19, 127 S. Ct. 910, 923; 166 L. Ed. 798, 815 (2007).

285. For example, the New York State grievance system requires only that prisoners include a "concise, specific description of the problem and the action requested and indicate what actions the grievant has taken to resolve the complaint, i.e., specific persons/areas contacted and responses received." State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, at § 701.5(a)(2) (July 1, 2006); N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(a)(2) (2008).

286. Strong v. David, 297 F.3d 646, 650 (7th Cir. 2002); accord Kikumura v. Osagie, 461 F.3d 1269, 1283 (10th Cir. 2006); Johnson v. Testman, 380 F.3d 691, 697 (2d Cir. 2004).

287. Johnson v. Testman, 380 F.3d 691, 697 (2d Cir. 2004).

288. Riccardo v. Rausch, 375 F.3d 521, 524 (7th Cir. 2004); see Westefer v. Snyder, 422 F.3d 570, 580–81 (7th Cir. 2005) (holding that plaintiffs sufficiently exhausted complaints about transfers to a high-security prison by listing "Transfer from Tamms" as a requested remedy, or by expressing concern about not being given a reason for the transfer, in grievances about the conditions at that prison).

289. See, e.g., McAlphin v. Toney, 375 F.3d 753, 755 (8th Cir. 2004) (per curiam) (treating claim that two defendants failed to treat plaintiff's dental grievances as emergency matters and others refused to escort him to the infirmary for emergency treatment as a single exhausted claim of denial of emergency dental treatment); Kikumura v. Hurley, 242 F.3d 950, 956 (10th Cir. 2001) (holding complaint sufficient to meet the exhaustion requirement where the plaintiff complained that he was denied Christian pastoral visits, though the defendants said his claim should be dismissed because he had not stated in the grievance process that his religious beliefs include elements of both the Buddhist and Christian religions); Carter v. Symmes, No. 06-10273-PBS, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7680, at *9 (D.Mass. Feb. 4, 2008) (unpublished) (adopting administrative law rule that "claims not enumerated in an initial grievance are allowed notwithstanding the exhaustion requirement if they 'are like or reasonably related to the substance of charges timely brought before [the agency]'").

290. See, e.g., Johnson v. Johnson, 385 F.3d 503, 517–18 (5th Cir. 2004) (agreeing legal theories need not be presented in grievances); Burton v. Jones, 321 F.3d 569, 575 (6th Cir. 2003) (holding grievance need not "allege a specific legal theory or facts that correspond to all the required elements of a particular legal theory").

vague that prison officials could not reasonably have been expected to understand what the prisoner was complaining about.[291]

There are exceptions. Some courts have required much greater detail and specificity in grievances even if the policy did not require it. For example, one recent decision said it was not sufficient for the prisoner to have claimed that he was denied treatment for his injured finger at every prison he had been at. The court said he should have told them he was denied access to an orthopedic surgeon around a particular date, then transferred two months later and denied medical care.[292] In particular, a number of courts have held grievances inadequate because they failed to specifically mention claims of denial of First Amendment rights,[293] unlawful retaliation,[294] discrimination contrary to the Equal Protection Clause,[295] or conspiracy that they later asserted in their lawsuits, even if they stated the underlying facts in their grievances.[296] It is difficult to explain these decisions in light of the rule that prisoners do not have to plead legal theories in their grievances. To be safe, you might want to outline your legal theory in your grievance.

If the grievance system actually investigates and addresses your complaint on the merits, rather than throwing it out for not being specific or detailed enough, you should be deemed to have exhausted, even if the defendants' lawyers later claim that you should have said more in the grievance.[297]

You can expect prison officials to attack your grievance as inadequate. Here are some things you can do to protect yourself. If your grievance system requires you to name all the individuals involved, you will not necessarily know who they all are. Make it clear in your grievance that you do not know their names. For example, if you were beaten by several officers while others looked on, you might write in your grievance that, "Officers Smith and Jones beat me, along with the other officers present who beat me or who stood by and did not intervene to stop the beating, and whose names I do not know." If you think there is a practice of beating prisoners that higher-ups in the prison are responsible for, you might add something like: "Sergeant Black, Lieutenant White, Deputy Superintendent Green and Superintendent Red, and any other supervisors unknown to me who fail to train and supervise the security staff and keep them from using excessive and unnecessary force." Or, if you are denied a book you have ordered by the mail room officer who tells you only "it's not allowed," your grievance might say it was against "Officer Jones in the mail room, and any other person unknown to me who made the policy (if any) resulting in this book being denied to me, or if there is no such policy, the supervisor of the mail room operation, unknown to me, who allows mail room staff to deny books to prisoners in the absence of a policy permitting such denial."

---

291. See, e.g., Beltran v. O'Mara, 405 F. Supp. 2d 140, 152 (D.N.H. 2005) (holding that allegations the plaintiff was "being punished for no reason" and isolated from other prisoners were "too vague" to allow officials to make any response); Aguirre v. Feinerman, No. 3:02 cv 60 JPG, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45520, at *20 (S.D. Ill. May 10, 2005) (unpublished) (holding that a grievance that specifically mentioned physical therapy, but mentioned other medical care only generally, did not exhaust a claim concerning failure to diagnose the plaintiff's congestive heart failure; "While specifically identifying the ailment would not be required, there must be some indication as to what medical issues the plaintiff was complaining about.").

292. Davis v. Knowles, No. CIV S-04-0821 LKK KJM P, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6159, at *7–8 (E.D. Cal. Jan. 25, 2007) (unpublished), aff'd, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28294 (E.D. Cal. Apr. 16, 2007).

293. See Dye v. Kingston, 130 F. App'x 52, 56 (7th Cir. 2005) (unpublished) (holding that a prisoner who complained in his grievance of missing property items, including his Bibles, failed to exhaust his 1st Amendment claim by failing to state that the Bibles' loss was "infringing on his religious practice").

294. See, e.g., Griffin v. Miner, No. 1:06 CV 1889, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 79764, at *2–3 (N.D. Ohio Oct. 31, 2006) (unpublished) (plaintiff, who did not mention his retaliation theory in his grievance, did not exhaust with respect to retaliation).

295. Johnson v. Johnson, 385 F.3d 503, 518 (5th Cir. 2004) (holding that a prisoner who complained of sexual assault, made repeated reference to his sexual orientation, but said nothing about his race had exhausted his sexual orientation discrimination claim but not his racial discrimination claim).

296. Brownell v. Krom, 446 F.3d 305, 310–11 (2d Cir. 2006) (holding grievance inadequate for failing to mention allegation that loss of property was intentional); Lindell v. Frank, Slip Op., No. 05-C-003-C, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21300, at *4 (W.D. Wis. Sep 23, 2005) (unpublished) (holding failure to mention conspiracy allegations in grievance appeal meant that claim was not exhausted). But see Kitchen-Bey v. Hoskins, No. 2:06-cv-251, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 84090, at *4 (W.D. Mich. Nov. 20, 2006) (unpublished) (declining to dismiss because plaintiff had not mentioned conspiracy in his grievance).

297. See, e.g., Freeman v. Salopek, No. 2:06-cv-496-FtM-34SPC, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21452, at *10 (M.D. Fla. Mar. 19, 2008) (unpublished) (rejecting claim that grievance was "undated, unclear, and vague" where final decisionmaker gave response addressing the precise issue raised in the grievance); Carter v. Symmes, No. 06-10273-PBS, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7680, at *8 (D. Mass. Feb. 4, 2008) (unpublished) (issue not raised in the grievance, but spelled out in a timely letter from counsel, and actually investigated by defendants, was exhausted).

Even if your prison's grievance policy does not require the naming of all involved individuals, you are well advised to think about the different events and policies that are or might be involved in the problem you are grieving, and mention them. For instance, in the use of force example above, if the grievance policy requires only a "concise, specific statement of the problem," you might say: "I was beaten without justification by Officers Smith and Jones and others, while other officers stood by and did not intervene, and I am also complaining about the lack of training and supervision that allows security staff to use excessive and unnecessary force and get away with it."[298] In the book seizure example, you might say: "I was denied the book A Time to Die about the 1971 Attica disturbance, and I am also complaining about the policies and practices that allow the denial to prisoners of books without good reason and without clear written criteria and procedures." (Or, if they do have clear criteria and procedures that you may wish to challenge, mention those in the grievance too.)

Similarly, if you get more information about a problem after you have filed a grievance about it (or more information about the people responsible, if the system requires that), you should consider filing a separate grievance reflecting the new information.[299] If you discover new information after the grievance deadline has passed, explain that you couldn't file it within the deadline because you didn't have the information. For example, if you file a grievance stating that you have been denied certain medical care by the prison's medical director, and then later on you learn that your care was denied by a "utilization review" process in the prison system's central office, you might wish to file and exhaust a new grievance about the utilization review decision. Courts have disagreed about whether such grievances are effective to exhaust, but it is the best way to protect yourself when you learn new information after filing an initial grievance.[300]

Prison officials and their lawyers have strong incentives to try to get cases thrown out for non-exhaustion rather than have to face the merits. So, you should do your best to make your grievance reflect all aspects of the problem that you may wish to bring suit about, so the judge will see that you did your best to bring everything to prison officials' attention before suing.

5. What If You Make a Mistake Trying to Exhaust?

Prisoners not only must exhaust, they must do it correctly. The Supreme Court has held that "the PLRA exhaustion requirement requires proper exhaustion," which "demands compliance with an agency's deadlines and other critical procedural rules because no adjudicative system can function effectively without imposing some orderly structure on the course of its proceedings."[301] If your administrative complaint is rejected because you did not follow the procedures, your lawsuit will be barred because of non-exhaustion.[302]

This does not mean that you should just give up if you fail to follow a procedural rule. You should pursue your grievance, request that your error be excused or that you be permitted to re-file your grievance and start over, and explain any circumstances that might have caused you to make a mistake. Sometimes

---

298. See Kozohorsky v. Harmon, 332 F.3d 1141, 1143 (8th Cir. 2003) (holding a grievance complaining of excessive force by line staff did not exhaust plaintiff's claim that a supervisor failed to supervise and take action against them).

299. If the grievance system contains a "name all responsible persons" rule, courts might require new grievances reflecting newly identified defendants or other information. In Brownell v. Krom, 446 F.3d 305, 312 (2d Cir. 2006), the court rejected the argument that the plaintiff should have filed a new grievance reflecting new information, but only because the system did not seem to provide for supplementing or re-filing existing grievances to reflect new information.

300. Compare Sullivan v. Caruso, No. 1:07cv367, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9090 (W.D. Mich. Feb. 7, 2008) (unpublished) (holding defendants improperly rejected a grievance as duplicative where it named a defendant not named in a previous grievance) with Laster v. Pramstaller, No. 06-13508, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11435 (E.D. Mich. Feb. 15, 2008) (unpublished) (holding that a grievance naming a defendant that is dismissed because it duplicates an earlier grievance that did not name that defendant fails to exhaust).

In Dunbar v. Jones, No. 1:05-CV-1594, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 49278, at *21–22 (M.D. Pa. July 9, 2007) (unpublished), the court rejected the argument that the plaintiff should have amended his grievance to name a defendant whose identity he did not initially know, since the rules did not provide for such amended grievances, but dismissed the claim against that defendant because the plaintiff didn't add her name in his grievance appeals—without citing anything in the grievance policy that permits adding new material in grievance appeals. Another district court accepted the argument that the plaintiff was obliged to file a late and duplicative grievance upon learning who was responsible for the action he complained of, without any discussion of whether the rules provided for such a grievance. Fulgham v. Snyder, No. 2:07-CV-88, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22590 (W.D. Mich. Mar. 21, 2008) (unpublished).

301. Woodford v. Ngo, 548 U.S. 81, 90–91, 126 S. Ct. 2378, 2386, 165 L. Ed. 2d 368, 387 (2006); see also Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 217–19, 127 S. Ct. 910, 922–23, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 815 (2007) ("Compliance with prison grievance procedures ... is all that is required by the PLRA to properly exhaust.").

302. Woodford v. Ngo, 548 U.S. 81, 126 S. Ct. 2378, 165 L. Ed. 2d 368 (2006).

grievance systems allow correction and re-filing (in fact, sometimes they instruct prisoners to do so[303]). Also, grievance systems sometimes overlook procedural mistakes, and courts have held that if prison officials decide the merits of a grievance rather than reject it for procedural noncompliance, they cannot later claim non-exhaustion based on a procedural flaw that they let go earlier.[304] Courts have disagreed over whether a grievance is exhausted if it is rejected both on the merits and for procedural reasons.[305] Since the purpose of the "proper exhaustion" rule is to preserve the system's ability to "function effectively,"[306] it would seem that a decision on the merits is a good indication that the system has functioned effectively, and dismissal serves no useful purpose. You should argue this if the issue arises in your case. In any event, the harder you have tried to exhaust, the more likely the court is to rule in your favor in a close case.

There is also a potential trap in the proper exhaustion rule. Sometimes you might not able to follow the rules for reasons outside your control—for example, you miss a deadline because you are out of the institution and have no access to the grievance process. You might think that such circumstances mean that the administrative remedy was not available for you. However, a number of courts have held that prisoners who are prevented from exhausting properly must try to exhaust improperly—for example, if they cannot file a timely grievance, they should file a late grievance when they can, or else their cases could be dismissed for non-exhaustion. Therefore, you should protect yourself against such a dismissal by filing and pursuing the late or otherwise improper grievance.

It is unclear exactly how necessary proper exhaustion is in all cases. The Supreme Court said it was not ruling on the possibility that prisons might "create procedural requirements for the purpose of tripping up all but the most skillful prisoners," since the case did not present that situation.[307] Several post-Woodford decisions have cited that statement in holding that prisoners who didn't fully comply with procedural requirements, but who were arguably "tripped up" by them, should not have their cases dismissed for non-exhaustion.[308] In Woodford, the Supreme Court also said that it was relying on exhaustion law from administrative law and habeas corpus. Justice Breyer, in a concurring opinion, observed that administrative law "contains well established exceptions to exhaustion," and so does habeas corpus.[309] Several decisions have cited these observations in allowing claims to go forward despite failures to exhaust in complete compliance with grievance rules.[310]

---

303. If they do, you should follow the directions even if you disagree with them.

304. See, e.g., Gates v. Cook, 376 F.3d 323, 331 n.6 (5th Cir. 2004) (noting that the plaintiff sent a form to the Commissioner rather than the Legal Adjudicator but defendants did not reject it for noncompliance; in addition, the grievance was submitted by the prisoner's lawyer and not by the prisoner, as the rules specify); Spruill v. Gillis, 372 F.3d 218, 234 (3d Cir. 2004).

305. Compare Cobb v. Berghuis, No. 1:06-CV-773, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 93890, at *3–4 (W.D. Mich. Dec. 21, 2007) (unpublished) (holding that a grievance rejected for both reasons does not exhaust) with McCarroll v. Sigman, No. 1:07-cv-513, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17254, at *10 (W.D. Mich. Mar. 6, 2008) (unpublished) (finding exhaustion on those facts), reconsideration granted on other grounds, No. 1:07-CV-513, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38710 (W.D. Mich. May 13, 2008) (unpublished).

306. Woodford v. Ngo, 548 U.S. 81, 90, 126 S. Ct. 2378, 2386, 165 L. Ed. 2d 368, 387 (2006).

307. Woodford v. Ngo, 548 U.S. 81, 102, 126 S. Ct. 2378, 2392, 165 L. Ed. 2d 368, 385 (2006). This is a concern that has been expressed by other courts. See, e.g., Hooks v. Rich, No. CV 605-065, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12951, at *18–19 (S.D. Ga. Jan. 17, 2006) (unpublished) ("The exhaustion requirement is a gatekeeper, not a 'gotcha' meant to trap unsophisticated prisoners who must navigate the administrative process pro se."); Campbell v. Chaves, 402 F. Supp. 2d 1101, 1106 n.3 (D. Ariz. 2005) (voicing concern that grievance systems might become "a series of stalling tactics, and dead-ends without resolution").

308. Timberlake v. Buss, No. 1:06-cv-1859-RLY-WTL, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32306, at *8 (S.D. Ind. May 1, 2007) (unpublished) (declining to dismiss challenge to execution protocols where they were not disclosed to plaintiff and he had no reason to have known about them), vacated as moot, No. 07-1086, No. 07-3228, 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 28412 (7th Cir. 2007) (unpublished); Lampkins v. Roberts, No. 1:06-cv-639-DFH-TAB, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22695, at *7 (S.D. Ind. Mar. 27, 2007) (unpublished) (declining to dismiss for missing a five-day deadline that was not shown to have been made known to prisoners).

309. Woodford v. Ngo, 548 U.S. 81, 103–104, 126 S. Ct. 2378, 2393, 165 L. Ed. 2d 368, 386 (2006) (Breyer, J., concurring in judgment). Justice Breyer's assertions are contrary at least in part to the Court's earlier observation in Booth v. Churner that the PLRA rendered inapplicable "traditional doctrines of administrative exhaustion, under which a litigant need not apply to an agency that has 'no power to decree ... relief,' or need not exhaust where doing so would otherwise be futile." Booth v. Churner, 532 U.S. 731, 741 n.6, 121 S. Ct. 1819, 1825 n.6, 149 L. Ed. 2d 958, 967 n.6 (2001). On the other hand, the Woodford majority's assertion that exhaustion means the same thing under the PLRA that it does in administrative law appears equally inconsistent with the Booth observation.

310. Parker v. Robinson, No. 04-214-B-W, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 64107, at *33–34 (D. Me. Oct. 10, 2006)

Before the Woodford decision, the Second Circuit had set out circumstances under which failure to exhaust according to prison procedures would not bar litigation:

> First, the court must ask: whether administrative remedies were in fact "available" to the prisoner. [Second], [t]he court should also inquire ... whether the defendants' own actions inhibiting the inmate's exhaustion of remedies may estop one or more of the defendants from raising the plaintiff's failure to exhaust as a defense. [Third], [i]f the court finds that administrative remedies were available to the plaintiff, and that the defendants are not estopped and have not forfeited their non-exhaustion defense, but that the plaintiff nevertheless did not exhaust available remedies, the court should consider whether special circumstances have been plausibly alleged that justify the prisoner's failure to comply with administrative procedural requirements ... . What constitutes justification in the PLRA context "must be determined by looking at the circumstances which might understandably lead usually uncounselled prisoners to fail to grieve in the normally required way."[311]

The Second Circuit analysis probably remains good law, even after Woodford. The first district court to address the question stated that Woodford left "open the question of whether exhaustion applies in situations such as those identified in Hemphill ...."[312] Other courts have also adopted the Hemphill framework for determining when prison officials' threats or intimidation make remedies "unavailable" after the Woodford decision.[313] Another recent New York decision applying the Second Circuit "special circumstances" rule also distinguished Woodford on the ground that the prisoner had not "bypass[ed] prison grievance procedures" or "attempt[ed] to circumvent the exhaustion requirements."[314] Rather, the prisoner had tried hard and in multiple ways to bring his complaint to the attention of responsible officials.[315]

The Second Circuit has yet to authoritatively resolve this issue,[316] but it has held that after Woodford, it is not enough that a prisoner's informal complaints gave prison officials enough notice to investigate a problem. It stated that the PLRA requires both "substantive exhaustion" (notice to officials) and "procedural exhaustion" (following the rules).[317] The court did not address its earlier decision that a prisoner's (unpublished) (refusing to dismiss where the prisoner sent his appeal to the Commissioner who was supposed to decide it, not the person who was supposed to forward it to the Commissioner under the rules); Collins v. Goord, 438 F. Supp. 2d 399, 411 n.13 (S.D.N.Y. 2006) (unpublished) (applying Breyer's Woodford concurrence to state that district courts should consider "'any challenges that [the prisoner' may have concerning whether his case falls into a traditional exception that the [PLRA] implicitly incorporates"') (quoting Woodford v. Ngo, 548 U.S. 81, 104, 126 S. Ct. 2378, 2393, 165 L. Ed. 2d 368, 386 (2006) (Breyer, J., concurring in judgment).

---

311. Brownell v. Krom, 446 F.3d 305, 311 (2d Cir. 2006) (quoting Hemphill v. New York, 380 F.3d 680, 686 (2d Cir. 2004)).

312. Collins v. Goord, 438 F. Supp. 2d 399, 411 n.13 (S.D.N.Y. 2006); Bester v. Dixion, No. 9:03-CV-1041, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21714, at *10–11 (N.D.N.Y. Mar. 27, 2007) (unpublished) (considering whether prisoner was relieved of exhaustion requirements under a Hemphill analysis).

313. Turner v. Burnside, 541 F.3d 1077, 1084–85 (11th Cir. 2008) (stating "it is possible for retaliation or the threat of retaliation to make administrative remedies unavailable to an inmate"); Kaba v. Stepp, 458 F.3d 678, 684–86 (7th Cir. 2006) (holding that a remedy becomes unavailable if prison employees do not respond to a properly filed grievance or otherwise use affirmative misconduct to prevent a prisoner from exhausting).

314. Hairston v. LaMarche, No. 05 Civ. 6642 (KMW) (AJP), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 55436, at *30, 40 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 10, 2006) (unpublished).

315. Hairston v. LaMarche, No. 05 Civ. 6642 (KMW) (AJP), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 55436, at *30, (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 10, 2006) (unpublished) ("[A]lthough each of his efforts, alone, may not have fully complied, together his efforts sufficiently informed prison officials of his grievance and led to a thorough investigation of the grievance as to satisfy the purpose of the PLRA or to constitute 'special circumstances' [to] justify any failure to fully comply with DOCS' exhaustion requirements.").

316 See Reynoso v. Swezey, 238 F. App'x 660, 662 (2d Cir. June 25, 2007) (unpublished), cert. denied, 128 S. Ct. 1278 (2008) (declining to consider effect of Woodford on circuit precedent where plaintiff could not prevail under that precedent anyway).

317. Macias v. Zenk, 495 F.3d 37, 43–44 (2d Cir. 2007) ("after Woodford notice alone is insufficient").

reasonable interpretation of confusing grievance rules may justify the failure to follow procedural rules correctly.[318]

More specific questions remaining after Woodford include the following:

(1) What if procedural requirements are not clear? Before Woodford, courts (including the Second Circuit) held that a prisoner who acted reasonably when the rules were not clear presented special circumstances justifying his failure to exhaust properly, even if he turned out to be wrong and other courts agreed.[319] So far, courts have continued to hold that prisoners' cases cannot be dismissed for non-exhaustion where it was unclear what they had to do to exhaust, either because the rules were not clear,[320] or because the actions or instructions of officials (often in violation of their own rules) created confusion in a particular case,[321] or both[322] (though some courts have ruled against prisoners in situations where they simply guessed wrong in a confusing situation).[323] There are situations where the prisoner lacks sufficient knowledge of the facts to comply with the grievance rules.[324] In some cases an unsettled legal situation concerning the exhaustion requirement itself has been held to constitute special circumstances justifying failure to exhaust correctly.[325]

(2) What if you are misled or prison officials obstruct your exhaustion efforts? Numerous cases hold that non-exhaustion caused by such actions by prison staff do not bar the prisoner from proceeding with a subsequent lawsuit. Woodford did not address the question, and there is no good reason to think it this body of law has been disturbed by Woodford.

(3) What if you are threatened or intimidated by prison staff into not following the grievance procedure? The Second Circuit has held that threats or other intimidating conduct may make the usual grievance remedy unavailable to a prisoner, may prevent the defendants from asserting the exhaustion defense, or may constitute justification for not exhausting or not exhausting consistently

---

318. Macias v. Zenk, 495 F.3d 37, 43 n.1 (2d Cir. 2007) (citing Hemphill v. New York, 380 F.3d 680, 690 (2d Cir. 2004)).

319. Giano v. Goord, 380 F.3d 670, 679 (2d Cir. 2004) (stating that prison rules "do not differentiate clearly between grievable matters relating to disciplinary proceedings, and non-grievable issues concerning the 'decisions or dispositions' of such proceedings," and that a "learned" district judge had recently interpreted the prison administrative rules in the same way as the plaintiff). See also Dole v. Chandler, 438 F.3d 804, 811–12 (7th Cir. 2006) (holding a prisoner had exhausted when he did everything necessary to exhaust but his grievance simply disappeared, and he received no instructions as to what if anything to do about it).

320. Bellamy v. Mount Vernon Hosp., No. 07 Civ. 1801 (SAS), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 59098, at *19–20 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 5, 2008) (unpublished) (where allowance for late grievances was limited to 45 days after an "alleged occurrence," and the plaintiff thought the "occurrence" was his surgery and not his knowledge of its side-effects, he reasonably believed no remedy remained available to him).

321. Lawyer v. Gatto, No. 03 Civ. 7577 (RPP), 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15406, at *25 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 21, 2007) (unpublished) (holding prisoner whose grievance was referred to the Inspector General's office was not obliged to wait until the IG's investigation was concluded since the rules did not say otherwise; it was the prison system's responsibility to make such a requirement clear).

322. Turner v. Burnside, 541 F.3d 1077, 1083–84 (11th Cir. 2008) (holding a prisoner whose grievance was torn up by the warden was not required to file another one or grieve the warden's action; "[n]othing in [the rules] requires an inmate to grieve a breakdown in the grievance process").

323. For example, a prisoner who alleged that he had been retaliated against in classification and disciplinary matters did not file a grievance because classification and disciplinary matters are excluded from the grievance system. The court held that he had failed to exhaust because retaliation claims might be grievable. Marshall v. Knight, No. 3:03-CV-460 RM, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90478, at *1–3 (N.D. Ind. Dec. 14, 2006) (unpublished). The decision gave no consideration to the reasonableness of Mr. Marshall's interpretation of the rules.

324. Thomas v. Hickman, No. CV F 06-0215 AWI SMS, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 72988, at *26 (E.D. Cal. Oct. 6, 2006) (declining to dismiss where the prisoner's grievance was untimely but the prisoner did not know about the violation until long after the deadline had passed).

325. In Rodriguez v. Westchester County Jail Corr. Dept., 372 F.3d 485, 487 (2d Cir. 2004), the court held that the plaintiff's belief that he did not have to exhaust an excessive force claim was reasonable, since the court had adopted the same view until reversed by the Supreme Court in Porter v. Nussle, 534 U.S. 516, 122 S. Ct. 983, 152 L. Ed. 2d 12 (2002).

with the grievance rules.[326] This body of law should be viewed as unaffected by Woodford. Indeed, other courts have adopted the Second Circuit's approach to such circumstances after Woodford.[327]

(4) What, if any, limits are there to the rule that procedural rules must be properly exhausted? The Seventh Circuit stated:

> The only constraint is that no prison system may establish a requirement inconsistent with the federal policy underlying Section 1983 and Section 1997e(a) ... . Thus, for example, no administrative system may demand that the prisoner specify each remedy later sought in litigation—for Booth v. Churner, 532 U.S. 731 (2001), holds that [§] 1997e(a) requires each prisoner to exhaust a process and not a remedy.[328]

Woodford itself states that "[p]roper exhaustion demands compliance with an agency's deadlines and other critical procedural rules."[329] This implies that there are some procedural rules that are not "critical" and whose violation does not threaten the system's functioning.[330] This view is consistent with the earlier holding of the Third Circuit that, even under a proper exhaustion rule, compliance need only be "substantial,"[331] which it said meant the same as its later statement that "procedural requirements must ... not be imposed in a way that offends the Federal Constitution or the federal policy embodied in Section 1997e(a)."[332] The risk posed by Woodford's holding is that prison officials will reject prisoners' grievances for the most trivial of rules violations,[333] or will spread rules designed to trip prisoners up,[334] or having that effect.[335] Another risk, little explored by

---

326. Hemphill v. New York, 380 F.3d 680, 686–90 (2d Cir. 2004). In Hemphill, the plaintiff, who alleged he was threatened and physically assaulted to prevent him from complaining, wrote a letter to the Superintendent rather than filing a grievance.

327. Kaba v. Stepp, 458 F.3d 678, 684–86 (7th Cir. 2006).

328. Strong v. David, 297 F.3d 646, 649–50 (7th Cir. 2002).

329. Woodford v. Ngo, 548 U.S. 81, 90–91, 126 S. Ct. 2378, 2386 (2006). However, the 10th Circuit has found that substantial compliance is not enough, and an inmate must comply with all grievance procedures in order to exhaust administrative remedies. See Fields v. Okla. State Penitentiary, 511 F.3d 1109, 1112, (10th Cir, 2007); Jernigan v. Stuchell, 304 F.3d 1030, 1032 (10th Cir, 2002).

330. The Court does not suggest what these might be or how a lower court is to determine what is "critical." So far there is little development of this issue in the lower courts. One district court has suggested that if the administrative body reaches the merits despite the violation of a procedural rule, it must not have been critical. Jones v. Stewart, 457 F. Supp. 2d 1131, 1136 (D. Nev. 2006).

331. Nyhuis v. Reno, 204 F.3d 65, 77–78 (3d Cir. 2000). However, the 10th Circuit has found that substantial compliance is not enough, and an inmate must comply with all grievance procedures in order to exhaust administrative remedies. See Fields v. Okla. State Penitentiary, 511 F.3d 1109, 1112, (10th Cir, 2007); Jernigan v. Stuchell, 304 F.3d 1030, 1032 (10th Cir, 2002).

332. Spruill v. Gillis, 372 F.3d 218, 232 (3d Cir. 2004).

333. There is no lack of recent examples of prisoners tripped up by trivial rules violations. See, e.g., Whitener v. Buss, 268 F. App'x 477, 478 (7th Cir. Mar. 13, 2008) (unpublished) (dismissing claim of prisoner who missed a 48-hour grievance deadline because he needed the relevant officers' names and it took a week to get them, and he didn't ask for waiver of the time limit); Whitney v. Simonson, No. CIV S-06-1488 FCD GGH P, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 81995, at *5 (E.D. Cal. Nov. 5, 2007) (unpublished) (dismissing because plaintiff filed a new grievance rather than seeking reinstatement of his existing grievance; court admitted defendants' approach is "hyper-technical" but held Woodford requires dismissal), report and recommendation adopted, No. CIV S-06-1488 FCD GGH P, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 94910 (E.D. Cal. Dec. 28, 2007) (unpublished); Cadogan v. Vittitow, No. 06-CV-15235, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 72999, at *5–9 (E.D. Mich. Sept. 30, 2007) (unpublished) (dismissing where grievance was rejected for "including extraneous information, going beyond the scope of the issue being grieved"—by attaching seven pages of information relating to requests for dental care, medical information, and dental care standards, apparently relevant to claim). .

334. A recent example of a rule that appears designed to trip prisoners up is Oklahoma's rule that prisoners on "grievance restriction" must list in any grievance all their other grievances within the preceding calendar year, by grievance number, date, description, and disposition at each level. One prisoner's complaint that he did not have that information and officials refused to provide him a copy of the grievance log so he could obtain it was brushed off by the court. Tigert v. Jones, No. CIV-07-791-M, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 55047, at *2 (W.D. Okla. July 21, 2008) (unpublished).

335. A recent decision upheld the application of the Bureau of Prisons' regulation defining a grievance appeal as filed when it is logged as received, holding that even if the plaintiff's assertion that he mailed his appeal and it never arrived was true, the "prison mailbox" rule is inapplicable and he failed to exhaust. Williams v. Burgos, No. CV206-104, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 58889, at *1-2 (S.D. Ga. Aug. 13, 2007) (unpublished).

the courts, is that grievance rules may make it impossible for prisoners to frame the claims they wish to litigate.[336]

The most thoughtful discussion of this problem is in a recent district court decision that contrasts these excessively technical grievance rules with the Supreme Court's statement that "the creation of an additional procedural technicality ... [is] particularly inappropriate in a statutory scheme in which laymen, unassisted by trained lawyers, initiate the process."[337] It then went on to analyze the issue before it—the rejection of plaintiff's grievances under a rule prohibiting "multiple issues" in a single grievance—under the rule requiring restrictions on prisoners' constitutional rights to be reasonably related to legitimate prison management or rehabilitation purposes.[338] Though the District Court upheld the grievance rule at issue,[339] the Sixth Circuit overturned that ruling, stating that "[a]n administrative remedy may not be considered "available" where very technical procedural requirements make compliance difficult for all but the most sophisticated inmate."[340]

Before Woodford, courts applying a procedural default rule held that if prison officials decide the merits of a grievance rather than rejecting it for procedural noncompliance, they cannot rely on that noncompliance to seek dismissal of future litigation for non-exhaustion.[341] Nothing in Woodford affects those holdings, and they are still good law.[342] Courts have disagreed over whether a grievance is exhausted if it is rejected both on the merits and for procedural reasons.[343]

(5) Can federal courts overrule a grievance system's procedural rejection of a grievance? Some courts have said that they are without power to re-examine prison officials' decisions rejecting grievances for procedural reasons, an approach which has led to extreme results.[344] Other federal courts have

---

336. In one case, the court held that the plaintiff had properly exhausted, even though his grievance was rejected for including "more than one issue," because his complaint was about "being punished in various ways for conduct he had never been informed of or charged with. Under these circumstances, requiring the prisoner to grieve each of the alleged components of his punishment separately would have prevented him from fairly presenting his claim in its entirety." The court upheld the dismissal of other claims for which his grievance was dismissed for including more than one issue, even though the plaintiff claimed that both issues were examples of a pattern of inadequate medical care. Moore v. Bennette, 517 F.3d 717, 729 (4th Cir. 2008)..

337. Lafountain v. Martin, No. 1:07-cv-076, 2008 WL 1923262, at *15 (W.D. Mich. Apr. 28, 2008) (unpublished), quoting Love v. Pullman Co., 404 U.S. 522, 526–27 (1972).

338. See Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64 (1987). Lafountain v. Martin, No. 1:07-cv-076, 2008 WL 1923262, at *15 (W.D. Mich. Apr. 28, 2008) (unpublished) (citations omitted), said:

> Rubber-stamping unlimited administrative restrictions would permit state prisons to adopt grievance procedures solely for the purpose of requiring impossible compliance in order to terminate prisoners' access to the courts, in violation of the first prong of the Turner test (requiring the governmental objective to be both legitimate and neutral). Such uncritical acceptance of prison restrictions also would permit prisons to effectively eliminate all means for prisoners to exercise their rights to challenge prison conditions, in violation of the second prong of Turner (requiring that prison limitations on constitutional rights leave "alternative means of exercising the right [ ] open to prison inmates").

339. See Lafountain v. Martin, No. 1:07-cv-076, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34456, at *16 (W.D. Mich. Apr. 28, 2008) (unpublished) (finding that a "no multiple issues" rule can be applied so as to make remedies unavailable).

340. Lafountain v. Martin, No. 08-1796, 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 12045, at *7–9 (6th Cir, Jun. 3, 2009) (unpublished) (Where grievance policy was unclear and the prisoner followed a grievance counselor's advice, prisoner's efforts are considered exhaustion even where he filed new grievances instead of re-filing the original grievance).

341. Gates v. Cook, 376 F.3d 323, 331 n.6 (5th Cir. 2004) (noting that the plaintiff sent a form to the Commissioner rather than the Legal Adjudicator but defendants did not reject it for noncompliance; in addition, the grievance was submitted by the prisoner's lawyer and not by the prisoner, as the rules specify); Spruill v. Gillis, 372 F.3d 218, 234 (3d Cir. 2004) (noting that prisoner did fail to follow the prison procedures for grievances when the prison policy had nothing about putting money damages in the grievance.).

342. Subil v. U.S. Marshal, No. 2:04-CV-0257 PS, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23813, at *14 (N.D. Ind. Mar. 24, 2008) (unpublished) (declining to dismiss for non-exhaustion where grievance was not filed in the normal channels, but the final reviewing authority accepted and responded to it); Broder v. Corr. Med. Servs., Inc., No. 03-75106, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19949, at *4–6 (E.D. Mich. Mar. 14, 2008) (unpublished) (finding that because the Michigan Department of Corrections decided the merits of the grievance, without rejecting them as untimely, the grievances cannot be considered unexhausted).

343. Compare Cobb v. Berghuis, No. 1:06-CV-773, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 93890, at *2–4 (W.D. Mich. Dec. 21, 2007) (unpublished) (holding that a grievance rejected for both reasons does not exhaust) with Harris v. West, No. 2:06-cv-268, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22163, at *3 (W.D. Mich. Mar. 11, 2008) (finding exhaustion where prisoner's step II grievance was rejected as untimely but his final appeal was addressed on the merits).

344. For example, in one case, the plaintiff claimed that he had not received notice that a letter had been assumed that they do have the power to review such conclusions, both before and after Woodford.[345] One recent district court decision has suggested that the habeas corpus doctrine of procedural default can be helpful in looking at proper exhaustion questions. Specifically, it said that "the contours of the procedural default doctrine would require the Court to consider whether the last administrative decisionmaker relied on an established procedural rule and whether a reasonable reviewer could have determined that the prisoner actually violated the established rule."[346] This suggests an independent judgment by the court. The court further observed that instructions by grievance officials that go against the relevant state regulations may make the remedy unavailable.[347] Several decisions have refused to dismiss for non-exhaustion where a prisoner's grievance had been rejected because it duplicated an earlier grievance.[348]

(6) What if the prisoner fails to follow directions from prison staff with respect to a particular grievance? Numerous decisions have held that a prisoner who does not follow instructions by grievance personnel fails to exhaust his administrative remedies.349 However, some courts have refused to find non-exhaustion where the instructions or the grievance body's dismissal were not supported by the written grievance policy.[350] Some courts have found exhaustion where the instructions or the grievance body's dismissal were not supported by the written grievance policy,[351]but other courts have insisted that it is the prisoner's obligation to follow incorrect instructions.[352] confiscated until almost a year afterward; when he tried to complain, his grievance was dismissed as time-barred, even though it was impossible for him to file in a timely manner because of the lack of notice. The court said that it could not review the administrative determination, and found additional claims defaulted. See Lindell v. O'Donnell, No. 05-C-04-C, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24767, at *50–51, 62–63, 73 (W.D. Wis. Oct. 21, 2005) (unpublished). The appeals court for that circuit has subsequently stated: "As long as the state's application of its own procedural rules is not arbitrary or capricious, we will not substitute our judgment for the state's." Hoeft v. Wisher, 181 F. App'x 549, 550 (7th Cir. May 8, 2006) (unpublished).

---

345. In Moore v. Bennette, 517 F.3d 717, 722, 729–730 (4th Cir. 2008), the court approved dismissal of some claims for non-exhaustion because the prisoner violated a rule against complaining about more than one incident in a grievance, but reversed dismissal of another claim where it said that requiring him to grieve each of multiple incidents separately "would have prevented him from fairly presenting his claim in its entirety."

For other decisions refusing to honor procedural rejections of grievances, see Price v. Kozak, 569 F. Supp. 2d 398, 406–07 (D. Del. July 28, 2008) (holding plaintiff's grievances timely despite the defendant rejecting them as late); Moton v. Cowart, No. 8:06-CV-2163-T-30EAJ, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 40419, at *15–18 (M.D. Fla. May 19, 2008) (unpublished) (rejecting decision that plaintiff's complaint was not grievable, and an appeal decision that it must be re-filed at the facility, as contrary to prison system's own policy).

In Vasquez v. Hilbert, No. 07-cv-00723-bbc, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42011, at *6-8 (W.D. Wis. May 27, 2008) (unpublished), the defendants agreed that grievance officials had interpreted their own rules incorrectly, but argued that the plaintiff failed to exhaust because he should have done a better job of showing the officials that they were wrong. The court did not agree, holding that the argument was "unreasonable, unfair and inconsistent with circuit precedent."

346. Lafountain v. Martin, No. 1:07-cv-076, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34456, at *16 (W.D. Mich. Apr. 28, 2008).

347. Lafountain v. Martin, No. 1:07-cv-076, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34456, at *16 (W.D. Mich. Apr. 28, 2008).

348. Some decisions have held that dismissal of a grievance as duplicative did not mean that the plaintiff had not exhausted, but suggested that he exhausted in an earlier grievance. Broyles v. Corr. Med. Servs., Inc., No. 1:07-CV-690, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 30214, at *7 (W.D. Mich. Apr. 14, 2008) (unpublished), rev'd on other grounds, No. 08-1638, 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 5494 (6th Cir. Jan. 23, 2009) (unpublished); Doyle v. Jones, No. 1:06-cv-628, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 84570, at *8 (W.D. Mich. Nov. 15, 2007) (unpublished). In Gabby v. Luy, No. 05-C-0188, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4167, at *11 (E.D. Wis. Jan. 23, 2006) (unpublished), the prisoner had filed one grievance and failed to appeal, then filed a second grievance which was rejected on the ground that the same issue had been raised in the first grievance. The court found exhaustion, rejecting defendant's argument that if a prisoner tries to exhaust an issue and makes a procedural mistake, he is barred from trying again and doing it right even if the later grievance is otherwise proper.

349. See Cannon v. Washington, 418 F.3d 714, 718 (7th Cir. 2005); Jernigan v. Stuchell, 304 F.3d 1030, 1032–33 (10th Cir. 2002) (holding that a prisoner who received no response to a grievance and refused directions from the appeals body to try to get one had failed to exhaust).

350. See Young v. Hightower, 395 F. Supp. 2d 583, 586–87 (E.D. Mich. 2005) (holding plaintiff's alleged failure to supply requested documents was not a failure to exhaust where the grievance policy said grievances should not be denied for failure to provide documentation).

351. See Young v. Hightower, 395 F. Supp. 2d 583, 588 (E.D. Mich. 2005) (holding plaintiff's alleged failure to supply requested documents was not a failure to exhaust where the grievance policy said grievances should not be denied for failure to provide documentation); Vega v. Alameida, No. S021977MCEKJMPC, 2005 WL 1501531 (E.D. Cal. June 20, 2005) (unpublished) (declining to dismiss where a prisoner's grievance and appeal were "cancelled" because he was "incorporative," citing defendants' failure to provide facts supporting the cancellation of the grievance).

352. Starks v. Lewis, No. CIV-06-512-M, 2008 WL 2570960, at *5 (W.D. Okla. June 24, 2008) ("Even when prison

(7) How does the proper exhaustion/procedural default rule interact with the statutory requirement that remedies be "available"? The rulings of some courts have created a procedural trap in addition to the procedural default requirement. If a prisoner is unable to exhaust timely and properly for some legitimate reason (for example, missing a deadline because of absence from the prison and no access to the grievance process), one would think the remedy is not available to that prisoner. However, a number of courts have held that prisoners who are prevented from exhausting properly must try to exhaust improperly, notwithstanding the Woodford "proper exhaustion" requirement. Therefore, if you cannot file a timely grievance, you should file a late grievance when you can, or the court might not even consider your arguments explaining why you couldn't file in a timely manner.[353]

6. What If You Miss a Time Limit?

The Supreme Court's ruling requiring "proper exhaustion" requires that you comply with time limits in the grievance system.[354] It is not clear how strict the Woodford rule is with respect to time limits,[355] nor is it clear whether federal courts are free to re-examine the untimeliness of administrative determinations.[356]

Here is some practical advice. Obviously, you want to learn the rules and meet the deadlines. But if you miss a grievance deadline, do not give up. Proceed with your grievance as quickly as possible. Name any provision in the grievance system for late grievances, explain why you were late, and take all the available appeals if the grievance officials reject your grievance for lateness anyway. If they deal with the merits of your grievance, then its lateness will not matter. If they do not, you will still be in a position to argue in court that you were justified in failing to file a grievance on time, that circumstances prevented you from filing on time and the remedy was therefore unavailable, or that your lateness does not matter because prison officials still had the opportunity to address your problem. You should not assume that if prison officials' actions or other circumstances beyond your control keep you from exhausting in a timely manner, you can just argue that the remedy was not "available" and you are excused from exhausting. A number of courts have said that under those circumstances, you must file a grievance when you are no longer subject to whatever obstacle that kept you from exhausting,[357] though some courts have disagreed.[358] authorities are incorrect about the existence of the perceived deficiency, the inmate must follow the prescribed steps to cure it. ... An inmate's disagreement with prison officials as to the appropriateness of a particular procedure under the circumstances, or his belief that he should not have to correct a procedural deficiency does not excuse his obligation to comply with the available process ... .").

---

353. See Handberry v. Thompson, 446 F.3d 335, 343 (2d Cir. 2006) (noting that plaintiffs could have timely exhausted all administrative proceedings and returned to court had they been mentioned by the defense in a timely manner); Hightower v. Nassau County Sheriff's Dept., 325 F. Supp. 2d 199, 205 (E.D.N.Y. 2004) (holding defense waived an affirmative defense that came into law after filing their answer by failing to do so with 23 months' delay and resulting in plaintiffs' loss of opportunity to take discovery), vacated in part on other grounds, 343 F. Supp. 2d 191 (E.D.N.Y. Nov. 1, 2004). Some circuits have required a showing of prejudice for waiver. See Curtis v. Timberlake, 436 F.3d 709, 711 (7th Cir. 2005)(explaining that a delay to assert an affirmative defense waives the defense only if the plaintiff was harmed as as result); Panaro v. City of North Las Vegas, 432 F.3d 949, 952 (9th Cir. 2005)(stating that a defendant may raise an affirmative defense at the summary judgment stage as long as the plaintiff does not suffer prejudice.).

354. Woodford v. Ngo, 548 U.S. 81, 90–91, 126 S. Ct. 2378, 2389, 165 L. Ed. 2d 368, 381–82 (2006).

355. See preceding Section for discussion of possible exceptions and limits to the "proper exhaustion" rule.

356. For an example of a decision where a court refused to re-examine questionable prison timeliness decisions, see Wall v. Holt, No. 1:CV-06-0194, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 94573, at *9–10 (M.D. Pa. Jan. 9, 2007) (unpublished) (holding timeliness is measured by when grievance appeal arrives under Bureau of Prisons' regulation, notwithstanding "prison mailbox" rule and claim that the appeal was mailed on time). For a decision where a court exercised independent judgment about timeliness, see Price v. Kozak, 569 F. Supp. 2d 398, 407 (D. Del. July 28, 2008) (holding plaintiff's grievances timely despite their inexplicable rejection as late). You should do your best to follow what the grievance policy says, even if the prison does not provide a strict deadline for grievances, but only recommends when you should file your grievance.

357. Bryant v. Rich, 530 F.3d 1368, 1373 (11th Cir. June 20, 2007) (holding prisoner who said he could not submit a grievance for fear of assault at his place of detention should have exhausted that ability after transfer to another facility); Green v. McBride, No. 5:04-cv-01181, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 71189, at *7–9 (S.D. W.Va. Sept. 25, 2007) (unpublished) (holding prisoner who was kept on suicide watch without necessary materials until past the grievance deadline should have done so as soon as he was released from suicide watch and his failure to do so without justification means he failed to properly exhaust his administrative remedies).

358. See Cotton-Schrichte v. Peate, No. 07-4052-CV-C-NKL, 2008 WL 3200775, at *4 (W.D. Mo. Aug. 5, 2008) (holding that a prisoner who was raped by a staff member exercising a position of authority over the prisoner and who had been threatened into silence was not required to file a grievance after the threats were removed as it could not have been said that she had administrative procedures available to her at the appropriate time any filing would have been

The Second Circuit has addressed compliance with time limits in a similar manner as issues of following grievance rules, holding that failure to exhaust or to exhaust properly can be justified under "circumstances which might understandably lead usually uncounselled prisoners to fail to grieve in the normally required way."[359] This includes prisoners' misunderstanding of the exhaustion requirement[360] or of the relevant prison regulations,[361] though courts have noted that those were not necessarily the only circumstances to excuse the failure to exhaust.[362] As noted in Section 5 above, this approach still appears valid after Woodford, since the kinds of fact patterns addressed in Second Circuit law were not before the Court in Woodford. In addition, circumstances that prevent a prisoner from filing in a timely manner would mean that the grievance system was not an "available" remedy for purposes of the exhaustion rule;[363] Woodford did not address the meaning of the statutory term "available." Nor did Woodford disturb the holdings of lower courts, including the Second Circuit, that under some circumstances prison officials may be prevented from raising a defense of non-exhaustion.[364]

Some grievance systems build in discretion to waive time limits. For example, the New York State grievance system permits late grievances for "mitigating circumstances,"[365] which include "attempts to resolve informally by the inmate."[366] In order to take advantage of such a provision, you have to ask for it—you cannot just argue later in court that your grievance was not untimely because they could have given you an extension.[367] The next question is whether the court is bound by prison personnel's disposition of such a futile in any case.); Bellamy v. Mount Vernon Hosp., No. 07 Civ. 1801 (SAS), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 59098, at *19-20 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 5, 2008) (unpublished) (declining to dismiss where prisoner believed that the "alleged occurrence" was his surgery and not his knowledge of the side-effects, and accordingly, he reasonably, but mistakenly believed that he was time barred because he was not aware of his need to file a grievance).

---

359. Williams v. Comstock, 425 F.3d 175, 176-177 (2d Cir. 2005) (per curiam) (holding that while plaintiff's stroke left him physically and mentally unable to file his petition within the deadline, his failure to explain a nearly two year delay in doing so amounts to a "failure to timely file the grievance in accordance with IGP rules amounted to a failure to exhaust administrative remedies in this case.").

360. Williams v. Comstock, 425 F.3d 175, 177 (2d Cir. 2005) (citing Rodriguez v. Westchester County Jail Corr. Dept., 372 F.3d 485 (2d Cir. 2004)) (explaining that the Court held that plaintiff's understanding that exhaustion was not required was a valid justification for not exhausting remedies because, subsequent to defendant's failure to exhaust, [the Court] had entertained the same understanding in a separate case.)

361. Williams v. Comstock, 425 F.3d 175, 177 (2d Cir. 2005) (citing Giano v Goord, 380 F.3d 670, 677 (2d Cir. 2004)); Bellamy v. Mount Vernon Hosp., No. 07 Civ. 1801 (SAS), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 59098, at *12–14 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 5, 2008) (unpublished) (holding that while plaintiff's stroke left him physically and mentally unable to file his petition within the deadline, his failure to explain a nearly two year delay in doing so amounts to a "failure to timely file the grievance in accordance with IGP rules amounted to a failure to exhaust administrative remedies in this case").

A reasonable if mistaken appreciation of the facts may also justify lack of timely exhaustion or result in a holding that the remedy was unavailable. In Borges v. Piatkowski, 337 F. Supp. 2d 424, 427 (W.D.N.Y. 2004), the prisoner missed the 14-day grievance deadline because he had no reason to know he had a medical problem until after it had expired and he had been transferred to another prison. The court did not dismiss his suit for lack of timely exhaustion; it held that as he had no way to know of the existing condition he could not be said to have had an available remedy, and therefore was justified by special circumstances in not exhausting.

362. Williams v. Comstock, 425 F.3d 175, 176 (2d Cir. 2005). One of the court's other decisions holds that a prisoner who was deterred from timely exhaustion by threats or other coercion by prison staff might also be justified in having failed to exhaust, or the court might find that remedies were unavailable to that prisoner, depending on the severity of the circumstances. See Hemphill v. New York, 380 F.3d 680, 690–91 (2d Cir. 2004).

363. Days v. Johnson, 322 F.3d 863, 867–68 (5th Cir. 2003)(narrowly holding that administrative remedies are deemed unavailable when (1) an inmates untimely filing of a grievance is because of a physical injury and (2) the grievance system rejects the inmates subsequent attempt to exhaust his remedies based on the untimely application of his grievance); Thorns v. Ryan, No. 07-CV-0218 H (AJB), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14215, at *11–12 (S.D. Cal. Feb. 26, 2008) (unpublished) (refusing to dismiss where grievance appeal was untimely because of delay in receiving the decision; appeal was timely measured from when plaintiff received it). Some courts have held that this rule does not excuse you from having to exhaust when you are prevented from complying with a grievance deadline. However, it means that when you exhaust late, the lateness may be excused if it was for reasons beyond your control. See Part D, Section 6, below.

364. See above Part D, footnote 301.

365. Graham v. Perez, 121 F. Supp. 2d 317, 322 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (quoting N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.7(a)(1) (2001)).

366. N.Y. Codes R. & Regs. at § 701.6(g)(1)(i)(a) (2008); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040 § 701.6(a), Inmate Grievance Program (2003) (as revised July 1, 2006). It provides: "An exception to the time limit may not be granted if the request was made more than 45 days after an alleged occurrence."

367. Patel v. Fleming, 415 F.3d 1105, 1110–11 (10th Cir. 2005) (holding that the existence of provisions for time extensions did not save the untimely grievance of a prisoner who never officially sought an extension); Harper v. Jenkin, request. As we have noted earlier, courts are divided on the question whether they can overrule grievance officials' decisions about whether prisoners have complied with the rules. One New York district court has held that it can decide whether late exhaustion is excused by mitigating circumstances such as transfer to another facility or the unavailability of grievance representatives to prisoners in a segregated unit.[368] When a claim is dismissed for non-exhaustion—whether for simple failure to exhaust at all, an error in using the procedures, or reliance on law that has subsequently changed—the deadline for administrative proceedings will almost always have passed. The Second Circuit has held that where a failure to exhaust or to exhaust correctly was justified by special circumstances, the claim should be dismissed without prejudice if remedies remain available, but if not, the case should go forward (or if the case is dismissed and then remedies prove unavailable, it should be reinstated).[369] In other words, if the prison system will not hear the plaintiff's late grievance, the plaintiff does not need to exhaust. (Whether this rule was overturned by Woodford v. Ngo is unclear.) We do not know how often prison systems will accept post-dismissal grievances under discretionary provisions for late filings. Some decisions, however, have directed that grievance officials consider grievances on their merits after dismissal for non-exhaustion.[370]

The doctrine of equitable tolling,[371] which is usually applied to statutes of limitations issues,[372] may excuse late grievance filings under some circumstances. In one case, a prisoner had filed a grievance and been told that it had been referred to "the appropriate investigative authority," at a time when his claim was not required to be grieved under that Circuit's law. After the law changed in response to the Supreme Court decision in Booth v. Churner, his case was dismissed for non-exhaustion. The prisoner promptly filed a new grievance, which was dismissed as untimely. The court held that the plaintiff was victimized by extraordinary circumstances, and should have the benefit of equitable tolling. The deadline for filing a grievance was thus extended to twenty days (the grievance time limit) after he received the court's decision dismissing his case.[373]

Untimely filing can also be waived by prison officials in the administrative process: a late grievance that they decide on the merits anyway satisfies the exhaustion requirement.[374] Time limits that are not made known to the prisoners cannot be enforced to bar their suits.[375]

---

179 F.3d 1311, 1312 (11th Cir. 1999) (holding that a prisoner whose grievance was dismissed as untimely was obliged to appeal that decision before turning to a court whether or not the prisoner believed his appeal would be heard, since the system provided for waiver of time limits for "good cause"); Soto v. Belcher, 339 F. Supp. 2d 592, 596 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (holding that a prisoner who learned of his problem after the deadline passed should have sought to file a late grievance).

368. Graham v. Perez, 121 F. Supp. 2d 317, 322 (S.D.N.Y. 2000). See also O'Connor v. Featherston, No. 01 Civ. 3251 (HB), 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7570, at *4–8 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 29, 2002) (unpublished) (refusing to be bound by rejection of request to file a late grievance where the plaintiff had been kept in medical restriction for the 14 days in which he was required to file a timely grievance due to the prison officials lack of cooperation with plaintiff in the filing process); Cardona v. Winn, 170 F. Supp. 2d 131, 132 (D. Mass. 2001) (holding that the grievance appeal deadline should be extended because the prisoner may have missed it out of "excusable confusion").

369. See Brownell v. Krom, 446 F.3d 305, 313 (2d Cir. 2006). The Seventh Circuit has recently held similarly. Pavey v. Conley, 544 F.3d 739, 742 (7th Cir. 2008) (holding that if failure to exhaust was "innocent," the prisoner "must be given another chance to exhaust provided that there exist remedies that he will be permitted by the prison authorities to exhaust, so that he's not just being given a runaround").

370. See George v. Morrison-Warden, No. 06 Civ. 3188 (SAS), 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42640, at *19 (S.D.N.Y. June 4, 2007) (unpublished) (dismissing the plaintiff's case for failure to appeal but holding plaintiff's efforts had "earned him a response," directing officials to treat a renewed appeal as timely and respond to it); Hill v. Chalanor, 419 F. Supp. 2d 255, 259 (N.D.N.Y. 2006) (finding appeal was "technically available," failure to appeal resulted from "confusion or miscommunication" and not official misconduct and therefore directing that plaintiff's renewed grievance appeal "shall be deemed timely" and directing prison officials to make sure it reached its destination).

371. For more information about the doctrine of equitable tolling, see footnotes 463–66 of this Chapter.

372. One court has held that it should not be applied to PLRA exhaustion. See Diaz v. Rutter, No. 2:05-cv-239, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 31606, at *11 (W.D. Mich. Nov. 30, 2005) (holding equitable tolling applies to statutes of limitations but not grievance proceedings).

373. See Gambina v. Dever, No. 03-cv-00118-REB-BNB, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1937, at *9–10 (D. Colo. Mar. 31, 2006) (unpublished); see Anthony v. Gilman, No. 1:05-cv-426, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2011, at *4–7 (W.D. Mich. Jan. 10, 2008) (unpublished) (applying equitable tolling to grievance deadline, but ruling against prisoner on the merits because he was deemed to have had adequate time to file); Rivera v. Pataki, No. 04 Civ. 1286 (MBM), 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2747, at *41–42 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 7, 2005) (unpublished) (noting that "Rivera did the best he could to follow DOCS regulations while responding to an evolving legal framework.").

374. See Harris v. Aidala, No. 03CV467, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63443, at *5–6 (W.D.N.Y. Sept. 6, 2006)

If a grievance system has no time limit, delay in filing cannot bar a prisoner's claim for non-exhaustion.[376] In that scenario, an unexhausted claim should be dismissed without prejudice, and the litigant will have the opportunity to seek to exhaust.[377]

7. Dealing with Exhaustion in Your Lawsuit

Exhaustion is an "affirmative defence," so you do not have to put it in your complaint—the defendants must raise it.[378] However, if you have properly exhausted, it may be beneficial to put it in the complaint anyway. Then, if the defendants make a motion to dismiss, you can simply refer to the relevant paragraph of your complaint in response, since the court must assume that the facts you allege in your complaint are true for purposes of such a motion.[379] If you did not properly exhaust, but you think you have a good argument that administrative remedies were not available to you, or that there are special circumstances that justify your failure to exhaust, you should not put that in the complaint.[380] In that case you are best advised to leave exhaustion out of the complaint and let the defendants raise it. If the defendants do raise the defense, you will then have the opportunity to provide a fuller explanation than you would in a complaint. (Here's the rule of thumb: if you can truthfully write in your complaint, "Plaintiff has exhausted all available administrative remedies for his claims," you should do it. If it's more complicated than that, leave it out.)

Since exhaustion is not a pleading requirement, it cannot be addressed at initial screening or by motion under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure Rule 12(b)(6) to dismiss for failure to state a claim, except in those cases where non-exhaustion is clear. Motions under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1) to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction are equally inappropriate, since failure to exhaust is not jurisdictional.[381]

In most courts, defendants who claim you did not exhaust will generally have to raise that claim in a motion for summary judgment, which requires them to submit admissible factual evidence showing that you didn't exhaust.[382] Sometimes defendants say they are moving to dismiss the complaint under Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure but also include factual materials like documents or affidavits. These should not be considered on such a motion to dismiss. The court may then convert the Rule 12(b)(6) motion to a summary judgment motion.[383] Either way, if you are faced with a summary judgment motion, you will (unpublished) (finding that "Even though the grievance was filed outside the stated time parameters for the filing of grievances, it appears that the grievance was processed and denied based upon the merits," and therefore, the plaintiff exhausted his administrative remedies); see Barnes v. Briley, 420 F.3d 673, 679 (7th Cir. 2005) (holding claim was not procedurally defaulted where an initial grievance was rejected as untimely but plaintiff later "restarted" the grievance process and received a decision on the merits).

---

375. See Sims v. Rewerts, No. 07-12646, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 100585, at *28 (E.D. Mich. Sept. 24, 2009) (unpublished) (not dismissing where plaintiff failed to comply with time limit that had been changed without notice).

376. Schonarth v. Robinson, No. 06-cv-151-JM, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13596, at *8–12 (D.N.H., Feb. 22, 2008) (unpublished) (finding that a grievance that was filed two years after the jail was demolished, but otherwise in compliance with grievance rules, was exhausted).

377. Alexander v. Dickerson, No. 6:07cv423, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32866, at *17 (E.D. Tex. Apr. 22, 2008) (unpublished) (indicating that when no deadline for filing grievances exists in the jail's policy, the lawsuit does not have to be dismissed with prejudice, and therefore, dismissing the plaintiff's case without prejudice for failing to exhaust and allowing the plaintiff to refile the suit once he exhausts his administrative remedies).

378. Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 211–17, 127 S. Ct. 910, 919–22, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 811–13 (2007). This could change. The Court suggested there might be reasons to amend the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure to make exhaustion a pleading requirement, so be sure you check the current rules (the pleading rule is Rule 8 of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure).

379. See Wright v. Dee, 54 F. Supp. 2d 199, 206 (S.D.N.Y. 1999) (holding assertion of exhaustion made in response to the defendants' motion to dismiss was sufficient to survive the motion).

380. See Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 213–15, 127 S. Ct. 910, 920–21, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 812–13 (2007) ("Unlike in the typical civil case, defendants do not have to respond to a complaint covered by the PLRA until required to do so by the court, and waiving the right to reply does not constitute an admission of the allegations in the complaint").

381. See Woodford v. Ngo, 548 U.S. 81, 101, 126 S. Ct. 2378, 2392 (2006) ("[T]he PLRA exhaustion requirement is not jurisdictional").

382. See Rule 56, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Most federal courts routinely addressed exhaustion disputes under the summary judgment rule. See, e.g., Brownell v. Krom, 446 F.3d 305, 310 (2d Cir. 2006); Brown v. Croak, 312 F.3d 109, 111–12 (3d Cir. 2002); Fields v. Oklahoma State Penitentiary, 511 F.3d 1109, 1111–12 (10th Cir. 2007).

383. See McCoy v. Goord, 255 F. Supp. 2d 233, 251 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (discussing why such a conversion may not fit the goals of exhaustion). Courts are not required to convert such motions to summary judgment motions. See, e.g., Perez v. Westchester County Dept. of Corr., No. 05 Civ. 8120(RMB), 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32638, at *10 n.6 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 30, 2007) (citing Friedl v. City of New York, 210 F. 3d 79, 83 (2d Cir. 2000), where in a question of exhaustion, the court have to respond to defendants' factual presentation with your own admissible evidence. This evidence can consist of your declaration or sworn affidavit[384] (not just a statement in a brief or a letter) establishing that you exhausted or were unable to exhaust for some legitimate reason, and/or documentary evidence such as a final grievance decision showing you exhausted. You should also look critically at the defendants' evidence and, if it does not really show that you failed to exhaust, explain why to the court. If the defendants do not show that it is undisputed that you have failed to exhaust and you do not have an adequate excuse or explanation, summary judgment will be denied. That usually means that the issue of exhaustion will be determined at trial.[385]

Courts take different approaches to litigating exhaustion. Some have simply held evidentiary hearings to determine factual disputes about exhaustion, without much discussion of why it is appropriate to proceed in that way.[386] The Ninth Circuit has held that failure to exhaust is "a matter in abatement, which is subject to an unenumerated Rule 12(b) motion, rather than a motion for summary judgment."[387] The difference that makes is that courts (not juries) can decide disputed factual issues based on documents, without holding a hearing, under this procedure.[388] Recently, the Eleventh Circuit adopted this approach too.[389] If you are faced with such a motion in a district court in the Ninth or Eleventh Circuit, you should respond to it the same way you would respond to a summary judgment motion, with declarations or sworn affidavits stating relevant facts within your knowledge, and with documents showing relevant facts, such as the prison grievance policy, grievances you filed, decisions or other documents you received in response, etc.

The Seventh Circuit, by contrast, has rejected the matter in abatement approach and has held that whenever exhaustion "is contested," the district court should conduct a hearing on exhaustion, allowing discovery limited to exhaustion, and decide the exhaustion question; only if the court finds the plaintiff has exhausted will the case proceed to discovery on the merits.[390] The court's expressed concern was to avoid presentation of exhaustion to the jury; it stated that "juries do not decide what forum a dispute is to be resolved in .... Until the issue of exhaustion is resolved, the court cannot know whether it is to decide the case or the prison authorities are to."[391]

The Seventh Circuit approach is arguably contrary to Jones v. Bock, which held that the PLRA exhaustion requirement does not alter usual litigation practices governed by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or general practice.[392] A rule permitting only exhaustion-related discovery until exhaustion is resolved is not consistent with the Federal Rules' discovery procedures.[393] Further, the court invents a seemingly unprecedented (at least it cites no precedent) means of addressing facts that are essential to the exhaustion decision but are also relevant to the merits of the plaintiff's claim: the jury will hear the facts "without being bound by (or even informed of)" the district court's determinations.[394] This notion of having a court make factual findings, and then ignoring them in the remainder of the case, does not seem like a usual decided the 12(b)(6) motion on the complaint alone).

---

384. See Chapter 6, "An Introduction to Legal Documents," for more information on affidavits.

385. Cain v. Dretke, No. C-04-364, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42885, at *3 (S.D. Tex. June 13, 2006) (unpublished) (holding a factual dispute over exhaustion "must be resolved at trial"); Donahue v. Bennett, No. 02-CV-6430 CJS, 2004 WL 1875019, at *6 (W.D.N.Y. Aug. 17, 2004); Kendall v. Kittles, No. 03 Civ. 628 (GEL), 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15145, at *14 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 4, 2004) (unpublished) (holding credibility issues about access to grievance forms and whether the plaintiff was told his claim was nongrievable "are properly for a jury.").

386. Peterson v. Roe, No. 05-cv-055-PB, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7847, at *4 (D.N.H. Feb. 2, 2007) (unpublished) (finding officials credible as to failing to receive appeal, plaintiff credible as to mailing it and as to the unreliability of the internal mail); Johnson v. Garraghty, 57 F. Supp. 2d 321, 329 (E.D. Va. 1999) (holding that disputed claim that defendants obstructed exhaustion merits an evidentiary hearing).

387. Wyatt v. Terhune, 315 F.3d 1108, 1119 (9th Cir. 2003).

388. Ritz v. Int'l Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, 837 F.2d 365, 369 (9th Cir. 1988) (per curiam), cited in Wyatt, 315 F.3d 1108, 1119–20 (9th Cir. 2003).

389. Bryant v. Rich, 530 F.3d 1368, 1376–77 (11th Cir. 2008).

390. Pavey v. Conley, 544 F.3d 739, 742 (7th Cir. 2008).

391. Pavey v. Conley, 544 F.3d 739, 741 (7th Cir. 2008).

392. Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 213, 127 S. Ct. 910, 919–20, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 811 (2007).

393. The court qualified this holding by saying "in the ordinary case" discovery on the merits should be put off until exhaustion is resolved, but "there may be exceptional cases in which expeditious resolution of the litigation" calls for some merits-related discovery before exhaustion is decided. Pavey v. Conley, 528 F.3d 494, 497 (7th Cir. 2008).

394. Pavey v. Conley, 544 F.3d 739, 742 (7th Cir. 2008).

litigation practice. Of course, if you are in court in the Seventh Circuit, you will be bound by these rules. In other courts, these arguments may help persuade a court not to adopt the Seventh Circuit approach.

Because exhaustion is an affirmative defense, you will have the burden of proving non-exhaustion as well as pleading it.[395] That means you have to show three things:

(1) That there actually was an available administrative remedy for your problem.[396] The Second Circuit has held that prisoner complaints should not be dismissed for non-exhaustion without the court having "establish[ed] the availability of an administrative remedy from a legally sufficient source."[397] To do that, the court must examine whether the remedy actually will address the kind of claim the prisoner raises, and must look at exceptions to the remedy to be sure the claim does not fall into one of them.[398] Defendants must also show the court exactly what prisoners were required to do to exhaust.[399]

(2) That you were a prisoner and therefore required to exhaust when you filed your complaint. [400]

(3) That you didn't exhaust. Several courts have found prison officials' affidavits and documentation asserting a prisoner didn't exhaust to be insufficient or even inadmissible into evidence because they were completely conclusory (proved nothing),[401] failed to set out how records were searched,[402] rested on hearsay,[403] or otherwise failed to establish a failure to exhaust.[404] In several cases, plaintiffs have produced documentation of grievances that prison officials claimed did not exist.[405]

---

395. Roberts v. Barreras, 484 F.3d 1236, 1240–41 (10th Cir. 2007) (citing established rules that the burden of proving affirmative defenses is on the defendant and that burden of proof follows burden of pleading).

396. See Brown v. Valoff, 422 F.3d 926, 940 (9th Cir. 2005) ("Establishing, as an affirmative defense, the existence of further 'available' administrative remedies requires evidence, not imagination."); Fernandez v. Morris, No. 08-CV-0601 H (PCL), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 54298, at *9 (S.D. Cal. July 16, 2008) (unpublished) (defendants who failed to show availability of remedies in segregation were not entitled to dismissal for non-exhaustion); Ayala v. C.M.S., No. 05-5184 (RMB), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50692, at *7 (D.N.J. July 2, 2008) (unpublished) (defendants who failed to specify what procedures were available were not entitled to dismissal for non-exhaustion).

397. Mojias v. Johnson, 351 F.3d 606, 609 (2d Cir. 2003) (quoting Snider v. Melindez, 199 F.3d 108, 114 (2d Cir. 1999) (noting that a party's admission is not a "legally sufficient source")).

398. Mojias v. Johnson, 351 F.3d 606, 610 (2d Cir. 2003); accord Anderson v. XYZ Correctional Health Services, 407 F.3d 674, 683 n.5 (4th Cir. 2005). In Mojias, the court criticized the lower court for relying on check marks and questionnaire answers on a form complaint to determine exhaustion. Mojias v. Johnson, 351 F.3d 606, 609–10 (2d Cir. 2003). That harmful practice is still alive in some jurisdictions. See Winfield v. Soloman, No. CIV S-08-0875 WBS DAD P, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46880, at *3 (E.D. Cal. May 23, 2008) (unpublished).

399. Ayala v. C.M.S., No. 05-5184 (RMB), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50692, at *7 (D.N.J. July 2, 2008) (unpublished) (where plaintiff said he was unable to pursue administrative remedies, defendants' failure to establish their policy's requirements made it impossible for the court to assess plaintiff's claim).

400. Abner v. County of Saginaw County, 496 F. Supp. 2d 810, 823 (E.D. Mich. 2007).

401. See Ray v. Kertes, 130 F. App'x 541, 543 (3d Cir. 2005) (unpublished) (holding "conclusory statement" that "does not constitute a factual report describing the steps Ray did or did not take to exhaust his grievances" did not meet defendants' burden); Laws v. Walsh, No. 02-CV-6016, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12600, at *10 n.3 (W.D.N.Y. June 27, 2003) (unpublished) (holding conclusory affidavit about records search and lack of appeals inadmissible).

402. Livingston v. Piskor, 215 F.R.D. 84, 85–86 (W.D.N.Y. 2003) (holding defendants' affidavits that they had no record of grievances and appeals by the plaintiff were inadequate where they did not respond to his allegations that his grievances were not processed as policy required and gave no detail as to "the nature of the searches ..., their offices' record retention policies, or other facts indicating just how reliable or conclusive the results of those searches are").

403. Donahue v. Bennett, No. 02-CV-6430, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12601, at *10 (W.D.N.Y. June 23, 2003) (unpublished) (holding counsel's hearsay affirmation about a telephone call with grievance officials did not properly support their motion).

404. See Wyatt v. Terhune, 315 F.3d 1108, 1120 (9th Cir. 2003) (noting that defendants did not show that the administrative remedies had been exhausted because they did not claim it in their affadavit); Thixton v. Berge, No. 05-C-620-C, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92193, at *7 (W.D. Wis. Dec. 19, 2006) (unpublished) (noting that the absence of an appeal about lack of a working toilet and sink did not establish non-exhaustion, since if he prevailed at the first stage he would have not have needed to appeal, and he might have filed an appeal about conditions in general including the sink and toilet issue).

405. Baker v. Schriro, No. CV 07-0353-PHX-SMM (JRI), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 66284, at *15 (D. Ariz. Aug. 20, 2008) (ruling that prison officials did not meet their burden to demonstrate exhaustion because plaintiff could produce evidence of grievance complaints, even though defendant denied that they existed); Menteer v. Applebee, No. 04-3054-MLB, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50207, at *16 (D. Kan. June 27, 2008) (unpublished) (finding material issue of fact where defendants said plaintiff filed no grievances but plaintiff produced copies of grievances and decisions on them).

Since exhaustion is an affirmative defense, the defendants failure to raise the defense in a timely manner might mean that they have waived the defense.[406] Your claim that defendants have waived exhaustion will be much stronger if you can show that their failure to raise it on time has hurt you in some way.[407] The exhaustion defense, once technically waived, may be revived procedurally[408] or if the court chooses to do so.[409]

If a court refuses to dismiss your case for non-exhaustion, prison officials cannot appeal immediately; they have to wait until the end of the case.[410] One court has recently allowed the defendants an immediate appeal on the question of whether discovery must be stayed until any dispute over exhaustion is resolved.[411]

8. Exhaustion and Statutes of Limitations

Most courts have held that the statute of limitations is tolled (suspended) while you are exhausting administrative remedies,[412] meaning that the time does not start to run until you get a final administrative decision. However, not every court may accept this idea; plan on getting your complaint in within the usual time limitation if you can.

If your case is dismissed for non-exhaustion and you want to try to exhaust and re-file it,[413] the statute of limitations may have run by then. Ordinarily, your case would be time-barred. However, some states have statutes that toll (suspend) the statute of limitations for various reasons, including dismissals for reasons not involving the merits of the case. (State tolling rules are applied by federal courts in civil rights actions.[414]) For example, a New York statute says that in an action that was timely commenced but was 406. See Handberry v. Thompson, 446 F.3d 335, 342–43 (2d Cir. 2006) (finding waiver); Anderson v. XYZ Correctional Health Services, Inc., 407 F.3d 674, 679–80 (4th Cir. 2005); Johnson v. Testman, 380 F.3d 691, 695–96 (2d Cir. 2004) (holding the defense was waived by failure to assert it in the district court); Randolph v. Rodgers, 253 F.3d 342, 348 n.11 (8th Cir. 2001) (finding defendants "waived [PLRA exhaustion] argument on appeal" because it was not raised in the District Court).

---

407. See Handberry v. Thompson, 446 F.3d 335, 343 (2d Cir. 2006) (noting that plaintiffs could have timely exhausted and returned to court had the defense been timely raised); Hightower v. Nassau County Sheriff's Dept., 325 F. Supp. 2d 199, 205 (E.D.N.Y. 2004) (holding defense waived where raised only after trial, after 23 months' delay and plaintiffs' loss of opportunity to take discovery), vacated in part on other grounds, 343 F. Supp. 2d 191 (E.D.N.Y. Nov. 1, 2004). Some circuits have required a showing of prejudice for waiver. See Curtis v. Timberlake, 436 F.3d 709, 711 (7th Cir. 2005) (holding that the plaintiff did not suffer any harm from the defendant's delay in asserting the exhaustion defense); Panaro v. City of North Las Vegas, 432 F.3d 949, 952 (9th Cir. 2005) (holding that the exhaustion defense could be waived because the plaintiff suffered no harm from the delay).

408. See Jackson v. District of Columbia, 254 F.3d 262, 267 (D.C. Cir. 2001) (holding it was not an abuse of discretion to construe a "notice" by one party that it would rely on another party's exhaustion defense as an amended answer properly raising the defense); Massey v. Helman, 196 F.3d 727 (7th Cir. 1999) (holding that the filing of an amended complaint revives defendants' right to raise exhaustion and other defenses).

409. See Stephenson v. Dunford, 320 F. Supp. 2d 44, 48–49 (W.D.N.Y. 2004) (allowing amendment of answer to assert exhaustion 22 months after Supreme Court decision showed the defense was available), vacated and remanded on other grounds, 139 Fed. Appx. 311 (2d Cir. 2005). But see Abdullah v. Washington, 530 F. Supp. 2d 112, 115 (D.D.C. 2008) (denying amendment to answer asserting exhaustion defense five years after filing; plaintiff would be prejudiced because discovery was closed and plaintiff might have formulated discovery differently if exhaustion had been asserted). In Panaro v. City of North Las Vegas, 423 F.3d 949, 952 (9th Cir. 2005), the court held that exhaustion can be raised at the summary judgment stage, even if not pled, as long as the adverse party is not prejudiced.

410. Davis v. Streekstra, 227 F.3d 759, 762–63 (7th Cir. 2000) (holding that the defendant had to wait until the case was decided before appealing on an exhaustion issue).

411. Pavey v. Conley, No. 3:03-CV-662 RM, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90523, at *4 (N.D. Ind. Dec. 14, 2006) (unpublished), rev'd, 544 F.3d 739, (7th Cir. 2008) (granting interlocutory appeal because of the high impact the decision would have).

412. Roberts v. Barreras, 484 F.3d 1236, 1240 (10th Cir. 2007) (holding that state rules govern tolling); Brown v. Valoff, 422 F.3d 926, 943 (9th Cir. 2005)("we agree with the uniform holdings of the circuits … that the applicable statute of limitations must be tolled"); Johnson v. Rivera, 272 F.3d 519, 521 (7th Cir. 2001) (following state law that the statue of limitations is tolled); Brown v. Morgan, 209 F.3d 595, 596 (6th Cir. 2000) (remanding a case back to the District Court to determine how long the statute of limitations was tolled); Harris v. Hegmann, 198 F.3d 153, 157 (5th Cir. 1999) (following Louisiana law that allows for tolling). Some courts have said or assumed that this question is determined by state tolling law. See, e.g., Harris v. Hegmann, 198 F.3d 153, 157 (5th Cir. 1999); Leal v. Ga. Dept. of Corr., 254 F.3d 1276, 1280 (11th Cir. 2001) (remanding a case back to the District Court to determine if tolling should apply).

413. You may not be allowed to do this because your grievance, too, may be time-barred, unless you persuade prison officials there is a reason to hear your late grievance. See Part E(5) of this Chapter for more information.

414. Bd. of Regents v. Tomanio, 446 U.S. 478, 483–86, 100 S. Ct. 1790, 1794–96, 64 L. Ed. 2d 440 (1980) (noting "terminated in any other manner than by a voluntary discontinuance, a failure to obtain personal jurisdiction over the defendant, a dismissal of the complaint for neglect to prosecute the action, or a final judgment on the merits," the plaintiff has six months to file a new lawsuit about the subject matter of the dismissed lawsuit.[415] New York state law also appears to toll the statute of limitations during exhaustion of administrative remedies.[416] In addition, some courts have applied the doctrine of equitable tolling so that any time you spend going through an action that is dismissed for non-exhaustion, and any further time spent in exhausting administrative remedies after the dismissal, will not count against the statute of limitations.[417]

A second approach is to hold the statute of limitations equitably tolled during the pendency of the dismissed action and any subsequent state administrative proceedings, as one appeals court has done.[418] That holding was made in a case where the plaintiff had been victimized by a change in law overruling several circuits' holdings that damage claims need not be exhausted where grievance systems did not provide for damages,[419] but other courts have held or suggested that equitable tolling may be applicable more generally.[420]

An alternative approach would be for a court not to dismiss a case that would be time-barred and instead grant a stay pending exhaustion. That option may be foreclosed by case law holding that stays are no longer permitted under the PLRA and that unexhausted claims must be dismissed.[421]

A fourth approach is for the plaintiff, after dismissal and subsequent exhaustion, to file a motion for relief from the judgment of dismissal under Rule 60(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rather than to file a new complaint. That Rule permits relief based, among other things, upon "mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect," an argument that "applying [the judgment] prospectively is no longer equitable," or "any other reason that justifies relief."[422] This rule has been used as a procedural vehicle in a variety of circumstances to permit litigants who timely filed and diligently pursued their cases to revive that Congress did not establish a body of tolling laws, so state laws are used instead).

---

415. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 205(a) (1999). The statute also requires that service of process be completed within the six-month period. However, courts have held that this service requirement is not binding in federal court, since state law governing the method or timing of service of process is not borrowed along with the statute of limitations for federal claims. Allaway v. McGinnis, 362 F. Supp. 2d 390, 395 (W.D.N.Y. 2005) (applying state law to tolling, but not to service of process); Gashi v. County of Westchester, 02 Civ. 6934 (GBD), 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1215, at *27–30 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 27, 2005) (unpublished) (borrowing state tolling laws in a federal case).

Tolling statutes vary from state to state and may not always be helpful. For example, the Indiana statute applies only if the case is dismissed for reasons other than negligence in prosecuting it. One court has held that failure to exhaust constitutes negligence under the Indiana statute. The statute was not tolled and the claim was time-barred in that case. Thomas v. Timko, 428 F. Supp. 2d 855, 857 (N.D. Ind. 2006).

416. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 204(a) (1999) ("Where the commencement of an action has been stayed by a court or by statutory prohibition, the duration of the stay is not a part of the time within which the action must be commenced"). The PLRA exhaustion requirement that says you cannot file suit until you have exhausted would appear to be a "statutory prohibition" by the New York statute's standards.

417. Clifford v. Gibbs, 298 F.3d 328, 333 (5th Cir. 2002) (applying equitable tolling because otherwise the plaintiff would be unable to bring his claim); McCoy v. Goord, 255 F. Supp. 2d 233, 253 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (extending the statute of limitations as a matter of fairness). Courts are more likely to apply equitable tolling if there is some reason it would be unfair to dismiss your case as time-barred, like if you made a technical mistake the first time you tried to exhaust. But see Crump v. Darling, No. 1:06-cv-20, 2007 U.S. Dist LEXIS 20000, at *45–47 (W.D. Mich. Mar. 21, 2007) (unpublished) (denying equitable tolling to prisoner whose case was dismissed for non-exhaustion).

418. Wright v. Hollingsworth, 260 F.3d 357, 359 (5th Cir. 2001) (granting equitable tolling because the plaintiff had difficulty raising a waiver claim earlier); see also Clifford v. Gibbs, 298 F.3d 328, 333 (5th Cir. 2002). See footnotes 463–66, below, for more on equitable tolling.

419. See Booth v. Churner, 532 U.S. 731, 121 S. Ct. 1819, 149 L. Ed. 2d 958 (2001) (requiring administrative proceedings to be exhausted even when monetary relief is requested).

420. See Wisenbaker v. Farwell, 341 F. Supp. 2d 1160, 1166–68 (D. Nev. 2004) (applying equitable tolling where prisoner's first suit was filed before he finished exhausting; citing his diligence in pursuing his claim, his pro se status, and his probable lack of understanding of exhaustion law); McCoy v. Goord, 255 F. Supp. 2d 233, 253 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) ("Courts may combine a dismissal without prejudice with equitable tolling (when a judicial stay is not available) to extend the statute of limitations 'as a matter of fairness where a plaintiff has ... asserted his rights in the wrong forum.'"; suggesting in dictum that time spent in federal court may also be tolled) (citation omitted).

421. See Neal v. Goord, 267 F.3d 116, 122 (2d Cir. 2001) ("courts must take care not to frustrate the policy concerns … by allowing inmate-plaintiffs to file or proceed with lawsuits before exhausting administrative remedies.").

422. Fed. R. Civ. P. 60(b)(1),(5),(6).

suits that had become time-barred after dismissal. These circumstances include cases in which the plaintiff was unfairly affected by a change or ambiguity in the law[423] as well as cases where the plaintiff made an error of law.[424] The fact that a case has not yet been heard on the merits weighs heavily in favor of granting such relief.[425] Although several courts have held that Rule 60(b) cannot be used to reinstate cases after a dismissal for non-exhaustion, these courts have not addressed these specific issues.[426]

It also would seem logical that a prisoner who has filed an action that will likely be dismissed for failure to exhaust or to exhaust properly should file a second action after the claim has been exhausted and before the limitations period has run. After doing so, the prisoner can move to voluntarily dismiss the first action.[427]

One court has held that courts may consider claims to be exhausted even if the exhaustion occurred outside the limitations period.[428] This holding can only apply if the prisoner is challenging a continuing wrong that persists into the limitations period; if the wrong itself happened and was completed outside the limitations period, the claim will be time-barred.

F. Mental or Emotional Injury

The PLRA provides:

> No Federal civil action may be brought by a prisoner confined in a jail, prison, or other correctional facility, for mental or emotional injury suffered while in custody without a prior showing of physical injury.[429]

A similar requirement was added by the PLRA to the Federal Tort Claims Act ("FTCA"):

> No person convicted of a felony who is incarcerated while awaiting sentencing or while serving a sentence may bring a civil action against the United States

---

423. See N.C. Alliance for Transp. Reform, Inc. v. U.S. Dept. of Transp., 104 F. Supp. 2d 599, 605–06 (M.D.N.C. 2000) (granting relief from judgment under Rule 60(b)(6) "catchall" provision so a plaintiff could file a timely attorneys' fees motion after being misled by local rules about the time limit; in the alternative, equitably tolling the statutory limitations period); see Bridgeway Corp. v. Citibank, N.A., 132 F. Supp. 2d 297, 300–01, 303 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) (granting relief under Rule 60(b)(6) to reinstate claims of litigant whose foreign judgment on the same subject matter was ruled unenforceable; equitable tolling applied; stating "[e]quitable tolling permits a party to sue after the passing of the statute of limitations if the party has acted with reasonable care and diligence").

424. See Scott v. U.S. Envtl. Protection Agency, 185 F.R.D. 202, 204–06 (E.D. Pa. 1999) (granting plaintiff relief under Rule 60(b)(1) from voluntary dismissal because plaintiff erroneously believed she could pursue her Federal Tort Claims Act claim with other claims in state court and the court concluded this was "excusable neglect"), reconsideration denied, No. 97-6529, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8240 (E.D. Pa. June 2, 1999) (unpublished).

425. See Bridgeway Corp. v. Citibank, N.A., 132 F. Supp. 2d at 301 (stating that "[p]laintiff has not had an opportunity to have its underlying claims considered by this Court ... Thus, to allow the judgment to stand would deny plaintiff the opportunity to have its allegations tested under appropriate standards."); Scott v. U.S. Envtl. Protection Agency, 185 F.R.D. 202, 206 (E.D. Pa. 1999) ("[T]he law favors determination of controversies on the merits."), reconsideration denied, No. 97-6529, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8240 (E.D. Pa. June 2, 1999) (unpublished).

426. Strope v. McKune, No. 05-3344, 2006 U.S. App. LEXIS 2750, at *3–5 (10th Cir. Feb. 2, 2006) (unpublished) (declining to allow submission of additional evidence of exhaustion), cert. granted, judgment vacated, 127 S. Ct. 1215 (2007); Baggett v. Smith, No. 1:05-cv-804, 2006 U.S. Dist LEXIS 44859, at *1–3 (W.D.Mich. June 29, 2006) (unpublished) (holding that plaintiff was not entitled to relief from the Court's judgment dismissing his complaint for failure to demonstrate exhaustion of available administrative remedies when he subsequently exhausted his administrative remedies. However, court held that plaintiff could file a new civil rights action setting forth his exhausted claims).

427. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 41(a) concerning voluntary dismissals. While it would be preferable from the prisoner's point of view to file an amended or supplemental complaint after exhaustion, most courts have held that exhaustion must be completed before the initial complaint is filed, see Johnson v. Jones, 340 F.3d 624, 627–28 (8th Cir. 2003) ("Under the plain language of section 1997e(a), an inmate must exhaust administrative remedies before filing suit in federal court. Thus, in considering motions to dismiss for failure to exhaust under section 1997e(a), the district court must look to the time of filing, not the time the district court is rendering its decision, to determine if exhaustion has occurred. If exhaustion was not completed at the time of filing, dismissal is mandatory."), and some have explicitly held that an initial failure to exhaust cannot be cured by filing a new complaint in the same case after exhaustion. See Cox v. Mayer, 332 F.3d 422, 428 (6th Cir. 2003).

428. Harrison v. Stalder, No. 06-2825, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 88277 (E.D. La. Dec. 5, 2006) (granting defendants' motion to dismiss for failure to exhaust administrative remedies).

429. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e) (2006).

> or an agency, officer, or employee of the Government, for mental or emotional injury suffered while in custody without a prior showing of physical injury.[430]

Note that this FTCA section applies only to convicted felons and not to detainees or those convicted of misdemeanors, unlike 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e). So far, the courts have upheld the constitutionality of the mental/emotional injury provision, at least as limited to damage claims.[431]

The statute refers to actions "brought by a prisoner confined in a jail," etc., and most courts say it does not apply to cases filed by persons who sue after they are released from prison.[432] However, a few have disagreed.[433] Courts are divided over whether the provision continues to apply to a person who sues while in prison and then is released.[434] If a case is dismissed because of this statute, dismissal should be without prejudice for refiling once the prisoner is no longer in jail.[435]

The Eleventh Circuit has held that the statute applies to a claim that arose before, and was unrelated to, a prisoner's incarceration.[436] The same circuit has held that in a case removed to federal court from state court, § 1997e(e) does not apply to claims based solely on state law. The court therefore implied, but did not actually hold, that federal claims filed in state court are governed by the statute.[437] This holding is questionable. The statute says that "no Federal civil action may be brought" for mental or emotional injury without physical injury.[438] The phrase "may be brought" ties the statute's applicability to the time when the case is filed.[439] If that is the case, a suit filed in state court is not a "Federal civil action" when brought, so §

---

430. 28 U.S.C. § 1346(b)(2) (2006).

431. See Davis v. District of Columbia, 158 F.3d 1342, 1347 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (The prisoner contended that 1997e(e) violated his right to equal protection and unduly burdened his Fifth Amendment right of access to the courts. The court determined that 1997e(e) had no restrictive effect on claims for declaratory or injunctive relief, it merely limited the availability of damages. After conducting a rational basis review, the court concluded that 1997e(e) did not violate the plaintiff's right to equal protection or his right of access to courts); Zehner v. Trigg, 133 F.3d 459, 461–63 (7th Cir. 1997) (explaining that immunity doctrines, like restrictions on damage remedies, are constitutional because a remedy of damages does not need to be available for every constitutional violation).

432. Harris v. Garner, 216 F.3d 970, 976–80 (11th Cir. 2000) (en banc) (holding that 1997e(e) applies to a complaint filed while the plaintiff was detained in a jail, prison, or other correctional facility); Kerr v. Puckett, 138 F.3d 321, 323 (7th Cir. 1998) (holding 1997e(e) did not apply to an ex-prisoner who filed a complaint after he was released from prison).

433. Cox v. Malone, 199 F. Supp. 2d 135, 140 (S.D.N.Y. 2002), aff'd, Cox v. Malone, 56 Fed. App'x. 43, 44 (2d Cir. February 20, 2003) (unpublished) ("Section 1997e(e), on the other hand, is a substantive limitation on the type of actions that can be brought by prisoners. Its purpose is to weed out frivolous claims where only emotional injuries are alleged. This purpose is accomplished whether section 1997e(e) is applied to suits brought by inmates incarcerated at the time of filing or by former inmates incarcerated at the time of the alleged injury but subsequently released. The fortuity of release on parole does not affect the kind of damages that must be alleged in order to survive the gate-keeping function of section 1997e(e). Because plaintiff's suit alleges only emotional injuries, it is barred by the PLRA irrespective of his status as a parolee at the time of filing."). Several recent decisions have rejected the reasoning of Cox v. Malone. See McBean v. City of New York, 2009 U.S. Dist. Lexis 72690, at *76 (S.D.N.Y 2009) ("[B]ecause intervenor-plaintiffs were not incarcerated at the time this action was commenced, the Court finds that § 1997e(e) is inapplicable and does not preclude them from proceeding with this litigation."); Kelsey v. County of Schoharie, No. 04-CV-299 (LEK/DRH), 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17057, at *1-10 (N.D.N.Y Aug. 5, 2005) (unpublished) ("Because plaintiffs were not incarcerated at the time this action was commenced, § 1997e(e) is inapplicable…").

434. Compare Harris v. Garner, 216 F.3d 970, 973–76 (11th Cir. 2000) (en banc) (holding that released plaintiffs remain prisoners for purposes of § 1997e(e) as long as they brought the lawsuit at the time they were still imprisoned but dismissing their claims for monetary relief without prejudice so that they my re-file when they are no longer confined), with Prendergast v. Janecka, No. 00-CV-3099, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9689, at *2–3 (E.D. Pa. July 10, 2001) (unpublished) (holding that the provision ceases to apply when a post-release amended complaint is filed).

435. Douglas v. Yates, 535 F.3d 1316, 1320 (11th Cir. 2008) ("We have interpreted this statute to require the dismissal of several prisoners' complaints for emotional injury 'without prejudice to their being re-filed at a time when the plaintiffs are not confined.'") (citing Harris v. Garner, 216 F.3d 970, 985 (11th Cir.2000) (en banc)). As explained in the next section, dismissal of the entire action may not be appropriate, since some courts hold that the statute restricts only compensatory damages.

436. Napier v. Preslicka, 314 F.3d 528, 532–34 (11th Cir. 2002), rehearing denied, 331 F.3d 1189 (11th Cir. 2003), cert denied, 124 S. Ct. 1038 (2004). This interpretation sharply divided both the panel and the court as a whole and produced vigorous dissents.

437. Mitchell v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 294 F.3d 1309, 1315 (11th Cir. 2002).

438. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e) (emphasis supplied) (2006).

439. See Craig v. Eberly, 164 F.3d 490, 494-95 (10th Cir. 1998) (holding that the §1997e(e) did not apply

1997e(e) should not be applicable to it under any circumstances, and certainly not when the case is in federal court only because of the adverse party. However, the statute has been applied to state law claims filed in federal courts under their supplemental jurisdiction.[440]

1. What Does the Statute Do?

Section 1997e(e) prohibits "action[s] ... for mental or emotional injury."[441] If you have one claim for mental or emotional injury, and another claim for something else entirely, like loss or damage to property, the second claim can go forward.[442] Also, most courts have interpreted the statute to prohibit only awards of compensatory damages for mental or emotional injury. That means you could still get nominal or punitive damages, or an injunction, for mental or emotional injury.[443] (A minority of courts have said that you cannot get punitive damages for such injury.)[444]

The applicability and effect of the statute is typically addressed on motions to dismiss and for summary judgment. A few district courts have refused to decide it on motion, holding, "[t]he amount of damages Plaintiff may be entitled to recover is a determination reserved for the trier of fact, not the Court on a summary judgment motion."[445] The first circuit-level decision to address the question explicitly held that the provision creates an affirmative defense rather than a jurisdictional requirement, meaning that the defendant must raise the issue.[446] If the statute creates an affirmative defense, you do not have to plead the existence of a physical injury in your complaint, but the district court is free to dismiss if the complaint on its face shows that the plaintiff is a prisoner seeking damages for mental or emotional injury without physical injury.[447] However, again by analogy to the exhaustion requirement, courts should not be able to retroactively to a complaint that was filed before the PLRA was enacted); Swan v. Banks, 160 F.3d 1258, 1259 (9th Cir. 1998) ("…the plain meaning of [§1997e(e)] is that it applies only to actions that were brought after enactment of the PLRA, and not to actions that had already been filed.").

---

440. See Hines v. Oklahoma, CIV-07-197-R 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 77291, at *16 (W.D. Okla. Oct. 17, 2007) (unpublished) ("Plaintiff's claims for compensatory damages for intentional infliction of emotional distress are barred by the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) because Plaintiff has not alleged that he suffered a physical injury as required by 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e).").

441. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e) (2006).

442. Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 222, 127 S. Ct. 910, 925, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 814 (2007) ("Section 1997e(e) contains similar language, "[n]o ... action may be brought ... for mental or emotional injury suffered while in custody without a prior showing of physical injury," yet respondents cite no case interpreting this provision to require dismissal of the entire lawsuit if only one claim does not comply, and again we see little reason for such an approach."); Robinson v. Page, 170 F.3d 747, 749 (7th Cir. 1999) ("If the suit contains separate claims, neither involving physical injury, and in one the prisoner claims damages for mental or emotional suffering and in the other damages for some other type of injury, the first claim is barred by the statute but the second is unaffected.").

443. Hutchins v. McDaniels, 512 F.3d 193, 196–98 (5th Cir. 2007) (court held that plaintiff could recover nominal or punitive damages, despite § 1997e(e)); Royal v. Kautzky, 375 F.3d 720, 723 (8th Cir. 2004) (because plaintiff's claim did not involve mental or emotional injury, the PLRA did not bar him from seeking nominal damages, punitive damages, and injunctive and declaratory relief); Calhoun v. DeTella, 319 F.3d 936, 941 (7th Cir. 2003) (nominal damages "are awarded to vindicate rights, not to compensate for resulting injuries," and punitive damages "are designed to punish and deter wrongdoers for deprivations of constitutional rights, they are not compensation for emotional and mental injury"); Thompson v. Carter, 284 F.3d 411, 418 (2d Cir. 2002) (statute restricting prisoner's recovery for in-custody mental or emotional injury did not prevent prisoner from obtaining injunctive and declaratory relief, nominal damages, punitive damages, compensatory damages for loss of property, or return of seized medications).

444. See Smith v. Allen, 502 F.3d 1255, 1271–72 (11th Cir. 2007) (stating that compensatory and punitive damages are precluded by PLRA because the plaintiff did not allege he suffered physical harm, however, nominal damages were available because plaintiff alleged a violation of a statutory right); Davis v. District of Columbia, 158 F.3d 1342, 1348 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (arguing that "much if not all of Congress's evident intent would be thwarted if prisoners could surmount § 1997e(e) simply by adding a claim for punitive damages and an assertion that the defendant acted maliciously," though no physical injury occurred).

445. Thomas v. Thomas, 07-CV-154(CDL) 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 83072, at *6 (S.D. Ga. July 25, 2007) (unpublished); accord Johnson v. Raemisch, 557 F. Supp. 2d 964, 975 (W.D. Wis. May 23, 2008) (unpublished) (stating that while 1997e(e) precluded plaintiff from recovering damages for pain and suffering, availability of compensatory and punitive damages had to be determined at trial); Thompson v. Caruso, No. 2:04-CV-204, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14725, at *3–5 (W.D. Mich. Feb. 27, 2008) (unpublished) (plaintiff in 1st Amendment case would be allowed to present proof and argue for recovery of nominal, compensatory, and punitive damages for all injuries except mental and emotional ones).

446. Douglas v. Yates, 535 F.3d 1316, 1320 (11th Cir. 2008).

447. Douglas v. Yates, 535 F.3d 1316, 1320 (11th Cir. 2008).

dismiss where the plaintiff simply fails to plead a physical injury without otherwise characterizing his injury.

2. What Is Mental or Emotional Injury?

The courts have not completely worked out the meaning of "mental or emotional injury." Some courts have interpreted it narrowly; one court said, for example, "[t]he term 'mental or emotional injury' has a well understood meaning as referring to such things as stress, fear, and depression, and other psychological impacts."[448] Some courts have also recognized a variety of constitutional injuries that are neither physical nor mental or emotional, and therefore are not affected by the statute.[449]

Other courts, however, seem to assume that any violation of your constitutional rights that does not result in physical injury or loss or damage to property is only mental or emotional injury.[450] For example, in Allah v. Al-Hafeez,[451] the prisoner complained that prison policies prevented him from attending services of his religion, and the court said he couldn't pursue compensatory damages because the injury for which he sought compensation was a mental or emotional one.[452] Many courts have similarly assumed that other sorts of deprivations of liberty cause only mental or emotional injury, including claims of unlawful arrest and confinement,[453] racial discrimination,[454] and many others.[455] However, you should argue that these types of

---

448. Amaker v. Haponik, No. 98 Civ. 2663 (JGK), 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1568, at *22–23 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 17, 1999) (unpublished) (also noting that requiring physical injury in all cases would make the term "mental or emotional injury" superfluous); see also Robinson v. Page, 170 F.3d 747, 748 (7th Cir. 1999) (restricting the domain of the statute to suits in which mental or emotional injury is claimed).

449. Courts have acknowledged that § 1997e(e) does not bar compensatory damages for loss of property. Thompson v. Carter, 284 F.3d 411, 418 (2d Cir. 2002); Robinson v. Page, 170 F.3d 747, 748 (7th Cir. 1999). Other such interests that at least some courts have acknowledged are neither physical nor emotional in nature include First Amendment rights, see Canell v. Lightner, 143 F.3d 1210, 1213 (9th Cir.1998); Searles v. Van Bebber, 251 F.3d 869, 876 (10th Cir. 2001); claims of exclusion from an alcohol treatment program in violation of the disability statutes, see Parker v. Mich. Dept. of Corr., No. 4:01CV11, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18931, at *5–6 (W.D. Mich. Nov. 9, 2001) (unpublished); 4th Amendment bodily privacy claim and 8th Amendment conditions of confinement and medical care claims, see Waters v. Andrews, No. 97-CV-407, 2000 WL 1611126, at *4 (W.D.N.Y. Oct. 16, 2000) (unpublished); and freedom from racial discrimination, see Mason v. Schriro, 45 F. Supp. 2d 709, 716–20 (W.D. Mo. 1999). See also Lewis v. Sheahan, 35 F. Supp. 2d 633, 637 n.3 (N.D. Ill. 1999) (acknowledging right to access the courts).

450. Worse, there is a persistent tendency in some courts simply to declare, for example: "[A] a prisoner may not maintain an action for monetary damages against state officials based on an alleged constitutional violation absent some showing of a physical injury." Charles v. Nance, 186 F. App'x 494, 495 (5th Cir. 2006) (unpublished); accord, e.g., Nelis v. Kingston, No. 06-C-1220, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86036, at *18 (E.D. Wis. Nov. 20, 2007) (unpublished) ("under the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA), recovery in prisoner lawsuits is limited where, as here, there is no showing of physical injury").

451. Allah v. al-Hafeez, 226 F.3d 247, 247–250 (3d Cir. 2000).

452. Allah v. al-Hafeez, 226 F.3d 247, 250 (3d Cir. 2000) ("Allah seeks substantial damages for the harm he suffered as a result of defendants' alleged violation of his First Amendment right to free exercise of religion. As we read his complaint, the only actual injury that could form the basis for the award he seeks would be mental and/or emotional injury.") At this point, there is a very long list of decisions holding deprivations of religious rights amount only to mental or emotional injury. See, e.g., Mayfield v. Tex. Dept. of Criminal Justice, 529 F.3d 599, 605–06 (5th Cir. 2008) (applying § 1997e(e) to claims of restricted religious exercise); Sisney v. Reisch, 533 F. Supp. 2d 952, 973–74 (D.S.D. 2008) (applying § 1997e(e) to various religious deprivations).

453. Brown v. Sudduth, 255 F. App'x 803, 808 (5th Cir. 2007) (applying § 1997e(e) to claim of false arrest; plaintiff "sought compensatory damages for the sole alleged injury of liberty deprivation. Having not alleged a physical injury, the district court correctly concluded that Brown's claim for compensatory damages must fail"); Brumett v. Santa Rosa County, No. 3:07cv448/LAC/EMT, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 89061, at *4–6 (N.D. Fla. Dec. 4, 2007) (unpublished) (claim of six months' illegal detention was not sufficient for relief because it failed to demonstrate a physical injury); Campbell v. Johnson, No. 3:06cv365/RV/EMT, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 72146, at *2 (N.D. Fla. Oct. 3, 2006) (refusal to accept paperwork and collateral for release on bond).

454. Jones v. Pancake, No. 3:06CV-P188-H, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 84309, at *6–8 (W.D. Ky. Aug. 17, 2007) (unpublished) (allowing plaintiff to amend a racial discrimination claim to include relief for nominal and punitive damages).

455. Jordan v. Corr. Corp. of Am., No. 4:08-CV-05 (CDL), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 61846, at *3 (M.D. Ga. Mar. 11, 2008) (unpublished) (confiscation of mail); Robinson v. Dept. of Corr., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50817, at *10 (N.D. Fla. July 13, 2007) (unpublished) (stopping of mail and delaying filing of lawsuits as well as deprivation of religious materials), report and recommendation adopted, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 75961 (N.D. Fla. Oct. 12, 2007); Ivy v. New Albany City Police Dept., No. 3:06CV112-P-A, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 79882 (N.D. Miss. Oct. 31, 2006) (unpublished) (being held naked in an isolation cell); Caudell v. Rose, Nos. 7:04CV00557, 7:04CV00558, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10251, constitutional violations are really injuries to your liberty, and not just a matter of mental or emotional injury.

Some courts have also held that complaints of exposure to unconstitutional prison living conditions—that is, living conditions that deny the "minimal civilized measure of life's necessities"[456]—are claims of mental or emotional injury barred by Section 1997e(e) unless they also allege physical injury.[457] These holdings seem inconsistent with the Supreme Court's statements that the objective severity of the conditions, and not their effect on the prisoner, determines whether they are lawful or not.[458] It is questionable whether a claim alleging conditions that are objectively intolerable is really an "action for mental or emotional injury," even if the conditions also lead to such injury. [459]

We agree with the courts who have held that "the violation of a constitutional right is an independent injury that is immediately cognizable and outside the purview of Section 1997e(e),"[460] completely separate from any mental or emotional injury. Some courts have found the same principle applicable to cases about unconstitutional conditions of confinement or restrictive confinement without due process.[461] at *8 (W.D. Va. May 27, 2005) (unpublished) (seizure of legal papers), report and recommendation adopted, 378 F. Supp. 2d 725 (W.D. Va. 2005); Ashann Ra v. Virginia, 112 F. Supp. 2d 559, 566 (E.D. Va. 2000) (holding that a complaint that a prisoner was routinely viewed in the nude by opposite-sex staff stated a constitutional claim sufficiently established to defeat qualified immunity, but was not actionable because of the mental/emotional injury provision).

---

456. Rhodes v. Chapman, 452 U.S. 337, 347, 101 S. Ct. 2392, 2399, 69 L. Ed. 2d 59, 68 (1981) (holding that the practice of double celling is not cruel and unusual punishment prohibited by the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments).

457. See, e.g., Harden-Bey v. Rutter, 524 F.3d 789, 796 (6th Cir. 2008) (barring damages for three years in administrative segregation); Merchant v. Hawk-Sawyer, 37 Fed. App'x. 143, 145–6 (6th Cir. 2002) (barring damages because plaintiff did not allege that conditions in a segregated housing unit caused him physical injury); Harper v. Showers, 174 F.3d 716, 719–20 (5th Cir. 1999) (barring damage claims for placement in filthy cells formerly occupied by psychiatric patients and for exposure to deranged behavior of those patients). But see Jackson v. Carey, 353 F.3d 750, 758 (9th Cir. 2003) (holding that an allegation of placement in segregation without due process might be saved from the mental/emotional injury bar by allegations of inadequate medical care in the segregation unit).

458. Wilson v. Seiter, 501 U.S. 294, 303, 111 S. Ct. 2321, 2326, 115 L. Ed. 2d 271, 282 (1991); see Helling v. McKinney, 509 U.S. 25, 35–37, 113 S. Ct. 2475, 2481, 125 L. Ed. 2d 22, 33–34 (1993) (instructing as to objective assessment of environmental tobacco smoke exposure); see also Fields v. Ruiz, No. 1:03-CV-6364-OWW DLB-P, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45981, at *20 (E.D. Cal. June 25, 2007) (unpublished) (for 8th Amendment claims, "the issue is the nature of the deprivation, not the injury"), report and recommendation adopted, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 66671 (E.D. Cal. Sept. 10, 2007); Armstrong v. Drahos, No. 01 C 2697, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1838, at *6 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 6, 2002) (unpublished) ("Because the Eighth Amendment is understood to protect not only the individual, but the standards of society, the Eighth Amendment can be violated even when no pain is inflicted, if the punishment offends basic standards of human dignity.").

459. A few decisions make this distinction. In Nelson v. Cal. Dept. of Corr., No. C 02-5476 SI (pr), 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4521, at *21 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 18, 2004) (unpublished), aff'd, 131 F. App'x 549 (9th Cir. 2005), the plaintiff complained of being provided only boxer shorts and a T-shirt for outdoor exercise in cold weather. The court said: "Even if Nelson's complaint does include a request for damages for mental and emotional injury, it also includes a claim for an Eighth Amendment violation as to which the § 1997e(e) requirement does not apply. In other words, damages would be available for a violation of his Eighth Amendment rights without regard to his ability to show physical injury." See Pippin v. Frank, No. 04-C-582-C, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5576, at *4 (W.D. Wis. Mar. 30, 2005) (unpublished) (stating that § 1997e(e) precludes claims for mental or emotional injury but not a claim that plaintiff was "falsely confined" in segregation as a result of constitutional violations); see also Aldridge v. 4 John Does, No. 5:00-CV-17-J, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22113, at *10 (W.D. Ky. Sept. 30, 2005) (unpublished) (stating generally that "damages resulting from constitutional violations" are "separate categories of damages" from physical or mental injuries in case where plaintiff alleged medical deprivations, protracted segregation, and denial of access to courts).

460. Shaheed-Muhammad v. Dipaolo, 393 F. Supp. 2d 80, 108 (D. Mass. 2005); accord Rowe v. Shake, 196 F.3d 778, 781–82 (7th Cir. 1999) ("A prisoner is entitled to judicial relief for a violation of his First Amendment rights aside from any physical, mental, or emotional injury he may have sustained."); Carr v. Whittenburg, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24565 at *4 (S.D. Ill. Apr. 28, 2006) (stating that specific 1st Amendment violations may be compensable through "general damages" or "presumed damages" even without proof of injury, though damages cannot be recovered based on the abstract value or importance of the right); Lipton v. County of Orange, NY, 315 F. Supp. 2d 434, 457 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) ("Although § 1997e(e) applies to plaintiff's First Amendment retaliation claim, a First Amendment deprivation presents a cognizable injury standing alone and the PLRA 'does not bar a separate award of damages to compensate the plaintiff for the First Amendment violation in and of itself.'") (quoting Ford v. McGinnis, 198 F. Supp. 2d 363, 366 (S.D.N.Y. 2001).

461. Aldridge v. 4 John Does, No. 5:00-CV-17-J, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22113, at *10 (W.D. Ky. Sept. 30, 2005) (ruling in case involving medical deprivations, protracted segregation, and denial of access to courts); accord Mitchell v. Horn, 318 F.3d 523, 534 n. 10 (3d Cir. 2003) (stating that requests for damages for loss of "status, custody level and any chance at commutation" resulting from a disciplinary hearing were "unrelated to mental injury" and "not affected by §

That approach is consistent with tort law, which is supposed to be the basis of the law of damages under 42 U.S.C. § 1983,[462] but which courts seem mostly to have ignored in PLRA cases. Historically, tort law divided damages into six categories: injury to property, physical injuries, mental injuries, injuries to family relations, injuries to personal liberty, and injuries to reputation.[463] Under that approach, deprivation of your religious freedom or placement in segregation without due process would injure your personal liberty. Those deprivations might inflict mental or emotional injury too, but that injury would be separate and in addition to the deprivation of liberty.

A good example of the proper distinction between mental or emotional injury and deprivation of personal liberty is the Second Circuit decision in Kerman v. City of New York.[464] In that case, the plaintiff had been placed in a mental hospital against his will, and he alleged both that he had been seized in violation of the Fourth Amendment and that he had been subjected to the tort of false imprisonment. The court treated mental and emotional injury as a completely separate category of injury from the plaintiff's loss of liberty, stating: "The damages recoverable for loss of liberty for the period spent in a wrongful confinement are separable from damages recoverable for such injuries as physical harm, embarrassment, or emotional suffering; even absent such other injuries, an award of several thousand dollars may be appropriate simply for several hours' loss of liberty."[465]

You may not be able to get a court to look at your case this way. Some courts have rejected this approach outright.[466] Others have not settled the issue. If you are bringing a case about something that did not cause you physical injury, you should make it very clear that you are seeking damages for something other than mental or emotional injury. For example, if you are suing for being placed in segregation without due process for a long period, and you were not physically injured as a result, do not write in your complaint that "plaintiff seeks damages for mental anguish and psychological torture." You are better off with something like this:

> Plaintiff seeks compensatory damages for the loss of privileges and quality of life in his prison living conditions, and loss of the limited liberty enjoyed by prisoners, resulting from his segregated confinement, in that he was confined for 23 hours a day in a cell roughly 60 feet square, and deprived of most of his personal property as well as the ability to work, attend educational and vocational programs, watch television, associate with other prisoners, attend outdoor recreation in a congregate setting with the ability to engage in sports and other congregate recreational activities, attend meals with other prisoners, attend religious services [and whatever other privileges you may have lost].
>
> Plaintiff does not seek compensatory damages for mental or emotional distress.
>
> Plaintiff seeks punitive damages against defendant(s) [names] for their 1997e(e)'s requirements."); Benge v. Scalzo, No. CV 04-1687-PHX-DGC (CRP), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 40782, at *28 (D. Ariz. May 21, 2008) (stating that allegation of psychiatric neglect was not subject to § 1997e(e)); Wittkamper v. Arpaio, No. CV 05-2073-PHX-MHM-MHB, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 37475, at *5 (D. Ariz. May 6, 2008) (holding that allegations of unsanitary conditions were not subject to § 1997e(e)); Davis v. Arpaio, No. CV 07-0424-PHX-DGC (MEA), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35288, at *6–7 (D. Ariz. Apr. 23, 2008) (holding allegations of denial of rights with respect to clothing, hygiene, legal calls, recreation, library access, medical problems, sleep deprivation, etc., were not subject to § 1997e(e)); Cockcroft v. Kirkland, No. C 05-1080 MHP (pr), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29465, at *19 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 10, 2008) (stating that "the violation of a constitutional right has a compensatory value regardless of what the physical/emotional injuries are." Plaintiff had alleged exposure to waste from back-flushing toilet).

462. Smith v. Wade, 461 U.S. 30, 34, 103 S. Ct. 1625, 1629, 75 L. Ed. 2d 632, 638 (1983); Carey v. Piphus, 435 U.S. 247, 257–58, 98 S. Ct. 1042, 1049, 55 L. Ed. 2d 252, 260–61 (1978).

463. Arthur G. Sedgwick & Joseph H. Beale, Jr., 1 Sedgwick's Treatise on Damages 50–51 (8th ed. 1891).

464. Kerman v. City of New York, 374 F.3d 93 (2d Cir. 2004).

465. Kerman v. City of New York, 374 F.3d 93, 125 (2d Cir. 2004).

466. Pearson v. Welborn, 471 F.3d 732, 744–45 (7th Cir. 2006); Royal v. Kautzky, 375 F.3d 720, 724 (8th Cir. 2004) (declining to award a prisoner who spent 60 days in segregation "some indescribable and indefinite damage allegedly arising from a violation of his constitutional rights").

> willful and malicious conduct in confining the plaintiff to segregation after a hearing in which he was denied basic rights to due process of law.

If you did suffer some physical injury from being in segregation, you should still protect yourself (in case the court does not find your injury serious enough to satisfy the statute) with a damages demand similar to the one above that distinguishes mental and emotional injury from the other injuries you suffered. If you suffered physical injury, you should also substitute "Plaintiff also seeks compensatory damages for the mental or emotional distress resulting from his prolonged confinement in segregation without due process of law" for the second paragraph in the above example.

You would take a similar approach in demanding damages for any other kind of constitutional violation that didn't cause you physical injury, like deprivations of religious freedom, freedom of speech, placement in filthy and disgusting physical conditions, etc.

There is no guarantee of success if you take the above advice. Additionally, constitutional rights are very hard to value (meaning that courts will often just award nominal damages[467]), and the Supreme Court has cautioned that damage awards cannot be based on the "abstract 'importance' of a constitutional right."[468] However, courts have made compensatory awards for violations of First Amendment and other intangible rights based on particular circumstances and without reference to mental or emotional injury.[469] You should call this fact to the court's attention if prison officials argue that you can only recover nominal damages.

3. What is Physical Injury?

Prisoners must show physical injury in order to recover damages for mental or emotional injury, but courts have not fully explained what it takes to satisfy that requirement. The injury "must be more than de minimis, but need not be significant."[470] However, courts disagree over where the de minimis line is actually drawn. One appeals court has said that injury need not be observable or diagnosable, or require treatment by a medical care professional, to meet the § 1997e(e) standard.[471] But a much-cited district court decision holds that, under § 1997e(e):

> A physical injury is an observable or diagnosable medical condition requiring treatment by a medical care professional. It is not a sore muscle, an aching back, a scratch, an abrasion, a bruise, etc., which lasts even up to two or three weeks... . [It is] more than the types and kinds of bruises and abrasions about which the Plaintiff complains. Injuries treatable at home and with over-the-counter drugs, heating pads, rest, etc., do not fall within the parameters of 1997e(e).[472]

---

467. Williams v. Kaufman County, 352 F.3d 994, 1014-1115 (5th Cir. 2003) (noting frequency of nominal awards under § 1983); see also Carlo v. City of Chino, 105 F.3d 493, 495 (9th Cir. 1997) (noting nominal award for denial of phone access to overnight detainee); Sockwell v. Phelps, 20 F.3d 187, 189 (5th Cir. 1994) (noting nominal award for racial segregation).

468. Memphis Cmty. Sch. Dist. v. Stachura, 477 U.S. 299, 310, 106 S. Ct. 2537, 2545, 91 L. Ed. 2d 249, 261 (1986).

469. See, e.g., Sallier v. Brooks, 343 F.3d 868, 880 (6th Cir. 2003) (affirming jury award of $750 in compensatory damages for each instance of unlawful opening of legal mail); Goff v. Burton, 91 F.3d 1188, 1192 (8th Cir. 1996), cert. denied, 512 U.S. 1209, 114 S. Ct. 2684, 129 L. Ed. 2d 817 (2004) (affirming $2250 award at $10 a day for lost privileges resulting from a retaliatory transfer to a higher security prison); Vanscoy v. Hicks, 691 F. Supp. 1336, 1338 (M.D. Ala. 1988) (awarding $50 for pretextual exclusion from religious service, without evidence of mental anguish or suffering).

470. Siglar v. Hightower, 112 F.3d 191, 193 (5th Cir. 1997). A "de minimis" injury is one where the harm is very minimal.

471. Oliver v. Keller, 289 F.3d 623, 628 (9th Cir. 2002); accord Mansoori v. Shaw, No. 99 C 6155, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11670, at *11 (N.D. Ill. June 28, 2002) (stating that injury need not be shown by objective evidence). Another court has rejected an effort to read "long-term" into the physical injury requirement. Glenn v. Copeland, No. 5:02cv158-RS/WCS, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38466, at *11 (N.D. Fla. June 9, 2006) (unpublished) ("Presumably ... any physical injury, even if short-term, is sufficient" to meet the statutory threshold).

472. Luong v. Hatt, 979 F. Supp. 481, 485–86 (N.D. Tex. 1997). But see Pierce v. County of Orange, 526 F.3d 1190, 1224 (9th Cir. 2008) ("Our court has rejected as overly restrictive the standard for de minimis injuries espoused by the Northern District of Texas in Luong v. Hatt ... ."; noting that bedsores and bladder infections resulting from inadequate accommodation of paraplegic's disabilities met Luong standard).

Not surprisingly, several courts have dismissed identifiable traumatic injuries as de minimis.[473] But others have found relatively superficial injuries to be actionable under § 1997e(e).[474]

Several courts have held that the physical manifestations of emotional distress are not physical injuries for purposes of this provision.[475] Decisions are split on the question of whether the risk of future injury meets the Section 1997e(e) standard.[476] Decisions are also split over how closely physical injury must be connected to mental or emotional injury for the latter to be actionable.[477]

A variety of injuries short of visible damage to body parts have been held to satisfy Section 1997e(e). Most courts (but not all) have held that sexual assault is a physical injury.[478] Other injuries that at least some courts have held satisfy the physical injury requirement include: bodily disturbances resulting from medication withdrawal, overdose or error;[479] the consequences of failure to treat illness or injury, both 473. See, e.g., Griggs v. Horton, No. 7:05-CV-220-R, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24888, at *2–3 (N.D. Tex. Mar. 28, 2008) (unpublished) (holding that wrist abrasion and tenderness to rib cage were de minimis injuries); Diggs v. Emfinger, No. 07-1807 SECTION P, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19140, at *9 (W.D. La. Jan. 10, 2008) (unpublished) (holding that allegation of an "open wound" causing "severe pain" was de minimis injury).

---

474. See, e.g., Sanders v. Day, No. 5:06-CV-280(HL), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21713, at *4 (M.D. Ga. Mar. 19, 2008) (unpublished) (holding allegation of kicking and using pepper spray on a handcuffed suspect was not de minimis); Edwards v. Miller, No. 06-cv-00933-MSK-MEH, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22639, at *4 (D. Colo. Mar. 28, 2007) (unpublished) (holding that allegation of being punched in the face and bitten on the arm over a 10-minute period, causing damage to forehead and facial injuries, and leaving a lasting effect in the form of severe headaches, is more than de minimis); Cotney v. Bowers, No. 2:03-cv-1181-WKW (WO), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 69523, at *25 (M.D. Ala. Sept. 26, 2006) (unpublished) (holding bruised ribs that took weeks to heal could be found not de minimis).

475. Davis v. District of Columbia, 158 F.3d 1342, 1349 (D.C. Cir. 1998); Darvie v. Countryman, No. 9:08-CV-0715 (GLS/GHL), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 52797, at *23 (N.D.N.Y. July 10, 2008) (unpublished) (characterizing "anxiety, depression, stress, nausea, hyperventilation, headaches, insomnia, dizziness, appetite loss, weight loss, etc.," as "essentially emotional in nature"); Minifield v. Butikofer, et al.,, 298 F. Supp. 2d 900, 905 (N.D. Cal. 2004) ("Physical symptoms that are not sufficiently distinct from a plaintiff's allegations of emotional distress do not qualify as a prior showing of physical injury."); Todd v. Graves, 217 F. Supp. 2d 958, 960 (S.D. Iowa 2002) (holding that allegations of stress-related aggravation of hypertension, dizziness, insomnia and loss of appetite were not actionable). But see Montemayor v. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, No. 02-1283 (GK), 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18039, at *17 (D.D.C. Aug. 25, 2005) (unpublished) (holding that a heart attack resulting from physical and emotional stress caused by treatment in prison would meet the physical injury requirement).

476. Compare Zehner v. Trigg, 133 F.3d 459, 462–63 (7th Cir. 1997) (holding exposure to asbestos without claim of damages for physical injury is not actionable); with Pack v. Artuz, 348 F. Supp. 2d 63, 74 n.12 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (holding proof of asbestos exposure posing a serious risk of harm would establish an 8th Amendment violation entitling the plaintiff to nominal damages regardless of present injury). See also Helling v. McKinney, 509 U.S. 25, 35, 113 S. Ct. 2475, 2481, 125 L. Ed. 2d 22, 33 (1993) (recognizing the possibility of an 8th Amendment claim based on future serious health problems because of a prison smoking policy).

477. Compare Noguera v. Hasty, No. 99 Civ. 8786 (KMW)(AJP), 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2458, at *14–15 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 12, 2001) (unpublished) (holding that allegations of retaliation for reporting a rape by an officer were closely enough related to the rape that a separate physical injury need not be shown), with Purvis v. Johnson, 78 F. App'x 377, 380 (5th Cir. 2003) (unpublished) (holding that a prisoner alleging assault by a staff member could not also pursue a claim for obstruction of the post-assault investigation); Johnson v. Dallas County Sheriff Dept., No. 3:08-CV-0423-G, 2008 WL 2378269, at *3 (N.D. Tex. June 6, 2008) (unpublished) (alleged sexual assault was a physical injury, but conduct of officials after the assault did not inflict injury and was not actionable).

478. See Liner v. Goord, 196 F.3d 132, 135 (2d Cir. 1999) (holding that "alleged sexual assaults," also described as "intrusive body searches," "qualify as physical injuries as a matter of common sense" and "would constitute more than de minimis injury"); Kemner v. Hemphill, 199 F. Supp. 2d 1264, 1270 (N.D. Fla. 2002) (holding that sexual assault, "even if considered to be de minimis from a purely physical perspective, is plainly 'repugnant to the conscience of mankind.' Surely Congress intended the concept of 'physical injury' in § 1997e(e) to cover such a repugnant use of physical force."). But see Hancock v. Payne, No. 1:03cv671-JMR-JMR, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1648, at *3, 7, 10 (S.D. Miss. Jan. 4, 2006) (unpublished) (holding prisoners who alleged they were "sexually battered ... by sodomy" did not satisfy § 1997e(e)). Non-physical sexual harassment is not physical injury. See Gillespie v. Smith, No. C07-3033-LRR, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 48498 , at *1, 4 (N.D. Iowa July 3, 2007) (unpublished).

479. Scarver v. Litscher, 371 F. Supp. 2d 986, 997–98 (W.D. Wis. 2005) (citing self-inflicted overdose of Thorazine as well as self-inflicted razor cut in holding prisoner with mental illness had alleged physical injury), aff'd, 434 F.3d 972 (7th Cir. 2006); Ziemba v. Armstrong, No. 3:02CV2185(DJS), 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 432, at *7 (D. Conn. Jan. 14, 2004) (unpublished) (holding that allegation of withdrawal, panic attacks, pain similar to a heart attack, difficulty breathing and profuse sweating, resulting from withdrawal of psychiatric medication, met the physical injury requirement). But see Chatham v. Adcock, No. 3:05-CV-0127-JTC, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 72523, at *48–49 (N.D. Ga. Sept. 28, 2007) (unpublished) (holding hallucinations, anxiety, and nightmares resulting from denial of Xanax did not meet physical injury requirement).

immediate[480] and longer-term or prospective;[481] denial of adequate food;[482] food contamination or poisoning;[483] denial of exercise;[484] exposure to harmful substances;[485] infliction of pain or illness through extreme conditions of confinement,[486] physical abuse,[487] or denial of medical care;[488] and stillbirth or 480. See Munn v. Toney, 433 F.3d 1087, 1089, 2006 U.S. App. LEXIS 1073, at *4–5 (8th Cir. 2006) (holding claim of headaches, cramps, nosebleeds, and dizziness resulting from deprivation of blood pressure medication "does not fail ... for lack of physical injury"); DeRoche v. Funkhouse, No. CV 06-1428-PHX-MHM (MEA), 2008 U.S. Dist LEXIS 31166, at *17–19 (D. Ariz. Mar. 28, 2008) (unpublished) (further liver damage and daily pain, swelling, nausea and hypertension from lack of treatment for Hepatitis C satisfied the physical injury requirement); Clifton v. Eubank, 418 F. Supp. 2d 1243, 1248, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29710, at *16–18 (D. Colo. 2006) (addressing "prolonged" pain attendant upon labor and stillbirth). But see Perez v. U.S., No. 1:04-CV-1944, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42906, at *5–7 (M.D. Pa. May 30, 2008) (unpublished) (holding that temporary dizziness, headaches, weakness, back pain, and nausea resulting from an asthma attack, which did not require medical attention, were de minimis); Tuft v. Chaney, No. H-06-2529, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 83817, at *7–8 (S.D. Tex. Nov. 9, 2007) (unpublished) (holding complaints of "generalized 'fatigue' and 'stress'" resulting from MRSA and Hepatitis C were not physical injuries).

481. Young v. Beard, No. 06-160, 2007 WL 1549453, at *4 (W.D. Pa. May 22, 2007) (unpublished) (holding allegation that plaintiff sought damages for present and future injury from denial of cholesterol medication, and of testing of blood pressure, diabetes, and cholesterol more often than every six months, sufficed at the pleading stage), vacated on other grounds, 2007 WL 2012604 (W.D. Pa. July 3, 2007) (unpublished); Mejia v. Goord, No. 9:03-CV-124, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32394, at *16–17 (N.D.N.Y. Aug. 16, 2005) (unpublished) (denying summary judgment where prisoner was denied a low-fat diet for potentially debilitating coronary condition). But see Cotter v. Dallas County Sheriff, No. 3:05-CV-2225-H, 2006 WL 1652714, at *3–4 (N.D. Tex. June 15, 2006) (holding staphylococcus exposure and a "dormant" staph infection were de minimis).

482. Williams v. Humphreys, No. CIV A CV504-053, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44029, at *7 (S.D. Ga. Sept. 13, 2005) (unpublished) (holding allegation of 12-pound weight loss, abdominal pain, and nausea resulting from denial of pork substitute at meals sufficiently alleged physical injury). But see Davis v. District of Columbia, 158 F.3d 1342, 1349 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (holding weight loss resulting from disclosure of HIV-positive status did not meet the physical injury standard); Linehan v. Crosby, No. 4:06-cv-00225-MP-WCS, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63738, at *5 (N.D. Fla. Aug. 20, 2008) (unpublished) (weight loss from denial of a kosher diet did not meet requirement); Green v. Padula, No. 9:07-0028-CMC-GCK, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 87038, at *5–9 (D.S.C., Sept. 25, 2007) (unpublished) (holding three-day denial of food and several hours' restraint during strip cell placement did not meet the physical injury requirement), report and recommendation rejected in part on other grounds, No. 9:07-0028-CMC-GMK, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 85370 (D.S.C., Nov. 19, 2007) (unpublished).

483. Gil v. U.S., No. 5:03-cv-198-Oc-10GRJ, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8155, at *8 (M.D. Fla. Feb. 17, 2006) (unpublished) (awarding "intangible damages for pain and suffering, inconvenience, and loss of capacity for enjoyment of life" to prisoner who suffered food poisoning from tainted food). But see Mayes v. Travis State Jail, No. A-06-CA-709-SS, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47317, at *13–14 (W.D. Tex. June 29, 2007) (unpublished) (holding diarrhea allegedly caused by spoiled food was de minimis).

484. Williams v. Goord, 111 F. Supp. 2d. 280, 291 n.4 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (holding allegation of 28-day denial of exercise sufficiently alleged physical injury).

485. Smith v. Leonard, 244 F. App'x 583, 584 (5th Cir. 2007) (unpublished) (stating headaches, sinus problems, trouble breathing, blurred vision, irritated eyes, and fatigue, allegedly from exposure to toxic mold, might satisfy § 1997e(e) standard); Enigwe v. Zenk, No. 03-CV-854 (CBA), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 66022, at *15–20 (E.D.N.Y. Sept. 15, 2006) (unpublished) (declining to dismiss emotional injury claims in light of allegation of exposure to environmental tobacco smoke resulting in dizziness, uncontrollable coughing, lack of appetite, runny eyes and high blood pressure). But see Thompson v. Joyner, No. 5:06-CT-3013-FL, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96515, at *14–15 (E.D.N.C. May 29, 2007) (unpublished) (pepper spraying was de minimis), aff'd, 251 F. App'x 826 (4th Cir. 2007); Hogg v. Johnson, No. 2:04-CV-0024, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 851, at *3, 7 (N.D. Tex. Jan. 21, 2005) (unpublished) (dismissing allegation that plaintiff was "gassed three times for asking for a mattress and standing up for his rights" for lack of physical injury).

486. Rinehart v. Alford, No. 3:02-CV-1565-R, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1789, at *4–5 (N.D. Tex. Mar. 3, 2003) (unpublished) (holding that severe headaches and back pain, attributed by the jail nurse to bright 24-hour illumination and sleeping on a narrow bench, sufficiently alleged physical injury).

487. Payne v. Parnell, 246 F. App'x 884, 887–88 (5th Cir. 2007) (holding that being jabbed with a cattle prod is not de minimis); Lawson v. Hall, No. 2:07-0334, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60924, at *10–11 (S.D. W.Va. July 16, 2009) (unpublished) (finding that the use of force may have been impermissible "even in the absence of severe injuries"); Zamboroski v. Karr, No. 04-73194, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11140, at *15–16 (E.D. Mich. Feb. 16, 2007) (unpublished) (holding severe pain resulting from lack of mobility during nine months in restraints, along with rashes and scarring on his arms and inability to raise his arms over his head when released, were not de minimis). But see Dixon v. Toole, 225 F. App'x 797, 799 (11th Cir. 2007) (per curiam) (holding "mere bruising" from 17.5 hours in restraints was de minimis; prisoner actually complained of "welts").

488. Clifton v. Eubank, 418 F. Supp. 2d 1243, 1248 (D. Colo. 2006) (finding that the delay and insufficiency of medical treatment resulted in tangible, physical effects that provide sufficient basis for a cognizable claim); But see Leon v. Johnson, 96 F.Supp.2d 244, 248 (W.D.N.Y. 2000) (finding delayed receipt of HIV/AIDS medication did not constitute miscarriage.[489] However, there are plenty of cases that seem to involve similar or equally serious conditions, but courts have held that these injuries do not satisfy the PLRA's physical injury requirement.[490] For example, some courts have explicitly stated that the alleged infliction of severe physical pain does not satisfy the statute.[491] Even outright torture might not be compensable as long as it is inflicted with sufficient care to leave no marks.[492] In addition, some courts have dismissed visible bodily injuries as de minimis.[493]

It is often difficult to understand what satisfies the physical injury requirement of the PLRA because most court decisions do not specifically define what "physical injury" means, other than "more than de minimis." One exception is a district court decision that cited dictionary definitions of "physical" and of "injury."[494] The district court found "physical" to mean "of or relating to the body," and "injury" to mean "an act that damages, harms, or hurts; an unjust or undeserved infliction of suffering or harm."[495] The court held that a reasonable jury could find that the statute was satisfied by exposure to noxious odors, including those of human wastes, and "dreadful" conditions of confinement (including inability to keep clean while menstruating, denial of clothing except for a paper gown, and exposure to ogling (staring) by male prison staff and construction workers).[496] This district court case gives a broad interpretation of the language of the statute. but other courts have not given any alternative approach that is helpful in assessing difficult cases.

---

physical injury when no adverse health effects from delay were shown); Jones v. Sheahan, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14130, at *22–23 (N.D.Ill. Sept. 22, 2000) (unpublished) (finding de minimis physical injury when plaintiff alleged delay of surgery of tumors resulted in "anguish and worry" that the tumors might be malignant, but no physical effects).

489. Clifton v. Eubank, 418 F. Supp. 2d 1243, 1245–51 (D. Colo. 2006) (holding that losing one's child and the pain attendant upon labor and stillbirth both separately meet the physical injury standard).

490. See Darvie v. Countryman, No. 9:08-CV-0715, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 52797, at *23–24 (N.D.N.Y. July 10, 2008) (unpublished) (characterizing "anxiety, depression, stress, nausea, hyperventilation, headaches, insomnia, dizziness, appetite loss, weight loss, etc.," as "essentially emotional in nature"); Trevino v. Johnson, No. 9:05cv171, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 40438, at *13–14 (E.D. Tex. Dec. 8, 2005) (unpublished) (holding a prisoner who was struck twice in the face and had his fingers pulled back had de minimis injury where he sustained only an abrasion to the forehead); Abney v. Valdez, No. 3-05-CV-1645-M, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44390, at *6–7 (N.D. Tex. Oct. 27, 2005) (unpublished) (holding more frequent urination, near-daily migraine headaches, and itchiness and watery eyes did not meet the physical injury requirement).

491. Calderon v. Foster, No. 5:05-cv-00696, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24505, at *27 (S.D. W.Va. Mar. 30, 2007) (unpublished) (pain, standing alone, is de minimis), aff'd, 264 F. App'x 286 (4th Cir. 2008) (unpublished); Ladd v. Dietz, No. 4:06cv3265, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3782, at *1–4 (D. Neb. Jan. 17, 2007) (unpublished) (holding pain resulting from placing ear medication in plaintiff's eye was "not enough" to constitute physical injury); Clifton v. Eubank, 418 F. Supp. 2d 1243, 1246 (D. Colo. 2006); Olivas v. Corr. Corp. of Am., 408 F. Supp. 2d 251, 254, 259 (N.D. Tex. 2006) (dismissing as de minimis extreme pain resulting from delay in treatment of broken teeth with exposed nerve).

492. For example, in Jarriett v. Wilson, 414 F.3d 634 (6th Cir. 2005), a prisoner complained that he was forced to stand in a two-and-a-half-foot square cage for about 13 hours, naked for the first eight to 10 hours, unable to sit for more than 30 or 40 minutes of the total time, in acute pain, with clear, visible swelling in a portion of his leg that had previously been injured in a motorcycle accident, during which time he repeatedly asked to see a doctor. Jarriett v. Wilson, 414 F.3d 634, 644 (6th Cir. 2005) (dissenting opinion). The appeals court affirmed the dismissal of his claim as de minimis on the ground that the plaintiff did not complain about his leg upon release or shortly thereafter when he saw medical staff. Jarriett v. Wilson, 414 F.3d 634, 643 (6th Cir. 2005). Jarriett conflicts with Payne v. Parnell, 246 F. App'x 884 (5th Cir. 2007) (unpublished), in which the court, referring both to § 1997e(e) and the 8th Amendment, held that being jabbed with a cattle prod was not de minimis, despite the lack of long-term damage, in part because it was "calculated to produce real physical harm." Payne v. Parnell, No. 05-20687, 246 F. App'x 884, 889 (5th Cir. 2007).

493. See, e.g., Gibson v. Galaza, No. CVF00 5381 AWI WMW P, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21679, at *27–28 (E.D. Cal. Mar. 29, 2006) (unpublished) (holding multiple abrasions, a small cut on lip, and a bruised right knee are de minimis); Contra Cotney v. Bowers, No. 2:03-cv-1181-WKW (WO), 2006 U.S. Dist LEXIS 69523, at *25 (M.D. Ala. Sept. 26, 2006) (unpublished) (holding bruised ribs that took weeks to heal was not de minimis); Hardin v. Fullenkamp, No. 4-99-CV-80723, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22335, at *19–21 (S.D. Iowa June 22, 2001) (unpublished) (holding evidence prisoner was cut and bruised and other prisoners wrote affidavits that they saw him beaten and limping met the standard).

494. Waters v. Andrews, No. 97-CV-407, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16004, at *25 (W.D.N.Y. Oct. 16, 2000) (unpublished).

495. Waters v. Andrews, No. 97-CV-407, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16004, at *25 (W.D.N.Y. Oct. 16, 2000) (unpublished).

496. Waters v. Andrews, No. 97-CV-407, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16004, at *25 (W.D.N.Y. Oct. 16, 2000) (unpublished). But see Alexander v. Tippah County, Miss., 351 F.3d 626, 631 (5th Cir. 2003) (holding that prisoner who vomited as a result of exposure to noxious odors in a filthy holding cell full of raw sewage suffered only a de minimis injury, if any); Parter v. Valone, No. 06-CV-10561, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96808, at *7–8 (E.D. Mich. Oct. 3, 2006) (unpublished) (holding a prisoner who was denied the use of a bathroom and urinated on himself suffered only mental or

There may be a solution to the lack of clarity in defining physical injury under the PLRA. 18 U.S.C. § 242 (2006) is a federal statute that makes it a crime for someone acting under color of state law to deprive another person of their federal civil rights.[497] Section 242 requires a showing of "bodily injury," but does not define "bodily injury" within the statute.[498] However, several other federal criminal statutes define "bodily injury" as meaning: "(A) a cut, abrasion, bruise, burn, or disfigurement; (B) physical pain; (C) illness; (D) impairment of a function of a bodily member, organ, or mental faculty; or (E) any other injury to the body, no matter how temporary."[499] Thus, the definition of "bodily injury" in other federal statues could also be applied in Section 1997e(e).[500] As far as we know, no court has yet considered this idea. If you are faced with a claim that your injury isn't severe enough to satisfy the PLRA, but it falls within the statutory definition of bodily injury, you could highlight the definition of "bodily injury" in 18 U.S.C. §§ 831(f)(5), 1365(g)(4), 1515(a)(5), and 1864(d)(2) (2006), and argue that there is no difference between "bodily injury" and "physical injury" under the PLRA.

G. Attorneys' Fees

The PLRA limits the attorneys' fees prisoners can recover. These limitations do not directly affect you if you are proceeding pro se, but they do affect your ability to get a lawyer.

Fees under 42 U.S.C. § 1988[501] are barred in "any action brought by a prisoner"[502] except when the fees are "directly and reasonably incurred in proving an actual violation of the plaintiff's rights" under a statute that allows fees to be awarded.[503] It is unclear whether this provision also bars fee awards in cases that are settled, rather than cases that go to trial. Several courts have held injunctive proceedings that are settled may support an award of fees if there are findings of legal violation or a record that suggests there was a violation of plaintiff's rights, but the plaintiff decided to settle the claim without additional litigation.[504] Thus, while a plaintiff does not need to have proved a claim to be eligible for fees, the fees must have accrued in the process of proving a violation.[505] Fees may also be awarded if they are "directly and reasonably emotional injury). Cf. Glaspy v. Malicoat, 134 F. Supp. 2d 890, 894–95 (W.D. Mich. 2001) (treating denial of toilet access to a non-prisoner as a deprivation of liberty).

---

497. 18 U.S.C. § 242 (2006).

498. 18 U.S.C. § 242 (2006) (providing "if bodily injury results from the acts committed in violation of this section ... [the defendant] shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both").

499. 18 U.S.C. § 831(f)(5) (2006); accord 18 U.S.C. § 1365(g)(4) (2006); 18 U.S.C. § 1515(a)(5) (2006); 18 U.S.C. § 1864(d)(2) (2006).

500. "When Congress uses, but does not define a particular word, it is presumed to have adopted that word's established meaning." United States v. Myers, 972 F.2d 1566, 1572 (11th Cir. 1992) (citing Davis v. Mich. Dept. of Treasury, 489 U.S. 803, 806, 109 S. Ct. 1500, 1503, 103 L. Ed. 2d 891, 899 (1989)). Although § 1997e(e) uses the word "physical" rather than "bodily," it is hard to see what real difference that makes.

501. 42 U.S.C. § 1988 (2010) is the statute that authorizes attorneys' fees for actions filed under 42 U.S.C. § 1983.

502. For purposes of these provisions, ex-prisoners are not prisoners, and a case filed after the plaintiff's release is not governed by the PLRA fees provisions. Greig v. Goord, 169 F.3d 165, 167 (2d Cir. 1999) (dismissing a former inmate's action because he was no longer considered a "prisoner" as required by the relevant provision); Doe v. Washington County, 150 F.3d 920, 924 (8th Cir. 1998) (PLRA provisions about attorney's fees do not apply to a plaintiff who was not a prisoner at the time of filing his suit). The attorneys' fees provisions are not limited to cases about prison conditions. Robbins v. Chronister, 435 F.3d 1238, 1241–44 (10th Cir. 2006) (en banc) (applying PLRA attorney's fees restrictions to a case about events before prisoner's incarceration); Jackson v. State Bd. of Pardons and Paroles, 331 F.3d 790, 794–96 (11th Cir. 2003) (applying PLRA restrictions to case about parole eligibility hearings and the length of his confinement, and not restricting it to lawsuits about prison conditions).

503. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(d)(1)(A) (2009). See, e.g., Armstrong v. Davis, 318 F.3d 965, 973–74 (9th Cir. 2003) (holding that fees in Americans with Disabilities Act and Rehabilitation Act suits are not governed by the PLRA fees limitations).

504. See Laube v. Allen, 506 F. Supp. 2d 969, 979–80 (M.D. Ala. Aug. 31, 2007) (holding that fees may be awarded for injunctive settlements to the extent they first satisfy the PLRA's "need-narrowness-intrusiveness" requirement that the prospective relief is narrowly drawn, extends no further than necessary to correct the violation of the Federal right, and is the least intrusive means necessary to correct the violation of the Federal right); Lozeau v. Lake County, Mont., 98 F. Supp. 2d 1157, 1168, 1170 (D. Mont. 2000) ("Defendants cannot settle a case, promise reform or continued compliance, admit the previous existence of illegal conditions, admit that Plaintiffs' legal action actually brought the illegal conditions to the attention of those in a position to change them, and subsequently allege a failure of proof.").

505. Laube v. Allen, 506 F. Supp. 2d 969, 980 (M.D. Ala. Aug. 31, 2007) ("[T]he PLRA's attorney's-fee language does not require that the fee be incurred in having proved an actual violation of the plaintiff's rights, only that the fee be incurred in proving a violation.").

incurred in enforcing the relief ordered for the violation."[506] The court will determine fees awarded in proportion to the injunctive relief, because the statute says that fees must be "proportionately related to the court ordered relief for the violation,"[507] but does not specify what "proportionate" means. However, defendants may be required to pay fee awards of up to 150 percent of any damages awarded—but no more.[508]

Hourly rates for lawyers are limited to 150 percent of the Criminal Justice Act ("CJA") rates for criminal defense representation set in 18 U.S.C. § 3006A (2004).[509] Unfortunately, this rate is much lower than the market rates most lawyers usually charge and that are awarded in non-prisoner cases, and they probably discourage many lawyers from taking prisoners' cases.[510]

Prisoners are more directly affected by the provision that says that "up to" twenty-five percent of monetary judgment can be applied to the fee award. If the fee award is not greater than 150 percent of the judgment, defendants must pay the rest.[511] Most courts have held that the term "up to" allows the courts some discretion in determining how much of a winning prisoner-plaintiff's damage award must be given to attorneys' fees.[512] Several courts have mistakenly assumed that the twenty-five percent figure is mandatory, or have applied it without discussing the question.[513]

A majority of courts have rejected arguments that attorney fee restrictions deny prisoners with equal protection.[514]

H. Waiver of Reply

The PLRA provides:

> (g) Waiver of Reply.
> (1) Any defendant may waive the right to reply to any action brought by a prisoner confined in any jail, prison, or other correctional facility under [42 U.S.C. § 1983] ... or any other Federal law. Notwithstanding any other law or rule of procedure, such waiver shall not constitute an admission of the allegations contained in the complaint. No relief shall be granted to the plaintiff unless a reply has been filed.

---

506. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(d)(1)(B)(ii) (2009); see Ilick v. Miller, 68 F. Supp. 2d 1169, 1173 n. 1 (D. Nev. 1999) (stating that there was sufficient evidence to demonstrate that the post-PLRA fees were "directly and reasonably" incurred in establishing the violation of the prisoner's rights); West v. Manson, 163 F. Supp. 2d 116, 120 (D. Conn. 2001) (holding fees are recoverable for post-judgment monitoring).

507. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(d)(1)(B)(i) (2009).

508. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(d)(2) (2009); see Pearson v. Welborn, 471 F.3d 732, 742–44 (7th Cir. 2006) (holding fees limited to $1.50 where plaintiff recovered only $1.00 in nominal damages); Boivin v. Black, 225 F.3d 36, 40–46 (1st Cir. 2000) (going through an extensive analysis of the constitutional basis for the fee cap and arriving at the same conclusion, that fees are limited to 150 percent of recovered nominal damages). This 150 percent limit does not apply to cases in which the plaintiff seeks and receives an injunction as well as damages. Walker v. Bain, 257 F.3d 660, 667 n.2 (6th Cir. 2001) (noting that §1997e(d)(2) does not apply if non-monetary relief is granted).

509. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(d)(3) (2006).

511. Although the hourly rate is higher than the Criminal Justice Act rates (up to 150 percent), lawyers defending clients under the CJA get paid for their time whether they win or lose. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(d)(3)(2004).

511. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(d)(2) (2009); see Torres v. Walker, 356 F.3d 238, 243 (2d Cir. 2004) (holding that a case resolved by "so ordered" stipulation was not governed by the 150 percent limit, since there was no "money judgment").

512. See Boesing v. Hunter, 540 F.3d 886, 892 (8th Cir. 2008) (affirming district court's application of one percent of $25,000 recovery); Siggers-El v. Barlow, 433 F. Supp. 2d 811, 822–23 (E.D. Mich. 2006) (applying $1.00 of the recovery to attorneys' fees, noting that the jury found that defendants had lied about their conduct and awarded significant damages as punishment and deterrent).

513. See Jackson v. Austin, 267 F. Supp. 2d 1059, 1071 (D. Kan. 2003) (holding that "the Court must automatically apply plaintiff's fee award against his damages to the extent that it does not exceed 25 per cent [sic] of the damages"); Beckford v. Irvin, 60 F. Supp. 2d 85, 89–90 (W.D.N.Y. 1999) (applying twenty-five percent without discussion).

514. Johnson v. Daley, 339 F.3d 582, 597 (7th Cir. 2003) (en banc) (finding no constitutional violation of equal protection); Jackson v. State Bd. of Pardons and Paroles, 331 F.3d 790, 796–98 (11th Cir. 2003) (holding that §1997e(d) passed the rational basis test and was therefore constitutional); Carbonell v. Acrish, 154 F. Supp. 2d 552, 561–66 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) (upholding 150 percent limit as a rational means to achieve the Congress's end).

> (2) The court may require any defendant to reply to a complaint brought under this section if it finds that the plaintiff has a reasonable opportunity to prevail on the merits.[515]

This provision means that in prisoners' suits, the defendants do not have to answer the complaint unless the court tells them to answer. Courts can only do this if the plaintiff has a "reasonable opportunity to prevail on the merits."[516] In practice, courts generally direct defendants to answer if the case survives initial screening or motions to dismiss, which means that the complaint states a claim for which relief can be granted.[517]

If you amend the complaint to add parties after the initial screening, the court might not direct the defendants to answer. When you move to amend a complaint, always ask the court to direct the defendants to answer and grant your motion to amend. If you amend the complaint as a matter of course (when no motion is required) and the defendants do not answer, then you may need to move to direct them to answer.[518]

The provision that "[n]o relief shall be granted to the plaintiff unless a reply has been filed" raises a question about default judgments, which ordinarily are granted if a defendant fails to respond to the complaint.[519] Although it is possible to read this provision as saying courts cannot grant default judgments if defendants refuse to reply, generally courts continue to grant default judgments in prison cases.[520] If the defendants in your case do not respond, and the court does not want to enter a default judgment, try moving to hold the defendants in contempt of the order to reply to the complaint, and ask the court for contempt damages equal to what you would get if the case went forward.[521]

I. Hearings by Telecommunication and at Prisons

The PLRA added a new section to the Civil Rights of Institutionalized Persons Act ("CRIPA"):

> (f) Hearings.
> (1) To the extent practicable, in any action brought with respect to prison conditions in Federal court pursuant to section 1979 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (42 U.S.C. § 1983), or any other Federal law, by a prisoner confined in any jail, prison, or other correctional facility, pretrial proceedings in which the prisoner's participation is required or permitted shall be conducted by telephone, video conference, or other telecommunications technology without removing the prisoner from the facility in which the prisoner is confined.
>
> (2) Subject to the agreement of the official of the Federal, State, or local unit of government with custody over the prisoner, hearings may be conducted at the facility in which the prisoner is confined. To the extent practicable, the

---

515. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(g) (2009).

516. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(g) (2009).

517. See Daniel v. Power, No. 04-CV-789-DRH, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17235, at *6 (S.D. Ill. July 20, 2005) (unpublished) (holding that after an initial screening, "[d]efendants are ORDERED to timely file an appropriate responsive pleading to the Amended Complaint, and shall not waive filing a reply pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(g)").

518. Amendment by motion and as a matter of course are discussed in Fed. R. Civ. P. 15.

519. Fed. R. Civ. P. 55(a) ("When a party against whom a judgment for affirmative relief is sought has failed to plead or otherwise defend, and that failure is shown by affidavit or otherwise, the clerk must enter the party's default.").

520. See Cameron v. Myers, 569 F. Supp. 2d 762, 762 (N.D. Ind. 2008) (recommending a default judgment in favor of a pro se prisoner plaintiff).

521. Concerning contempt damages, see Hutto v. Finney, 437 U.S. 678, 691 (1978) ("If a state agency refuses to adhere to a court order, a financial penalty may be the most effective means of insuring compliance."); Benjamin v. Sielaff, 752 F. Supp. 140, 148–49 (S.D.N.Y. 1990) (holding a prison accountable for compensatory damages to be paid to any member of the prisoner plaintiff class who, in the future, as a new admission, is held in a non-housing area for more than twenty-four hours; Feliciano v. Colon, 704 F. Supp. 16, 20 (D.P.R. 1988) ("Sanctions in civil contempt proceedings may be employed for either or both of two purposes: to coerce defendants into compliance with the Court's order, and to compensate the complainant for losses sustained.").

> court shall allow counsel to participate by telephone, video conference, or other communications technology in any hearing held at the facility.[522]

For years, many federal courts have been using telephones and videos in court proceedings and holding proceedings at prisons.[523] But, the provision concerning hearings at the prison raises new legal and practical problems. The statute refers to holding "hearings" but not "trials" at the prison, leaving it unclear whether evidentiary proceedings are included.[524] Conducting a trial or evidentiary proceeding by video conferencing raises serious questions of fairness, particularly in jury trials. In United States v. Baker,[525] a non-PLRA case, the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the constitutionality of holding prisoners' psychiatric commitment hearings by video. However, the court but was careful to note that such decisions are generally based on expert testimony and do not depend either on the demeanor of the witnesses or the "impression" made by the person being committed, and that the proceeding does not involve fact-finding in the usual sense.[526] That description does not fit most evidentiary proceedings in prisoner cases, and courts have traditionally expressed a strong preference for having prisoner plaintiffs physically present in court for trial.[527]

If the court does hold a hearing by telephone or video in your case, it is your responsibility to subpoena any witnesses you wish to present or cross-examine, just as in a live hearing in the courtroom.[528]

J. Revocation of Earned Release Credit

The PLRA adds a new section concerning earned release credit:

> § 1932. Revocation of earned release credit
>
> In any civil action brought by an adult convicted of a crime and confined in a Federal correctional facility, the court may order the revocation of such earned good time credit under section 3624(b) of title 18, United States Code, that has not yet vested, if, on its own motion or the motion of any party, the court finds that:
>
> (1) the claim was filed for a malicious purpose;
>
> (2) the claim was filed solely to harass the party against which it was filed; or
>
> (3) the claimant testifies falsely or otherwise knowingly presents false evidence or information to the court.[529]

This provision, which applies only to federal prisoners, allows a court to take away good time credit based on what a court thinks about a prisoner's litigation activities. Though it raises substantial questions about due process of law, the statute provides no procedural protections. It is not clear what due process requirements would apply. The only reported decisions applying this provision do not discuss due process.[530]

---

522. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(f) (2000); see Moss v. Gomez, No. 97-56234, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 27753, at *4 (9th Cir. Oct. 26, 1998) (unpublished) (9th Cir. 1998) (holding district court should have considered teleconferencing as an alternative to producing prisoner witness who was a security risk).

523. See, e.g., Hall v. Bellmon, 935 F.2d 1106, 1109 (10th Cir. 1991) (noting use of telephone evidentiary hearing to assess frivolousness of claim).

524. But see Bickham v. Blair, No. Civ.A. 98-881, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12773, at *3 (E.D. La. Aug. 16, 1999) (unpublished) (noting that an evidentiary hearing was held by telephone); Edwards v. Logan, 38 F. Supp. 2d 463, 466–67 (W.D. Va. 1999) (authorizing video jury trial for Virginia prisoner held in New Mexico; analogizing to PLRA's provisions concerning pretrial proceedings).

525. United States v. Baker, 45 F.3d 837 (4th Cir. 1994).

526. United States v. Baker, 45 F.3d 837, 845 (4th Cir. 1994).

527. Hernandez v. Whiting, 881 F.2d 768, 770–72 (9th Cir. 1989); Muhammad v. Warden, Balt. City Jail, 849 F.2d 107, 113 (4th Cir. 1988); Poole v. Lambert, 819 F.2d 1025, 1029 (11th Cir. 1987).

528. See Bickham v. Blair, No. Civ.A. 98-881, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12773, at *3 (E.D. La. Aug. 16, 1999) (unpublished).

529. 28 U.S.C. § 1932 (2006). Note that there is another statute with the same Section number—entitled Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation—but this citation is correct.

530. See Rice v. Nat'l Sec. Council, 244 F. Supp. 2d 594, 597 (D.S.C. 2001), aff'd, 46 F. App'x 212 (4th Cir. 2002).

This provision of the PLRA governs proceedings in federal court and presumably applies in state court. There appear to be no decisions yet on this issue, however.

K. Diversion of Damage Awards

The PLRA includes two provisions about awarding damages in a successful suit brought by a prisoner:

> Any compensatory damages awarded to a prisoner in connection with a civil action brought against any Federal, State, or local jail, prison, or correctional facility or against any official or agent of such jail, prison, or correctional facility, shall be paid directly to satisfy any outstanding restitution orders pending against the prisoner. The remainder of any such award after full payment of all pending restitution orders shall be forwarded to the prisoner.
>
> Prior to payment of any compensatory damages awarded to a prisoner in connection with a civil action brought against any Federal, State, or local jail, prison, or correctional facility or against any official or agent of such jail, prison, or correctional facility, reasonable efforts shall be made to notify the victims of the crime for which the prisoner was convicted and incarcerated concerning the pending payment of any such compensatory damages.[531]

There is very little case law about these statutes.[532] One important question is whether the phrase "compensatory damages awarded" includes settlement of damage claims. As a matter of plain English, it would seem not, but we are not aware of any relevant decisions.

L. Injunctions

The PLRA contains a number of provisions restricting courts' abilities to enter and to maintain "prospective relief" (mostly injunctions, or court orders) in prison cases.[533]

1. Entry of Prospective Relief

Under the PLRA, courts may not enter prospective relief in prison cases unless:

> the court finds that such relief is narrowly drawn, extends no further than necessary to correct the violation of the Federal right, and is the least intrusive means necessary to correct the violation of the Federal right. The court shall give substantial weight to any adverse impact on public safety or the operation of a criminal justice system caused by the relief."[534]

---

531. Prison Litigation Reform Act of 1995, Pub. L. No. 104–134, § 808, 110 Stat. 1321–66, 1321–76 (1996). This provision is not codified, and appears after 18 U.S.C. § 3626 (2000).

532. See Loucony v. Kupec, No. 3:98 CV 61(JGM), 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6620, at *4–5 (D. Conn. Feb. 17, 2000) (unpublished) (holding a person sued after release from prison was not a "prisoner" and the statute did not apply to him).

533. One federal appeals court has held that under the PLRA's language, punitive damages are "prospective relief" subject to the PLRA's limitations. Johnson v. Breeden, 280 F.3d 1308, 1325 (11th Cir. 2002). Other courts have mostly ignored this decision. We also think it is wrong because the prospective relief provisions are clearly written to deal with injunctions and make very little sense applied to punitive damages. See, e.g., Tate v. Dragovich, No. 96-4495, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14353, at *20 n.7 (E.D. Pa. Aug. 14, 2003) ("At first blush, it seems that one can neither 'narrowly draw' punitive damages, nor adjust them to better 'correct' a violation of rights, nor render them any more or less 'intrusive.'"). One court has gone further than Breeden and has held that the PLRA has abolished punitive damages entirely. Margo v. Bedford County, No. 3:04-cv-147-KAP-KRG, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25625, at *7 (W.D.Pa. Mar. 31, 2008). We see no basis for this conclusion.

534. 18 U.S.C. § 3626(a) (2006); see Morales Feliciano v. Rullan, 378 F.3d 42, 54–56 (1st Cir. 2004) (finding remedy of privatization of medical care appropriate in light of failure of less intrusive measures; "[d]rastic times call for drastic measures"); Gomez v. Vernon, 255 F.3d 1118, 1130–1131 (9th Cir. 2001) (affirming injunction benefiting named individuals; though an unconstitutional policy had been found, it had been directed at those persons); Morrison v. Garraghty, 239 F.3d 648, 661 (4th Cir. 2001) (affirming injunction prohibiting the defendants from "refusing [the plaintiff] a religious exemption from existing property restrictions solely on the basis of his lack of membership in the Native American race.").

This standard is not very different from the law in effect before the PLRA,[535] though the requirement of specific court findings is new. The statute also bars injunctive relief requiring state or local officials to exceed their local authority unless federal law requires such relief, such relief is necessary to fix a federal law violation, and no other relief will correct the violation.[536] This provision also appears to be consistent with prior law.[537] The PLRA does limit federal court to prospective relief which corrects violations of "federal rights," which means a court cannot enter an injunction based on a violation of state or local law.[538]

2. Preliminary Injunctions

Preliminary injunctions must meet the same standards as for other prospective relief, and automatically expire after ninety days unless the court makes the order final.[539] But, a court may grant a new preliminary injunction after the first has expired if the plaintiff shows that the conditions justifying the first injunction still exist.[540]

3. Prisoner Release Orders

The PLRA contains special rules for "prisoner release orders," which it defines as "any order ... that has the purpose or effect of reducing or limiting the prison population, or that directs the release from or non-admission of prisoners to a prison."[541] Such orders are permitted only if previous, less intrusive relief has failed to remedy the federal law violation in a reasonable time.[542] In other words, population limit is a last resort, not a first step. A release order must be supported by clear and convincing evidence that "crowding is the primary cause of the violation of a Federal right" and no other relief will remedy the violation.[543] One court has held that these requirements for prison release orders do not apply when the prison is trying to modify an order that existed before the PLRA was enacted.[544]

The PLRA requires three-judge courts to issue prisoner release orders, which either the party asking for the order or the district court itself may request.[545] It is not always clear how the three-judge court requirement applies when a person is asking for different kinds of relief.[546] One court refused to convene a three-judge court to consider an individual prisoner's "[m]otion for [his own] Prisoner Release" that failed to 535. See Gilmore v. California, 220 F.3d 987, 998 (9th Cir. 2000) (holding that courts are required to "give substantial weight to any adverse impact on public safety or the operation of a criminal justice system caused by the relief ... limiting the courts' power to grant preliminary injunctive relief"); Smith v. Ark. Dept. of Corr., 103 F.3d 637, 647 (8th Cir. 1996) (holding PLRA "merely codifies existing law and does not change the standards for determining whether to grant an injunction").

---

536. 18 U.S.C. § 3626(a)(1)(B) (2006); see Perez v. Hickman, No. C 05-05241 JSW, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44432, at *7–10, 16–17 (N.D. Cal. June 12, 2007) (ordering increase in salaries paid to prison dentists, contrary to state law, and finding PLRA standards met).

537. See, e.g., Stone v. City & County of San Francisco, 968 F.2d 850, 861–65 (9th Cir. 1992) (holding, pre-PLRA, that provisions of consent decree that overrode state law were not the least intrusive option available and were thus prohibited). See also LaShawn A. v. Barry, 144 F.3d 847, 854 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (stating, pre-PLRA, that "[d]isregarding local law ... is a grave step and should not be taken unless absolutely necessary").

538. Handberry v. Thompson, 446 F.3d 335, 344–46 (2d Cir. 2006) (holding that in prison cases the PLRA overrides federal courts' "supplemental jurisdiction" to enforce state law).

539. 18 U.S.C. § 3626(a)(2) (2006).

540. See Mayweathers v. Newland, 258 F.3d 930, 936 (9th Cir. 2001) (upholding an injunction when the defendants were subject to the injunction at the time of appeal, the injunctions were identical, and they raised no new issues unable to be reviewed by the court on appeal).

541. 18 U.S.C. § 3626(g)(4) (2006). Courts disagree on whether a provision that limits the prison population automatically counts as a prisoner release order. See Berwanger v. Cottey, 178 F.3d 834, 836 (7th Cir. 1999) (noting that a maximum population provision is a prisoner release order). But see Inmates of Suffolk County Jail v. Sheriff of Suffolk County, 952 F. Supp. 869, 883 (D. Mass.) (holding that a population cap is not a prisoner release order without an order to release), aff'd as modified and remanded on other grounds, 129 F.3d 649 (1st Cir. 1997).

542. 18 U.S.C. § 3626(a)(3)(A) (2006).

543. 18 U.S.C. §§ 3626(a)(3)(E)(i)–(ii) (2006).

544. Berwanger v. Cottey, 178 F.3d 834, 836 (7th Cir. 1999) (citing 18 U.S.C. § 3626(a)(3)(A) (2006) and finding that the modification request could not be based on the PLRA because the order existed before the Act; however, the court found that PLRA rules about terminating relief could still apply).

545. 18 U.S.C. §§ 3626(a)(3)(B)–(D) (2006).

546. See Tyler v. Murphy, 135 F.3d 594, 598 (8th Cir. 1998) (finding that it is unclear under PLRA whether "findings that will avoid termination of an existing injunction must in all cases be made by a three-judge court if the injunction includes a prisoner release order").

allege, except in conclusory terms, how overcrowding violated his constitutional rights.[547] The prisoner release order procedure is rarely used.

The PLRA permits state and local officials to intervene to oppose prisoner release orders.[548]

4. Termination of Judgments

Under the PLRA, court orders in prison litigation, including consent judgments (a judgment the parties agree to), may be terminated after two years unless the court finds that there is a "current and ongoing violation" of federal law. After this two-year period, orders may be challenged every year.[549] An order may be challenged at any time if it was entered without the court finding that it "is narrowly drawn, extends no further than necessary to correct the violation of the Federal right, and is the least intrusive means necessary to correct the violation of the Federal right."[550] Orders without these findings may be terminated immediately unless a current and ongoing federal law violation is shown. A "violation of the Federal right" means a violation of the federal Constitution, statutes, or regulations. Violation of the court order itself is not enough.[551]

Constitutional challenges asserting that the provision violates the separation of powers, the Equal Protection Clause, and the Due Process Clause have been unsuccessful.[552]

5. Automatic Stay

The PLRA provides that courts must promptly rule on motions to terminate prospective relief. The PLRA also says that such prospective relief is automatically stayed (postponed) on the thirtieth day after the motion is made. The thirty days can be extended to sixty days if good cause is shown. The "general congestion of the court's calendar" is not considered a good cause.[553] The Supreme Court has held that the automatic stay provision does not violate the principle of separation of powers in the Constitution [554]

6. Settlements

Under the PLRA, settlements that include prospective relief must meet the same requirements that the PLRA establishes for other court orders.[555] In other words, the court must find that these settlements are narrowly drawn, necessary to correct federal law violations, and the least intrusive way of doing so. (In practice, parties who are settling agree to these findings, and the court usually approves them.) Parties can enter into "private settlement agreements" that do not meet the PLRA standards, but these agreements cannot be enforced in federal court.[556] In effect, they must be contracts enforceable in state court. The PLRA does not restrict settlements not involving prospective relief (i.e., settlements involving damages, not other relief).

---

547. Pangburn v. Goord, No. 98-CV-0309E(H), 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5143, at *22–23 (W.D.N.Y. Apr. 12, 1999) (unpublished).

548. 18 U.S.C. § 3626(a)(3)(F) (2006); see Ruiz v. Estelle, 161 F.3d 814, 818–21 (5th Cir. 1998) (holding that PLRA grants individual legislators the right to intervene in prison litigation).

549. 18 U.S.C. § 3626(b)(1)(3) (2006).

550. 18 U.S.C. § 3626(b)(2) (2006); see Tyler v. Murphy, 135 F.3d 594, 598 (8th Cir. 1998) (noting that absent the required findings, immediate termination provision rather than two-year provision applies).

551. Plyler v. Moore, 100 F.3d 365, 370 (4th Cir. 1996) (holding that a violation of prisoners' rights under the consent decree were not violations of a "federal right" under the PLRA); Imprisoned Citizens Union v. Sharp, 11 F. Supp. 2d 586, 608–09 (E.D. Pa. 1998) (holding that prisoner-plaintiffs could not stop the prison from terminating the decree simply because the prison had violated that order), aff'd, 169 F.3d 178 (3d Cir. 1999).

552. Court of appeals decisions and district court decisions upholding the statute include Berwanger v. Cottey, 178 F.3d 834 (7th Cir. 1999); Nichols v. Hopper, 173 F.3d 820 (11th Cir. 1999); Benjamin v. Jacobson, 172 F.3d 144 (2d Cir. 1999); Imprisoned Citizens Union v. Ridge, 169 F.3d 178 (3d Cir. 1999); Hadix v. Johnson, 133 F.3d 940 (6th Cir. 1998); Dougan v. Singletary, 129 F.3d 1424 (11th Cir. 1997); Inmates of Suffolk County Jail v. Rouse, 129 F.3d 649 (1st Cir. 1997); Gavin v. Branstad, 122 F.3d 1081 (8th Cir. 1997); Plyler v. Moore, 100 F.3d 365 (4th Cir. 1996).

553. 18 U.S.C. § 3626(e)(3) (2006).

554. Miller v. French, 530 U.S. 327, 348, 120 S. Ct. 2246, 2259 147 L. Ed. 2d 326, 343 (2000).

555. 18 U.S.C. § 3626(c)(1) (2006).

556. 18 U.S.C. § 3626(c)(2) (2006).

M. Conclusion

By passing the Prison Litigation Reform Act, Congress has made it more difficult for you to have your claims heard in federal court. Although you might feel that some of its provisions are unfair, you cannot simply disregard the PLRA's strict requirements. To give yourself the best possible chance of getting your claim into federal court and having it resolved favorably, you will have to familiarize yourself with all the portions of the PLRA that are relevant for your case.

In going back through this Chapter, you should pay special attention to the "three strikes" provisions of the PLRA (see Part C) and to the new administrative procedure exhaustion requirements (see Part E). The three strikes rules should encourage you to consider your decision whether to bring suit very carefully, since if a court decides you have brought a frivolous suit, your ability to bring future suits may be jeopardized. You must also be certain you fully understand the exhaustion requirements, since courts will not allow your suit to proceed unless you have made every effort to resolve your grievance through administrative procedures.

A JAILHOUSE LAWYER'S MANUAL

Chapter 15:
Inmate Grievance Procedures

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

CHAPTER 15

INMATE GRIEVANCE PROCEDURES*

A. Introduction

If you have a complaint concerning your treatment at a state correctional facility, you must consult the state's formal inmate grievance procedures. According to the Prison Litigation Reform Act ("PLRA"), you must exhaust (use up) all of the available grievance procedures before you can take your complaint to court.[1] Before filing any type of lawsuit, you should carefully read JLM, Chapter 14, "The Prison Litigation Reform Act." In New York, for example, state law and the New York Inmate Grievance Program ("IGP") require the Commissioner of the Department of Correctional Services ("DOCS") to establish a committee in each correctional facility to address prisoner grievances.[2] The purpose of the IGP is to "provide each inmate an orderly, fair, simple, and expeditious method for resolving grievances" and "to promote mediation and conflict reduction in the resolution of grievances."[3] The details of this program appear in DOCS Directives 4040 and 4041,[4] and in Title 7 of the Codes, Rules, and Regulations of the State of New York.[5] Directive 4002 describes the Inmate Liaison Committee ("ILC"), which is concerned with prisoners' general welfare.[6]

This Chapter will help you make an informed decision about how to proceed with your grievance, using New York's IGP as an example. Part B discusses the PLRA requirement that you go through the entire complaint process in your prison before taking your claim to federal court. Part C defines the term "grievance," discusses what kinds of claims are non-grievable (meaning that you cannot use the IGP), and provides you with an overview on how to write your grievance. Part D describes the basic structure of the New York IGP. Part E looks closely at the relevant New York DOCS directives, explaining specific steps to follow when filing a grievance through the New York IGP. Part F discusses the publication of rules for other states' inmate grievance procedures and how to find these rules.

If you are a foreign national (not a U.S. citizen) and are having problems with prison conditions, or need to contact someone in your home country, you may want to contact your consulate. Consult JLM, Immigration and Consular Access Supplement, for more information on how to do raise these claims.

B. Exhausting Your Administrative Remedies

The PLRA requires you to go through your prison's entire complaint process before you can bring a federal court claim under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (a federal law that deals with prisoners' complaints).[7] Therefore,

---

* This Chapter was revised by Erin LaFarge based in part on previous versions by Sarah Martinez, Samuel J. Levine, Wendy Lang, Patricia A. Sheehan, and Caroline Lim Starbird.

1. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(a) (2006) ("No action shall be brought with respect to prison conditions under section 1983 of this title, or any other Federal law, by a prisoner confined in any jail, prison, or other correctional facility until such administrative remedies as are available are exhausted.").

2. N.Y. Correct. Law § 139(1) (McKinney 2003). This law was enacted in response to the 1971 Attica Prison uprising. The McKay Commission looked into the cause of that uprising and recommended procedures to resolve prison issues through an administrative process. See also Patterson v. Smith, 53 N.Y.2d 98, 101, 423 N.E.2d 23, 25, 440 N.Y.S.2d 600, 602 (1981).

3. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.1(a)–(b) (2010); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.1(a)–(b) (2006).

4. See Chapter 7 of the JLM to learn how to obtain a copy of these directives through the state Freedom of Information Law ("FOIL") and the federal Freedom of Information Act ("FOIA"). In addition, ask the librarian if your prison law library has copies of the directive.

5. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, §§ 701–02 (2010). Ask the librarian if your prison law library has this code.

6. This directive has not yet been codified in the New York Code as of the JLM print date. See JLM, Chapter 7 to learn how to obtain a copy of this directive through the state Freedom of Information Law ("FOIL") and the federal Freedom of Information Act ("FOIA"). In addition, ask the librarian if your prison law library has a copy of the directive.

7. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(a) (2006). Note that the PLRA exhaustion requirement applies only to cases filed on or after April 26, 1996 (the effective date of the PLRA), including cases where the actions complained of occurred before the enactment. It does not apply to actions or appeals filed before its passage. See Ancrum v. St. Barnabas Hosp., 301 A.D.2d 474, 475, 755 N.Y.S.2d 28, 31 (1st Dept. 2003) (holding that the PLRA exhaustion requirement applies to all prisoners who sue while they are incarcerated—including prisoners who are released before a ruling on their suit is issued); White v. McGinnis, 131 F.3d 593, 595 (6th Cir. 1997) (finding prisoner's claims were properly dismissed when he had failed to exhaust his administrative remedies). See Chapter 16 of the JLM for more information on 42 U.S.C. § 1983 actions.

even if you believe that the grievance system in your prison is unfair or pointless, you still have to go through all of the steps of the process to try to resolve your grievance before you file a lawsuit.[8] In New York, for example, the IGP is not considered exhausted until you receive a final decision on your complaint from the highest grievance committee, such as New York's Central Office Review Committee ("CORC"). If you bring a complaint in federal court under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 without first exhausting administrative remedies, your case will be dismissed, and you might be barred from bringing a future case.[9]

In addition to filing your grievance under federal law, some states allow you to file your grievance under state law too. In New York, for example, you may challenge the CORC's decision under Article 78 of New York state law.[10] But just like the federal grievance procedures, you may not bring an Article 78 proceeding until you first pursue all administrative remedies available through the IGP.[11] Even if your grievance is denied by the initial grievance resolution committee, you still may not bring an Article 78 proceeding until you exhaust all your administrative remedies. In New York, this means you first have to appeal the Inmate Grievance Resolution Committee's denial to your prison's superintendent. If your grievance is again denied, you must appeal to CORC. Only if the CORC also denies your grievance are you allowed to bring a lawsuit in state court under Article 78, because the CORC is the committee designated to provide final review of your claim under the state administrative grievance procedures. [12]

As you go through the inmate grievance procedures, it is important to bring up right from the beginning any issues you think you might want to raise in a later lawsuit. If you fail to state a particular claim in your original grievance, a court may later consider this claim "unexhausted." As a result, the court may dismiss this unexhausted claim and hear only the claims that you brought up in your original grievance. Courts are required to hear your exhausted claims and are no longer allowed to dismiss the entire action if only some of the claims are unexhausted.[13] Keep in mind that in order to exhaust all of your claims, you may have to use more than one administrative procedure. That is, you may have to go through one review process for one of your claims and a different review process for another of your claims.[14]

When you are ready to file a complaint in federal court, after exhausting your administrative remedies, make sure that your complaint states that you have already exhausted all other remedies.

---

8. If you receive a satisfactory remedy from the IGP, then there will be no need to go to court. If you are unsatisfied with the result of the IGP, you may then file a lawsuit in federal court.

9. Dismissal for non-exhaustion is supposed to be "without prejudice," which means that you will be able to come back to court after you have fully pursued your prison's grievance procedures. A dismissal "with prejudice" means that you cannot take that particular issue back to court. See Wendell v. Asher, 162 F.3d 887, 892 (5th Cir. 1998) (finding that while prisoner's § 1983 claim was properly dismissed for failure to exhaust administrative remedies, the prisoner can still refile his action in district court once he has exhausted his administrative remedies); Wright v. Morris, 111 F.3d 414, 417 n.3 (6th Cir. 1997) (holding that where alleged violations occur after PLRA's enactment and prisoners have notice that exhaustion is required and have a reasonable opportunity to file administrative complaints, the exhaustion requirement is mandatory). However, if the statute of limitations has run on your claim before you return to court, your claim may be permanently barred. In addition, if you are able to bring your claim back to court, you will probably have to pay another filing fee to re-file your claim in court.

10. See Chapter 22 of the JLM on Article 78 proceedings. Article 78 proceedings allow you to challenge decisions made by New York administrative bodies or officers, like the Central Office Review Committee.

11. See Patterson v. Smith, 53 N.Y.2d 98, 100–01, 423 N.E.2d 23, 24–25, 440 N.Y.S.2d 600, 601–02 (1981) (dismissing prisoner's Article 78 claim because he failed to exhaust prison's grievance procedures).

12. See Symmonds v. Leonardo, 138 A.D.2d 810, 810–11, 526 N.Y.S.2d 44, 45 (3d Dept. 1988) (dismissing prisoner's petition for failing to exhaust administrative remedies); People ex rel. Chapman v. Sullivan, 135 A.D.2d 675, 676, 522 N.Y.S.2d 249, 250 (2d Dept. 1987) (holding that petitioners are not entitled to an Article 78 hearing until they have exhausted all administrative remedies).

13. See Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 201, 127 S. Ct. 910, 913, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 804 (2007) (holding that judicial screening of prisoner complaints requiring total exhaustion is not permitted under the Prison Litigation Reform Act of 1995); see also Cooper v. Garcia, 55 F. Supp. 2d 1090, 1094–95 (S.D. Cal. 1999) (holding that only those claims that are unexhausted should be dismissed); Jenkins v. Toombs, 32 F. Supp. 2d 955, 959 (W.D. Mich. 1999) (holding that the PLRA does not require prisoners suing for violations of their civil rights under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to first exhaust all their other options, sometimes referred to as a total exhaustion requirement).

14. For example, in New York, there is a separate claims review process for inmate personal property claims. You need to exhaust this procedure before bringing a personal property claim in court. See N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 1700 (2010).

C. Grievances in New York

1. What Grievances Can Be Raised?

A grievance is defined by the New York State DOCS as "a complaint ... about the substance application of any written or unwritten policy, regulation, procedure or rule of the Department of Correctional Services or any of its program units, or the lack of a policy, regulation, procedure or rule."[15] You may raise a grievance only if it relates to a situation that affects or will affect you personally.[16] Examples of grievable issues include: prison official retaliation, inadequate medical care, and assignment of prison jobs.[17]

2. Non-Grievable Issues[18]

An issue is "non-grievable" when the grievance system has no remedy for it. Thus, the grievance system cannot be used to resolve such an issue. The PLRA requires that you exhaust the IGP if any remedy is available to you.[19] This means that you must still go through the IGP even if it cannot give you the exact remedy you want. If no remedy is available through the IGP, you are not required to exhaust the grievance system.[20] However, if there is some other administrative remedy for your claim, you will be required to pursue that remedy. For example, although an appeal of a temporary release ruling may be considered non-grievable by the IGP, you will still be required to pursue your appeal using the procedures of the temporary release program.[21]

A grievance committee may dismiss and close your grievance as non-grievable if:[22]

(1) you have made no effort to resolve the complaint through procedures and officials at your prison;
(2) you are not or will not be personally affected by the issue in your complaint;
(3) your grievance is about the decision of a program with already established procedures, including temporary release programs,[23] family reunion programs,[24] or media review[25] programs, disciplinary

---

15. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.2(a) (2010); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.2(a) (2006).

16. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.3(b) (2010); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.3(b) (2006).

17. Examples of cases in which the courts have required prisoners to exhaust administrative remedies include the following: Underwood v. Wilson, 151 F.3d 292, 296 (5th Cir. 1998) (prisoner brought § 1983 suit against prison officials alleging they assigned him to jobs that forced him to perform work beyond his physical capabilities and medical work restrictions); White v. McGinnis, 131 F.3d 593, 595 (6th Cir. 1997) (prisoner alleged that prison officials retaliated against him after he filed a lawsuit against another prison official); Barry v. Ratelle, 985 F. Supp. 1235, 1238 (S.D. Cal. 1997) (prisoner brought civil rights action against prison officers claiming deliberate indifference to his serious medical needs in violation of his 8th and 14th Amendment rights).

18. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.3(e) (2010); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.3(e) (2006).

19. Booth v. Churner, 532 U.S. 731, 733–34, 121 S. Ct. 1819, 1821, 149 L. Ed. 2d 958, 962 (2001) (holding that the PLRA requires prisoners to exhaust administrative remedies that are available before suing over prison conditions); see also Alexander v. Hawk, 159 F.3d 1321, 1326 (11th Cir. 1998) (holding that a prisoner was required to submit his claims for monetary and injunctive relief to available prison grievance program, even if the relief offered by that program was not necessarily plain, speedy, and effective); Sallee v. Joyner, 40 F. Supp. 2d 766, 770 (E.D. Va. 1999) (holding that a prisoner must bring forth confinement-related grievances through the Administrative Remedy Program even if he seeks money damages, which are not available through the Administrative Remedy Program).

20. See Davis v. Frazier, No. 98 Civ. 2658 (HB), 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8911, at *9–10 (S.D.N.Y. Jun. 15, 1999) (unpublished) (citing State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 3375R, which states that complaints about alleged assaults or verbal harassment and matters under investigation by the Inspector General are non-grievable); Kearsey v. Williams, No. 99 Civ. 8646, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18727, at *9–10 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 20, 2004) (unpublished) (finding that a prisoner was informed by a written decision that, under State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 3375R, his complaint was non-grievable, which is why the prisoner sued in court); see also Marcello v. Dept. of Corr., No. 07 Civ. 9665, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60895, at *9 (S.D.N.Y. July 30, 2008) (unpublished) ("[Prisoners] may overcome the exhaustion requirement only if they are able to show either (1) that administrative remedies were not actually 'available' to them; (2) that defendant should be estopped from raising plaintiffs' failure to exhaust as an affirmative defense; or (3) that special circumstances exist that excuse plaintiffs' non-compliance with official procedural requirements.").

21. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 1900.6 (2010).

22. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(4)(i) (2010); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(4)(i) (2006) (amended 2007).

23. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 1900.6 (2010).

proceedings or time allowance committee proceedings,[26] central monitoring,[27] inmate claims, or records review procedures,[28] or any other program or procedure involving a written appeal which extends review outside of the facility,[29]

(4) your grievance involves issues outside DOCS supervision; or

(5) your grievance relates only to an individual no longer in your facility.

If a majority of the committee (three out of four members) votes that your grievance falls into one of these categories, your grievance will be dismissed as non-grievable.[30] Otherwise, the committee will hear your grievance.[31] If you believe that your grievance was improperly dismissed as non-grievable, you can apply for review directly to the IGP supervisor. You must do so within seven calendar days after receiving the committee's decision to dismiss the grievance.[32]

You cannot use the IGP for complaints concerning the decisions of other committees such as those relating to disciplinary proceedings and records review as listed above.[33] But you can use the IGP to file a grievance concerning the IGP's general policies, rules, and procedures.[34] However, complaints you may have against any policy, regulation, or rule of an outside agency, or action taken by an outside agency, are non-grievable under the New York IGP.[35] Outside agencies are those not under the supervision of the DOCS Commissioner, including the Division of Parole, Citizenship and Immigration Services,[36] and the Office of Mental Health.[37] Note that New York City DOC Directive 3375R, Inmate Grievance Resolution Program, sets out non-grievable issues specific to New York City jails.[38]

---

24. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 220.5 (2010).

25. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 712.3(d) (2010).

26. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 261 (2010).

27. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 1000.5 (1995) (repealed 2008).

28. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.3(e)(2) (2010). Records review includes freedom of information (FOI) requests and expunction (erasing a record). See Chapter 7 of the JLM, "Freedom of Information," for information about FOI requests and appeals.

29. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.3(e)(1) (2010); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.3(e)(1) (2006).

30. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(4)(i) (2010); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(4)(i) (2006) (amended 2007).

31. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(4)(iv) (2010); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(4)(iv) (2006).

32. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(4)(iii) (2010); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(4)(iii) (2006).

33. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.3(e)(2) (2010); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.3(e)(2) (2006); see, e.g., Harris v. Coughlin, 143 A.D.2d 1018, 1018, 533 N.Y.S.2d 604, 605 (2d Dept. 1988) (holding that where administrators deny a prisoner's temporary release application and also his only chance at administrative appeal, the prisoner can then seek judicial review).

34. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.3(e)(3) (2010); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.3(e)(3) (2006). An example of a rule that could be challenged using the IGP is the rule governing membership of the Temporary Release Committee. See Cintron v. Coughlin, 141 A.D.2d 1006, 1007, 531 N.Y.S.2d 46, 47 (3d Dept. 1988) (allowing prisoner to challenge his rejection for release by the Temporary Release Committee by arguing that a parole officer should not be allowed on the committee). Note that this decision is pre-PLRA, but it serves as an example of the grievable rules of the committees listed in DOCS Directive 4040.

35. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(4)(i)(d) (2010); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(4)(i)(d) (2006).

36. The U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services is a bureau of the Department of Homeland Security and was formerly referred to as Immigration and Naturalization Services.

37. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.3(f) (2010); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.3(f) (2006).

38. New York City Department of Correction, Directive No. 3375R-A, Inmate Grievance Resolution Program § II(C) (1985) (as revised Mar. 13, 2008), available at http://home2.nyc.gov/html/doc/html/directives/dept_directives.shtml (select "Inmate Grievance Resolution Program" from the alphabetized list of documents) (last visited June 21, 2010). This city jail grievance directive lists the following issues as non-grievable: matters under investigation by the Inspector General; complaints pertaining to an alleged assault or verbal harassment; complaints pertaining to discrimination based on disability or perceived disability; complaints where the remedy involves the removal of a staff person from an assignment, or the censure, discipline, or termination of a staff person; matters outside the jurisdiction of the Department of Correction; and complaints involving any program or procedure having its own administrative or investigative process.

Finally, if you are filing a claim for loss of or damage to personal property, the New York State Court of Claims requires you to first exhaust the administrative procedures available for compensating prisoners.[39] The IGP cannot be used to do this. See Chapter 17 of the JLM, "The State's Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions," for more information about property claims.

If you are unsure whether an issue is grievable under the IGP, you should file a grievance, and the committee will decide through the grievance process in Section 701.5 of DOCS Directive 4040.[40]

3. How to Write an Effective Grievance

When using the IGP, you should follow several guidelines to increase your chances of obtaining relief (help). First, if you file a formal grievance with a grievance resolution committee, write out your grievance in detail and list exactly what attempts you made to resolve the problem.[41] If you do not try to resolve the problem on your own, your grievance may be dismissed and closed at the grievance committee hearing.[42]

Second, your complaint must show that you are personally affected by the policy or issue that you are filing a grievance against, or that you will be affected unless relief is granted and changes are made.[43]

Third, you should state the problem accurately and precisely. Using inflammatory, disrespectful, offensive, or foul language (such as curse words) in your complaint will reduce your chances of success.

Fourth, the more specific you are about the relief you are seeking, the more likely you are to receive it. You should list in detail every aspect of relief that you seek because the Inmate Grievance Resolution Committee may not consider types of relief that you do not specifically request. For example, explain the conditions or policies you want changed.

Finally, you should keep copies of all papers filed and received. For a more detailed discussion of what information you must include in your grievance, see Part E of this chapter.

D. The Basic Structure of the New York IGP

1. Levels of Authority

The IGP has three levels of authority; higher levels of authority supervise lower levels of authority. The three levels are: the Inmate Grievance Resolution Committee ("IGRC"), the Superintendent, and the Central Office Review Committee ("CORC").[44]

(a) The Inmate Grievance Resolution Committee ("IGRC")

Each correctional institution must have an IGRC.[45] The IGRC must be a five-person group, made up of two voting prisoners, two voting staff members, and a non-voting chairperson.[46] The prisoner IGRC representatives are elected by their peers for a term of six months and ordinarily serve full-time.[47] A prisoner representative may not be removed from his position without a limited due process hearing.[48]

---

39. N.Y. Ct. Cl. Act § 10(9) (McKinney 1989 & Supp. 2008) ("[F]ailure to timely comply with statutory filing requirements of the Court of Claims Act … constitutes a fatal jurisdictional defect."). Because of the strict time limits in the Court of Claims, you should exhaust administrative procedures as soon as possible before filing a tort claim in court.

40. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.3(e) (2010); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.3(e) (2006).

41. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(a)(2) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(a)(2) (2006).

42. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, §§ 701.3(a), 701.5(b)(4)(i)(a) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program §§ 701.3(a), 701.5(b)(4)(i)(a) (2006).

43. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, §§ 701.3(b), 701.5(b)(4)(i)(b) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program §§ 701.3(b), 701.5(b)(4)(i)(b) (2006).

44. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.1(c) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.1(c) (2006).

45. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.1(a) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.1(a) (2006).

46. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.4(a) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.4(a) (2006).

47. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.4(b)(2), (4) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.4(b)(2), (4) (2006).

48. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.4(c)(1) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.4(c)(1) (2006).

(b) The Role of the Superintendent and Staff

The superintendent selects staff IGRC representatives from a list of personnel who successfully complete a training course designed for individuals who want to serve as IGRC representatives.[49] The Superintendent must ensure that the IGP staff is trained and available.[50] Chairpersons for IGRC hearings are selected by the IGP Supervisor from a list submitted by the IGRC representatives.[51] The chairperson may be a prisoner, staff member, or a volunteer associated with the facility's program.

(c) The Central Office Review Committee ("CORC")

CORC consists of Deputy Commissioners and staff members.[52] It functions on behalf of and under the authority of the Commissioner of Correctional Services.[53] An Office of Diversity Management representative attends CORC hearings and may offer input on grievances alleging discrimination, but cannot vote.[54]

CORC decisions have the effect of directives. CORC decisions requiring corrective action are implemented by the appropriate facility and/or departmental office.[55] Although the Director of the IGP is not a voting member of the CORC, he is responsible for the administrative function of the IGP and for ensuring that the appropriate facility and/or departmental office carry out CORC decisions.[56]

E. The New York IGP Rules

Understanding how the IGP works will help you use the program effectively. The rules are in two DOCS directives. Directive 4040 contains the rules for the general program, while Directive 4041 contains alternative rules for special facilities. The policies, rules, and procedures contained in Directives 4040 and 4041 are also in Title 7 of the Codes, Rules, and Regulations of the State of New York.[57] Also, Directive 4002 establishes the Inmate Liaison Committee ("ILC"), which is concerned with the general welfare of prisoners.

1. Directive 4040: The Inmate Grievance Program

(a) General Procedures

IGP procedures work along three levels of authority: the IGRC, the Superintendent, and the CORC. As noted earlier, before filing a complaint with the IGRC, you should try to resolve the complaint on your own through existing formal or informal methods.

(b) The IGRC

(i) Filing the Complaint[58]

You must submit your complaint to the Grievance Clerk, using the Inmate Grievance Complaint Form 2131, within 21 calendar days of the incident described in your complaint.[59] In some cases, the IGP supervisor can approve exceptions to this time limit if you attempt to resolve the situation on your own or if

---

49. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.4(d) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.4(d) (2006).

50. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.4(d) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.4(d) (2006).

51. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.4(f) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.4(f) (2006).

52. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(d)(2)(i) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(d)(2)(i) (2006).

53. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(d)(2)(ii) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(d)(2)(ii) (2006).

54. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(d)(2)(iii) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(d)(2)(i) (2006).

55. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(d)(2)(iii) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(d)(2)(ii) (2006).

56. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(d)(2)(iii) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(d)(2)(iii) (2006).

57. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, §§ 701–02 (2007).

58. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(a) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(a) (2006).

59. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(a)(1) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(a)(1) (2006).

your complaint is referred back to the IGP by the courts.[60] If for some reason a Grievance Form is not available, you should submit your complaint to the clerk on a piece of paper. Your Grievance Form must include your name, Department Identification Number, housing unit, program assignment, and other identifying information. In addition, your grievance must include a short, specific description of the problem and the remedy you are requesting. You must also provide details of the actions you have already taken to try to resolve the complaint, including people you have contacted and responses you have received. If you submit your complaint on a plain piece of paper, be sure to include the same information.

(ii) Informal Resolution[61]

IGRC Representatives may try to solve the problem informally instead of conducting a formal hearing. If they do this, it will be within sixteen calendar days of the time the grievance was filed. If the IGRC resolves the matter to your satisfaction, it will enter the resolution, along with your consent, on the Grievance Form.

(iii) IGRC Hearing[62]

If there is no resolution, the full IGRC will consider your complaint. If a hearing is necessary, it must be held within sixteen calendar days after your complaint was filed.[63] The IGRC will conduct the hearing at a set time and place. At the hearing, you, your advisor, anyone the grievance directly affects, or any witnesses can offer evidence. The IGRC will judge the relevance and importance of the evidence offered.[64]

You can miss your IGRC hearing twice before the committee will rule in your absence, as long as you miss your hearing for a legitimate reason, such as a visit, parole hearing, program committee, sick call, keeplock, etc.[65] However, at the third scheduled hearing, it will rule in your absence, even if you have a good excuse. You should make every effort to be at the hearing so you can explain your evidence.

If your confinement status prevents you from appearing within sixteen days and you will be released within thirty calendar days, you can have the hearing postponed until your release or have the hearing held in your absence.[66] But, if you will not be released within thirty days, the hearing will be held without you.[67]

(iv) Committee Decision/Recommendation[68]

After the hearing, the IGRC will discuss the complaint privately. When it has reached a decision, the IGRC may tell you the decision orally. Within two working days of the hearing, the Committee must inform you of its decision and reasons in writing.[69] If the decision requires action by the Superintendent or Central Office, the IGRC will make recommendations for the Superintendent to respond and take action. If a majority of the committee cannot agree, your complaint will be sent to the Superintendent for a response.[70]

---

60. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.6(g) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.6(g) (2006).

61. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(1) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(1) (2006).

62. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(2) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(2) (2006).

63. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(2)(ii) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(2)(ii) (2006).

64. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(2)(iii) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(2)(iii) (2006).

65. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(2)(ii)(b) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(2)(ii)(b) (2006).

66. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(2)(ii)(a) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(2)(ii)(a) (2006).

67. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(2)(ii)(a) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(2)(ii)(a) (2006).

68. NY. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(3) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5 (b)(3) (2006).

69. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(3)(i) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(3)(i) (2006).

70. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(3)(ii) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(3)(ii) (2006).

(v) Dismissals[71]

As discussed in Part C, the IGRC may dismiss and close your grievance if: (1) you have made no effort to resolve the complaint on your own "through existing channels"; (2) you are not or will not be personally affected by the issue you raise; (3) you seek a remedy that is available through other DOCS programs; (4) your grievance involves issues outside the supervision of DOCS; or (5) the grievance is institutional and relates only to an individual no longer in your facility.[72]

(c) Appealing to the Superintendent

(i) Filing an Appeal[73]

Within seven calendar days of receiving the Committee's written response to your grievance, you may appeal the decision to the Superintendent by filing an appeal with the Grievance Clerk. If you want to appeal the decision, it is important that you file in time. If you do not file within seven calendar days, it will be presumed that you have accepted the IGRC's decision.

(ii) Superintendent's Action[74]

The Superintendent's response to your appeal will depend on whether the issue involved is a departmental or an institutional issue. A Departmental Grievance is one that would affect you during your confinement at any of the many facilities in the Department.[75] An Institutional Grievance is one affecting you only as long as you remain a resident of the facility in which you filed the grievance.[76]

If the matter concerns changing or revising a Departmental policy or directive, then the Superintendent will forward the grievance papers and a recommendation to the CORC for further review—and notify you that he has done so—within seven calendar days of the appeal. But, if the matter does not concern changing or revising a Departmental policy directive, then the Superintendent will answer your appeal within twenty calendar days.[77]

In all institutional matters, the Superintendent will make a decision and notify you of it, with reasons stated, within twenty calendar days of the appeal.[78]

(d) Appeal to the CORC

(i) Filing an Appeal[79]

If you are not satisfied with the Superintendent's decision, you may appeal the Superintendent's action to the CORC. To do so, you must file an appeal (Form 2133) with the Grievance Clerk within seven calendar days of receiving the Superintendent's written response to your grievance.[80]

---

71. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(4) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040 , Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(4) (2006).

72. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(4)(i) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(4)(i) (2006).

73. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(c)(1) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(c)(1) (2006).

74. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(c)(3) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(c)(3) (2006).

75. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.2(b) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.2(f) (2006).

76. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.2(c) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.2(g) (2006).

77. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(c)(3)(i) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(c)(3)(i) (2006).

78. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(c)(3)(ii) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(c)(3)(ii) (2006).

79. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(d)(i) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(d)(1) (2006).

80. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(d)(1)(i) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(d)(1)(i) (2006).

(ii) CORC Action

The CORC will review the appeal, make a decision, and inform you of its decision and reasons stated within thirty calendar days from the time it receives the appeal.[81] It may take the CORC up to six working days to actually receive your appeal.

(e) Procedural Safeguards for Fair Consideration of Grievances

(i) Advisors[82]

During the grievance process, you may present the grievance yourself without help in preparation, or receive advice or assistance from a staff member who is willing to serve as an advisor, or receive assistance from another prisoner. An advisor is not a direct party to a grievance.[83] A direct party is a person who is so affected by the grievance that he is given the opportunity to provide input before the decision, and he can also appeal the decision afterward.[84]

In addition, if you are a prisoner in the Special Housing Unit, you will have restricted access to other prisoners and may be prohibited from using another prisoner as an advisor (or from serving as an advisor to another prisoner). In this situation, a willing staff member can serve as your advisor.[85]

(ii) Reprisals Prohibited[86]

Reprisal means "any action or threat of action against anyone for the good faith use of ... the grievance procedure."[87] This rule forbids any reprisal, or retaliation, to be taken against you if you use the IGP to file an honest grievance. If such retaliation occurs, you can respond by filing a complaint. You also cannot receive a misbehavior report only for making a supposedly false statement to the IGP.[88]

(iii) Objection to IGRC Representatives[89]

If you object to any of the prisoner representatives on the IGRC, that prisoner representative will not take part in the resolution of your grievance and will be replaced by one of the alternates. If you object to all of the prisoner representatives and the alternates, the committee staff members will make the decision on their own, without any prisoner representatives. In addition, a staff representative who is a party to your grievance cannot vote on the matter. In some especially sensitive circumstances, only staff members will conduct the investigation, even if you do not object to the prisoner representatives.[90] If that happens, the prisoner representatives will still vote.

---

81. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.5(d)(3)(ii) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(d)(3)(ii) (2006). Important: Note that the code has an error and does not have § 701.5(d)(3) in between § 701.5(d)(2) and § 701.5(d)(4). Instead, it lists § 701.5(d)(2) twice. The JLM cites to § 701.5(d)(3) when it refers to the second § 701.5(d)(2) that is listed. However, you should cite to § 701.5(d)(2) if you are using this provision in written documents.

82. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, §§ 701.2(h), 701.6(a) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program §§ 701.2(l), 701.6(a) (2006).

83. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.2(h) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.2(l) (2006).

84. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.2(i) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.2(m) (2006).

85. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.7(c)(3) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.7(c)(3) (2006).

86. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.6(b) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.6(b) (2006).

87. 28 C.F.R. § 40.9 (2002).

88. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.6(b) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.6(b) (2006).

89. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.6(c) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.6(c) (2006).

90. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.6(e)(2) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.6(e)(2) (2006).

(iv) Code of Ethics[91]

A Code of Ethics for IGRC staff and prisoner representatives, clerks, and chairpersons has been established to strengthen the credibility and effectiveness of the IGP.[92] For example, the Code of Ethics prohibits IGRC members from preventing a prisoner from filing a grievance[93] or improperly disclosing confidential information.[94] Under the Code of Ethics, a member must have a willing, respectful attitude, a working knowledge of the IGP, and awareness of their own responsibilities under the IGP.[95]

(v) Time Limits[96]

Time limit extensions for review by the IGRC may only be granted if you consent in writing. Otherwise, if the IGRC does not decide a matter within the time limit, you may appeal to the next level.

(vi) File Maintenance/Confidentiality[97]

Grievance files are maintained in a specific area to be used by the IGRC and the Clerk. Unless you consent in writing, no copies of documents may be placed in your central file or facility file. None of the grievance materials will be given to anyone other than you, a direct party, or someone involved in the review process. The Superintendent is responsible for assuring the confidentiality and maintenance of grievance records. Grievance files are kept for at least four years following their conclusion.[98]

(vii) IGRC Reference Materials[99]

The IGRC at each facility is responsible for keeping an up-to-date set of code "AB" Departmental Directives and the IGP Monthly Index of Written Opinions. A copy of the Index must also be kept in the prison law library.

(viii) Emergencies[100]

If your grievance is an emergency, it will be referred directly to the Superintendent or the CORC, depending on who has the authority to ensure a quick and meaningful response. Emergencies include situations in which your health, safety, or welfare is in danger.

(f) Procedures for Prisoners in Special Housing Units[101]

If you are living in a Special Housing Unit ("SHU"), your access to the IGRC may be more restricted than that of general population prisoners. So, facilities must follow many procedures to help you file a grievance.

For example, Inmate Grievance Complaint Forms (Form 2131) must be available to you at all times.[102] You will be given envelopes so you may forward your grievance confidentially to the Inmate 91. State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.6(f) (2006). The Code of Ethics can be found in N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.11 (2006) and in the State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.11 (2006).

---

92. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.6(f)(1) (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.6(f)(1) (2006).

93. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.11(a) (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.11(a) (2006).

94. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.11(e) (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.11(e) (2006).

95. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.11(b), (h) (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.11(a)–(b) (2006).

96. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.6(g)(2) (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.6(g)(2) (2006).

97. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.6(k) (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.6(k) (2006).

98. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.6(k)(3) (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.6(k)(3) (2006).

99. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.6(l) (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.6(l) (2006).

100. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.6(m) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.6(m) (2006).

101. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.7 (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.7 (2006).

Grievance Office.[103] Your facility may use Inmate Grievance boxes instead of sealed envelopes. These boxes are to be kept locked, and only the IGP supervisor and staff representatives should have keys to them. The grievances will be collected from these boxes at least twice a week.[104] You also have direct access to members of the IGRC, who must make rounds to all special housing units at least once a week to "give inmates who are having communication problems or difficulty writing their complaints an opportunity to request and receive assistance."[105] For security reasons, you may have to use staff, and not another prisoner, as your advisor.[106] The IGP supervisor is responsible for monitoring the grievance procedure in Special Housing Units and for making sure that all of the requirements are met.[107]

If the procedures are not being followed, for example, or if there are never any envelopes or Inmate Grievance boxes, you should tell the IGP supervisor.

(g) Employee Harassment[108]

There are expedited procedures for grievances concerning employee harassment. Employee harassment is defined as "employee misconduct meant to annoy, intimidate or harm an inmate."[109] Under these conditions, you should first report the problem to the harassing employee's immediate supervisor; however, this is not a requirement.[110] You can still file a complaint in the IGP if you choose not to report the employer to his supervisor. In cases of harassment, your grievance and supporting documents will be sent directly to the Superintendent by the end of the day.[111] If the Superintendent concludes that the issue does not relate to harassment, then the grievance will be returned to the IGRC for normal processing.[112] In order to make a stronger case, you should write down and keep a record of every incident of harassment. Your records should include the time, date, nature of the harassment, who was involved, and if there were any other witnesses. You should also keep a record of anything that happened after the harassment, like a conversation you had with someone else about the incident.

If the Superintendent determines that the issue does relate to harassment, he must investigate further, and you will not be allowed to withdraw your complaint.[113] The Superintendent will then make a decision within twenty-five calendar days and inform you of the decision with reasons stated.[114] The time limit can be extended only with your consent. If the Superintendent does not respond within twenty-five days, you may appeal to the CORC by filing a Form 2133 with the Clerk.[115] If you receive a decision from the Superintendent and you want to appeal, you must file your appeal within seven calendar days.[116]

---

102. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.7(a)(1) (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.7(a)(1) (2006).

103. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.7(a)(2) (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.7(a)(2) (2006).

104. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.7(b) (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.7(b) (2006).

105. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.7(c)(1) (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.7(c)(1) (2006).

106. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.7(c)(3) (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.7(c)(3) (2006).

107. N.Y. Comp Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.7 (2006).

108. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.8 (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.8 (2006).

109. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.2(e) (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.2(i) (2006).

110. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.8(a) (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.8(a) (2006).

111. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.8(b) (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.8(b) (2006).

112. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.8(c) (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.8(c) (2006).

113. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.8(d)–(e) (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.8(e) (2006).

114. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.8(f) (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.8(f) (2006).

115. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.8(g) (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.8(g) (2006).

116. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.8(h) (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional

(h) Unlawful Discrimination[117]

Unlawful discrimination includes "acts or policies which adversely affect individuals based on race, religion, national origin, sex, sexual orientation, age, disabling condition(s) or political belief, except as provided by law."[118] If you are being unlawfully discriminated against by an employee, program, policy, or procedure, you should report the incident to the immediate supervisor of the offending employee. However, this is not required before filing a complaint in the IGP.[119] This grievance will be forwarded to the Superintendent, and a copy sent to the Office of Diversity Management within twenty-four hours.[120] Either the Superintendent and high-ranking supervisor or the Office of Diversity Management will investigate.[121]

After supervising an investigation, the Superintendent will give a decision within twenty-five calendar days of the grievance and inform you of the decision, with reasons stated.[122] If the Superintendent does not respond within twenty-five days, you may appeal to the CORC.[123] If you receive a decision from the Superintendent and want to appeal, you must file Form 2133 with the Clerk within seven calendar days.[124]

2. Directive 4041: The Inmate Grievance Program Modification Plan

(a) Application of the IGP Modification Plan

It may be difficult for some prisoners to participate in regular IGP procedures. For example, if you are involved in a temporary release program, you may spend many hours each day looking for a job or education, and you may have weekend furloughs (leaves of absences) and daily family visits. In cases like these, the IGP Modification Plan is used to allow you the same opportunity to file a grievance.[125]

(b) Procedures

The procedures for filing a grievance under the Modification Plan are found in N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 702.2 and also in DOCS Directive 4041 § 702.4(a)–(c). First, you must request a grievance form, and one will be provided to you within twenty-four hours of your request. You can ask for help in filling out the form from any prisoner or staff member. A designated staff member will have 16 calendar days to try to resolve your grievance informally. If no resolution occurs, the staff member will request an Inmate Grievance Resolution Committee ("IGRC") hearing within sixteen calendar days of receiving your grievance.[126] IGRC members include two staff representatives and a non-voting chairperson the Superintendent chooses, and two prisoners you choose. After the hearing, the IGRC will make a recommendation about your claim.

Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.8(h) (2006); see, e.g., Lawrence v. Goord, 304 F.3d 198, 200 (2d Cir. 2002) (finding that behavior of officials fit within the category of "inmate suits about prison life" where prisoner alleged that prison officials fabricated misbehavior reports and related improper action in retaliation for earlier complaints of staff misconduct filed by prisoner).

117. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.9 (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.9 (2006).

118. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.2(f) (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.2(j) (2006).

119. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.9(a) (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.9(a) (2006).

120. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.9(c) (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.9(c) (2006).

121. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.9(d) (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.9(d) (2006).

122. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.9(e) (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.9(e) (2006).

123. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.9(f) (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.9(f) (2006).

124. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.9(g) (2006); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.9(g) (2006).

125. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 702.2(a) (1999); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4041, Inmate Grievance Program Modification Plan § 702.2(a) (1999).

126. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 702.4(a)(4) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4041, Inmate Grievance Program Modification Plan § 702.4(a)(4) (2007).

Within seven calendar days after you receive a written recommendation from the IGRC, you can appeal to the Superintendent. The appeal will follow the procedure described in Part E(1)(c) of this chapter. If you do not file an appeal within seven calendar days, you are presumed to have accepted the recommendation.[127]

Within seven calendar days of receiving the Superintendent's response, you can appeal to the CORC.[128] The appeal will follow the procedure described in Part E(1)(d) of this chapter.

3. Directive 4002: The Inmate Liaison Committee

The Superintendent in your facility must establish an ILC.[129] This committee's goal is to provide effective communication between prisoners and the administration, and to promote the accurate distribution and exchange of information. The ILC must discuss the prisoners' general welfare with prison officials. This includes, for example, suggestions from prisoners on facility operations. These discussions may not relate to specific problems of individual prisoners. The Superintendent and Facility Executive Team will meet with the ILC monthly, and informal discussions should occur consistently.

The ILC is made up of a group of prisoners chosen by the general population. Representatives are elected by secret ballot for a term of six months and may serve for two terms in a row. The ILC will elect officers and an executive committee who can serve for one six month term per year. The Superintendent can deny membership to prisoners with recent or ongoing disciplinary problems.[130]

The ILC must have a room with facilities, including a typewriter, desks, supplies, and stationery.[131] The ILC will be governed by a Constitution and By-Laws, which it will prepare with the help of a staff member. A suggested format for the Constitution and By-Laws is attached to Directive 4002.[132]

F. Rules for Inmate Grievance Procedures in Other States

In 1979, Congress set out minimum standards for formal inmate grievance procedures to help reduce the large number of prisoner civil rights cases that were waiting to be heard in courts.[133] States with grievance procedures that meet these standards are certified by the Attorney General.[134] Remember, you must exhaust all available administrative procedures before you can file a claim under 42 U.S.C. § 1983.[135]

In order for an inmate grievance procedure to be certified, the state must meet certain federal minimum standards for the communication of those procedures to all prisoners.[136] One of the requirements set out by Congress is that all IGPs must be published. A certified inmate grievance procedure must also be readily available to all prisoners and employees of the institution. Every prisoner and employee must receive written notification of the procedure when they get to the institution. You must also be given a verbal explanation of the procedure and the opportunity to ask questions about the procedure at that time. The procedure must be written in any language that is spoken by a significant portion of the prison population. Provisions must be made to aid prisoners who speak other languages, as well as for those with disabilities.

In general, you should be able to find guidelines and procedures for filing a grievance in your prison law library. Ask your librarian if you need help finding them. It is important for you to understand these rules before filing your grievance to make the best use of the grievance procedure.

---

127. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 702.4(b)(1) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4041, Inmate Grievance Program Modification Plan § 702.4(b)(1) (2007).

128. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 702.4(c)(1) (2007); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4041, Inmate Grievance Program Modification Plan § 702.4(c)(1) (2007).

129. State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4002, Inmate Liaison Committee § II(A) (1997) (as revised Sept. 21, 2006).

130. State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4002, Inmate Liaison Committee § II(B)(5) (1997) (as revised Sept. 21, 2006).

131. State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4002, Inmate Liaison Committee § II(E) (1997) (as revised Sept. 21, 2006).

132. State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4002, Inmate Liaison Committee § II(F) (1997) (as revised Sept. 21, 2006).

133. S. Rep. No. 96-416, at 34 (1979), as reprinted in 1980 U.S.C.C.A.N. 787, 816. The minimum standards for inmate grievance procedures can be found at 28 C.F.R. §§ 40.1–40.10 (2010).

134. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e (2000). The procedures for obtaining certification of a grievance procedure can be found at 28 C.F.R. §§ 40.11–40.22 (2009).

135. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(a) (2000). See Chapter 16 of the JLM for more information on § 1983 claims.

136. 28 C.F.R. § 40.11(b) (2009). For a detailed description of how these procedures must be communicated, see 28 C.F.R. § 40.3 (2009).

G. Conclusion

If you have a grievance, you must go through your state's inmate grievance program before going to court. Once you receive a final decision from the IGP, you may file a complaint in court. If you fail to exhaust your remedies, your case will be dismissed. Even if you feel that the grievance system in your prison is unfair or inefficient, you must exhaust it. Though all of the requirements under the PLRA may seem complicated and intimidating, you should try your best to properly exhaust your grievance. If you make an honest, good-faith effort to comply with the requirements, the courts are more likely to excuse mistakes. For example, if you miss a deadline, you should not give up. Continue to pursue your grievance and request to be excused from the rule you failed to follow, or ask to be able to refile your grievance and start over.

A JAILHOUSE LAWYER'S MANUAL

Chapter 16: Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

CHAPTER 16

USING 42 U.S.C. § 1983 AND 28 U.S.C. § 1331 TO OBTAIN RELIEF FROM VIOLATIONS OF FEDERAL LAW*

A. Introduction

1. Overview

The U.S. Constitution and some federal laws protect you against unfair government actions by giving you individual rights. For example, the Eighth Amendment protects your right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment,[1] and the First Amendment protects your right to practice your religion.[2] However, the Constitution does not tell you what to do if someone violates your constitutional or statutory rights.[3] The Civil Rights Act of 1871 ("Section 1983") is the law that allows prisoners to bring lawsuits challenging state or local prison conditions that violate constitutional or federal statutory rights.[4]

Specifically, Section 1983 allows you to sue state and local (but not federal) officials who have violated your rights.[5] You can also use Section 1983 to challenge state prison rules and regulations—for example, restrictions on religious practices or cell assignment policies—that violate constitutional and statutory rights. These rights are explained in other Chapters of the JLM. Although you cannot use Section 1983 to sue federal officials, you can use a different law, 28 U.S.C. § 1331, to challenge violations of your constitutional rights.[6] Section 1331 gives federal courts the power to hear claims against the federal government. These lawsuits are called "Bivens" actions.[7] Section 1331 and Section 1983 are closely related, and Bivens actions often rely on case law interpreting Section 1983.

This Chapter is organized into several Parts. This Part, Part A, is the introduction and includes important warnings and general advice. Part B explains how to use Section 1983 to challenge state prison conditions and other practices that violate your constitutional or federal statutory rights. Part C explains

---

* This Chapter was revised by Elana Pollak, based on previous versions by Amy Lowenstein, Colin Starger, Ambreen Delawalla, Michael Irvine, Kimberly Mazzocco, Manjula Gill, Amy Longo, Paul Clabo, and Kim Sweet. Special thanks to John Boston of The Legal Aid Society for his valuable comments.

1. U.S. Const. amend. VIII.

2. U.S. Const. amend. I. See Figure 1 of this Section for a list of other important rights granted to you by the Constitution.

3. Constitutional rights are those rights guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution. § 1983 may allow you to sue someone who violates your constitutional rights if that person is acting "under color of law." § 1983 cases usually involve constitutional rights found in the first 10 amendments to the Constitution (also called the Bill of Rights) or in the 14th Amendment. The Bill of Rights originally limited only the power of the federal government. Using the legal theory of "incorporation" and the Due Process Clause of the 14th Amendment, the Supreme Court has ruled that most of its guarantees also protect citizens against state governments. See, e.g., Ingraham v. Wright, 430 U.S. 651, 673 n.42, 97 S. Ct. 1401, 1414 n.42, 51 L. Ed. 2d 711, 731 n.42 (1977) (holding that the 4th Amendment was incorporated against the states by the 14th Amendment). This means that state actors have to respect most of the rights found in the Bill of Rights as well.
Federal statutory rights are those rights created by federal laws enacted by Congress. Many federal statutes include their own "enforcement provisions," which means that the statute gives you a particular right and allows you to sue someone for violating that right. If a federal statute has its own enforcement provision, you must use that statute rather than § 1983 to bring your lawsuit. See Part B(3) of this Chapter for more information about statutory rights and § 1983.

4. 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (2006). See Part B(1) of this Chapter for the full text of the statute.

5. See Monroe v. Pape, 365 U.S. 167, 173–74, 81 S. Ct. 473, 477, 5 L. Ed. 2d 492, 498 (1961) (holding that § 1983 gives a federal remedy to parties deprived of constitutional rights, privileges, and immunities by an official's abuse of his position), overruled in part on other grounds, Monell v. N.Y. City Dept. of Social Servs., 436 U.S. 658, 695–701, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2038–41, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1978). If an official deprives you of constitutional or federal statutory rights, you may also be able to sue that official under state law. However, § 1983 allows you to sue that official under federal law regardless of whether a state remedy is available. Monroe v. Pape, 365 U.S. 167, 173–74, 81 S. Ct. 473, 477, 5 L. Ed. 2d 492, 498 (1961) (detailing several reasons you might prefer to use federal law instead of state law to seek your remedy).

6. 28 U.S.C. § 1331 (2006).

7. Bivens actions are named after the case of Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Fed. Bur. of Narcotics, 403 U.S. 388, 91 S. Ct. 1991, 29 L. Ed. 2d. 619 (1971) (holding that an implied cause of action may exist where an individual's 4th Amendment right to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures has been violated by federal agents).

what you can sue for (the types of relief, like money damages, injunctions, etc.); who to sue; typical defense arguments you will have to defeat; when to sue; where to sue; and how to proceed with your Section 1983 suit. Part D describes other ways to bring lawsuits, including class actions and state court lawsuits. Part E explains Bivens actions against federal officials under 28 U.S.C. § 1331. Remember, Bivens actions closely rely on case law interpreting Section 1983, so if you want to bring a Bivens action you should still read all of this Chapter. Finally, the Appendices to this Chapter have sample forms that you can use as examples when preparing your case.

Figure 1 below explains your rights, the source of each of your rights, and which chapters of the JLM you should read.

Types of Prisoner Rights	Source of Constitutional Right[8]	JLM Chapter
Mail, visitation, telephone use, and other communications	First Amendment	Chapter 19: "Your Right to Communicate with the Outside World"
Religious practices	First Amendment	Chapter 27: "Religious Freedom in Prison"
Searches and seizures of pretrial detainees; body searches	Fourth Amendment	Chapter 25: "Your Right to Be Free From Illegal Body Searches"
Prison conditions: overcrowding, cleanliness, etc.	Eighth Amendment	This Chapter, Chapter 16
Medical care	Eighth Amendment	Chapter 23: "Your Right to Adequate Medical Care"
Assault/failure to protect	Eighth Amendment	Chapter 24: "Your Right to Be Free From Assault"
Informational privacy	Fourteenth Amendment	Chapter 26: "Infectious Diseases: AIDS, Hepatitis, and Tuberculosis in Prison," and Chapter 23: "Your Right to Adequate Medical Care"
Due Process in disciplinary hearings	Due Process Clause of the Fifth & Fourteenth Amendments	Chapter 18: "Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Proceedings"
Discrimination on the basis of race, ethnicity, etc.	Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment	This Chapter, Chapter 16.
Discrimination on the basis of gender	Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment	This Chapter, Chapter 16.
Rights of prisoners with mental illness	Eighth & Fourteenth Amendments	Chapter 29, "Special Issues for Prisoners with Mental Illness"

8. This chart is only a simple outline for where in the Constitution courts have traditionally located the rights at issue. Some of these rights may also be protected by federal statutes. Your case will depend on your particular facts, so you should use this chart to begin your research, not end it.

Types of Prisoner Rights	Source of Constitutional Right[8]	JLM Chapter
Discrimination on the basis of disability	Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment	Chapter 28, "Rights of Prisoners with Disabilities"
Discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation or gender identity	Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment	Chapter 30: "Special Information for Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, and Transgender Prisoners"
Access to courts—law libraries or legal assistance	First, Sixth, & Fourteenth Amendments	Chapter 3: "Your Right to Learn the Law and Go to Court"

Figure 1: Other JLM Chapters that may help you bring a Section 1983 Claim

2. Important Warnings and General Advice

(a) It is VERY important that you read Chapter 13 of the JLM, "The Prison Litigation Reform Act," before you begin your Section 1983 claim.

The Prison Litigation Reform Act[9] ("PLRA") is a federal law that significantly affects Section 1983 cases. You must be sure that you meet all of the PLRA requirements before you begin any lawsuit. In particular, be aware of the PLRA's "three strikes" rule, which gives you a "strike" whenever you have a case dismissed as frivolous, malicious, or failing to state a valid legal claim. If you have three cases dismissed as "strikes," you will not be able to use the in forma pauperis procedure any longer,[10] or you may lose good time credit.

Another PLRA requirement that you should be especially careful about is the need to exhaust (use up) all your administrative remedies—such as prison grievance procedures and appeals—before you go to court. In other words, you need to figure out what procedures exist within your prison to protest your situation and use all of those procedures.[11] Some courts used to require that you describe what you have done already to exhaust your remedies in your complaint; however, in Jones v. Bock, the Supreme Court said that such rules are impermissible.[12] The complaint only begins the lawsuit, however. You will still have to describe what you have done to exhaust administrative remedies at some point. Many prisoner Section 1983 complaints are dismissed for failing to exhaust administrative remedies.[13]

(b) Your constitutional rights are not absolute.

In most cases, a prisoner's constitutional rights are balanced against the state or federal government's interests (usually, the government's interest in maintaining a secure prison environment). In many situations, your constitutional rights may be outweighed by the government's interest in prison security. For most constitutional claims,[14] courts use a test established in a case called Turner v. Safley[15] to determine whether your constitutional rights have been violated. This test is discussed in detail in Part B(2)(a) of this Chapter.

---

9. 42 U.S.C. § 1997(e) (2006).

10. In forma pauperis allows you to file a lawsuit as a "poor person." In this way, you can avoid paying many of the normal court fees and costs or pay them on an installment plan.

11. See Chapter 15 of the JLM, "Inmate Grievance Procedures."

12. Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 127 S. Ct. 910, 921–22, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 813–14 (2007) (holding that an inmate is not required to plead or demonstrate exhaustion in his complaint).

13. See, e.g., Booth v. Churner, 532 U.S. 731, 741, 121 S. Ct. 1819, 1825, 149 L. Ed. 958, 967 (2001) (holding that petitioner did not exhaust all available administrative remedies when he failed to appeal an unfavorable administrative decision to the highest level of review).

14. Turner applies to substantive constitutional rights. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64 (1987). Prisoners' rights subject to the Turner test include the rights to freedom of speech, freedom of association, free exercise of religion, and the right to marry (subject to restrictions). Note that 8th Amendment "cruel and unusual punishment" violations are not judged under the Turner test. See Part B(2)(a) of this Chapter for more information about Turner. Remember that you may have a better claim under a federal statute than under § 1983 and Turner.

15. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89–90, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2261–62, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79–80 (1987).

(c) Do NOT use Section 1983 to challenge your original criminal conviction, your sentence, loss of good time, or denial of parole.

You cannot use Section 1983 to challenge violations of your constitutional rights based on the fact of your criminal conviction and sentence except in very limited circumstances.[16] Instead of Section 1983, you can challenge your conviction or sentence by appealing or, if your appeal is denied, by filing for a writ of habeas corpus or other post-conviction relief.[17] You also cannot use Section 1983 to challenge a loss of good time credit, a parole denial, or other official actions that directly affect how much time you spend in prison.[18] You should use state procedures to challenge these losses. For example, in New York, prisoners can challenge the loss of good time credit or denial of parole through an Article 78 proceeding.[19] For information about Article 78 proceedings, see Chapter 22 of the JLM.

However, you can usually use Section 1983 to challenge administrative decisions that do not directly affect the length of your sentence.[20] This Chapter primarily focuses on how you can use a Section 1983 suit if government officials have abused or denied your constitutional or federal statutory rights while you have been in prison. Again, you should not use Section 1983 to challenge the amount of time to be spent in prison.

(d) Make certain that all defendants in your Section 1983 lawsuit had personal involvement[21] in the violation of your rights.

Pro se litigants (people who file a suit without a lawyer) often want to include everybody they can think of as defendants, including supervisory prison officials like wardens or the head of the state department of corrections, and you may want to do this too. But naming everybody is often not a good idea. Courts generally dismiss all claims against supervisory officials unless you provide enough facts in your complaint to show that the particular supervisory officials were involved in the violation of your rights.[22] If you make claims against particular defendants that the court quickly dismisses for lack of personal involvement, the judge may be less likely to trust the rest of your lawsuit. Try as best you can to find out which officials were involved.

---

16. See Heck v. Humphrey, 512 U.S. 477, 486–87, 114 S. Ct. 2364, 2372, 129 L. Ed. 2d 383, 394 (1994) (holding that § 1983 suits are not available if the outcome of the suit would imply that a prisoner's conviction or sentence is invalid, unless he proves that his conviction or sentence has been reversed on direct appeal, expunged by executive order, declared invalid by a state tribunal authorized to make such a determination, or called into question by a federal court's issuance of writ of habeas corpus).

17. See Chapter 9 of the JLM, "Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence;" Chapter 20, "Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence;" Chapter 13, "Federal Habeas Corpus;" and Chapter 21, "State Habeas Corpus: Florida, New York, and Texas," and state-specific habeas Chapters in the upcoming State Supplements for more information on post-conviction relief.

18. See Edwards v. Balisok, 520 U.S. 641, 648, 117 S. Ct. 1584, 1589, 137 L. Ed. 2d 906, 915 (1997) (holding that § 1983 claim alleging that the prisoner was deprived of good time credits without procedural due process could not go forward, because if successful it would imply that the deprivation of good time credits was invalid).

19. If your prison is not following its own rules or policies, New York state prisoners can file an Article 78 petition. For more information, see Chapter 22 of the JLM, "How To Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules."

20. See Wilkinson v. Dotson, 544 U.S. 74, 82, 125 S. Ct. 1242, 1248, 161 L. Ed. 253, 262–63 (2005) (allowing prisoners to use § 1983 to challenge parole procedures to request new reviews of parole eligibility, where winning the lawsuit would not necessarily result in prisoners' obtaining earlier parole); Muhammad v. Close, 540 U.S. 749, 754–55, 124 S. Ct. 1303, 1306, 158 L. Ed. 2d 32, 38 (2004) (holding that a § 1983 claim may challenge an administrative decision as long as it does not dispute the validity of the underlying conviction); Leamer v. Fauver, 288 F.3d 532, 543 (3d Cir. 2002) (finding to be valid a § 1983 claim that challenged a disciplinary action which could affect the granting of parole, but did not directly affect length of sentence); Jenkins v. Haubert, 179 F.3d 19, 27 (2d Cir. 1999) (holding that § 1983 may be used to challenge a prisoner's term of disciplinary segregation, which did not implicate the length of confinement).

21. Part B(1)(a) of this Chapter explains how you can prove a defendant official was personally involved in violating your rights.

22. See Monell v. Dept. of Soc. Servs., 436 U.S. 658, 663 n.7, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2022 n.7, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 619 n.7 (1978) (holding that supervisory officials are not automatically responsible for the actions of their employees). However, sometimes you can name supervisory officials as defendants even if they were not directly involved in violating your rights. See Part C(2)(b) of this Chapter ("Supervisor Liability").

(e) Explain the facts of your case in as much detail as possible.

The most common mistake made by pro se litigants is failing to state the facts clearly and adequately. Remember, the court already knows something about the law, but it knows nothing about the facts of your claim. Make sure that you tell the court exactly what happened to you, when and where it happened, who was involved, and how it happened. If you know why your rights were violated, you should explain that too. More than anything else, the particular facts of your case will determine the success of your claim. For an example of a written complaint, see Appendix A-2 of this Chapter.

Here's an example to clarify the point. Imagine that you are claiming that your access to the prison law library has been unfairly restricted. The court will want to know the details. When did you want to get into the library? Why did you need access to the library? Are there any set rules in your prison for library access? Exactly how did the denial of access hurt you? Were you unable to meet a filing deadline or respond to a legal argument? Did you have a case pending or a court date? What research were you trying to do? Who stopped you? How many times did this happen, and when? Include as much of this information as possible in your complaint. Of course, the kinds of questions you will want to ask yourself and answer for the court depends on your claim. Give as much relevant[23] detail as possible.

If possible, try to get sworn, written statements—also known as affidavits or declarations[24]—from witnesses who saw your rights being violated. Try to get as much proof as possible that supports the factual claims you are making in your case.

(f) Confirm the information in this or any other Chapter of the JLM through library research.

Remember that the cases discussed in this Chapter are only examples to use as starting points in your research. There are many court decisions relating to Section 1983 claims. It is essential that you research and make sure the courts still follow the cases in the footnotes of this Chapter.[25] We have tried to make the JLM as up-to-date as possible, but some cases may not be good law anymore if a higher court has made a different decision.[26]

(g) Bivens Actions against Federal Officials are Similar to Section 1983 Claims against State or Local Officials.

If you want to sue federal officials, you cannot use Section 1983. Instead, you can bring a type of lawsuit called a Bivens action under 28 U.S.C. § 1331. Most federal prisoners therefore bring Bivens actions, which are described in Part E of this Chapter. Bivens actions are very similar to Section 1983 claims, so you should still read Parts B and C of this Chapter discussing Section 1983 claims.

B. Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Challenge State or Local Government Action

1. Essential Requirements for Obtaining Relief Under Section 1983

Section 1983 states:

> Every person who, under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage, of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, subjects, or causes to be subjected, any citizen of the United States or other person within

23. Relevance is a legal idea. "Relevant evidence" means "evidence having any tendency to make the existence of any fact that is of consequence to the determination of [your claim] more probable or less probable than it would be without the evidence." Fed. R. Evid. 401. Basically, relevant evidence is anything that helps to prove your story or your legal claim.

24. See Chapter 6 of the JLM, "An Introduction to Legal Documents."

25. See Chapter 1 of the JLM, "How to Use the JLM," and Chapter 2, "Introduction to Legal Research," for more information.

26. It is very important you read the full footnoted cases. Also try to read any cases cited in those cases as well. If possible, look up 42 U.S.C. § 1983 in the United States Code Annotated (U.S.C.A.) or United States Code Service (U.S.C.S.). The U.S.C.A. and U.S.C.S. are commercial publications of the United States Code that include the federal statutes and summaries of related cases interpreting those statutes. You should also look at the Federal Practice Digest and other digests that have case summaries organized by subject matter. The process of making sure a case is up-to-date is called "Shepardizing." See Chapter 2 of the JLM, "Introduction to Legal Research," for more information on how to Shepardize a case.

> the jurisdiction thereof to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws, shall be liable to the party injured in an action at law, suit in equity, or other proper proceeding for redress.[27]

The italicized words and phrases state the three essential requirements (also known as elements) that you must fulfill when bringing a lawsuit under Section 1983. In your pleadings, you need to show that all three elements of Section 1983 are met.

(a) First Requirement: Person

Section 1983's first requirement is that you must show that your constitutional or federal statutory rights were violated by a "person." The legal definition of "person" for Section 1983 claims includes more than actual people (prison wardens, guards, etc.). A city, county, or municipality can also be a "person" under Section 1983.[28] The definition of "person," however, does not include state governments and their agencies.[29] For example, you cannot sue the State of New York or the State Department of Corrections under Section 1983.[30] Thus, while officials (actual people) at any level of government (including state government) may be sued under Section 1983, only non-state governments and their agencies (such as cities, counties, local agencies, and private corporations) may be sued as a "person" under Section 1983. See Part C(2) of this Chapter, "Whom to Name as Defendants" for a further discussion of whom you can sue using Section 1983.

You should name all "persons" who violated your rights as defendants, whether they are individuals, a local government agency, or both. You may name as many defendants as you choose, as long as each of them is personally involved in the wrong you are claiming.[31] Courts consider officials and local government agencies to be personally involved if they:

(1) Directly participated in the wrong; or
(2) Knew about the wrong but did not try to stop or fix it; or
(3) Failed to oversee the people who caused the wrong, such as by hiring unqualified people or failing to adequately train the staff; or
(4) Created a policy or custom that allowed the wrong to occur.

The situations listed in (1), (2), and (3) are most common in cases in which you are challenging defendants' specific behavior or failure to act. The fourth situation occurs when you challenge general rules of the prison.

For an example of a type (1) situation, imagine a case in which an injured prisoner asked a guard for medical care. If the guard refused to get the prisoner help, you might say that he directly participated in violating the prisoner's right to medical care. An example of a type (2) situation could be a guard seeing a prisoner being attacked by other prisoners, but not trying to stop the attack. In a type (3) situation, prison officials may be held liable for hiring unqualified people[32] or failing to properly train or supervise their staff.[33]

---

27. 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (2000) (emphasis added).

28. See Monell v. Dept. of Soc. Servs., 436 U.S. 658, 690, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2035–36, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 635 (1978) (holding that municipalities and local governments are considered "persons" under § 1983).

29. See Will v. Mich. Dept. of State Police, 491 U.S. 58, 71, 109 S. Ct. 2304, 2312, 105 L. Ed. 2d 45, 58 (1989) (holding that states may not be sued under § 1983).

30. You may, however, be able to sue states and state agencies under other federal laws such as the Americans with Disabilities Act. See 42 U.S.C. §§ 12101–213 (2000); United States v. Georgia, 546 U.S. 151, 126 S. Ct. 877, 163 L. Ed. 2d 250 (2006); Pa. Dept. of Corrs. v. Yeskey, 524 U.S. 206, 118 S. Ct. 1952, 141 L. Ed. 2d 215 (1998). For information on the rights of prisoners with disabilities, see the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, 29 U.S.C. § 794 (2009) and Chapter 27 of the JLM, "Rights of Prisoners with Disabilities."

31. See Hafer v. Melo, 502 U.S. 21, 112 S. Ct. 358, 116 L. Ed. 2d 301 (holding that state officials, sued in their individual capacities, were "persons" within the meaning of § 1983 and that the 11th Amendment did not bar such suits. State officers were not absolutely immune from personal liability just because of the "official" nature of their acts).

32. See Bd. of the County Comm'rs v. Brown, 520 U.S. 397, 411, 117 S. Ct. 1382, 1392, 137 L. Ed. 2d 626, 644 (1997) (holding that a municipality may be liable for hiring decisions under a deliberate indifference standard if adequate screening of the employee alleged to have violated the plaintiff's rights would have made it clear to a reasonable policymaker that hiring the employee was highly likely to result in the type of constitutional violation alleged by the plaintiff).

33. See City of Canton v. Harris, 489 U.S. 378, 388–89, 109 S. Ct. 1197, 1204–05, 103 L. Ed. 2d 412, 426–27 (1989) (finding the city could be liable under § 1983 for failure to train employees, if the failure amounts to deliberate

Finally, in a type (4) situation, prison officials can be liable for creating rules, policies, or customs that result in a violation of your rights. These can include written rules or policies[34] or unwritten policies.[35] You should always be specific about what kind of rule or practice you are challenging and who was responsible for creating the rule or practice (if you know). If you are arguing that an unwritten policy or custom violated your rights, you need to gather as much evidence as possible to show that it is widely followed in your jail or prison, so that it will be considered an actual policy or custom.[36] An example of a type (4) situation could be a guard who makes sure that any prisoner who violates a prison rule does not receive medical care for a month, even if the prisoner is ill or injured.

Sometimes, several people or agencies will be involved in violating your rights, and they will all be involved in different ways. For example, if a prison guard assaults you, you can sue that guard because he participated in violating your rights. If another guard sees the assault but does not try to stop it, you can sue that guard as well, because he did not try to stop or fix the wrong. If you complain to the warden that this guard has assaulted you several times, and the warden does nothing, you might also be able to sue the warden. If you then find out that there is a prison policy of allowing guards to assault prisoners, or that this guard had a history of assaulting prisoners at his previous job, then you might be able to sue the local department of corrections for creating an unconstitutional policy or hiring an unqualified guard. In this situation, it would probably be obvious to you that the guard who assaulted you and the guard who watched the assault were personally involved in violating your rights. However, figuring out whether the warden and/or the local department of corrections were personally involved is much more complicated. For more about showing personal involvement, see Part C(2)(b) of this Chapter, "Supervisor Liability," and Part C(2)(c) of this Chapter, "Municipal or Local Government Liability."

(b) Second Requirement: Under Color of State Law

The second requirement for suing under Section 1983 is that the person who violated your rights must have been acting "under color of state law." This means that the person you sue must be someone who was acting under the state's authority. States have authority over their own agencies and employees; over cities, counties, and municipalities, and over city, county, and municipal employees. In prison, persons acting under color of state law include:

(1) Employees of state or local prisons or jails, like a prison doctor or guard; and
(2) Private parties who make contracts with the state to perform services.[37] indifference to the constitutional rights of persons coming into contact with those employees).

---

34. See, e.g., Shain v. Ellison, 273 F.3d 56, 66 (2d Cir. 2001), cert. denied, Nassau County v. Shain, 537 U.S. 1083, 123 S. Ct. 672, 154 L. Ed. 2d 582, (2002) (holding that a prison's written policy of unreasonably strip searching all arrestees was unconstitutional); Barrett v. Coplan, 292 F. Supp. 2d 281 (D.N.H. 2003) (allowing prisoner to go forward with a claim that the prison's blanket policy of refusing to consider surgical or hormone treatment for prisoners with gender identity disorder violated prisoner's 8th Amendment right to adequate medical care).

35. See, e.g., Fairley v. Luman, 281 F.3d 913, 918 (9th Cir. 2002), cert. denied, 537 U.S. 1044, 123 S. Ct.659, 154 L. Ed. 2d 515 (holding that city's failure to have procedures in place to verify warrants was an unwritten policy that deprived plaintiff of his right to due process when he was mistakenly held on outstanding warrants for the arrest of his twin brother); Garrett v. Unified Gov. of Athens-Clark County, 246 F. Supp. 2d 1262, 1279–80 (M.D. Ga. 2003) (noting that even when there is no formal written policy, supervisors can be held liable where there is an unconstitutional custom, but not where there is a custom that is used unconstitutionally only on particular occasions), rev'd on other grounds sub nom., Garrett v. Athens-Clark County, 378 F.3d 1274 (11th Cir. 2004) (per curiam); Gonzalez v. City of Schenectady, 141 F. Supp. 2d 304, 307 (N.D.N.Y. 2001) (holding that an unwritten city policy of strip searching all detainees prior to court action was unconstitutional).

36. See, e.g., Henry v. Farmer City State Bank, 808 F.2d 1228, 1237 (7th Cir. 1986) (holding that if there is no formal written policy, "the plaintiff must allege a specific pattern or series of incidents that support the general allegation of a custom or policy; alleging one specific incident in which the plaintiff suffered a deprivation will not suffice."); Gailor v. Armstrong, 187 F. Supp. 2d 729, 734 (W.D. Ky. 2001) (holding that one incident of failure to follow a jail's excessive force policy plus 30 to 40 other instances of excessive force over a 10-year period for which officers were punished was not enough to show a custom of failing to follow the excessive force policy).

37. See Corr. Servs. Corp. v. Malesko, 534 U.S. 61, 72 n.5, 122 S. Ct. 515, 522 n.5, 151 L. Ed. 2d 456, 467 n.5 (2001) (noting, but not holding, that state prisoners may sue private prison corporations under § 1983); West v. Atkins, 487 U.S. 42, 54–57, 108 S. Ct. 2250, 2258–60, 101 L. Ed. 2d 40, 53–55 (1988) (holding that a private doctor under contract with a state to provide medical services to prisoners at a state prison hospital on a part-time basis acts "under color of state law" within the meaning of § 1983); Rosborough v. Mgmt. & Training Corp., 350 F.3d 459, 461 (5th Cir. 2003) (holding that "private prison-management corporations and their employees may be sued" under § 1983); Conner

Be aware that a person may act "under color of state law" even though the person does something that state law specifically prohibits. In other words, for something to be done "under color of" state law it does not have to be legal to do it.[38] For example, state law forbids a prison guard from assaulting you. But, if a prison guard assaults you, he is acting "under color of state law" because the guard carries a "badge of authority" from the state.[39] Thus, "under color of state law" can be loosely interpreted to mean "as a representative of the state."

(c) Third Requirement: Deprivation of Federal Right

The third and final requirement is that the person you sue must have deprived you of a right, privilege, or immunity you have under the Constitution or federal laws. In simpler terms, they must have violated one of your constitutional or federal statutory rights. Part B(2) explains the general rules that courts have developed for determining whether the constitutional rights of prisoners have been violated and gives examples of violations of rights claimed by other prisoners. Part B(3) discusses Section 1983 claims for violations of rights that have been created by federal statutes.

2. Constitutional Bases for Section 1983 Claims

Not every violation of state law or prison regulations amounts to a constitutional violation that you can challenge using Section 1983. For example, a prison may have a regulation stating that all general population prisoners are allowed five phone calls a week. This "right to five phone calls" is not a constitutionally guaranteed right, and if the prison suddenly allows prisoners to make only one call a week, you won't be able to sue using Section 1983.[40] Instead, you may want to challenge that change in privileges through your prison's grievance system or in a state court. Similarly, if a prison guard harms you or your property by acting negligently (carelessly), this will not be enough to allow you to sue under Section 1983. Instead, you may, in some cases, be able to sue using state tort law.[41]

The next part of this Section begins with a general discussion of prisoners' constitutional rights and the "reasonably related" test (Turner test). Subsections (b) through (g) outline different constitutional protections that prisoners have under specific constitutional amendments. Make sure to read the other chapters of the JLM that also talk about these particular rights. Also, remember that your claim might involve violations of more than one constitutional right. Think about your situation from as many different angles as possible.

(a) General Framework for Prisoners' Constitutional Rights

As discussed earlier, keep in mind that your constitutional rights are not absolute. The government is allowed to take away some of your rights in order to run the prison more safely or smoothly. When you sue v. Donnelly, 42 F.3d 220, 223 (4th Cir. 1994) (holding that "a physician who treats a prisoner acts under color of state law even though there was no contractual relationship between the prison and the physician"); Skelton v. Pri-Cor, Inc., 963 F.2d 100, 102 (6th Cir. 1991) (holding that private corporation under contract with the state to operate its prisons may be sued under § 1983); Ancata v. Prison Health Servs., 769 F.2d 700, 703 (11th Cir. 1985) (noting that defendant Prison Health Services workers, while not public employees, were clearly state actors); Christy v. Robinson, 216 F. Supp. 2d 398, 412 (D.N.J. 2002) (noting that doctors employed by a private medical association that contracts with the state to provide medical services to prisoners acts "under color of state law"); Mauldin v. Burnette, 89 F. Supp. 2d 1371, 1376–77 (M.D. Ga. 2000) (holding that private individual who was responsible for signing a prisoner in and out of prison and supervising him on work release acted "under color of state law"). But cf. Styles v. McGinnis, No. 00-1415, 28 F. App'x 362, 364 (6th Cir. 2001) (unpublished) (holding that doctor who was an independent contractor who provided emergency services at a hospital where he treated plaintiff prisoner was not acting under color of state law); Nunez v. Horn, 72 F. Supp. 2d 24, 27 (N.D.N.Y. 1999) (holding that doctor who treated prisoner was not acting under color of state law because the treatment was provided at a non-prison hospital and the doctor was not under contract with the state or Bureau of Prisons to treat prisoners).

---

38. Berg v. County of Allegheny, 219 F.3d 261, 268 (3d Cir. 2000) (holding that "[t]o make out a prima facie case under § 1983, the plaintiff must demonstrate that a person, acting under color of law, deprived him of a federal right.")

39. Monroe v. Pape, 365 U.S. 167, 172, 81 S. Ct. 473, 476, 5 L. Ed. 2d 492, 497 (1961) (holding that officials who violate constitutional rights by acting illegally or abusing their authority are acting under "color of state law" for the purposes of § 1983), overruled in part on other grounds, Monell v. N.Y. City Dept. of Social Servs., 436 U.S. 658, 695–701, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2038–41, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1978).

40. If a New York state prison is not following its own rules or policies, prisoners can file an Article 78 petition. See Chapter 22 of the JLM for information on filing Article 78 petitions.

41. See Chapter 17 of the JLM for information on bringing a tort claim.

government officials or agencies for violating your rights, the officials or agencies must explain to the court why they acted that way. The reasons they give must have some rational relationship to the violation of your rights. The court then balances your constitutional rights against the reasons given by the defendants for taking away some of those rights. Most of the time, courts accept the prison official's explanation for the violation and rule against the prisoner.

In your claim, you should emphasize why your right is important and reasonable and why the prison officials' actions were unnecessary or unreasonable. Just saying that your rights were violated is usually not enough. You must try to expect arguments that the prison will make about the need for security or order and respond to them in the claim.

One of the leading Supreme Court cases regarding prisoners' constitutional rights is Turner v. Safley.[42] In Turner, the Supreme Court held that when a prison regulation has an impact on a prisoner's constitutional rights, the regulation is still valid if it is "reasonably related to legitimate penological interests."[43] Penological means "related to prison management." A penological interest is legitimate if it is a valid and justifiable concern for the prison and/or the officials operating the prison. Legitimate penological interests may include concerns for safety, discipline, effective punishment, and other management issues. Under the Turner test (also called the "reasonably related" test), a court will weigh the importance of the state's valid penological interests against the impact of the state's actions on your constitutional rights.

The Turner test has been used in cases challenging formal and informal prison policies and practices, as well as individual actions.[44] The test applies both to prison regulations and to actions taken by prison officials, individually or together. Note that Turner does not apply to claims of racial discrimination,[45] Eighth Amendment violations,[46] restrictions on private religious exercise,[47] and at least some procedural due process claims.[48]

To use the Turner test, courts evaluate if a regulation (or action) is "reasonably related" by looking at four factors:

(1) Whether there is a valid connection between the regulation and the government's justification for it;[49]

(2) Whether you still have other ways of exercising your constitutional right despite the regulation;[50]

---

42. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64 (1987).

43. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2261, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79 (1987).

44. See, e.g., Allah v. Al-Hafeez, 208 F. Supp. 2d 520, 529–31 (E.D. Pa. 2002) (applying Turner test to chaplain's decision to exclude prisoner from services after the prisoner disrupted the service); Youngbear v. Thalacker, 174 F. Supp. 2d 902, 914 (N.D. Iowa 2001) (applying Turner test to administrative decision resulting in year-long delay in building a sweat lodge).

45. Johnson v. California, 543 U.S. 499, 510–11, 125 S. Ct. 1141, 1149, 160 L. Ed. 2d 949, 961–62 (2005) (holding that the Turner test could not be applied to evaluate prison policy of assigning new prisoners cellmates of the same race). For more information on equal protection rights in prison, see Part B(2)(f) of this Chapter.

46. See, e.g., Jordan v. Gardner, 986 F.2d 1521, 1530 (9th Cir. 1993) (refusing to apply Turner test to prisoner's 8th Amendment claim); Austin v. Hopper, 15 F. Supp. 2d 1210, 1255 (M.D. Ala. 1998) (refusing to apply to Turner test to prisoner's 8th Amendment claim and noting that the Supreme Court has never used Turner for an 8th Amendment claim). For information on 8th Amendment claims for "cruel and unusual punishment," see Part B(2)(d) of this Chapter.

47. The Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act ("RLUIPA"), 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000cc–2000cc-5 (2006), replaced Turner's "legitimate penological interest" standard with a stricter "compelling governmental interest" and "least restrictive means" test when evaluating government restrictions on private religious exercise in prisons and other institutions. See Warsoldier v. Woodford, 418 F.3d 989, 994 (9th Cir. 2005).

48. See Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 225, 228–29, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1038, 1040–41, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 200, 202–03 (1990) (using the Turner test to analyze prisoner's substantive due process claim but not applying it to prisoner's procedural due process claim). For further discussion of your procedural due process rights, see Chapter 18 of the JLM, "Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Proceedings."

49. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89–90, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79 (1987) ("[T]here must be a 'valid, rational connection' between the prison regulation and the legitimate governmental interest put forward to justify it.").

50. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 90, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79 (1987) ("Where 'other avenues' remain available for the exercise of the asserted right … courts should be particularly conscious" of giving weight to prison officials' decisions). For example, in McRoy v. Cook County Dept. of Corr., 366 F. Supp. 2d 662 (N.D. Ill. 2005), a court upheld a prison's cancellation of Muslim services on certain occasions, in part because the court found that the prison had provided other opportunities for a prisoner to observe his religion, such as allowing him to keep religious materials and allowing prisoners to pray together in community rooms.

(3) Whether there will be a "ripple effect"[51] on the rights of others if you are allowed to exercise the right;[52] and
(4) Whether there is an easy way to meet the regulation's goal without limiting your constitutional right.[53]

In most cases, a prison regulation survives the Turner test because it only requires that the government's explanation for the regulation be rational (that it makes sense). This is not a very high standard for the government to meet. The government does not need to demonstrate that the regulation you are challenging is better than another less restrictive regulation, but the government does need to show that there is a connection between the regulation and the purpose it is supposed to accomplish.[54] This means that even if there are other potential regulations that would help the government achieve its goals without impacting prisoners' rights, the government can still pass the Turner test if there is connection between the current regulation and its purpose.

In Turner, the Court applied this test to a prison regulation banning prisoners from writing to or receiving letters from prisoners at other prisons (not including family members). The prison argued that letters between prisoners could be used to plan escapes or assaults. The Court first found that preventing escapes and assaults was a valid government interest, and that banning letters between prisoners was a rational way to help prevent escapes and assaults. As for factor (2), the Court noted that prisoners still had other ways to exercise their First Amendment rights to express themselves, since prisoners could write to and receive letters from anyone besides other prisoners. The Court found that allowing prisoners to correspond with other prisoners would have a significant "ripple effect" on others (factor (3)), since it might threaten the safety of other prisoners and prison guards. Finally, the Court found that there was no simple alternative way of ensuring that escapes and assaults were not planned through prisoner-to-prisoner letters. After going through the four factors, the Court held that the regulation was "reasonably related" to legitimate interests in security despite its interference with prisoners' First Amendment rights to free expression and communication.[55]

However, Turner also decided that a regulation preventing prisoners from marrying unless the superintendent found "compelling circumstances" was not "reasonably related" to legitimate security concerns.[56] The prison claimed that the regulation was primarily justified because "love triangles" among

---

51. A "ripple effect" means an indirect effect on others.

52. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 90, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79–80 (1987) ("A third consideration is the impact accommodation of the asserted constitutional right will have on guards and other inmates, and on the allocation of prison resources generally.").

53. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89–91, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2262–63, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79–80 (1987) ("[T]he absence of ready alternatives is evidence of the reasonableness of a prison regulation. … By the same token, the existence of obvious, easy alternatives may be evidence that the regulation is not reasonable, but is an 'exaggerated response' to prison concerns."). A prison may be able to meet the same goal by using one of several different rules. The prison does not have to choose the rule that has the least impact on your rights. However, the existence of alternative rules that accomplish the same goals may be considered evidence that the rule you are challenging is unreasonable, especially if the alternative rules do not have additional drawbacks. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 90–91, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 80 (1987).

54. See Hunafa v. Murphy, 907 F.2d 46, 48 (7th Cir. 1990) (finding the factual record provided by the prison was too "skimpy" to determine whether the prison's refusal to provide a pork-free meal to a prisoner was reasonably related to a legitimate penological interest); Walker v. Sumner, 917 F.2d 382, 386–87 (9th Cir. 1990) (holding that prison officials must provide support for the justifications of their regulations: assertions made without explanation or factual support are not enough). But see Whitmire v. Arizona, 298 F.3d 1134, 1136 (9th Cir. 2002) (noting that a plaintiff's case should not be dismissed unless the prison has provided evidence supporting a rational relationship between a policy and the policy's justification, or there is a "common-sense connection" between the policy and the prison's penological interests); Austin v. Hopper, 15 F. Supp. 2d 1210, 1235 (M.D. Ala. 1998) (refusing to require "evidence of a valid, rational connection" between the claimed goals of a policy and the policy itself and instead using a "common sense" approach to whether a policy is reasonably related to legitimate correctional interests).

55. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 93, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2263–64, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 81–82 (1987) ("The prohibition on correspondence is reasonably related to valid corrections goals. The rule is content neutral, it logically advances the goals of institutional security and safety … and it is not an exaggerated response to those objectives."). But see Allen v. Coughlin, 64 F.3d 77, 81 (2d Cir. 1995) (holding that a prison had not established a valid reason for a regulation banning newspaper clippings sent through the mail).

56. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 97–98, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2266, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 84–85 (1987) ("The Missouri regulation … [restricting prisoner marriage] represents an exaggerated response to … security objectives. There are obvious, easy alternatives to the Missouri regulation that accommodate the right to marry while imposing a … [minimal] prisoners might lead to violence. The Court stated that there was no reasonable relationship between preventing marriage and preventing violence, since "love triangles" were just as likely when prisoners were unmarried. The Court also mentioned that a prisoner's marriage was generally a private decision that would not have a "ripple effect" on others. The Court emphasized that less restrictive regulations on prisoner marriages, such as those used at many other prisons, would be sufficient to meet the concerns of prison officials.

As you can see from these examples, you need to carefully consider how to argue your claim in terms of the four factors. You have a better chance of success if a regulation completely deprives you of the ability to exercise your right, since such a regulation fails factor (2) above. In such cases, you should suggest other rules that could accomplish the same prison goal without completely violating your rights. Comparing the bad practices of your prison with the better practices of other prisons may also be helpful.

The next Subsections address specific constitutional rights and give examples of claims brought under Section 1983 by prisoners. Many of these rights are addressed elsewhere in the JLM in much more detail, so make sure you read any other relevant JLM chapters.

(b) First Amendment Claims

The First Amendment to the Constitution provides:

> Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.[57]

In other words, the First Amendment protects your rights to express yourself, practice your religion, and communicate with others. Your rights under the First Amendment can take many forms and several chapters of the JLM address these rights in detail. For a summary of your right to freedom of expression and a discussion of your right to communicate, see Chapter 19 of the JLM, "Your Right to Communicate with the Outside World." If your religious rights are being violated, you may want to sue under the Religious Freedom Restoration Act ("RFRA")[58] or the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act ("RLUIPA")[59] instead of Section 1983. It is more difficult for the prison to defend a regulation against a RLUIPA or RFRA lawsuit than a Section 1983 lawsuit.[60] See Chapter 26 of the JLM, "Religious Freedom in Prison," for more information.

(c) Fourth Amendment Claims

The Fourth Amendment provides that "[t]he right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated."[61] It prohibits unreasonable searches and seizures of pretrial detainees and other individuals confined by the state who have not been convicted of a crime.[62] The Fourth Amendment also protects convicted prisoners from unreasonably intrusive body searches (but not cell searches[63]), as discussed in Chapter 25 of the JLM, "Your Right to be Free From Illegal Body Searches."

---

burden on the … security objectives."). Although the right to marry comes from the substantive due process part of the 14th Amendment, not the 1st Amendment, the analysis on how to balance the rights is the same. For information on prison marriage and divorce, go to http://www.hrlr.org/ jlm/toc.

57. U.S. Const. amend. I.

58. 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb-1 (2006). You may not bring a lawsuit under RFRA against state governments or officials. See City of Boerne v. Flores, 521 U.S. 507, 535, 117 S. Ct. 2157, 2172, 138 L. Ed. 2d 624, 649 (1997) (holding RFRA's application to State governments and State officials unconstitutional); see also O'Bryan v. Bureau of Prisons, 349 F.3d 399, 401 (7th Cir. 2003) (finding that RFRA could constitutionally be applied to federal officers and agencies).

59. 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-1 (2000). Note that you cannot use RLUIPA if the agency that operates your prison does not receive federal funding. Most state and local corrections departments do receive federal funding.

60. See Warsoldier v. Woodford, 418 F.3d 989, 998 (9th Cir. 2005) (noting that RLUIPA was designed to enhance protection of prisoners' religious freedom by replacing the Turner "legitimate public interest" test with a "compelling interest" test).

61. U.S. Const. amend. IV.

62. See Shain v. Ellison, 273 F.3d 56, 63–66 (2d Cir. 2001) (allowing a pretrial detainee to challenge a prison's strip-search policy).

63. See Block v. Rutherford, 468 U.S. 576, 591, 104 S. Ct. 3227, 3235, 82 L. Ed. 2d 438, 450 (1984) (holding

(d) Eighth Amendment Claims

The Eighth Amendment states that "[e]xcessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted."[64] Most cases prisoners bring under the Eighth Amendment relate to "cruel and unusual punishment." There are several types of claims courts will consider under the cruel and unusual punishment part of the Eighth Amendment. These claims include alleged harm resulting from prison conditions, inadequate medical care, and assault. The cases below provide some specific examples of Eighth Amendment claims which courts have recognized.

Read Chapter 14 of the JLM, "The Prison Litigation Reform Act" ("PLRA"), if you plan to file a claim for cruel and unusual punishment under the Eighth Amendment. The PLRA prohibits federal lawsuits by prisoners for compensatory damages[65] for mental or emotional injury without accompanying physical injury.[66]

A claim that prison conditions or practices constitute cruel and unusual punishment must satisfy two tests. These tests are referred to as an "objective" and a "subjective" test:

(1) The objective test requires that prison conditions be objectively bad enough to be considered cruel and unusual. Conditions must amount to: "unquestioned and serious deprivations of basic human needs" or deprivation of the "minimal civilized measure of life's necessities," or they must include the "wanton and unnecessary infliction of pain."[67] Recent Supreme Court cases have emphasized serious threats to prisoners' health and safety.[68] However, under some circumstances, conditions need not inflict or threaten serious injury to meet the objective test of the Eighth Amendment. For example, cell searches amounting to "calculated harassment unrelated to prison needs" may constitute cruel and unusual punishment.[69] Similarly, excessive force may violate the Eighth Amendment if it is "repugnant to the conscience of mankind"[70] (even if it inflicts little physical injury). It is possible that other conditions that do not actually inflict physical injury (like sexually intrusive searches,[71] credible threats of immediate harm that are not acted upon,[72] or acts that amount to psychological torture[73]) may also be considered cruel and unusual punishment.

---

searches of pretrial detainees' cells in their absence to be constitutional because government interest in conducting searches and maintaining security in this manner exceeded contrary interests of detainees); Hudson v. Palmer, 468 U.S. 517, 526, 104 S. Ct. 3194, 3200, 82 L. Ed. 2d 393, 402–03 (1984) (holding that the 4th Amendment prohibition against unreasonable searches does not apply to prison cells because "[t]he recognition of privacy rights for prisoners in their individual cells simply cannot be reconciled with the concept of incarceration and the needs and objectives of penal institutions"); Willis v. Artuz, 301 F.3d 65, 68–69 (2d Cir. 2002) (holding that prisoners are not protected from cell searches by prosecutors or police even though such searches are not related to prison security). Note that the 4th Amendment does apply to searches of jail cells in some cases.

64. U.S. Const. amend. VIII (emphasis added).

65. Compensatory damages repay you for damages you have already sustained, like the cost of medical bills. Compensatory damages do not include punitive damages, which are meant to punish the wrongdoer rather than to compensate you for your injuries. See Part C(1)(a) of this Chapter for a more complete explanation of compensatory damages.

66. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e) (2006). The statute states that "no Federal civil action may be brought by a prisoner confined in a jail, prison, or other correctional facility, for mental or emotional injury suffered while in custody without a prior showing of physical injury." Courts have held that the statute only prohibits compensatory damages for mental or emotional injury, so prisoners can still claim injunctive relief or other forms of damages for emotional injuries.

67. Rhodes v. Chapman, 452 U.S. 337, 347, 101 S. Ct. 2392, 2399, 69 L. Ed. 2d 59, 69 (1981) (finding that a practice of placing two prisoners in a single cell did not violate the 8th Amendment).

68. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 837, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1979, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 825 (1994) (finding that excessive risk of attack—whether for reasons unique to one prisoner or to all in his situation—could qualify as a violation of the 8th Amendment).

69. Hudson v. Palmer, 468 U.S. 517, 530, 104 S. Ct. 3194, 3202, 82 L. Ed. 2d 393, 405 (1984). Note that the Court found no calculated harassment had occurred in this case.

70. Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 10, 112 S. Ct. 995, 1000, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 168 (1992) (allowing claim to go forward even where there was no significant injury or need for medical attention).

71. See, e.g., Jordan v. Gardner, 986 F.2d 1521, 1522, 1530 (9th Cir. 1993) (en banc) (holding that policy of "random, non-emergency, suspicionless clothed body searches on female prisoners" by male guards violated the 8th Amendment).

72. See, e.g., Northington v. Jackson, 973 F.2d 1518, 1524 (10th Cir. 1992) (holding that, if true, allegation that corrections officer brandished a gun and threatened to kill prisoner could make out an 8th Amendment violation); Burton v. Livingston, 791 F.2d 97, 100 (8th Cir. 1986) (holding that a prisoner has a right to be free from "the terror of

(2) The subjective test requires that prison officials have a certain state of mind in order to be found to have violated the Eighth Amendment. In most prison conditions cases, the standard is "deliberate indifference," which means that the officials must have had actual knowledge that they were subjecting you to an excessive risk of harm or other objectively unconstitutional conditions.[74] In use of force cases, however, you must show that the official who used force against you acted "maliciously and sadistically" for the purpose of causing harm.[75]

Under the objective test, as mentioned above, if your complaint is about the conditions of your imprisonment, you have to show that, "alone or in combination," the conditions deprived you of "the minimal civilized measure of life's necessities."[76] Life's necessities (or basic human needs) identified by the courts include "food, clothing, shelter, medical care and reasonable safety," [77] warmth,[78] exercise,[79] and the "basic elements of hygiene."[80] If you are trying to show that several conditions combined to deprive you of a life necessity, keep in mind that the conditions must have a "mutually enforcing [combined] effect that [deprives you] of a single, identifiable human need such as food, warmth, or exercise."[81] For example, you may suffer cruel and unusual punishment if the inadequate heat in your cell-block, combined with the prison's failure to issue blankets, deprives you of warmth.[82]

Under the subjective test, as mentioned above, you must show that the prison officials who injured you or failed to provide for your basic human needs did so with a certain state of mind. The exact state of mind needed for a violation to exist will depend on whether your claim is for inadequate prison conditions, inadequate medical care, assault, or issues surrounding work or exercise. These issues are described in the next few sections.

The amount of harm that the court will require you to show also varies depending on the type of Eighth Amendment claim that you bring. For example, if you are complaining about prison guard brutality, you may not have to show that your injury was "serious," only that it was more than minor and the other circumstances of the assault were unjustifiable.[83] On the other hand, if your claim is that you were deprived instant and unexpected death at the whim of his allegedly bigoted custodian").

---

73. See, e.g., Hicks v. Frey, 992 F.2d 1450, 1457 (6th Cir. 1993) (noting that confining paraplegic prisoner to a cell where he was essentially restricted to his bunk without access to the showers could constitute a violation of the 8th Amendment); Parrish v. Johnson, 800 F.2d 600, 605 (6th Cir. 1986) (finding that prisoner who was threatened with a knife, denied requests for medical attention and continuously aggressively taunted by guard could claim a violation of the 8th Amendment).

74. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 839–43, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1980–82, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 826–29 (1994).

75. Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 9, 112 S. Ct. 995, 1000, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 167 (1992).

76. Rhodes v. Chapman, 452 U.S. 337, 347, 101 S. Ct. 2392, 2399, 69 L. Ed. 2d 59, 69 (1981).

77. Helling v. McKinney, 509 U.S. 25, 32, 113 S. Ct. 2475, 2480, 125 L. Ed. 2d 22, 31 (1993) (citing DeShaney v. Winnebago County Dept. of Social Serv., 489 U.S. 189, 199–200, 109 S. Ct. 998, 103 L. Ed. 2d 249 (1989)).

78. Wilson v. Seiter, 501 U.S. 294, 304, 111 S. Ct. 2321, 2327, 115 L. Ed. 2d 271, 283 (1991); Palmer v. Johnson, 193 F.3d 346, 352–53 (5th Cir. 1999) (holding overnight exposure to winds and cold could violate the 8th Amendment).

79. Wilson v. Seiter, 501 U.S. 294, 304, 111 S. Ct. 2321, 2327, 115 L. Ed. 2d 271, 283 (1991); Perkins v. Kan. Dept. of Corr., 165 F.3d 803, 810 (10th Cir. 1999) (holding allegation of prolonged denial of outdoor exercise could violate the 8th Amendment).

80. Palmer v. Johnson, 193 F.3d 346, 352 (5th Cir. 1999) (quoting Novak v. Beto, 453 F.2d 661, 665 (5th Cir. 1971)) (holding that deprivation of toilet facilities for prisoners in a small area would violate the 8th Amendment); see Harper v. Showers, 174 F.3d 716, 717, 720 (5th Cir. 1999) (noting that allegation of placement into filthy, sometimes feces-smeared cells formerly housing psychiatric patients states an 8th Amendment claim); Bradley v. Puckett, 157 F.3d 1022, 1025–26 (5th Cir. 1998) (holding that defendant who alleged an inability to bathe for two months resulting in a fungal infection requiring medical attention stated an 8th Amendment claim). But see Davis v. Scott, 157 F.3d 1003, 1006 (5th Cir. 1998) (holding that confinement in cell with blood on floor and excrement on wall was not unconstitutional because it was only for three days and cleaning supplies were available).

81. Wilson v. Seiter, 501 U.S. 294, 304, 111 S. Ct. 2321, 2327, 115 L. Ed. 2d. 271, 283 (1991) ("Some conditions of confinement may establish an Eighth Amendment violation 'in combination' when each would not do so alone, but only when they have a mutually enforcing effect that produces the deprivation of a single, identifiable human need such as food, warmth or exercise—for example, a low cell temperature at night combined with a failure to issue blankets.").

82. See, e.g., Wilson v. Schomig, No. 93-C-3854, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6849, at *9–10 (N.D. Ill. May 7, 1998) (holding that lack of heat in prison cells may violate 8th Amendment principles).

83. See Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 10, 112 S. Ct. 995, 1000–01, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 168 (1992) (holding that an assault on a prisoner by prison guards resulting in a cracked dental plate and minor bruises and swelling was enough harm to constitute a valid 8th Amendment claim).

of medical care, you will have to show that your medical needs were "sufficiently serious" and that prison officials were "deliberately indifferent" to these needs.[84]

(i) Prison Conditions

Poor prison conditions may constitute a violation of the Eighth Amendment. Such conditions can include a lack of basic necessities[85] or the presence of safety hazards, such as substandard fire prevention.[86] Excessively long confinement to a small cell and denial of outdoor exercise can also violate the Eighth Amendment.[87] Other conditions that may establish cruel and unusual punishment forbidden by the Eighth Amendment include unsanitary facilities, overcrowding, and inadequate heating and ventilation.[88] Some courts have held that the failure to protect prisoners from secondhand smoke may constitute a violation of the Eighth Amendment.[89] However, such cases generally require prisoners to show that the secondhand smoke poses an unreasonable risk of future harm to their health.[90] For more information about addressing secondhand smoke exposure, see Chapter 23 of the JLM, "Your Right to Adequate Medical Care."

Courts have found that overcrowding violates prisoners' Eighth Amendment rights, especially where overcrowding leads to harmful consequences.[91] For example, in Lareau v. Manson,[92] prisoners successfully sued because a prison's failure to check newcomers for contagious diseases, combined with overcrowding, increased the risk of infection.

---

84. See Wilson v. Seiter, 501 U.S. 294, 299, 111 S. Ct. 2321, 2324–25, 115 L. Ed. 2d 271, 279–80 (1991) (holding that a claim of an 8th Amendment violation must show deliberate indifference on part of prison officials). To bring a claim for inadequate medical care, see Chapter 22 of the JLM, "Your Right to Adequate Medical Care."

85. See, e.g., Ramos v. Lamm, 639 F.2d 559, 566 (10th Cir. 1980) (holding that a state must provide "prisoners with reasonably adequate food, clothing, shelter, sanitation, medical care, and personal safety so as to avoid the imposition of cruel and unusual punishment"); Nicholson v. Choctaw County, Ala., 498 F. Supp. 295, 308–11 (S.D. Ala. 1980) (finding that 8th Amendment rights had been violated through, among other things, the unsanitary conditions in the jail, the lack of adequate medical care, unsafe conditions, and the lack of religious services or instruction).

86. See, e.g., Hoptowit v. Spellman, 753 F.2d 779, 783–84 (9th Cir. 1985) (holding that hazardous work environment; inadequate lighting, plumbing, fire safety, and ventilation; and vermin infestation could constitute inhumane conditions); Ramos v. Lamm, 639 F.2d 559, 566 (10th Cir. 1980) (holding that a state must provide "prisoners with reasonably adequate … personal safety so as to avoid the imposition of cruel and unusual punishment"). But see Osolinski v. Kane, 92 F.3d 934, 938–39 (9th Cir. 1996) (requiring more than a single defective piece of equipment to create inhumane conditions).

87. See Perkins v. Kan. Dept. of Corr., 165 F.3d 803, 810 (10th Cir. 1999) (holding allegation of prolonged denial of outdoor exercise could violate the 8th Amendment); Spain v. Procunier, 600 F.2d 189, 199 (9th Cir. 1979) (stating that with the exception of "inclement weather, unusual circumstances, or disciplinary needs that [make it] impossible," outdoor exercise is required when prisoners are otherwise confined to small cells 24 hours per day).

88. See, e.g., Palmer v. Johnson, 193 F.3d 346, 352–53 (5th Cir. 1999) (finding that the combined circumstances of overnight outdoor confinement without shelter, blanket, heating, or access to bathroom facilities were a denial of necessities in violation of the 8th Amendment); DeMallory v. Cullen, 855 F.2d 442, 445 (7th Cir. 1988) (finding that prisoner stated sufficient 8th Amendment claim in § 1983 complaint alleging unsanitary and dangerous conditions); French v. Owens, 777 F.2d 1250, 1252–53 (7th Cir. 1985) (holding that overcrowding, medical neglect, and failure to protect prisoners from threats to safety violated 8th Amendment); Morales Feliciano v. Hernandez Colon, 697 F. Supp. 37, 40–45 (D.P.R. 1988) (ruling that overcrowding, vermin-infestation, and otherwise unsanitary conditions violated the 8th Amendment); Toussaint v. McCarthy, 597 F. Supp. 1388, 1409–11 (N.D. Cal. 1984) (finding constitutional violation due to certain conditions, including double-celling; insufficient ventilation and heating; and inadequate and unsanitary clothing and bedding supplies), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 801 F.2d 1080 (9th Cir. 1986).

89. See Gill v. Smith, 283 F. Supp. 2d 763, 769 (N.D.N.Y. 2003) (allowing prisoner with asthma to go forward with 8th Amendment claim that exposure to secondhand smoke posed an unreasonable risk of future harm to his health); Atkinson v. Del. Dept. of Corr., No. 99-562-JJF, 2001 U.S. Dist LEXIS 25586, at *13 (D. Del. June 27, 2001) (same).

90. See Helling v. McKinney, 509 U.S. 25, 36, 113 S. Ct. 2475, 2482, 125 L. Ed. 2d 22, 33 (1993) (holding that exposure to extreme levels of tobacco smoke that pose an unreasonable risk to future health may be an 8th Amendment violation, and that the plaintiff did not need to wait until he was actually harmed to ask a court to correct unsafe conditions); Gill v. Smith, 283 F. Supp. 2d 763, 769 (N.D.N.Y. 2003) (same); Atkinson v. Del. Dept. of Corr., No. 99-562-JJF, 2001 U.S. Dist LEXIS 25586, at *13 (D. Del. June 27, 2001) (same).

91. See, e.g., Tillery v. Owens, 907 F.2d 418, 427–28 (3d Cir. 1990) (holding that double-celling due to overcrowding, in combination with other factors, such as the physical condition of the cell, violated 8th Amendment); Mitchell v. Cuomo, 748 F.2d 804, 807–08 (2d Cir. 1984) (granting prisoners an injunction against the closing of a facility that would result in overcrowding in other prisons); Fisher v. Koehler, 692 F. Supp. 1519, 1564 (S.D.N.Y. 1988) (holding that the level of both prisoner-prisoner violence and staff-prisoner violence resulting, in part, from overcrowding, violated 8th Amendment), aff'd, 902 F.2d 2 (2d Cir. 1990).

92. Lareau v. Manson, 651 F.2d 96, 109 (2d Cir. 1981).

Some Section 1983 claims challenge the prison housing arrangements. Courts have generally held that double-celling (placing two prisoners in each cell) is constitutional as long as both prisoners are provided with their basic needs, such as enough space to sleep and a clean interior. Double-celling is not by itself considered a constitutional violation because prisoners still enjoy their rights within that two-person set-up and because prison officials have strong administrative concerns in providing housing for all prisoners.[93] Similarly, administrative segregation is also acceptable and does not violate a prisoner's rights.[94] However, administrative segregation imposed upon you by prison officials in order to get back at you for a complaint or claim you filed is not constitutional.[95] Note that cases complaining about administrative segregation are brought as substantive due process claims, not Eighth Amendment claims. For a discussion of substantive due process, see Part B(2)(e)(i) below. Because cases for inadequate cell assignments often overlap with Eighth Amendment claims for assault, you should be sure to review the cases cited in this Subsection and Chapter 24 of the JLM, "Your Right to be Free From Assault by Prison Guards and Other Prisoners."

(ii) Inadequate Medical Care and Other Health Risks

Inadequate medical care has also been found to be a violation of the Eighth Amendment. Unreasonable risks to your health may violate the Eighth Amendment even if you have not been harmed yet.[96] For information on your right to medical care, see Chapter 23 of the JLM, "Your Right to Adequate Medical Care."

(iii) Assault

Many Section 1983 cases have claimed Eighth Amendment violations due to prison officials' failure to protect prisoners from assaults by other prisoners. For more detailed information, see Chapter 23 of the JLM, "Your Right to be Free from Assault."

(iv) Exercise, Work, and Education

Eighth Amendment claims challenging deprivations of exercise and recreation have had mixed results. A prisoner's right to exercise is judged in terms of basic needs. Thus, because prison officials are constitutionally required to provide for the health of the prisoners under their supervision, prisoners must generally be allowed certain minimum levels of exercise.[97] This right is violated only if movement is denied, muscles are allowed to waste, or the health of the individual is threatened.[98] Most courts will not find a deprivation of recreation time to be a violation of constitutional rights, since general recreation, unlike exercise, does not necessarily affect prisoners' health.

---

93. See Rhodes v. Chapman, 452 U.S. 337, 348, 101 S. Ct. 2392, 2400, 69 L. Ed. 2d 59, 70 (1981) (holding that double-celling did not violate the 8th Amendment since it did not lead to deprivations of basic needs, and did not increase violence among prisoners or create other conditions intolerable for prison confinement).

94. See, e.g., Sealey v. Giltner, 197 F.3d 578, 589–90 (2d. Cir. 1999) (finding that administrative confinement after a required factual determination that plaintiff posed a threat to prison safety, was not an "atypical and significant hardship" when compared to the ordinary conditions of prison life). Sealey is not an 8th Amendment case, but was brought under the Due Process Clause of the 14th Amendment.

95. See Allah v. Seiverling, 229 F.3d 220, 223–24 (3d Cir. 2000) (allowing prisoner to go forward with due process claim that he was kept in administrative segregation in retaliation for filing civil rights suits).

96. See Helling v. McKinney, 509 U.S. 25, 36, 113 S. Ct. 2475, 2482, 125 L. Ed. 2d 22, 33 (1993) (holding that exposure to extreme levels of environmental tobacco smoke that pose an unreasonable risk to future health may be an 8th Amendment violation, and that the plaintiff did not need to wait until he was actually harmed to ask a court to correct unsafe conditions). But see Glick v. Henderson, 855 F.2d 536, 540 (8th Cir. 1988) (denying prisoner's 8th Amendment claim based on exposure to HIV in prison, because it was based on an "unsubstantiated fear").

97. See Davenport v. DeRobertis, 844 F.2d 1310, 1315–1316 (7th Cir. 1988) (finding an 8th Amendment violation where prisoners in a segregation unit were allowed only one hour a week of exercise outside of their cells); French v. Owens, 777 F.2d 1250, 1255–56 (7th Cir. 1985) (noting that lack of physical exercise may be a constitutional violation); Spain v. Procunier, 600 F.2d 189, 199 (9th Cir. 1979) ("[T]he denial of fresh air and regular outdoor exercise and recreation constitutes cruel and unusual punishment."). But see Anderson v. Coughlin, 757 F.2d 33, 36 (2d Cir. 1985) ("[N]either an occasional day without exercise when weather conditions preclude outdoor activity nor reliance on running, calisthenics, and isometric and aerobic exercises in lieu of games is cruel and unusual punishment.").

98. French v. Owens, 777 F.2d 1250, 1255–56 (7th Cir. 1985) (when "movement is denied and muscles allowed to atrophy, the health of the individual is threatened and the state's constitutional obligation" is affected). See also Mitchell v. Rice, 954 F.2d 187, 192–93 (4th Cir. 1992) (stating that prisons may restrict exercise only in exceptional circumstances, such as when an adult prisoner is in disciplinary segregation).

Eighth Amendment claims challenging deprivations of meaningful work or educational programs have not been very successful. The Supreme Court has said that because limited work hours or delays in accessing education do not inflict pain and are not punishments, work and education generally are not basic needs protected by the Eighth Amendment.[99]

(e) Fourteenth Amendment Claims: Due Process Clause

The Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment forbids the state from "depriv[ing] any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law."[100] The Clause has been interpreted as containing two separate types of protections: "substantive due process" and "procedural due process."

(i) Substantive Due Process

The substantive aspect of the Due Process Clause prevents the government from interfering with your fundamental individual rights in a way that is not "reasonably related to legitimate penological interests."[101] The idea of liberty in the Constitution includes some rights that you retain as a prisoner. In general, substantive due process claims arise when state officials deprive you of this liberty. For example, you have a right to bodily privacy, a right to informational privacy and confidentiality, a right to get married, and a right to refuse medical or psychiatric treatment. All of these rights are protected under substantive due process, but this protection has limits. The government only violates your substantive due process rights when it acts in a way that is not reasonably related to a legitimate goal. "Reasonable relation to a legitimate goal" is determined using the Turner test, described above in Part B(2)(a).

As mentioned earlier, the right to bodily privacy is one of the liberty rights you maintain while in prison. The right to bodily privacy includes a limited right to not be viewed unclothed or strip-searched by members of the opposite sex.[102] This right is often outweighed by prison security interests, but not always. Bodily privacy also includes the right to an abortion, which some courts have upheld for prisoners.[103]

---

99. See Rhodes v. Chapman, 452 U.S. 337, 348, 101 S. Ct. 2392, 2400, 69 L. Ed. 2d 59, 70 (1981) ("[L]imited work hours and delay before receiving education do not inflict pain, much less unnecessary and wanton pain; deprivations of this kind simply are not punishments."); Granillo v. Corr. Corp. of Am., No. 99-5720, 2000 U.S. App. LEXIS 28037, at *2–3 (6th Cir. Nov. 6, 2000) (unpublished) (dismissing as frivolous complaint where prisoner claimed administrative detention denied him of goods, recreation, work opportunities, money, schooling, television, telephone, contact visitation, and a microwave to heat his cold meals); Women Prisoners v. District of Columbia, 93 F.3d 910, 927 (D.C. Cir. 1996) (noting that a prisoner has no constitutional right to work and educational opportunities); Higgason v. Farley, 83 F.3d 807, 810 (7th Cir. 1995) (determining that reduction in privileges, including educational programs, "did not infringe on a protected liberty interest").

100. U.S. Const. amend. XIV, §1. The 14th Amendment applies to state government action. The 5th Amendment contains an identical prohibition: "No person shall be … deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law" and applies to the federal government. U.S. Const. amend. V. Federal prisoners therefore usually use the 5th Amendment instead of the 14th Amendment to challenge due process violations.

101. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 87, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2261, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 77–78 (1987) (finding that prison regulations that affect constitutional rights can only be upheld if they have a rational connection to a legitimate government interest); see also Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 224, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1038–39, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 200 (1990) (reasoning that the right to be free of psychotropic medication had to be balanced against the state's duty to treat mentally ill prisoners and run a safe prison).

102. See, e.g., Fortner v. Thomas, 983 F.2d 1024, 1030 (11th Cir. 1993) (finding that right to bodily privacy may have been violated where male prisoners were subject to unclothed observation by female guards); Sepulveda v. Ramirez, 967 F.2d 1413, 1415 (9th Cir. 1992) (upholding parolees' privacy rights not to be under surveillance by guards of the opposite sex while giving urine samples). But see Oliver v. Scott, 276 F.3d 736, 739 (5th Cir. 2002) (holding that prison's use of female prison guards to strip search male prisoner was justified by security concerns); Forts v. Ward, 621 F.2d 1210, 1217 (2d Cir. 1980) (finding that issuing suitable sleepwear and covering cell windows during changing times adequately protects female prisoners' privacy interest in not being viewed by male guards). See Chapter 24 of the JLM, "Your Right to be Free From Illegal Body Searches" for more information.

103. In cases involving prisons' blanket prohibitions or court-order requirements, courts have routinely applied the Turner reasonableness test to assess whether the challenged policy violates an inmate's right to abortion under the 14th Amendment. See Monmouth County Corr. Inst. Inmates v. Lanzaro, 834 F.2d 326, 337–38 (3d Cir. 1987) (holding that the county's administrative and economic reasons for limiting access to elective abortions for prisoners did not meet the Turner reasonableness standard); Roe v. Crawford, 514 F.3d 789, 793 (8th Cir. 2008) (holding that the Missouri Department of Corrections' policy of prohibiting transportation of pregnant inmates off-site for elective, non-therapeutic abortions violated inmates' Fourteenth Amendment due process rights); Doe v. Arpaio 150 P.3d 1258, 1259 (Ariz. Ct. App. 2007) (holding that a prison's policy requiring an inmate to obtain a court order to receive an elective, non-therapeutic abortion off-site served no "legitimate penological interest"). But see Gibson v. Matthews, 926 F.2d 532, 536–

The right to informational privacy and confidentiality is another substantive due process right. Some courts have interpreted the Fourteenth Amendment to find that HIV-positive prisoners have protections against disclosure of their HIV status, at least to non-medical personnel.[104] Segregation of HIV-positive prisoners is another way in which the substantive due process right to informational privacy may be violated.[105] However, not all courts agree that disclosure of prisoners' HIV status impacts a constitutionally protected right.[106]

Other rights the Supreme Court has held to be fundamental and protected by substantive due process include the right to marriage[107] and the right to marital privacy.[108]

There are two important points that you should know if you are thinking of bringing a Section 1983 lawsuit based on a substantive due process violation. First, if the particular "liberty" that you feel was violated is specifically protected by another constitutional amendment, you should make sure to claim a violation of that amendment rather than using the general substantive due process protection.[109] For instance, if you are not given proper access to medical care, you should not argue that you are suffering a substantive due process violation of life or liberty, since inadequate medical care is specifically covered by the Eighth Amendment's prohibition of cruel and unusual punishment.

Second, in order to bring a lawsuit for a substantive due process violation, you must be able to show that the officials who violated your liberty rights acted with "deliberate indifference" to your rights. The definition of deliberate indifference varies from circuit to circuit, so be sure to look at cases raising similar claims in your circuit to see how your circuit defines deliberate indifference.[110]

---

37 (6th Cir. 1991) (holding that prison officials' negligent failure to provide a prisoner with a requested abortion was not unconstitutional); Victoria W. v. Larpenter, 369 F.3d 475 (5th Cir. 2004) (holding that a prison's policy of requiring inmates to obtain a court order before receiving elective medical procedures, including abortions, was reasonable under the Turner framework); Bryant v. Maffucci, 729 F. Supp. 319, 327 (S.D.N.Y. 1990). For more information on women prisoners' access to abortion, see Part D(2) of Chapter 22 of the JLM, "Your Right to Adequate Medical Care."

104. See Doe v. Delie, 257 F.3d 309, 317 (3d Cir. 2001) (holding that the 14th Amendment protects a prisoner's right to medical privacy, subject to legitimate penological interests); Woods v. White, 689 F. Supp. 874, 876 (W.D. Wis. 1988) aff'd 899 F.2d 17 (7th Cir. 1990) (finding prisoners' substantive due process rights violated when prison officials allowed non-medical employees and other prisoners to learn their HIV status); Nolley v. County of Erie, 776 F. Supp. 715 (W.D.N.Y. 1991) (holding that prison inmates are protected by a constitutional right to privacy from the unwarranted disclosure of their HIV status); Doe v. Coughlin, 697 F. Supp. 1234 (N.D.N.Y. 1988) (holding that prisoners must be afforded some protection against nonconsensual disclosure of their HIV status).

105. For information and cases on segregation of prisoners with HIV, see Chapter 25 of the JLM, "Infectious Diseases: AIDS, Hepatitis, and Tuberculosis in Prison."

106. Reed v. Allen, 379 Fed. App'x 879, 880 (11th Cir. 2010) (holding that an inmate challenging a policy of requiring HIV-positive inmates to wear white wristbands had not "clearly established" a violation of a constitutional right); Harris v. Thigpen, 941 F.2d 1495, 1514 (11th Cir. 1991) (holding that a prison's policy of segregating HIV-positive inmates from the rest of the general population, and thereby disclosing their HIV-status to other prisoners, served a legitimate penological goal).

107. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 95–96, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2265, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 83 (1987) (holding the right to marry is subject to substantial restrictions due to incarceration, but that it is still a constitutionally protected right in the prison context). For information on prison marriage and divorce, go to http://www.hrlr.org/jlm/toc.

108. See Washington v. Glucksberg, 521 U.S. 702, 720, 117 S. Ct. 2258, 2267, 138 L. Ed. 2d 772, 787 (1997) (discussing liberty interests protected by substantive due process).

109. See Jackson v. Hamm, 78 F.Supp.2d 1233, 1242 (M.D. Ala. 1999) ("[T]he Supreme Court has made clear that if a constitutional claim is covered by a specific constitutional provision, the claim must be analyzed under the standard appropriate to that specific provision, not under substantive due process.").

110. For claims concerning medical care, prisoners must show that they were denied medical care for a "serious medical need" and that the denial was a result of officials' deliberate indifference. See Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 96, 104–05, 97 S. Ct. 285, 291–92, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251 (1976). See also Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 114 S. Ct. 1970 (1994); Marshall v. Crandall, 20 Fed. Appx. 633 (9th Cir. 2001) (holding that a prisoner failed to show deliberate indifference where prison nurses responded to his fractured rib with non-prescription painkillers); Lloyd v. Lee, 570 F. Supp. 2d 556, 560 (S.D.N.Y. 2008) (holding that prison officials' failure to give an inmate an MRI nearly one year after he suffered a torn rotator cuff and ripped tendon in his shoulder asserted a plausible claim of deliberate indifference); Sanchez v. Vild 891, F.2d 240, 242 (9th Cir. 1989) (holding that a difference of medical opinion does not rise to the level of deliberate indifference). For claims concerning personal liberty and security, prisoners need only show that officials' conduct amounted to deliberate indifference of their personal security. See Redman v. County of San Diego, 942 F.2d 1435, 1445 (9th Cir. 1991) (holding that a jury could find prison officials' decision to place a heterosexual male in a cell with an "aggressive homosexual," resulting in his rape, to be deliberate indifference to the prisoner's personal security); Meriwether v. Coughlin, 879 F.2d 1037, 1048 (2d Cir. 1989) (holding that prison officials' failure to act to prevent a

The second kind of substantive due process violation occurs when a state official acts in a way that "shocks the conscience." Courts have never supplied a clear definition of what the phrase means. In Rochin v. California, the Supreme Court found that forcibly pumping a person's stomach to obtain evidence was shocking to the conscience.[111] However, the Court has held that forcibly drawing blood to obtain evidence is not shocking to the conscience. In high-speed police car chases, the Court has stated that a police officer's behavior only shocks the conscience if the officer acts "maliciously and sadistically for the very purpose of causing harm."[112] In general, you will probably only be able to bring this type of claim if a state official has harmed you by intentionally acting in a way that is truly outrageous.

(ii) Procedural Due Process

Your right to procedural due process under the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments means that the government cannot deprive you of life, liberty, or property without going through certain procedures, or due process. In order to successfully argue that your procedural due process rights were violated, you must be able to show that you were deprived of liberty or property, and that the deprivation occurred without enough procedural protection.[113]

Showing that you were deprived of liberty or property means showing that either your property or your liberty was taken from you in a way that is not typical of prison life.[114] You must also show that the prison officials' action was not accidental or simply careless.[115]

Prisoners often file procedural due process claims after a prison administrative procedure or hearing happens in some manner that is unfair to them, like if they were not told about the hearing in advance or were not allowed to defend themselves in some other way.[116] For an extensive discussion of due process claims resulting from disciplinary and administrative segregation and loss of good time credits, work release programs, and parole, see Chapter 18 of the JLM, "Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Proceedings." Chapter 18 also explains the Supreme Court's important decision in Sandin v. Conner,[117] which governs the procedural due process requirements in the prison setting.

The amount of procedural protection that is sufficient to protect your rights and the exact procedures that prisons must use depend on the situation. For example, if prison officials know in advance that they are going to take away a liberty or property interest, then they have to provide some type of procedural due process (such as a hearing) before the deprivation occurs. If they do not, you may be able to pursue a claim violent overthrow, when they had heard rumors of plans involving plaintiffs' safety, rose to the level of deliberate indifference).

---

111. Rochin v. California, 342 U.S. 165, 172, 72 S. Ct. 205, 209–10, 96 L. Ed. 183, 190 (1952).

112. County of Sacramento v. Lewis, 523 U.S. 833, 853–54, 118 S. Ct. 1708, 1720, 140 L. Ed. 2d 1043, 1061–62 (1998) (holding that in the context of a high-speed chase, official conduct can be in violation of substantive due process only if the officer intended to violate the victim's constitutional rights).

113. Procedural protection refers to the requirement that deprivations of due process are at least subject to certain procedural safeguards, such as the right to a hearing, the right to counsel, or an opportunity to speak in one's own defense, which serve to protect the prisoner or the accused. See, e.g., Sandin v. Connor, 515 U.S. 472, 487, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2302 (1995) (holding that a parole hearing to explain the circumstances behind a prisoner's misconduct record sufficed to afford "procedural protection" for a parole board's decision not to grant parole); Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 558, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2976 (1974) (holding that the determination of prisoners' guilt of "serious misconduct," for which they could lose "good-time credits," requires some sort of hearing to safeguard the minimum requirements of procedural due process).

114. See Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 484, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2300, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 430 (1995) (holding that due process liberty interests created by prison regulations will generally be limited to freedom from restraints that impose an atypical and significant hardship on the prisoner in relation to the ordinary incidents of prison life).

115. See Daniels v. Williams, 474 U.S. 327, 331–32, 106 S. Ct. 662, 664–65, 88 L. Ed. 2d 662, 668 (1986) (holding that negligence is not enough to constitute a violation under the Due Process Clause).

116. See, e.g., Jones v. Ray, 279 F.3d 944, 946 (11th Cir. 2001) (noting that a parole board's reliance on false information in a parole file can violate procedural due process); Colon v. Howard, 215 F.3d 227, 231 (2d Cir. 2000) (finding 305 days in segregation to be an adequate departure from normal prison life so as to require procedural due process protections); Welch v. Bartlett, 196 F.3d 389, 394 (2d Cir. 1999) (finding that a 90-day confinement in segregation may require due process protections).

117. Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 478, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2300, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 430 (1995) (holding that due process liberty interests created by prison regulations will generally be limited to freedom from restraints that impose an atypical and significant hardship on the prisoner in relation to the ordinary incidents of prison life).

under Section 1983.[118] However, if the deprivation is necessary because of an emergency situation or occurs accidentally—then due process (such as a hearing) is not required until after the deprivation occurs.[119] Some courts say that the availability of a remedy (such as compensation for lost property) under state tort law is enough to meet the requirement of due process—even if you can't actually win the state claim because of governmental immunity.[120] If there is a remedy for the deprivation of liberty or property under state law, you may not be allowed to bring a suit under Section 1983.[121]

(f) Fourteenth Amendment Claims: The Equal Protection Clause

Under the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, all persons in the United States, including prisoners, are guaranteed "the equal protection of the laws."[122] This means that the state may not treat you differently or discriminate against you because you belong to a particular group or "class" of people. In general, for a prisoner to make a claim under the Equal Protection Clause, the claim has to meet two requirements:[123] (1) it must state that you were treated differently from other prisoners who were in a similar situation or similar circumstances,[124] and (2) it must state that the unequal treatment resulted from intentional or purposeful discrimination.[125] You are most likely to be able to make an equal protection claim if you have been discriminated against because of your race,[126] gender,[127] ethnicity,[128] or disability.[129]

---

118. See Zinermon v. Burch, 494 U.S. 113, 139, 110 S. Ct. 975, 990, 108 L. Ed. 2d 100, 122 (1990) (holding that plaintiff had made a sufficient due process claim when it was shown that a deprivation of his rights was foreseeable such that pre-deprivation safeguards could have prevented the harm suffered).

119. See Parratt v. Taylor, 451 U.S. 527, 540–41, 101 S. Ct. 1908, 1915–16, 68 L. Ed. 2d 420, 432 (1981) (holding that post-deprivation remedy is sufficient to meet the requirements of due process where a pre-deprivation hearing would be "impracticable" or "impossible"), overruled on other grounds by Daniel v. Williams, 474 U.S. 327, 330–31, 106 S. Ct. 662, 664, 88 L. Ed. 2d 662 (1986).

120. See, e.g., Hamlin v. Vaudenberg, 95 F.3d 580, 585 n.3 (7th Cir. 1996) (noting that adequate state law remedies are not made inadequate by defendants' ability to raise immunity defenses); Jackson v. Hamm, 78 F. Supp. 2d 1233, 1245 (M.D. Ala. 1999) (holding that a state tort claim for false imprisonment was an adequate remedy even if the defendants were immune from being sued); Irshad v. Spann, 543 F. Supp. 922, 929 (E.D. Va. 1982) (finding a state remedy could be adequate even if defendants were immune from suit). But see Larramendy v. Newton, 994 F. Supp. 1211, 1216 (E.D. Cal. 1998) (holding that state tort law is not sufficient to satisfy due process where a state defendant would be absolutely immune from being sued under state law, thereby making recovery impossible); Soto v. Lord, 693 F. Supp. 8, 15–16 (S.D.N.Y. 1988) (same); Madden v. City of Meriden, 602 F. Supp. 1160, 1169 (D. Conn. 1985) (noting that state remedy is inadequate for procedural due process purposes if defendant cannot be sued); Harper v. Scott, 577 F. Supp. 15, 17 (E.D. Mich. 1984) (holding that state law remedies are inadequate where defendants are immune from suit).

121. See City of W. Covina v. Perkins, 525 U.S. 234, 119 S. Ct. 678, 142 L. Ed. 2d 636 (1999) (holding that police seizure of private property during a criminal investigation did not violate due process where the police gave plaintiffs a list of the property seized, and where state law provided the means for plaintiffs to eventually retrieve their property, even though the police did not actually notify plaintiffs that they could retrieve their property). For more information, see Chapter 16 of the JLM, "The State's Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions."

122. U.S. Const. amend XIV.

123. See Veney v. Wyche, 293 F.3d 726, 730–31 (4th Cir. 2002) (naming the two requirements that must be met for a prisoner who wants to make an equal protection claim); Wilson v. Taylor, 515 F. Supp. 2d 469, 472 (D. Del. 2007) (same); Williams v. Manternach, 192 F. Supp. 2d 980, 990 (N.D. Iowa 2002) (same).

124. Klinger v. Dept. of Corr., 31 F.3d 727, 731 (8th Cir. 1994) (noting that the Equal Protection Clause requires the state to treat people alike when they are in similar situations).

125. McCleskey v. Kemp, 481 U.S. 279, 292, 107 S. Ct. 1756, 1767, 95 L. Ed. 2d 262, 278 (1987) (noting that a successful equal protection claim must prove that there was purposeful discrimination). This means that it is not enough to argue that you received different treatment, but that you must also argue that you were intentionally treated differently (treated differently on purpose).

126. See Johnson v. California, 543 U.S. 499, 512, 125 S. Ct. 1141, 1150, 160 L. Ed. 2d 949, 963 (2005) (finding that a prisoner's 14th Amendment rights to equal protection are violated if the prison discriminates on the basis of race, unless the prison can demonstrate that such discrimination is necessary in order to achieve a compelling government interest); Sockwell v. Phelps, 20 F.3d 187, 191 (5th Cir. 1994) (finding equal protection violation where prisoners were segregated by race in their cells, because a general fear of racial violence could not justify segregation); Santiago v. Miles, 774 F. Supp. 775, 777 (W.D.N.Y. 1991) (finding that plaintiffs had proven the existence of equal protection violations based on a pattern of racism affecting job placement, housing assignments, and discipline). But see Wilson v. Taylor, 515 F. Supp. 2d 469, 473 (D. Del. 2007) (dismissing equal protection claim based on race discrimination in prison discipline because prisoner did not provide evidence that the discipline was racially motivated or that white prisoners who were similarly situated were treated differently); Hill v. Thalacker, 399 F. Supp. 2d 925, 929 (W.D. Wis. 2005) (dismissing prisoner's claim of race discrimination in promotion because he did not provide any evidence that the white

You may also have an equal protection claim if you are discriminated against because of your custodial status (the type of custody you are in, such as protective custody, general population, etc.).[130] However, in practice, equal protection claims for discrimination based on custodial status are difficult to win, since treating different types of prisoners in different ways is allowed as long as the prison has some reasonable explanation.[131]

The Supreme Court has also recognized that it may be possible to make an equal protection claim if you are singled out as an individual for "arbitrary and irrational treatment," even if you are not being discriminated against as a member of a certain group.[132] Like other constitutional rights, the right to equal protection is balanced against the state's legitimate interests, such as keeping prisons safe and orderly.

(g) First, Sixth, and Fourteenth Amendment Claims: Access to Courts

A prisoner's right to court access comes from several constitutional provisions, including the First Amendment's right to freedom of speech, the Sixth Amendment's right to counsel, and the Fourteenth Amendment's right to due process. For a discussion of your right to access the courts, see Chapter 3 of the JLM, "Your Right to Learn the Law and Go to Court."

3. Federal Statutory Bases for Section 1983 Claims

Sometimes you can also bring a Section 1983 claim if a right created by certain federal statutes has been violated by a state actor.[133] However, only a few federal laws can be enforced using Section 1983. These laws include 38 U.S.C. § 5301(a), which deals with payment of veteran's benefits.[134] You may also be able to bring a Section 1983 claim if your rights under certain international treaties have been violated. For example, a prisoners who were promoted before he was were similarly situated); Bass v. Becher, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2372, at *12 (W.D. Wis. Feb. 17, 2004) (unpublished) (dismissing claim of equal protection violation based on race because the plaintiff did not provide facts to show how his treatment would be different from a white prisoner in the same position); Brown v. Byrd, No. 00-3118, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17354, at *15–19 (E.D. Pa. Dec. 1, 2000) (unpublished) (finding that defendants' policy of assigning cells based on whether they thought prisoners would get along, even if shown to have a racial impact, if not a discriminatory purpose, withstood Turner scrutiny and did not violate the Equal Protection Clause because, even if prisoners were treated differently, it was reasonably related to the prison's legitimate interests in safety and security); Giles v. Henry, 841 F. Supp. 270, 275 (S.D. Iowa 1993) (finding African-American plaintiff's argument that defendants treated similarly situated white prisoners more favorably than him to be unpersuasive, because there was no clear pattern of discrimination in the evidence).

---

127. For information on and cases regarding equal protection violations based on gender, see "Special Issues of Women Prisoners," available online at http://www.hrlr.org/jlm/toc, or write to the JLM to request a copy.

128. See Jean v. Nelson, 711 F.2d 1455, 1486 (11th Cir. 1983) (noting that "[a] claim of discrimination based on nationality does not differ from that based on race"); Parisie v. Morris, 873 F. Supp. 1560, 1562–63 (N.D. Ga. 1995) (finding plaintiff's claim that the parole board had impermissibly considered his ethnicity in denying him parole was a valid claim).

129. See, e.g., Green v. McKaskle, 788 F.2d 1116, 1125 (5th Cir. 1986) (noting restrictions on movement and access based on disability may violate equal protection if no possible justification is shown). See Chapter 28 of the JLM, "Rights of Prisoners with Disabilities," for more information on disability discrimination.

130. Williams v. Manternach, 192 F. Supp. 2d 980, 990–92 (N.D. Iowa 2002) (finding that plaintiff made a valid equal protection claim by stating that he was treated differently as a "lifer" with regard to jobs and classification). But see Gerber v. Hickman, 291 F.3d 617, 623–624 (9th Cir. 2002) (en banc) (finding no equal protection violation for a life prisoner barred from providing his wife with a sperm sample for the purposes of artificial insemination, because keeping up with contacts outside of prison is not as important for prisoners who will never be released from prison).

131. See, e.g., Little v. Terhune, 200 F. Supp. 2d 445, 452 (D.N.J. 2002) (rejecting plaintiff's equal protection claim because the lack of programming available to prisoners in administrative segregation compared with those in the general population was rationally related to the prison's security concerns and budgetary constraints).

132. Village of Willowbrook v. Olech, 528 U.S. 562, 564, 120 S. Ct. 1073, 1074–75, 145 L. Ed. 2d 1060, 1063 (2000) (finding that equal protection claims can be made by a "class of one" if the plaintiff has been arbitrarily and irrationally singled out and treated differently from others in similar situations and there is no rational basis for the difference in treatment).

133. Maine v. Thiboutot, 448 U.S. 1, 4, 100 S. Ct. 2502, 2504, 65 L. Ed. 2d 555, 559 (1980) (holding that § 1983 may be used for violations of a right under a federal statute).

134. Higgins v. Beyer, 293 F.3d 683, 689–690 (3d Cir. 2002) (holding that 38 U.S.C. § 5301(a) (2000), which prohibits veterans benefits from being seized or attached, creates a right that can be enforced under § 1983). In Higgins, a prisoner brought a § 1983 claim against the New Jersey Department of Corrections and other defendants for taking a portion of the money from his veteran's disability check to pay a fine the prisoner owed to the Victims of Crime Compensation Board. Higgins v. Beyer, 293 F.3d 683, 685–86 (3d Cir. 2002).

few courts have decided that Article 36 of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations ("VCCR"),[135] which describes foreign nationals' right to consular access, can be used as the basis for a Section 1983 claim.[136] You Also, some federal statutes that cannot be enforced through Section 1983 have their own enforcement provisions.[137]

It can be easier to show that your rights under a statute have been violated than it is to show a constitutional violation, so if courts have already found that a particular statute can be used as the basis for a Section 1983 claim, you should examine the cases interpreting the statute to determine if your case is similar to them. Pay special attention to which cases rely on Section 1983 and which do not.[138]

C. Your Lawsuit

1. Types of Relief a Court May Grant

Whether your Section 1983 claim is based on a violation of constitutional or federal statutory rights, you may generally ask a federal district court for several types of relief in a Section 1983 action. Types of relief include damages (money payment), injunctive relief (an order from the court to the person you sued to do something or to stop doing something), and declaratory relief (a court statement of what your rights are). You may ask for more than one type of relief in your suit. However, the type of relief you can ask for may be different depending on whom you sue or name as defendants.[139]

(a) Money Damages

The court may require the individual defendants (such as a warden, guard, or employee) to pay you money damages. You generally cannot get a judgment for money damages against states or state agencies, such as a state prison.[140] Monetary damages are available, with some limitations, against municipalities and private corporations. If you are suing for damages, either you (the plaintiff) or the defendant can demand a trial by jury.

There are three general categories of money damages: compensatory, punitive, and nominal damages. Compensatory damages, also known as actual damages, are awarded to make you "whole"—that is, to put you back in the same position as before you suffered the wrong. For example, if an item of your property has

---

135. Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, art. 36, Apr. 24, 1963, 21 U.S.T. 77, 100, 596 U.N.T.S. 261, 292.

136. Note that the federal courts are not in agreement as to whether Article 36 of the Vienna Convention creates a right enforceable by an individual who has been arrested. Compare Jogi v. Voges, 480 F.3d 822, 834 (7th Cir. 2007) (holding that Article 36 of the Vienna Convention confers individual rights on detained nationals), with Gandara v. Bennett, 528 F.3d 823, 827–28 (11th Cir. 2008) (holding that Article 36 of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations does not create individual rights); De Los Santos Mora v. New York, 524 F.3d 183, 209 (2d Cir. 2007) (same); Cornejo v. County of San Diego, 504 F.3d 853, 855 (9th Cir. 2007) (same). The majority of federal courts that have addressed the issue have concluded that the Vienna Convention does not create enforceable individual rights, and the Supreme Court has not yet addressed the issue of whether Article 36 can provide the basis for a §1983 claim. United States v. Perez-Sanchez, No. CR02-4065-MWB, slip op., 2006 WL 2949503, at *8 (N.D. Iowa Oct. 16, 2006) (unpublished). For more information on consular access, see the Immigration and Consular Access Supplement to the JLM.

137. See, e.g., The Americans with Disabilities Act ("ADA"), 42 U.S.C. §§ 12101–12213 (2006); Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act ("RLUIPA"), 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000cc–2000cc-5 (2006). For more about your rights under the ADA, see Chapter 28 of the JLM, "Rights of Prisoners with Disabilities." For more about your rights under RLUIPA, see Chapter 27 of the JLM, "Religious Freedom in Prison."

138. Courts generally decide on a case-by-case basis which statutes can be used as the basis for a § 1983 lawsuit, depending on how the court thinks that Congress intended the statute to work. See Blessing v. Freestone, 520 U.S. 329, 340, 117 S. Ct. 1353, 1359, 137 L. Ed. 2d 569, 581–82 (1997) (discussing how courts have traditionally determined whether federal statutes create rights that are enforceable using § 1983). For example, courts have held that juvenile offenders who are illegally housed with adult offenders in adult prisons can use § 1983 to enforce their right to be housed separately. See 42 U.S.C. § 5633(a)(12)(A) (2006); Hendrickson v. Griggs, 672 F. Supp. 1126, 1136 (N.D. Iowa 1987). However, if you are an adult whose criminal history is wrongfully disclosed, you cannot sue under § 1983. See 42 U.S.C. § 3789g (2006); Polchowski v. Gorris, 714 F.2d 749, 751 (7th Cir. 1983). Sometimes, different courts do not agree on whether a particular statute can be used as the basis for a § 1983 claim. You should research your jurisdiction's case law about bringing § 1983 claims based on federal statutory rights.

139. For a list of the types of relief available from different defendants, see Figure 2 in Part C(3)(c) of this Chapter.

140. As a practical matter, it is often the case that if you sue state employees in their individual capacity (as opposed to the actual state or state agency), the state will voluntarily pay the damages for the employees. This is called "indemnification."

been unlawfully damaged by a prison official and the property was worth seventy dollars, then you could receive seventy dollars in damages, unless you could repair or restore the property to its original condition for less than seventy dollars. Or, if you sustained physical injuries as a result of the defendant's conduct, a court or jury might award you sufficient money to cover your medical expenses or to compensate you for a resulting disability. In addition, compensatory damages may include pain and suffering damages, which try to compensate you financially for the physical pain and suffering that you endured as a result of the wrongful conduct. When you seek compensatory damages, you must state and prove the nature, extent, and cause of your injuries in detail.

A second type of money damages is punitive damages. These are not awarded very often. The purpose of punitive damages is to punish the defendant for what she did, rather than just to compensate you for what happened. Punitive damages are available when the defendant acted with "evil motive or intent" or when his conduct involved "reckless or callous indifference" to your federal rights.[141] A court cannot award punitive damages against governmental agencies,[142] like the prison or jail, but it can award them against individual officials or employees.

The third type of money damages are nominal damages. Nominal damages are a form of symbolic relief that is usually no more than one dollar.[143] A plaintiff prisoner who proves that his rights were violated, but does not prove that any harm resulted from that violation, may be entitled to nominal damages but not compensatory damages.[144] If you receive nominal damages, you may be able to recover punitive damages as well.[145]

No matter which type of damages you ask for, you should read Chapter 13 of the JLM, "The Prison Litigation Reform Act," since the PLRA limits the types of damages you can recover in given situations.[146]

---

141. Smith v. Wade, 461 U.S. 30, 56, 103 S. Ct. 1625, 1640, 75 L. Ed. 2d 632, 651 (1983) (holding that a prisoner may be awarded punitive damages for recklessness or serious indifference to his rights, as well as for "evil intent"); see also Reilly v. Grayson, 310 F.3d 519, 521 (6th Cir. 2002) (upholding punitive damages award against prison officials whose refusal to house asthmatic prisoner in smoke-free environment was found to be a reckless disregard for his rights); Blissett v. Coughlin, 66 F.3d 531, 535–36 (2d Cir. 1995) (upholding jury award of punitive damages against prison guards for assault and unlawful confinement of prisoner).

142. See City of Newport v. Fact Concerts, Inc., 453 U.S. 247, 271, 101 S. Ct. 2748, 2762, 69 L. Ed. 2d 616, 635 (1981) (holding that punitive damages are not available against a municipality in a § 1983 suit); Ciraolo v. City of N.Y., 216 F.3d 236, 242 (2d Cir. 2000) (reversing an award of punitive damages against New York City in a § 1983 action based on City of Newport and holding that municipal immunity from punitive damages is absolute, with no "outrageous conduct" exception).

143. Courts may award more than one dollar. See, e.g., Hatch v. Yamauchi, 809 F. Supp. 59, 61 (E.D. Ark. 1992) (awarding nominal damages in the amount of ten dollars for violation of prisoners' right to access the courts (including access to the law library and trained legal assistance)).

144. See Thompson v. Carter, 284 F.3d 411, 418 (2d Cir. 2002) (holding that under the PLRA claims for constitutional violations absent physical injury need not be dismissed outright, but recovery is limited to nominal and punitive damages (as well as injunctive and declaratory relief) because allowing compensatory damages without physical injuries would amount to recovery for mental or emotional injury, which the PLRA prohibits); see also Royal v. Kautzky, 375 F.3d 720, 722–23 (8th Cir. 2004) (holding that the compensatory damages limitation of the PLRA applies to all federal prisoner lawsuits, including those for 1st Amendment violations); Searles v. Van Bebber, 251 F.3d 869, 875–76 (10th Cir. 2001) (holding that the prisoner could not recover compensatory damages for the violation of his constitutional rights without first showing a physical injury). However, some courts do not require any showing of physical injury where the deprivation involves the 1st Amendment. See Oliver v. Scott, 276 F.3d 736, 747 n.20 (5th Cir. 2002) (applying the physical injury requirement to claims of cruel and unusual punishment under the 8th Amendment, but declining to reach the issue in a 1st Amendment case); Williams v. Ollis, 230 F.3d 1361, 2000 U.S. App. LEXIS 30373 (6th Cir. 2000) (unpublished) (stating that the plaintiff's 1st Amendment claim was not precluded by § 1997e(e)); Rowe v. Shake, 196 F.3d 778, 781–82 (7th Cir. 1999) (holding that a "deprivation of First Amendment rights standing alone is a cognizable injury," therefore "[a] prisoner is entitled to judicial relief for a violation of his First Amendment rights aside from any physical, mental, or emotional injury he may have sustained."); Canell v. Lightner, 143 F.3d 1210, 1213 (9th Cir. 1998) (holding that "the deprivation of First Amendment rights entitles a plaintiff to judicial relief wholly aside from any physical injury he can show.").

145. See Allah v. Al-Hafeez, 226 F.3d 247, 251 (3d Cir. 2000) (noting that in appropriate cases, both nominal and punitive damages may be awarded for a violation of constitutional rights without an accompanying injury).

146. See Harris v. Garner, 216 F.3d 970, 984 (11th Cir. 2000) (en banc) (holding that the language "no action shall be brought" operates as a bar to a prisoner's entire suit absent physical injury). Compare Davis v. District of Columbia, 158 F.3d 1342, 1348–49 (D.C. Cir. 1998) ("§ 1997e(e) precludes claims for emotional injury without any prior physical injury, regardless of the statutory or constitutional basis of the legal wrong."), with Rowe v. Shake, 196 F.3d 778, 781 (7th Cir. 1999) ("§ 1997e(e) applies only to claims for mental or emotional injury. Claims for other types of injury do not

(b) Injunctive Relief

Another type of relief the court can award in a Section 1983 action is an injunction. An injunction is an order to prison officials either to take certain actions—for example, to improve the conditions of your confinement—or to not take certain kinds of actions against you in the future—for example, to stop censoring your mail.[147] An injunction is often referred to as "equitable relief."

In order to obtain an injunction, you must be able to show that (1) there is a likelihood of substantial, immediate, irreparable injury without an injunction; and (2) the remedies at law, such as money damages, are inadequate.[148] To meet the immediate injury requirement, you must be able to prove that your injury is likely to happen to you again in the foreseeable future and was not a single, isolated incident.[149] One of the most effective ways of showing that you are likely to suffer future harm is to show that the harm is ongoing either due to a written policy or a pattern or custom of officially sanctioned behavior (behavior approved by officials).[150] You also have to prove that your injury is a substantial and irreparable one. You can show that your injury is substantial (serious) by pointing out the specific ways you are being harmed. Showing that your injury is irreparable means showing that you are being harmed in a way that cannot be fixed in the future. Many courts consider the ongoing violation of a constitutional right to be substantial and irreparable harm.[151] Lastly, you have to show that no other available legal remedy will address your injury. In other words, you must demonstrate that an injunction is the only way to prevent and correct the source of your injury.[152]

If you can show that an injunction is necessary to protect your rights until your trial is over, you may be able to get a temporary injunction before the trial is completed or even before it starts.[153] This type of relief implicate the statute.") (citations omitted), and Canell v. Lightner, 143 F.3d 1210, 1213 (9th Cir. 1998) ("[T]he deprivation of First Amendment rights entitles a plaintiff to judicial relief wholly aside from any physical injury he can show, or any mental or emotional injury he may have incurred. Therefore, Section 1997e(e) does not apply to First Amendment [c]laims regardless of the form of relief sought.").

---

147. See, e.g., Koch v. Lewis, 216 F. Supp. 2d 994, 1007 (D. Ariz. 2001) (ordering prison to release prisoner from segregation into the general population after finding that indefinite segregation based solely on gang membership was unconstitutional), vacated on other grounds; Northern v. Nelson, 315 F. Supp. 687, 688 (N.D. Cal. 1970) (ordering prison to allow prisoner to practice his Muslim religion); The Luparar v. Stoneman, 382 F. Supp. 495, 502 (D. Vt. 1974) (ordering prison to allow circulation of current issue of prison newspaper).

148. See O'Shea v. Littleton, 414 U.S. 488, 502, 94 S. Ct. 669, 679, 38 L. Ed. 2d 674, 687 (1974) (noting that to obtain equitable relief, plaintiff must prove "likelihood of substantial and immediate irreparable injury, and the inadequacy of remedies at law"); Younger v. Harris, 401 U.S. 37, 46, 91 S. Ct. 746, 751, 27 L. Ed. 2d 669, 676 (1971) (stating that proof of an irreparable injury is required for any injunction). These requirements are often referred to as the requirements for "standing" (the right to make a legal claim before the court) to seek injunctive relief.

149. See Los Angeles v. Lyons, 461 U.S. 95, 111, 103 S. Ct. 1660, 1670, 75 L. Ed. 2d 675, 690 (1983) (holding that injunctive relief is unavailable when there is no "real or immediate threat that the plaintiff will be wronged again"); Hague v. CIO, 307 U.S. 496, 518, 59 S. Ct. 954, 965, 83 L. Ed. 1423, 1438 (1939) (granting injunctive relief because the threat of continued police misconduct made the threat of constitutional deprivations ongoing); Kritenbrink v. Crawford, 313 F. Supp. 2d 1043, 1053 (D. Nev. 2004) ("The mere fact that a plaintiff has suffered an injury in the past is not sufficient to allege standing for injunctive relief.").

150. See Armstrong v. Davis, 275 F.3d 849, 861 (9th Cir. 2001) (stating that a realistic threat of a repeating injury may arise from a written policy or a pattern of officially sanctioned behavior).

151. See, e.g., Jolly v. Coughlin, 76 F.3d 468, 482 (2d Cir. 1996) (stating that there is a "presumption of irreparable injury that flows from a violation of constitutional rights"); Nat'l People's Action v. Wilmette, 914 F.2d 1008, 1013 (7th Cir. 1990) ("Even a temporary deprivation of First Amendment freedom of expression rights is generally sufficient to prove irreparable harm."); Ross v. Meese, 818 F.2d 1132, 1135 (4th Cir. 1987) (noting that deprivation of a constitutional right amounts to irreparable harm); Mitchell v. Cuomo, 748 F.2d 804, 806 (2d Cir. 1984) (holding that an alleged violation of a constitutional right is enough to show irreparable harm). But see Wis. Cent. Ltd. v. Public Serv. Comm'n of Wis., 95 F.3d 1359, 1372 (7th Cir. 1996) (holding that where the only constitutional right at issue related to the procedures for receiving compensation for a governmental taking of property, irreparable harm was not shown); Pinckney v. Bd. of Educ., 920 F. Supp. 393, 400–01 (E.D.N.Y. 1996) (holding that irreparable harm was not shown by alleged procedural due process violation where plaintiff could be compensated with money damages).

152. See O'Shea v. Littleton, 414 U.S. 488, 501–02, 94 S. Ct. 669, 679, 38 L. Ed. 2d 674, 686–87 (1974) (holding that plaintiffs did not meet the required elements for injunctive relief because there were state and federal remedies that could provide them with adequate relief for their alleged wrongs); Pinckney v. Bd. of Educ., 920 F. Supp. 393, 400–01 (E.D.N.Y. 1996) (holding that irreparable harm was not shown by alleged procedural due process violation where plaintiff could be compensated with money damages).

153. See, e.g., Mitchell v. Cuomo, 748 F.2d 804, 808 (2d Cir. 1984) (upholding preliminary injunction that prohibited closing a prison where prisoners proved that such a closing would force them to be moved to prisons that is called a preliminary injunction. In order to get one you must follow the procedures described in Rule 65(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Most courts also require you to show that:

(1) You are likely to succeed on the merits of your claim;
(2) You are likely to suffer irreparable harm if the preliminary injunction is denied;
(3) You will suffer more if the injunction is denied than the defendant will suffer if it is granted; and
(4) Granting the preliminary injunction is consistent with the public interest.[154]

Generally you can only receive a preliminary injunction after a hearing in which your opponent has the opportunity to argue against the injunction. However, there is one type of injunction that can be granted in advance of a hearing. This type of injunction is a temporary restraining order ("TRO"). Courts will only grant a TRO in exceptional and urgent situations. To get a TRO, you must show that you will suffer "immediate and irreparable injury, loss, or damage" if you have to wait for a hearing.[155] If you are granted a TRO, the court will set a date for a hearing as soon as possible. At this hearing you must ask that the TRO be converted to a preliminary injunction.[156]

If the court grants a TRO, it may require you to provide money for assurance purposes. You can, however, ask the court to waive this requirement. To take advantage of this waiver, you should file your TRO request in forma pauperis.[157] See Appendix A-5 of this Chapter for sample in forma pauperis documents.

If you believe you are eligible for a TRO, you must file an "Order to Show Cause and Temporary Restraining Order" with the court. See Appendix A-4 of this Chapter for an example. If possible, you must also notify the prison officials that you are requesting a TRO and send them copies of your request. You must also submit to the court an affidavit that describes your efforts to contact the prison officials, and a short memorandum stating the reasons why the court should grant your request for a TRO.[158] already were too crowded); Inmates of Attica Corr. Facility v. Rockefeller, 453 F.2d 12, 23–24 (2d Cir. 1971) (granting preliminary injunctive relief to prisoners after extended mistreatment by prison guards, where prison officials had not taken sufficient steps to ensure that such mistreatment would not continue during trial), overruled on other grounds; Campos v. Coughlin, 854 F. Supp. 194, 214 (S.D.N.Y. 1994) (allowing prisoners to wear religious beads); Dean v. Coughlin, 623 F. Supp. 392, 405 (S.D.N.Y. 1985) (ordering prison officials to provide "adequate dental care to inmates with serious dental needs"), vacated on other grounds, 804 F.2d 207 (2d Cir. 1986). But see Parker v. State Bd. of Pardons and Paroles, 275 F.3d 1032, 1037 (11th Cir. 2001) (finding plaintiff was not entitled to a preliminary injunction since he was unable to show that there was a substantial likelihood of success on the merits of his claims); Espinal v. Goord, 180 F. Supp. 2d 532, 541 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) (denying plaintiff's motion for a temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction because plaintiff had not made a "substantial showing of likelihood of success on the merits of his due process claims").

---

154. Consistency with the public interest is the standard for a preliminary injunction in most federal courts. See Yolton v. El Paso Tenn. Pipeline Co., 435 F.3d 571, 578 (6th Cir. 2006); Joelner v. Vill. of Wash. Park, Ill., 378 F.3d 613, 619 (7th Cir. 2004); Rodde v. Bonta, 357 F.3d 988, 994 (9th Cir. 2004); Nieves-Marquez v. Puerto Rico, 353 F.3d 108, 120 (1st Cir. 2003); Shire U.S., Inc. v. Barr Labs., Inc., 329 F.3d 348, 352 (3d Cir. 2003); Newsom v. Albemarle County Sch. Bd., 354 F.3d 249, 254 (4th Cir. 2003); In re Sac & Fox Tribe of the Miss. in Iowa, 340 F.3d 749, 758 (8th Cir. 2003); Kikumura v. Hurley, 242 F.3d 950, 955 (10th Cir. 2001); Parker v. State Bd. of Pardons & Paroles, 275 F.3d 1032, 1035 (11th Cir. 2001); Wenner v. Tex. Lottery Comm'n, 123 F.3d 321, 325 (5th Cir. 1997). However, some courts modify the test slightly. To receive a preliminary injunction from a court in the Second Circuit, you must show: (1) you are likely to suffer irreparable harm if the preliminary injunction is denied, and (2) either (a) you are likely to succeed on the merits of your claim, or (b) your claim raises sufficiently serious questions to justify litigation and you will suffer more if the injunction is denied than the defendant will suffer if it is granted. See Mitchell v. Cuomo, 748 F.2d 804, 806 (2d Cir. 1984) (upholding preliminary injunction that prohibited the closing of a prison where prisoners proved that such a closing would force them to be moved to prisons that were already too crowded).

155. Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(b).

156. Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(b).

157. "In forma pauperis" is Latin for "in the manner of a poor person." It means that you cannot afford the fee or costs and are asking the court to waive them. See Black's Law Dictionary 794–95 (8th ed. 2004). Some states use the English "Poor Person Status" instead of the Latin term.

158. There are no technical rules that you must follow in composing your supporting memorandum. Simply state your arguments as clearly as possible and stress the consequences that will result if the court does not grant your request. Be sure to tell the court why you need action immediately and why you cannot wait for a hearing. Chapter 2 of the JLM, "Introduction to Legal Research," explains how to conduct research for a memorandum of law. Chapter 6 of the JLM, "An Introduction to Legal Documents," will also help you in writing your memorandum.

Under 18 U.S.C. § 3626(a)(2) of the PLRA, any preliminary injunction that is granted will automatically expire after ninety days, unless the court makes certain findings required for granting an injunction[159] and issues a final order for an injunction before the expiration of the ninety-day period.[160] It is often difficult or impossible for the parties to complete discovery and for the court to complete a trial and issue a decision within ninety days. However, the court can issue a new preliminary injunction if it finds that you are still faced with irreparable harm.[161]

(c) Declaratory Relief

Finally, the court may issue a declaratory judgment. A declaratory judgment is a statement about the nature and limits of your rights, which the court can issue before your rights have been violated.[162] A declaratory judgment can be useful if prison officials threaten to take some action that you believe would violate your rights. In such circumstances, you may use Section 1983 to request that the court issue a declaratory judgment saying that it would be illegal for the prison to take the action in question. You may seek a declaratory judgment even if you are not seeking any other type of relief.[163] Later on, you can still seek an injunction if you find that the declaratory judgment is not enough to protect you.

2. Whom to Name as Defendants

Figuring out exactly who to name as a defendant in your Section 1983 lawsuit can be confusing. As noted in Part B(1)(a) above, you can only sue a "person" who violated your rights while acting "under color" of state law. For the purposes of Section 1983, the definition of a "person" includes individual people (like prison wardens, guards, and other employees), as well as a city, county, or municipality that adopts policies, rules, or regulations that violate your rights.[164] However, state governments and their agencies (including your state's department of corrections) are not considered "persons" under Section 1983.[165]

(a) Individual Defendants

If any of your defendants are individuals, you must decide in what "capacity" you will sue them—"individual capacity," "official capacity," or both. When you sue someone in his individual capacity, you are suing him personally. When you sue someone in his official capacity, you are suing his office (for example, suing the county prison warden's office rather than suing the individual who happens to be the county prison warden). Whether you sue a particular individual in his individual capacity, his official capacity, or both, will affect the type of damages you can receive and the defenses that the individual can raise.[166]

In general, if you want to obtain an injunction (described in Part C(1)(b) of this Chapter), you should sue defendants in their official capacities. If you are seeking monetary damages, you should usually sue defendants in their individual capacities. If you are seeking monetary damages against a high-ranking local official, like a sheriff or a warden, then you should probably sue him in both his official and individual capacities. If you are confused about which capacity to use for a particular defendant, you always have the option of suing that defendant in both his individual and official capacities. However, you should know that suing defendants in both capacities may lead the defendants to file motions asking that part of your lawsuit be dismissed. Such motions can further delay your lawsuit.

---

159. 18 U.S.C. §§ 3626(a)(1)–(2) (2006).

160. 18 U.S.C. § 3626(a)(2) (2006).

161. See, e.g., Mayweathers v. Newland, 258 F.3d 930, 936 (9th Cir. 2001) (upholding a district court's second preliminary injunction allowing prisoners to attend religious services without being punished).

162. Declaratory Judgment Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2201(a) (2006).

163. Declaratory Judgment Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2201(a) (2006). See, e.g., Clarkson v. Coughlin, 898 F. Supp. 1019, 1051 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (granting declaratory judgment for plaintiffs that corrections department's creation of a special unit for deaf prisons that was unavailable to females deprived them of equal protection of the law).

164. See Monell v. Dept. of Soc. Servs., 436 U.S. 658, 690–91, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2035–36, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 635 (1978) (holding that municipalities and local governments are considered "persons" under § 1983).

165. See Will v. Mich. Dept. of State Police, 491 U.S. 58, 68–71, 109 S. Ct. 2304, 2311–12, 105 L. Ed. 2d 45, 56–58 (1989) (holding that states and state defendants sued in their official capacities are not "persons" under § 1983 and therefore may not be sued for money damages).

166. See Part C(3) of this Chapter for an explanation of how individual and official capacities affect potential defenses and the types of damages you can receive.

Sometimes you may not know the name of the person who violated your rights. In such a case, you must refer to the defendant as "John (or Jane) Doe."[167] This tells the court that you do not know the name of the person about whom you are complaining. You must, however, locate and identify all John and Jane Does at some point or the claims against them will be dismissed.[168] Once the lawsuit is started, you should be able to learn the defendants' identities through discovery. For more information on discovery, see Chapter 8 of the JLM, "Obtaining Information to Prepare Your Case: The Process of Discovery."

(b) Supervisor Liability

A supervisory official who causes or participates in a violation of your rights may be liable under some circumstances. Supervisor liability under Section 1983 should not be confused with "respondeat superior," which is the idea that supervisors are legally responsible for their subordinates' (lower-ranked staff members') actions, whether or not the supervisor had actual knowledge of the actions.[169] The concept of respondeat superior does not apply to Section 1983 lawsuits.[170] Thus, in Section 1983 claims, supervisory officials cannot be charged with responsibility for lower officials' acts unless they were "personally involved" in them. As with any other individual, a supervisor may be liable if he directly participated in the violation of your rights. For example, a supervisor who participated in an assault on you might be liable because of his own role. In addition, a supervisor is considered to be "personally involved" in a constitutional violation if:

(1) The supervisor, "after learning of [a] violation [of your rights] ... failed to remedy the wrong"; or
(2) The supervisor "created a policy or custom under which" your constitutional rights were violated, "or allowed such a policy or custom to continue"; or
(3) The supervisor was "grossly negligent" in that he did not adequately supervise the subordinates who violated your rights.[171]

To hold a supervisor liable in any of the above situations, you must show that the supervisor acted with "deliberate indifference."[172] The definition of deliberate indifference can vary from circuit to circuit and may depend on the type of supervisor liability you are claiming.[173] Be sure to look at cases in your circuit to see how your circuit defines deliberate indifference for the purposes of supervisor liability. Most courts say that a supervisor acts with deliberate indifference when he knows or should know that there is a substantial risk of harms that violate your constitutional rights and he fails to prevent or remedy that harm.[174]

---

167. See Roper v. Grayson, 81 F.3d 124, 126 (10th Cir. 1996) (holding that it is permissible to name John or Jane Doe as defendants "so long as the plaintiff provides an adequate description of some kind which is sufficient to identify the person involved so process can eventually be served"); Dean v. Barber, 951 F.2d 1210, 1215–16 (11th Cir. 1992) (finding plaintiff adequately identified unnamed defendant such that he could be added later when his identity was determined).

168. See, e.g., Figueroa v. Rivera, 147 F.3d 77, 82–83 (1st Cir. 1998) (upholding dismissal without prejudice of a claim where plaintiffs had made no attempt to identify or to serve John Doe defendants 17 months after filing the lawsuit).

169. Respondeat superior is Latin for "let the superior [master] make answer." See Black's Law Dictionary 1338 (8th ed. 2004).

170. See, e.g., Worrell v. Henry, 219 F.3d 1197, 1214 (10th Cir. 2000) ("Under § 1983, a defendant may not be held liable under a theory of respondeat superior."); Aponte Matos v. Toledo Davila, 135 F.3d 182, 192 (1st Cir. 1998) ("Supervisory liability under § 1983 'cannot be predicated on a respondeat theory, but only on the basis of the supervisor's own acts or omissions.'") (citation omitted).

171. See Williams v. Smith, 781 F.2d 319, 323–24 (2d Cir. 1986) (discussing the ways in which supervisors may be found liable under § 1983).

172. See Green v. Branson, 108 F.3d 1296, 1302 (10th Cir. 1997) ("Liability of a supervisor under § 1983 must be predicated on the supervisor's deliberate indifference, rather than mere negligence.").

173. See, e.g., Green v. Branson, 108 F.3d 1296, 1302 (10th Cir. 1997) (defining supervisor "deliberate indifference" in an 8th Amendment context as occurring where the supervisor knows "he is 'creating a substantial risk of bodily harm'") (emphasis added); Poe v. Leonard, 282 F.3d 123, 140 (2d Cir. 2002) (defining supervisor "deliberate indifference" with respect to his subordinates' actions as occurring when a supervisor "fail[s] to act on information indicating unconstitutional acts were occurring or for his gross negligence in failing to supervise his subordinates who commit such wrongful acts, provided that the plaintiff can show an affirmative causal link between the supervisor's inaction and her injury") (internal citations omitted); Jeffers v. Gomez, 267 F.3d 895, 912 (9th Cir. 2001) (defining supervisor "deliberate indifference" as occurring when an official is "aware of facts from which the inference could be drawn that a substantial risk of serious harm exists, and he must also draw the inference") (internal citations omitted).

174. See Camilo-Robles v. Hoyos, 151 F.3d 1, 7 (1st Cir. 1998) ("To demonstrate deliberate indifference a plaintiff must show (1) a grave risk of harm, (2) the defendant's actual or constructive knowledge of that risk, and (3) his failure

To prevail in a supervisor liability claim, you must be able to show that your constitutional rights were actually violated, and that there was a clear connection between the violation of your rights and the supervisor's actions or failure to act.[175] What follows is a discussion of the three types of situations where you may be able to hold a supervisor liable.

(i) Failure to Act to Remedy a Wrong

If a supervisor becomes aware of a violation of your rights, but fails to take steps to remedy the violation, he may be liable under Section 1983.[176] Information about a violation of rights may come to a supervisor's attention in a variety of ways. The supervisor may learn of the violation through an appeal you make through the prison grievance system,[177] or the appeal of a disciplinary decision.[178] He may learn of the violation through a report or through the filing of a lawsuit.[179] He may also learn of a violation through informal sources of information,[180] such as letters from prisoners[181] or by directly witnessing the violation.[182] to take easily available measures to address the risk."). The Second Circuit has applied a standard of gross negligence in cases involving a supervisor's deficient management of staff or failure to respond to constitutional violations, holding that the supervisor need only have been "grossly negligent." See, e.g., Williams v. Smith, 781 F.2d 319, 323–24 (2d Cir. 1986) ("[A] supervisory official may be personally liable if he or she was grossly negligent in managing subordinates who caused the unlawful condition or event"); Wright v. Smith, 21 F.3d 496, 501 (2d Cir. 1994) ("Supervisory liability may be imposed where an official demonstrates 'gross negligence' or 'deliberate indifference' to the constitutional rights of inmates by failing to act on information indicating that unconstitutional practices are taking place."). But, if you are filing your complaint within the Second Circuit, you should plead "deliberate indifference" in your complaint.

---

175. See Aponte Matos v. Toledo Davila, 135 F.3d 182, 192 (1st Cir. 1998) ("There is supervisory liability only if (1) there is subordinate liability, and (2) the supervisor's action or inaction was 'affirmatively linked' to the constitutional violation caused by the subordinate."); Green v. Branson, 108 F.3d 1296, 1302 (10th Cir. 1997) ("To establish a supervisor's liability under § 1983 [plaintiff] must show that an affirmative link exists between the [constitutional] deprivation and either the supervisor's personal participation, his exercise of control or direction, or his failure to supervise.") (citations and internal quotations omitted).

176. See Williams v. Smith, 781 F.2d 319, 324 (2d Cir. 1986) (holding that supervisor who affirmed prisoner's disciplinary conviction when prisoner was not permitted to call witnesses may be liable for violation of prisoner's due process rights); Boone v. Elrod, 706 F. Supp. 636, 638 (N.D. Ill. 1989) (finding valid §1983 claim where plaintiff claims that defendants ignored complaints of prior attacks by other prisoners).

177. See Amaker v. Hakes, 919 F. Supp. 127, 131–32 (W.D.N.Y. 1996) (stating that information received by superintendent of correctional facility through prisoner grievance procedures may support supervisor liability in that it demonstrates personal involvement on part of supervisor).

178. See Gabai v. Jacoby, 800 F. Supp. 1149, 1156 (S.D.N.Y. 1992) (finding that supervisor who learned that prisoner's rights were violated during a disciplinary procedure may be liable for failing to overturn the disciplinary decision on appeal).

179. See Morris v. Eversley, 205 F. Supp. 2d 234, 241–42 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) (noting that supervisor who received prisoner's report of sexual misconduct by guard may be found liable); Langley v. Coughlin, 709 F. Supp. 482, 486 (S.D.N.Y. 1989) (holding that commissioner of Department of Corrections may be personally liable for violation of mentally ill prisoners' rights where he received information of such violations through complaints filed in lawsuits as well as through a report written by the Correctional Association of New York in conjunction with the Department of Corrections describing "deficiency in the treatment of chronically mentally ill inmates").

180. See, e.g., Green v. Branson, 108 F.3d 1296, 1302–03 (10th Cir. 1997) (holding that warden who was informed by prisoners of attack on a prisoner and who failed to take any steps to ensure that the prisoner receive adequate medical care may be liable); Walker v. Godinez, 912 F. Supp. 307, 312–13 (N.D. Ill. 1995) (stating that prisoners' report of corrections officers' misconduct to supervisory officials may be sufficient for supervisory liability).

181. See Richardson v. Goord, 347 F.3d 431, 435 (2d Cir. 2003) (stating that the Commissioner may be liable, depending on contents of letter from prisoner complaining about violation of his rights); Gentry v. Duckworth, 65 F.3d 555, 561 (7th Cir. 1995) (noting that letters from prisoner to supervisory official regarding violation of rights may be sufficient for "personal involvement" of supervisor where supervisor failed to remedy the violation); Pacheco v. Comisse, 897 F. Supp. 671, 678 (N.D.N.Y. 1995) (same); Barry v. Ratelle, 985 F. Supp. 1235, 1239 (S.D. Cal. 1997) (same); Mandala v. Coughlin, 920 F. Supp. 342, 351 (E.D.N.Y. 1996) (same); Strachan v. Ashe, 548 F. Supp. 1193, 1204 (D. Mass. 1982) (stating that, among other things, a letter from prisoner's attorney informing supervisory officials of violation of prisoner's rights may support finding of personal involvement for supervisor liability). But see Watson v. McGinnis, 964 F. Supp. 127, 130 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) ("[A]llegations that an official ignored a prisoner's letter are insufficient to establish liability" under § 1983); Pritchett v. Artuz, No. 99 Civ. 3957, 2000 WL 4157, *6, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20041, *16 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 3, 2000) ("Generally, the allegation that a supervisory official ignored a prisoner's letter protesting unconstitutional conduct is not itself sufficient to allege the personal involvement of the official so as to create liability under § 1983.") (quoting Gayle v. Lucas, No. 97 Civ. 883, 1998 WL 148416, *4, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3919, *11 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 30, 1998)).

182. See Gailor v. Armstrong, 187 F. Supp. 2d 729, 736–37 (W.D. Ky. 2001) (finding that supervisor who failed to

Regardless of how a supervisor learns of a violation of your rights, the information he receives must be sufficient to put him on notice of the nature of the violation. This means that the supervisor must have enough information that he knows or should know that the violation is occurring.[183] Note that some courts have held that prisoners' letters are not sufficient to put prison officials on notice of a violation.[184] Moreover, the nature of the violation must be one that the particular supervisor has authority to correct or has responsibility over.[185] Finally, the supervisor must have actually failed to remedy the violation.

(ii) Creating or Allowing an Unconstitutional Policy or Custom

A supervisor may be found to be personally involved in a violation of your rights if he develops an unconstitutional policy or if he allows an unconstitutional policy to continue.[186] The policy does not need to be written. Supervisors can be held liable for creating or allowing an unconstitutional informal policy or custom.[187] However, if a supervisor creates a constitutional policy and his subordinates violate your rights by failing to follow that policy, the supervisor cannot be held liable.[188] Similarly, if policies are in place to protect your constitutional rights, and subordinates violate your rights by ignoring those policies, the supervisor cannot be held liable.[189] There is one exception to these two rules. If staff members ignore or fail to follow a policy because the supervisor did not do a good enough job of hiring or training those staff members, then the supervisor can be held liable. This exception is discussed in Part C(2)(b)(iii), below.

(iii) Deficient Management of Subordinates

A supervisor may be liable if a staff member violates your constitutional rights as a result of that supervisor's mismanagement of subordinates. A subordinate is an individual who works under the command of the supervisor. This type of liability can arise when the supervisor (1) knew of a subordinate's past intervene during use of excessive force that resulted in death of prisoner may be liable under § 1983). Keep in mind that all prison officials, not only supervisors, may be liable for failing to intervene to stop a violation of your rights. See Skrtich v. Thornton, 280 F.3d 1295, 1302 (11th Cir. 2002) ("It is not necessary that a police officer actually participate in the use of excessive force in order to be held liable under Section 1983. Rather, an officer who is present at the scene and who fails to take reasonable steps to protect the victim of another officer's use of excessive force, can be held liable for his failure to act"); Davis v. Hill, 173 F. Supp. 2d 1136, 1143 (D. Kan. 2001) ("Although only two defendants were directly responsible for the attack [on the prisoner], the remaining five may still be liable if they were in a position to prevent the attack but failed to do so.").

---

183. See Vance v. Peters, 97 F.3d 987, 993 (7th Cir. 1996) ("The plaintiff still has the burden of demonstrating that the communication, in its content and manner of transmission, gave the prison official sufficient notice to alert him or her to" a constitutional violation); Colon v. Coughlin, 58 F.3d 865, 873 (2d Cir. 1995) (finding that supervisor could not be held personally involved in violation of prisoner's rights based on a letter, the contents of which were unknown, because the court could not determine "whether the letter was one that reasonably should have prompted [the supervisor] to investigate"); Taylor v. Mich. Dept. of Corr., 69 F.3d 76, 81–82 (6th Cir. 1995) (finding that the warden could be found to have known of the possibility that prisoner would be raped because warden knew that there were problems in the classification procedures and that young prisoners were more vulnerable to sexual assaults).

184. See Watson v. McGinnis, 964 F. Supp. 127, 130 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) ("[A]llegations that an official ignored a prisoner's letter are insufficient to establish liability" under § 1983).

185. Hill v. Marshall, 962 F.2d 1209, 1213–14 (6th Cir. 1992) (stating that corrections official whose job was "to review and respond to inmates' medical needs" could be liable for failing to do his job when he was on notice of prisoner's medical needs); Pinto v. Nettleship, 737 F.2d 130, 133 (1st Cir. 1984) (holding that supervisor cannot be personally liable "based on prison conditions beyond" his control); Williams v. Bennett, 689 F.2d 1370, 1388–89 (11th Cir. 1982) (holding that a supervisor "who was without the authority or means to provide the necessary security" could avoid supervisor liability).

186. See Taylor v. Mich. Dept. of Corr., 69 F.3d 76, 84 (6th Cir. 1995) (finding that warden could be liable for failure to adopt reasonable policies to insure that transferees were not placed in grave danger of rape); Redman v. County of San Diego, 942 F.2d 1435, 1446–49 (9th Cir. 1991) (en banc) (noting that sheriff could be liable for prisoner's rape where sheriff approved a faulty classification policy); Williams v. Coughlin, 875 F. Supp. 1004, 1014 (W.D.N.Y. 1995) (finding that superintendent of prison could be liable for policy of withholding food from prisoners who committed disciplinary infractions).

187. See Leach v. Shelby County Sheriff, 891 F.2d 1241, 1247–48 (6th Cir. 1989) (stating that sheriff may be liable for unwritten policy of deliberate indifference to detainees' serious medical needs).

188. See Buffington v. Baltimore County, 913 F.2d 113, 122–23 (4th Cir. 1990) (holding that police chief was not liable for subordinates' violation of suicide prevention policy).

189. See Vasquez v. Coughlin, 726 F. Supp. 466, 473–74 (S.D.N.Y. 1989) (noting that supervisor was not liable for subordinate's violation of prisoner's rights where a policy existed that was designed to prevent such violations).

misconduct and failed to take action to remedy it,[190] (2) failed to set up policies that help guide subordinates' conduct so that violations of constitutional rights do not occur,[191] (3) failed to inform and train staff on policies designed to avoid deprivations of constitutional rights,[192] or (4) failed to properly supervise staff to ensure that they follow policies.[193]

If your complaint alleges that the violation of your rights was the result of a failure to train staff (the third basis for liability under a deficient management theory), you must show "a complete failure to train, or training that is so reckless or grossly negligent that future misconduct is almost inevitable."[194]

(c) Municipal or Local Government Liability

A municipality or local government—such as a county, city, or town—can be held liable under Section 1983 if you can show that the violation of your constitutional rights was either (1) caused by a policy or custom of the municipality or (2) caused by a municipal policymaker's failure to take certain actions, such as properly training employees. In the first situation, the municipality has "direct liability" for violating your rights. In the second situation, the municipality has "indirect liability" for violating your rights. The requirements for each type of liability are discussed in detail in Parts C(2)(c)(i) and (ii) of this Chapter below.

There are several benefits to naming a municipality as a defendant. First, while you cannot recover punitive damages from a municipality,[195] you can still sue it for both compensatory damages and injunctive relief.[196] Second, municipalities, unlike individuals, cannot claim qualified immunity.[197] A third benefit is that if you are successful in your suit against a municipality, there is a better chance that the municipality will make broad changes in handling situations similar to yours in the future.

(i) "Direct" Municipal Liability

In order to hold a municipality directly liable for a violation of your rights you must meet the regular requirements for a Section 1983 claim and also show the following:

(1) A policy or custom of the municipality caused your rights to be violated;[198] and

(2) The policy was created by someone who is a final policymaker for the municipality.[199]

For a policy or custom to be considered the direct cause of a violation of your rights, it must be unconstitutional on its face. A policy or custom is "unconstitutional on its face" if the policy or custom itself causes your rights to be violated.[200] For example, if a particular prison guard refuses to get medical help for

---

190. See Estate of Davis by Ostenfeld v. Delo, 115 F.3d 1388, 1396 (8th Cir. 1997) (affirming finding that superintendent of prison was liable for guard's use of excessive force where superintendent knew of guard's propensity for excessive force and failed to take steps to investigate and correct the problem).

191. See Bryant v. McGinnis, 463 F. Supp. 373, 387 (W.D.N.Y. 1978) (holding that commissioner could be liable for failing to issue rules for protecting Muslim religious practices).

192. See Gilbert v. Selsky, 867 F. Supp. 159, 166 (S.D.N.Y. 1994) (finding that a Director of Inmate Discipline may be liable for failing to train disciplinary hearing officers who violated prisoner's rights at disciplinary hearing).

193. See Taylor v. Mich. Dept. of Corr., 69 F.3d 76, 80–81 (6th Cir. 1995) (noting warden's failure to ensure that staff properly carried out transfer policy may create supervisor liability); Allman v. Coughlin, 577 F. Supp. 1440, 1448 (S.D.N.Y. 1984) (stating Commissioner could be liable for failing to supervise emergency response team).

194. McDaniels v. McKinna, No. 03-1231, 96 F. App'x 575, 579, 2004 U.S. App. LEXIS 8262, *8 (10th Cir. Apr. 27, 2004) (unpublished) (quoting Meade v. Grubbs, 841 F.2d 1512, 1528 (10th Cir. 1988)); Smith v. Hill, 510 F. Supp. 767 (D. Utah 1981).

195. See City of Newport v. Fact Concerts, Inc., 453 U.S. 247, 271, 101 S. Ct. 2748, 2762, 69 L. Ed. 2d 616, 635 (1981) (holding that punitive damages are not available against municipalities in § 1983 actions).

196. See Monell v. Dept. of Soc. Servs., 436 U.S. 658, 690, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2035, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 635 (1978) (concluding that local government entities may be sued under § 1983 for compensatory damages, and injunctive and declaratory relief).

197. See Owen v. City of Independence, 445 U.S. 622, 638, 100 S. Ct. 1398, 1409, 63 L. Ed. 2d 673, 685–86 (1980) (holding that qualified immunity is not available to a municipality). Qualified immunity is discussed in Part C(3)(c) of this Chapter.

198. See Oklahoma City v. Tuttle, 471 U.S. 808, 823, 105 S. Ct. 2427, 2436, 85 L. Ed. 2d 791, 804 (1985) (finding that municipal liability required a showing of an actual connection between the policy or custom and the violation).

199. Pembaur v. Cincinnati, 475 U.S. 469, 481–83, 106 S. Ct. 1292, 1299–1300, 89 L. Ed. 2d 452, 464–65 (1986) (noting that municipalities can only be held liable under § 1983 for policies made by officials who had final authority to make the challenged policy).

200. See Monell v. Dept. of Soc. Servs., 436 U.S. 658, 694, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2037–38, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 638 (1978) (holding that a municipality can be held liable when an unconstitutional official policy is the "moving force" behind a you when you are injured, the municipality will not be liable for failing to provide medical care. However, if the prison has a known policy of delaying medical help to some or all prisoners, the municipality can be held liable for your denial of medical care.[201] Policies do not necessarily have to be written and policymakers' acts may also be considered municipal "policies."[202] For instance, if a policymaker fires an employee for an unconstitutional reason, the firing may be considered a "policy."[203] Moreover, a municipality can also be held responsible for a custom or settled practice of the municipality that is unconstitutional.[204] In all of these situations, you must be able to show a clear link between the existence of the policy or custom and the constitutional violation.[205]

Under the second requirement for "direct" municipal liability, the person who created the policy must be someone who has final authority to make that particular policy for the municipality.[206] A court will look to state law to determine if the law in your state has designated the individual in question with the authority to make policy.[207]

If you are claiming that a municipal custom, rather than an official policy, resulted in a violation of your rights, you generally must show that the custom was so widespread that policymakers knew of or should have known of the custom.[208] In essence, you will be arguing that, because the custom was so widespread, policymakers implicitly approved of it.[209] violation); Gibson v. County of Washoe, 290 F.3d 1175, 1189 (9th Cir. 2002) (finding municipal policy of delaying medical care to prisoners who are "combative, uncooperative or unable to effectively answer questions due to intoxication" may create municipal liability for deliberate indifference to serious medical needs of prisoners).

---

201. See Gibson v. County of Washoe, 290 F.3d 1175, 1189 (9th Cir. 2002) (finding municipal policy of delaying medical care to prisoners who are "combative, uncooperative or unable to effectively answer questions due to intoxication" may create municipal liability for deliberate indifference to serious medical needs of prisoners).

202. See Bd. of the County Comm'rs of Bryan County v. Brown, 520 U.S. 397, 404, 117 S. Ct. 1382, 1388, 137 L. Ed. 2d 626, 639 (1997) (observing that a policy or custom need not be formal or written so long as a plaintiff can demonstrate that the alleged unwritten policy or customer is "so widespread as to have the force of law."); Paige v. Coyner, 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 15239, 27 (6th Cir. 2010) ("[A] policy or custom does not have to be written law; it can be created 'by those whose edicts or acts may fairly be said to represent official policy.'") (quoting Monell v. Dept. of Social Servs., 436 U.S. 658, 694, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2037–38, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 638 (1978)).

203. See Hall v. Marion Sch. Dist. No. 2, 31 F.3d 183, 196 (4th Cir. 1994) (holding school board that had final authority to make firing decisions could be liable for unconstitutional firing of teacher); Bowles v. City of Camden, 993 F. Supp. 255, 268–69 (D.N.J. 1998) (allowing plaintiff to go forward with claim against city and mayor for unconstitutional firing). Note, however, that the municipality, in some way, must have deliberately caused the injury. See Bd. of the County Comm'rs of Bryan County v. Brown, 520 U.S. 397, 404, 117 S. Ct. 1382, 1388, 137 L. Ed. 2d 626, 639 (1997) ("[I]t is not enough for a § 1983 plaintiff merely to identify conduct properly attributable to the municipality. The plaintiff must also demonstrate that, through its deliberate conduct, the municipality was the 'moving force' behind the injury alleged. That is, a plaintiff must show that the municipal action was taken with the requisite degree of culpability and must demonstrate a direct causal link between the municipal action and the deprivation of federal rights.") This is a high standard to meet: you may have to prove that the municipality's legislative body or authorized decisionmaker intentionally deprived you of a federally protected right or that the action itself violated federal law.

204. See Monell v. Dept. of Social Servs., 436 U.S. 658, 690–91, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2036, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 635 (1978) (finding a municipality may be liable for a custom that causes violation of rights where a plaintiff can demonstrate that the custom is so "persistent and widespread" that it constitutes a "permanent and well settled city policy"); Adickes v. S.H. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 167–68, 90 S. Ct. 1598, 1613–14, 26 L. Ed. 2d 142, 159–60 (1970) (holding that official practices can be so settled and permanent that they amount to customs that can give rise to § 1983 liability).

205. See Oklahoma City v. Tuttle, 471 U.S. 808, 823, 105 S. Ct. 2427, 2436, 85 L. Ed. 2d 791, 804 (1985) (finding that municipal liability requires a showing of an actual connection between the policy or custom and the constitutional violation).

206. See St. Louis v. Praprotnik, 485 U.S. 112, 123, 108 S. Ct. 915, 924, 99 L. Ed. 2d 107, 118 (1988) ("[O]nly those municipal officials who have 'final policymaking authority' may by their actions subject the government to § 1983 liability.") (citing Pembaur v. Cincinnati, 475 U.S. 469, 483, 106 S. Ct. 1292, 1300, 89 L. Ed. 2d 452, 465 (1986)).

207. See McMillian v. Monroe County, 520 U.S. 781, 786, 117 S. Ct. 1734, 1737, 138 L. Ed. 2d 1, 8 (1997) (finding that state law determines whether an individual is an authorized policymaker for a municipality).

208. Trevino v. Gates, 99 F.3d 911, 918 (9th Cir. 1996) ("Absent a formal governmental policy, [the plaintiff] must show a 'longstanding practice or custom which constitutes the standard operating procedure of the local government entity.'") (quoting Gillette v. Delmore, 979 F.2d 1342, 1346–47 (9th Cir. 1992)).

209. See, e.g., Pineda v. City of Houston, 291 F.3d 325, 328 (5th Cir. 2002) (holding that in order for a municipality to be liable for a widespread custom, the municipality or a municipal policymaker must have "actual or constructive knowledge" of the custom); Sorlucco v. N.Y. City Police Dept., 971 F.2d 864, 871 (2d Cir. 1992) (concluding a plaintiff may establish a municipality's liability by showing that the actions of subordinate officers are sufficiently widespread to amount to "constructive acquiescence" (implied approval) by senior policymakers).

(ii) "Indirect" Municipal Liability

There are two "indirect" ways that a municipality can be held responsible when its employees violate your rights. First, a municipality may be liable when its failure to adequately train, supervise, or discipline its employees results in an employee violating your rights.[210] Second, a municipality may be liable for failing to adequately screen (look at the background of) an employee during hiring if that employee later violates your rights. For both failure to train, supervise, or discipline, and inadequate screening claims you will need to show that an employee of the municipality violated your constitutional rights and that the municipality demonstrated "deliberate indifference" to your constitutional rights. To prove "deliberate indifference" in this context, you must show that the municipal policy-makers knew that their actions were likely to cause someone's rights to be violated in a particular way.[211]

(d) Failure to Train, Supervise, or Discipline

There are some types of training that are so obviously necessary to avoid having employees violate your rights that a municipality can be held liable for failing to provide such training. For example, failing to train armed prison guards on when they may use deadly force creates an obvious risk that someone's rights will be violated and can amount to deliberate indifference.[212]

In other situations, if there is a pattern of repeated unconstitutional behavior by municipal employees, at some point this pattern makes it obvious that more or better training, supervision, or discipline is needed to prevent such behavior.[213] In such situations, the municipality may be held liable for failing to address these obvious needs.[214] In all cases, you must be able to demonstrate that the inadequate training polices in question were the direct cause of, or "moving force" behind your injuries.[215] However, it is important to note

---

210. See City of Canton v. Harris, 489 U.S. 378, 388, 109 S. Ct. 1197, 1204, 103 L. Ed. 2d 412, 426 (1989) (noting that a city could be liable under § 1983 for failure to train its employees, if the failure amounted to deliberate indifference to the rights of people who come into contact with the city employees).

211. See Gibson v. County of Washoe, 290 F.3d 1175, 1186 (9th Cir. 2002) ("[P]laintiff must show that the municipality was on actual or constructive notice that its omission would likely result in a constitutional violation.") (citing Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 841, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1981, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 828 (1994)); Brown v. Muhlenberg Twp., 269 F.3d 205, 216 (3d Cir. 2001) ("To survive summary judgment on a failure to train theory, the [plaintiffs] must present evidence that the need for more or different training was so obvious and so likely to lead to the violation of constitutional rights that the policymaker's failure to respond amounts to deliberate indifference.").

212. See City of Canton v. Harris, 489 U.S. 378, 390, 109 S. Ct. 1197, 1205, 103 L. Ed. 2d 412, 427–28 (1989) ("[I]t may happen that in light of the duties assigned to specific officers or employees the need for more or different training is so obvious, and the inadequacy so likely to result in the violation of constitutional rights, that the policymakers of the city can reasonably be said to have been deliberately indifferent to the need.").

213. Bd. of the County Comm'rs of Bryan County v. Brown, 520 U.S. 397, 407, 117 S. Ct. 1382, 1390, 137 L. Ed. 2d 626, 641 (1997) (noting that policymakers' awareness of a pattern of unconstitutional conduct by employees, along with a failure to address the problem, may demonstrate conscious disregard for a need to train, which would give rise to municipal liability); City of Canton v. Harris, 489 U.S. 378, 390, 109 S. Ct. 1197, 1205, 103 L. Ed. 2d 412, 427–28 (1989) ("[M]unicipal liability for failure to train may be proper where it can be shown that policymakers were aware of, and acquiesced in, a pattern of constitutional violations involving the exercise of police discretion. In such cases, the need for training may not be obvious from the outset, but a pattern of constitutional violations could put the municipality on notice that its officers confront the particular situation on a regular basis, and that they often react in a manner contrary to constitutional requirements.") (O'Connor, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part)).

214. See, e.g., Olsen v. Layton Hills Mall, 312 F.3d 1304, 1320 (10th Cir. 2002) (leaving it up to jury to decide whether county's failure to train its officers to recognize detainees' symptoms of Obsessive Compulsive Disorder, which the court noted is a fairly common disease, amounts to deliberate indifference); Davis v. Lynbrook Police Dept., 224 F. Supp. 2d 463, 479 (E.D.N.Y. 2002) (finding that six reports and complaints alleging potential unconstitutional conduct of a police officer could "demonstrate an obvious need for more or better supervision to protect against constitutional violations") (quoting Vann v. City of N.Y., 72 F.3d 1040, 1049 (2d Cir. 1995)); Perin v. Gentner, 177 F. Supp. 2d 1115, 1125 (D. Nev. 2001) (finding evidence that municipality failed to adequately train police officers and discipline them for use of excessive force could support an inadequate training and supervision claim); Young v. City of Providence, 404 F.3d 4, 27–28 (1st Cir. 2005) (concluding that municipal liability might be established where a city failed to train police officers in avoiding misidentifications of off-duty police officers because problems with misidentifications had occurred in the past and a failure to train officers in the area posed "obvious risk.").

215. See City of Canton v. Harris, 489 U.S. 378, 390, 109 S. Ct. 1197, 1205, 103 L. Ed. 2d 412, 427–28 (1989) ("[f]ailure to provide proper training may fairly be said to represent a policy for which the city is responsible, and for which the city may be held liable if it actually causes injury.") (emphasis added).

that the fact that training is imperfect or not in the precise form you would prefer is insufficient to establish municipal liability.[216]

(e) Inadequate Screening

The gist of an inadequate screening claim is that the municipality knew or should have known that it was highly likely that the individual it hired would violate your rights.[217] For example, if a city jail hired a guard that had been dismissed from a previous job for assaulting prisoners, and then the guard assaulted you, you could claim that the municipality is responsible because any reasonable person should have known that there was a high risk that this guard would engage in the specific act of assaulting prisoners.[218]

In order to make a successful inadequate screening claim, you must show that the decision to hire the individual who violated your rights demonstrates a "deliberate indifference to the risk that a violation of a particular constitutional or statutory right will follow the [hiring] decision."[219] It is not enough to show that the city or town hired someone who committed bad acts in the past.[220] Instead, you must show that an adequate look at the job applicant's background would cause an "objectively reasonable policymaker" to conclude that the "plainly obvious" result of hiring that individual would be a violation of someone's federal rights.[221] You must also show that it was highly likely—not simply possible or probable—that the particular harm you suffered would be the result of hiring the individual.[222] In other words, the violation of your rights must have a strong link to the bad acts that the supervisor knew or should have known that the employee committed in the past, and it must have been highly likely that those bad acts would be repeated.[223]

Making a successful claim regarding inadequate screening during hiring is very difficult. A court will demand a very close connection between the information available to the person making the hiring decision and the violation that took place. Such claims are not likely to succeed unless the individual who violated your rights engaged in similar behavior before he was hired, and the supervisor knew or should have known about it.

---

216. See City of Canton v. Harris, 489 U.S. 378, 391, 109 S. Ct. 1197, 1206, 103 L. Ed. 2d 412, 428 (1989) (observing that imperfect training cannot itself be the basis for § 1983 liability); Grazier v. City of Philadelphia, 328 F.3d 120, 125 (3d Cir. 2003) (holding that the scope of failure to train liability is narrow where plaintiffs "merely allege that a different program than the one in place would have been more effective."); Palmquist v. Selvik, 111 F.3d 1332, 1345 (7th Cir. 1997) (finding that where a town gave police officers some training on handling suspects exhibiting abnormal behavior, the argument that even more training should have been given was unpersuasive).

217. See Bd. of the County Comm'rs of Bryan County v. Brown, 520 U.S. 397, 412, 117 S. Ct. 1382, 1392, 137 L. Ed. 2d 626, 644 (1997) ("[A] finding of culpability simply cannot depend on the mere probability that any officer inadequately screened will inflict any constitutional injury. Rather, it must depend on a finding that [the particular] officer was highly likely to inflict the particular injury suffered by the plaintiff.") (emphasis in original).

218. Romero v. City of Clanton, 220 F. Supp. 2d 1313, 1318 (M.D. Ala. 2002) (allowing plaintiff to go forward with an inadequate screening claim against a city that hired a police officer who allegedly had a prior history of sexual misconduct and who later attempted to sodomize plaintiff).

219. Bd. of the County Comm'rs of Bryan County v. Brown, 520 U.S. 397, 411, 117 S. Ct. 1382, 1392, 137 L. Ed. 2d 626, 644 (holding that a plaintiff must show that the decision to hire reflects deliberate indifference to the risk that the particular violation that occurred would follow the decision).

220. See Snyder v. Trepagnier, 142 F.3d 791, 796 (5th Cir. 1998) (holding that evidence that an officer had committed nonviolent offenses in the past is not enough to show that the municipality knew or should have known that the officer would engage in violent acts in the future); Waterman v. City of New York, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17087, 9 (S.D.N.Y 1998) (concluding that plaintiff could not prevail on an inadequate screening claim where the only evidence offered to support the claim was that the police officer in question had been arrested once for assault prior to being hired).

221. Bd. of the County Comm'rs of Bryan County v. Brown, 520 U.S. 397, 411, 117 S. Ct. 1382, 1392, 137 L. Ed. 2d 626, 644 (holding that in order to hold a municipality liable for a hiring decision, the risk that the violation of rights would occur must be plainly obvious to an objectively reasonable policymaker).

222. Bd. of County Commissioners of Bryan County v. Brown, 520 U.S. 397, 412, 117 S. Ct. 1382, 1392, 137 L. Ed. 2d 626, 644 (1997) ("[A] finding of culpability simply cannot depend on the mere probability that any officer inadequately screened will inflict any constitutional injury. Rather, it must depend on a finding that this officer was highly likely to inflict the particular injury suffered by the plaintiff.") (emphasis in original).

223. See Bd. of the County Comm'rs of Bryan County v. Brown, 520 U.S. 397, 412, 117 S. Ct. 1382, 1392, 137 L. Ed. 2d 626, 644 (holding that municipal liability for inadequate screening requires a strong connection between the job applicant's background and the specific harm he inflicted).

3. Defenses That May Be Raised Against Your Claim

There are several ways that the persons who you are suing might be able to defend themselves against your Section 1983 lawsuit. For example, the defendants might claim that the facts in your complaint are false or that your legal arguments are incorrect. You will not know how the defendants have chosen to defend themselves until after you file your complaint. You do not need to respond to their defenses until after you receive either an answer or a motion to dismiss from the defendants.[224] However, your lawsuit is more likely to succeed if you can organize your complaint to avoid some of the defenses that you think might be raised.

The rest of this Part will explain some of the defenses that are most likely to come up in a Section 1983 lawsuit. Most of the following sections focus on different kinds of immunities. Immunities are rules that protect certain individuals or agencies from liability even when they may have done something wrong. Immunities are almost always an issue in Section 1983 suits.

(a) Eleventh Amendment Immunity

As a general matter, the Eleventh Amendment to the U.S. Constitution protects states and their agencies from being sued in federal court.[225] This means that you cannot name the state itself as a defendant in your Section 1983 suit.[226] Nor can you name the state department of corrections or any other state government agency as a defendant.[227] Eleventh Amendment immunity is also known as "sovereign immunity."

This same Eleventh Amendment immunity rule prevents you from suing a state official in his or her "official capacity" for money damages in federal court.[228] This is considered the same thing as suing the state.[229] However, this prohibition does not apply to suits for injunctive or declaratory relief against state officials sued in their official capacity. In other words, although you cannot sue the state itself for an injunction, you can sue a state official in his official capacity for an injunction.[230] Luckily, the effect of suing

---

224. See Part C(8) of this Chapter, "What to Expect After Your Legal Papers Have Been Filed in Court," for an explanation of an "answer" and a motion to dismiss.

225. Note these rules do not apply to claims brought under the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, 29 U.S.C. § 794 (2006), which prohibits disability discrimination. These rules also do not apply to some claims brought under the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), 42 U.S.C. §§ 12101–213 (2000). See United States v. Georgia, 546 U.S. 151, 126 S. Ct. 877, 163 L. Ed. 2d 650 (2006) (holding that individuals may sue states under the ADA where the conduct alleged to violate the ADA also violates the Constitution). For more information on the rights of prisoners with disabilities, see Chapter 27 of the JLM, "Rights of Prisoners with Disabilities." In addition, some states may allow you to sue the state or its agencies under certain state laws.

226. Alabama v. Pugh, 438 U.S. 781, 782 98 S. Ct. 3057, 3057, 57 L. Ed. 2d 1114, 1116 (1978) ("[S]uit against the State ... is barred by the Eleventh Amendment."). The state must affirmatively raise an 11th Amendment immunity defense. Wis. Dept. of Corr. v. Schacht, 524 U.S. 381, 389, 118 S. Ct. 2047, 2052, 141 L. Ed. 2d 364, 372 (1998) ("The Eleventh Amendment, however, does not automatically destroy original jurisdiction. Rather, the Eleventh Amendment grants the State a legal power to assert a sovereign immunity defense should it choose to do so. The State can waive the defense. Nor need a court raise the defect on its own. Unless the State raises the matter, a court can ignore it.") (internal citations omitted).

227. Alabama v. Pugh, 438 U.S. 781, 782 98 S. Ct. 3057, 3057, 57 L. Ed. 2d 1114, 1116 (1978) ("[S]uit against the State and its Board of Corrections is barred by the Eleventh Amendment"); see also Hale v. Arizona, 993 F.2d 1387, 1399 (9th Cir. 1993) (finding governmental agency in charge of prison industry is "an arm of the state" and therefore protected by 11th Amendment immunity); Griess v. Colorado, 841 F.2d 1042, 1044–45 (10th Cir. 1988) (stating that even if a state allows itself to be sued in its own courts, the 11th Amendment bars a § 1983 action in federal court against that state unless the state also waives its immunity in federal court).

228. Arizonans for Official English v. Arizona, 520 U.S. 43, 69 n.24, 117 S. Ct. 1055, 1070 n.24, 137 L. Ed. 2d 170, 194 n.24 (1997) ("State officers in their official capacities, like States themselves, are not amenable to suit for damages under § 1983.") (citing Will v. Michigan, 491 U.S. 58, 71 n.10, 109 S. Ct. 2304, 2312 n.10, 105 L. Ed. 2d 45, 58 n.10 (1989)).

229. Kentucky v. Graham, 473 U.S. 159, 169, 105 S. Ct. 3099, 3107, 87 L. Ed. 2d 114, 123–24 (1985) (noting that official capacity suits for money damages have the same effect as suing the state for money damages and therefore both types of suits are barred).

230. Verizon Md., Inc., v. Public Serv. Comm'n of Md., 535 U.S. 635, 645, 122 S. Ct. 1753, 1760, 152 L. Ed. 2d 871, 882 (2002) (allowing plaintiff to seek injunctive relief against state commissioners sued in their official capacities); Kentucky v. Graham, 473 U.S. 159, 167 n.14, 105 S. Ct. 3099, 3106 n.14, 87 L. Ed. 2d 114, 122 n.14 (1985) ("[O]fficial-capacity actions for prospective [injunctive] relief are not treated as actions against the State").

a state official for an injunction is the same as if you were suing the state or a state agency. When you sue state officials for injunctive relief, remember to sue them in their official capacity.[231]

Eleventh Amendment immunity does not apply to suits for money damages against state officials sued in their individual capacities.[232] If you are seeking money damages and are suing state officials, you must sue these individuals in their individual capacities.

Also, county and city officials do not receive Eleventh Amendment immunity at all.[233] It should be noted, however, that state and county officials may claim one of the personal immunities discussed below. Immunity defenses are often used by defendants in prison litigation suits. You should read the following parts carefully so that you will be able to argue why the defendant(s) in your suit are not immune.

(b) Absolute Immunity of Individuals

Certain types of individuals are absolutely (completely) immune from suit for all actions taken within the scope of their official duties. If an official is absolutely immune it means that he cannot be sued for money damages and sometimes cannot be sued for injunctive relief either. Legislators,[234] prosecutors,[235] witnesses,[236] and judges (including administrative judges)[237] are usually completely immune from liability for damages under Section 1983 as long as they were acting within the scope of their official duties. You should be aware of these immunities when deciding whom to name as defendants in your lawsuit.

---

231. Suits for injunctive relief against state officials in their official capacities are said to fall within the "Ex parte Young doctrine." Ex parte Young is the case where the Supreme Court said that state officials can be sued for an injunction in federal court, even though the state itself cannot be sued. Ex parte Young, 209 U.S. 123, 155–56, 28 S. Ct. 441, 452, 52 L. Ed. 714 (1908).

232. See Hafer v. Melo, 502 U.S. 21, 31, 112 S. Ct. 358, 363, 116 L. Ed. 2d 301, 313 (1991) (holding that state officials, when sued in their individual capacities, are "persons" within the meaning of § 1983 and therefore are not immune under the 11th Amendment). Some states will actually pay any damages awarded against state officials sued in their individual capacities because of state "indemnification" laws. Even though the state will be paying damages, an indemnification law does not turn your lawsuit into a suit against the state that would be barred by the 11th Amendment. Port Auth. Trans-Hudson Corp. v. Feeney, 495 U.S. 299, 317 n.10, 110 S. Ct. 1868, 1879 n.10, 109 L. Ed. 2d 264, 279 n.10 (1990) (noting that "[l]ower courts have uniformly held that States may not cloak their officers with a personal Eleventh Amendment defense by promising, by statute, to indemnify them for damage awards imposed on them for actions taken in the course of their employment").

233. Monell v. Dept. of Social Servs., 436 U.S. 658, 691 n.54, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2036 n.54, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 636 n.54 (1978) (noting that the 11th Amendment does not prevent suits against local governments that are not considered to be part of the state).

234. See Bogan v. Scott-Harris, 523 U.S. 44, 49, 118 S. Ct. 966, 970, 140 L. Ed. 2d 79, 85 (1998) ("[S]tate and regional legislators are entitled to absolute immunity from liability under § 1983 for their legislative activities … Congress did not intend the general language of § 1983 to impinge [on this immunity]") (internal citations omitted); Tenney v. Brandhove, 341 U.S. 367, 372, 71 S. Ct. 783, 786, 95 L. Ed. 1019, 1025 (1951) (extending absolute legislative immunity to protect state legislators); Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U.S. 168, 202–04, 26 L. Ed 377, 391–92 (1881) (interpreting the federal Speech and Debate Clause, U.S. Const., art. I, § 6, to provide absolute immunity to federal legislators).

235. See Burns v. Reed, 500 U.S. 478, 492, 111 S. Ct. 1934, 1942, 114 L. Ed. 2d 547, 562 (1991) (holding that prosecutor's appearance in court in support of application for search warrant and presentation of evidence at hearing were protected by absolute immunity in civil rights action brought by arrestee); Imbler v. Pachtman, 424 U.S. 409, 430–31, 96 S. Ct. 984, 995, 47 L. Ed. 2d 128, 143–44 (1976) (holding that prosecutor was absolutely immune from suit even though he knowingly used perjured testimony, deliberately withheld exculpatory information, and failed to make full disclosure of all facts casting doubt upon the state's testimony). Prosecutorial immunity is limited to immunity from being sued for money damages. Prosecutors do not have immunity from being sued for injunctive relief. If a prosecutor violates your rights while acting within the scope of his official duties, you can sue him for injunctive relief. See Supreme Court of Va. v. Consumers Union, 446 U.S. 719, 736, 100 S. Ct. 1967, 1977, 64 L. Ed. 2d 641, 656 (1980) (noting that prosecutors, though shielded by absolute immunity for damages liability, may be subject to § 1983 suits for injunctive relief).

236. See Briscoe v. LaHue, 460 U.S. 325, 326, 103 S. Ct. 1108, 1110–11, 75 L. Ed. 2d 96, 102 (1983) (holding that a police officer, when testifying in court, is acting as a witness and is therefore entitled to absolute immunity).

237. See Stump v. Sparkman, 435 U.S. 349, 355–56, 98 S. Ct. 1099, 1104–05, 55 L. Ed. 2d 331, 338 (1978) (holding that a judge will not be deprived of immunity because action he took was in error, was done maliciously, or was in excess of his authority); Pierson v. Ray, 386 U.S. 547, 553–54, 87 S. Ct. 1213, 1217–18, 18 L. Ed. 2d 288, 294 (1967) (holding local judge immune from liability for civil rights damages that occurred on account of judge convicting individual under a statute later found to be unconstitutional), overruled on other grounds by Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 800, 102 S. Ct. 2727, 73 L. Ed. 2d 396 (1982).

You usually will not be able to sue any of these individuals for violating your constitutional rights if their actions were within the scope of their official responsibilities. In figuring out whether an action falls within the scope of an official's duties, the courts generally look to the nature of the individual's responsibilities, as opposed to just the individual's title. For example, many officials with state or federal legislative responsibilities will be completely immune from suit even if they are not named legislators.[238] Similarly, officials who perform judicial functions within administrative agencies may be entitled to absolute judicial immunity even though they are not technically judges.[239] However, the Supreme Court has held that prison officials on a prison disciplinary committee are not performing judicial functions, and are therefore not completely immune from liability for violating your rights.[240]

Keep in mind that none of these officials is absolutely immune from being sued for money damages for performing an action outside the scope of his official duties. As described above, you must look to the nature of the official's actions, and not simply his title, to determine whether the official's actions are entitled to absolute immunity. For example, in keeping with the rule, a prosecutor is only absolutely immune from suit for those actions taken within "the scope of his prosecutorial duties."[241] Therefore, he has absolute immunity for actions related to initiating and presenting the government's case against you, but not for investigative actions performed prior to this or for actions that did not relate to his role as prosecutor.[242] In Buckley v. Fitzsimmons, the Supreme Court found that a prosecutor was not entitled to absolute immunity for allegedly making false statements to the media regarding the defendant because giving statements to the press is outside the prosecutor's role in prosecuting the defendant.[243] Similarly, investigative actions performed by a prosecutor to establish probable cause to arrest a defendant are also outside his role and not entitled to absolute immunity because such actions do not relate to preparing for trial.[244] On the other hand, interviewing witnesses and evaluating evidence in preparation for trial are within the prosecutor's role and always entitled to absolute immunity.[245]

With respect to judges (including administrative judges[246]), the only instances in which they do not have complete immunity from damages are when they do acts that are not judicial in nature[247] and when they act

---

238. See Supreme Court of Va. v. Consumers Union, 446 U.S. 719, 734, 100 S. Ct. 1967, 1976, 64 L. Ed. 2d 641, 655 (1980) (holding defendant judges absolutely immune from suit because they were performing legislative functions when they created the disciplinary rules at issue); see also Lake Country Estates v. Tahoe Reg'l Planning Agency, 440 U.S. 391, 405, 99 S. Ct. 1171, 1179, 59 L. Ed. 2d 401, 412–13 (1979) (holding regional officials entitled to absolute immunity where they were officially acting in a capacity comparable to that of state legislators).

239. See Butz v. Economou, 438 U.S. 478, 512–13, 98 S. Ct. 2894, 2914, 57 L. Ed. 2d 895, 920 (1978) (granting absolute individual immunity to administrative judges of the Department of Agriculture for damages from wrongful initiation of administrative proceedings).

240. See Cleavinger v. Saxner, 474 U.S. 193, 206, 106 S. Ct. 496, 503, 88 L. Ed. 2d 507, 517–18 (1985) (declaring that prison officials on prison disciplinary committee do not have absolute immunity).

242. See Imbler v. Pachtman, 424 U.S. 409, 420, 96 S. Ct. 984, 990, 47 L. Ed. 2d 128, 137–38 (1976) ("[A] prosecutor enjoys absolute immunity from § 1983 suits for damages when he acts within the scope of his prosecutorial duties.").

242. Zahrey v. Coffey, 221 F.3d 342, 346 (2d Cir. 2000) ("The nature of a prosecutor's immunity depends on the capacity in which the prosecutor acts at the time of the alleged misconduct. Actions taken as an advocate enjoy absolute immunity, while actions taken as an investigator enjoy only qualified immunity. This immunity law applies to Bivens actions as well as actions under [S]ection 1983.") (internal citations omitted).

243. Buckley v. Fitzsimmons, 509 U.S. 259, 277–78, 113 S. Ct. 2606, 2617–18, 125 L. Ed. 2d 209, 228 (1993) (holding prosecutor's prejudicial out-of-court statements to the press were not within the scope of his duties and not entitled to absolute immunity); Burns v. Reed, 500 U.S. 478, 495–96, 111 S. Ct. 1934, 1944–45, 114 L. Ed. 2d 547, 566 (1991) (holding that absolute immunity from liability for damages under § 1983 did not apply to state prosecutor giving legal advice to police).

244. See Buckley v. Fitzsimmons, 509 U.S. 259, 273–74, 113 S. Ct. 2606, 2616, 125 L. Ed. 2d 209, 226 (1993) (holding that "[w]hen a prosecutor performs the investigative functions normally performed by a detective or police officer," he is not entitled to absolute immunity); Zahrey v. Coffey, 221 F.3d 342, 346 (2d Cir. 2000) (prosecutor accused of fabricating false evidence against a defendant was only entitled to a qualified immunity defense because the alleged misconduct occurred while prosecutor was acting in an investigative capacity).

245. See Imbler v. Pachtman, 424 U.S. 409, 431, 96 S. Ct. 984, 995, 47 L. Ed. 2d 128, 144 (1976) (holding prosecutors absolutely immune for all actions performed "in initiating a prosecution and in presenting the State's case").

246. Butz v. Economou, 438 U.S. 478, 512–13, 98 S. Ct. 2894, 2914, 57 L. Ed. 2d 895, 920 (1978) (according judicial immunity to federal administrative agency officers performing adjudicatory functions during the course of a hearing).

247. See Forrester v. White, 484 U.S. 219, 228–29, 108 S. Ct. 538, 545, 98 L. Ed. 2d. 555, 566 (1988) (holding that judge who fired an employee because of her sex was not absolutely immune from suit, because hiring and firing are with a clear and complete absence of jurisdiction.[248] A judge acts in the complete absence of jurisdiction when he makes a ruling in a case that he had no authority to hear in the first place. For example, a family court judge does not have authority to try felony cases and therefore would be acting without jurisdiction if he did hear such a case.[249] If you think that a judge had the power to hear your case, but made a mistake that harmed you, you cannot sue the judge for money damages. Instead, you should try to appeal the judge's ruling.

(c) Qualified Immunity of Individuals

Officials who are sued in their individual capacity and who are not completely immune from suit may still enjoy a limited immunity, known as "qualified immunity." State, city, and county officials at all levels may claim some degree of qualified immunity.[250] However, qualified immunity does not protect private parties who are acting under color of state law.[251]

Qualified immunity means that officials will only have to pay money damages if "their conduct ... violate[s] clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which a reasonable person would have known."[252] Therefore, to be protected by qualified immunity, the official whom you sue has to show either that it was objectively reasonable to believe his or her actions did not violate the law, or that the law was not clearly established at the time of the violation.[253] In other words, prison officials sued in their individual capacity can be granted qualified immunity even if their conduct is found to be illegal—but only if the court administrative, not judicial functions, and judges may be liable for damages for administrative, legislative, or executive functions: "[I]t [is] the nature of function performed, not the identity of the actor who performed it, that informs[s] our immunity analysis.").

---

248. See Mireles v. Waco, 502 U.S. 9, 11–12, 112 S. Ct. 286, 288, 116 L. Ed. 2d 9, 9 (1991) (per curiam) (explaining that judicial immunity is overcome in only two sets of circumstances: a judge is not immune from liability for nonjudicial actions (actions not taken in judge's judicial capacity) and a judge is not immune for actions, though judicial in nature, taken in complete absence of all jurisdiction); Bradley v. Fisher, 80 U.S. 335, 352, 10 L. Ed. 646, 651 (1872) (noting that a judge does not have complete immunity when he acts in a situation where he knows that he has absolutely no jurisdiction over the subject matter of the lawsuit).

249. Stump v. Sparkman, 435 U.S. 349, 357 n.7, 98 S. Ct. 1099, 1104 n.7, 55 L. Ed. 2d 331, 339 n.7 (1978) (noting the difference between an act in excess of jurisdiction and one in the absence of jurisdiction: "[I]f a probate judge, with jurisdiction over only wills and estates, should try a criminal case, he would be acting in the clear absence of jurisdiction and would not be immune from liability for his action; on the other hand, if a judge of a criminal court should convict a defendant of a nonexistent crime, he would merely be acting in excess of his jurisdiction and would be immune.").

250. See Procunier v. Navarette, 434 U.S. 555, 561–62, 98 S. Ct. 855, 859–60, 55 L. Ed. 2d 24, 30–31 (1978) (noting that the scope of qualified immunity varies depending on the level of discretion and responsibilities of the official and how the circumstances appeared at the time), overruled on other grounds by Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 800, 102 S. Ct. 2727, 73 L. Ed. 2d 396 (1982).

251. See Wyatt v. Cole, 504 U.S. 158, 159, 112 S. Ct. 1827, 1829, 118 L. Ed. 2d 504, 509 (1992) (concluding that the rationales mandating qualified immunity for public officials are not applicable to private parties); Richardson v. McKnight, 521 U.S. 399, 401, 117 S. Ct. 2100, 2102, 138 L. Ed. 2d 540, 545 (1997) (holding that prison guards at a privatized prison are not entitled to qualified immunity, unlike prison guards who are employed by the government). But see Eagon ex rel. Eagon v. City of Elk City, Okl., 72 F.3d 1480, 1489–90 (10th Cir. 1996) (holding that defendant, a private individual acting under the authority of the City but not a city official, was entitled to qualified immunity because she "was not invoking state law in pursuit of private ends" but was "performing a government function pursuant to a government request." "[A] private individual who performs a government function pursuant to a state order or request is entitled to qualified immunity if a state official would have been entitled to such immunity had he performed the function himself.") (internal citation omitted).

252. Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 800, 818, 102 S. Ct. 2727, 2738, 73 L. Ed. 2d 396, 410 (1982). For examples of cases dealing with the issue of qualified immunity, see Anderson v. Creighton, 483 U.S. 635, 641, 107 S. Ct. 3034, 3040, 97 L. Ed. 2d 523, 531–32 (1987) (holding that since defendant could reasonably have believed that the search at issue was lawful, he should have been allowed to claim a defense of qualified immunity), and Oliveira v. Mayer, 23 F.3d 642, 648 (2d Cir. 1994) (holding that defendants should have been given the opportunity to attempt to prove that they reasonably believed they were not violating settled law and were therefore entitled to a qualified immunity defense).

253. See Oliveira v. Mayer, 23 F.3d 642, 648 (2d Cir. 1994) (remanding, based on factual dispute related to whether a reasonable officer could believe that his conduct was lawful); Powell v. Ward, 643 F.2d 924, 934 n.13 (2d Cir. 1981) (stating that a defendant who "knew or should have known that her conduct violated a constitutional norm" was not entitled to immunity); Fiscus v. City of Roswell, 832 F. Supp. 1558, 1564 (N.D. Ga. 1993) (holding that Supreme Court decision within same month did not constitute clearly established law); Kaminsky v. Rosenblum, 737 F. Supp. 1309, 1318 (S.D.N.Y. 1990) (holding that qualified immunity did not apply because the prison doctors were aware that alleged conduct implicated the prisoner's rights).

finds that it was objectively reasonable for the official to believe his conduct was legal[254] or that the law was unclear when the violation occurred.[255]

You do not have to allege in your complaint that the law that was violated was clearly established. The defendant is responsible for raising the qualified immunity defense.[256] If the defendant fails to claim qualified immunity at the trial court level, he may lose the right to raise that defense in later proceedings (such as appeals).[257]

Note that qualified immunity does not give officials a defense to a claim for injunctive relief.[258] This means that an individual may have qualified immunity, but the court can still tell that individual to stop doing something that violates your rights. Qualified immunity is also not available as a defense for municipalities[259] or privately employed prison guards.[260] Qualified immunity is usually (but not always) decided by the judge during summary judgment proceedings.[261] Summary judgment is described in Part C(8).

Figure 2 below should help you understand which defendants are completely or partially immune from suit in federal court, and what kind of relief you can request. Note that state courts have different immunity rules. If you want to bring your lawsuit in state court (discussed below in Part D(2)), you should research your state's immunity rules.

---

254. "Objectively reasonable" means that it doesn't matter whether the officer actually believed that his conduct was legal. Instead, the officer has to prove that a reasonable officer could have believed that the conduct was legal.

255. Courts will look at the clarity of the law in the factual context of your case. For example, if you claim that an officer violated your substantive due process right to privacy by strip-searching you, you cannot defeat a qualified immunity defense solely by showing that the right to bodily privacy is clearly established. You would also have to show that at the time you were strip-searched, clearly established law (from the Supreme Court or a court in your circuit or district) dictated that strip-searching violated your right to bodily privacy. See Saucier v. Katz, 533 U.S. 194, 201, 121 S. Ct. 2151, 2156, 150 L. Ed. 2d 272, 282 (2001) (stating that the question of whether a law is clearly established "must be undertaken in light of the specific context of the case, not as a broad general proposition").

256. See Gomez v. Toledo, 446 U.S. 635, 640, 100 S. Ct. 1920, 1924, 64 L. Ed. 2d 572, 578 (1980). Note that Mitchell v. Forsyth, 472 U.S. 511, 530, 105 S. Ct. 2806, 2817, 86 L. Ed. 2d 411, 427 (1985), allows defendants to immediately appeal a court's decision to deny them qualified immunity, provided that the denial turns on an issue of law. These immediate appeals are called "interlocutory appeals." You may attempt to oppose a defendant's immediate appeal of a ruling on qualified immunity by arguing to the appellate court that the issue turns on "disputed questions of fact" rather than questions of pure law. See Tierney v. Davidson, 133 F.3d 189, 194 (2d Cir. 1998) ("[A] district court's denial of a claim of qualified immunity, to the extent that it turns on an issue of law, is an appealable 'final decision' within the meaning of 28 U.S.C. § 1291 notwithstanding the absence of a final judgment." (citation omitted)); Kulwicki v. Dawson, 969 F.2d 1454, 1461 (3d Cir. 1992) (holding that an order denying qualified immunity is subject to interlocutory appeal). But see Feagley v. Waddill, 868 F.2d 1437, 1439 (5th Cir. 1989) (finding a denial of motion for summary judgment on issue of qualified immunity not immediately appealable).

257. See Walsh v. Mellas, 837 F.2d 789, 800 n.5 (7th Cir. 1988) (holding that the qualified immunity defense was waived because it was not raised prior to the second appeal).

258. See Project Release v. Prevost, 463 F. Supp. 1033, 1036 (E.D.N.Y. 1978) (finding that the Court could issue a declaratory judgment against officials despite officials' qualified immunity).

259. See Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Intelligence & Coordination Unit, 507 U.S. 163, 166, 113 S. Ct. 1160, 1162, 122 L. Ed. 2d 517, 523 (1993) ("[U]nlike various government officials, municipalities do not enjoy immunity from suit—either absolute or qualified—under [Section] 1983. In short, a municipality can be sued under [Section] 1983, but it cannot be held liable unless a municipal policy or custom caused the constitutional injury [because there is no respondeat superior municipal liability under § 1983]."); Owen v. City of Independence, 445 U.S. 622, 638, 100 S. Ct. 1398, 1409, 63 L. Ed. 2d 673, 685–86 (1980) (holding that a municipality cannot use the defense of qualified immunity in a § 1983 action by simply arguing its employees acted in good faith). But see City of Newport v. Fact Concerts, Inc., 453 U.S. 247, 271, 101 S. Ct. 2748, 2762, 69 L. Ed. 2d 616, 635 (1981) (holding that punitive damages are not available against a municipality in a § 1983 suit).

260. See Richardson v. McKnight, 521 U.S. 399, 412–13, 117 S. Ct. 2100, 2107–08, 138 L. Ed. 2d 540, 552–53 (1997).

261. See Snyder v. Trepagnier, 142 F.3d 791, 799–800 (5th Cir. 1998) (noting that qualified immunity is ordinarily determined by the judge, but finding that there was no error in allowing the jury to decide the issue when there were facts in dispute relating to qualified immunity); Warren v. Dwyer, 906 F.2d 70, 76 (2d Cir. 1990) ("The better rule, we believe, is for the court to decide the issue of qualified immunity as a matter of law, preferably on a pretrial motion for summary judgment when possible."); see also Hunter v. Bryant, 502 U.S. 224, 227, 112 S. Ct. 534, 536, 116 L. Ed. 2d 589, 595 (1991) ("[W]e repeatedly have stressed the importance of resolving immunity questions at the earliest possible stage in litigation.").

Type of Defendant	Type of Immunity	Relief You Can Obtain
State or state agency	Eleventh Amendment (sovereign) immunity	None, unless state law authorizes such lawsuits
Any officials sued in their individual capacity	Qualified immunity	Declaratory judgment or Injunctive relief; Money damages, but only if a) the official does not raise the qualified immunity defense or b) he does raise the defense, but you can demonstrate that a reasonable person would have known that his actions violated a clearly established right
State officials in their official capacity	Eleventh Amendment (sovereign) immunity from suit for money damages only	Declaratory judgment; Injunctive relief
Non-state (local or municipal) officials in their official capacity	None	Declaratory judgment; Injunctive relief; Money damages
Witnesses	Absolute immunity	None, unless you are alleging that the individual violated your rights at a time that he was not acting as a witness
Legislators and individuals authorized to perform legislative functions	Absolute immunity from any suit for actions performed within the scope of official legislative duties	None, unless you are alleging that the individual violated your rights while acting outside the scope of his official duties
Prosecutors	Absolute immunity from suit for money damages only, for actions performed within the scope of official prosecutorial duties	Declaratory judgment; Injunctive relief
Judges (including administrative judges)	Absolute immunity from suit for money damages, for actions performed within the scope of official judicial duties, unless acting with a complete absence of jurisdiction	Declaratory judgment; Injunctive relief, but only if a declaratory judgment has been violated or is not available
Municipalities	Immunity from punitive damages	Declaratory judgment; Injunctive relief; Attorney's fees
Private parties acting under color of state law (such as prison guards at a privately-run prison)	Qualified immunity in some circumstances	Declaratory judgment; Injunctive relief; Money damages

Figure 2: Types of Immunity Available to and Types of Damages Available from Different Defendants

(d) Defenses Based on Required Procedure

The defendants may try to persuade the court to dismiss your lawsuit by arguing that you have failed to meet important procedural requirements. For example, the court can dismiss your case if you fail to meet the filing deadline imposed by your state's statute of limitations. See Part C(5) of this Chapter for an explanation of statutes of limitations. Of course, you can avoid the possibility of this defense by filing your lawsuit on time.

In addition, the defendants may argue that your claim has already been resolved by an earlier court case or a prior administrative proceeding of a judicial nature. If this argument applies to you, the court may refuse to hear your current lawsuit according to the doctrines of "res judicata," "collateral estoppel," or

"preclusion."[262] These doctrines effectively prohibit the re-litigation of specific claims or issues that have already been litigated in previous cases between the same parties.[263] To avoid these defenses, before asserting the claims in your current case you should carefully analyze and understand any claims you have previously filed, and any determinations a court may have made with regard to those claims. In general, a claim will be barred because it was previously raised, if:

(1) There was a final judgment on the merits of the claim in the previous case; [264]
(2) The ruling court in the previous case was a court of competent jurisdiction; [265]
(3) The prior action involved the same parties as the present case; and
(4) The prior case involved the same type of claim (cause of action).[266]

Finally, defendants may argue that your complaint should be dismissed if you did not exhaust (use) all administrative procedures available to you before bringing your complaint. This is because, under the Prison Litigation Reform Act, you must exhaust all administrative remedies (such as prisoner grievance procedures) that are available to you before bringing a suit. See Chapter 13 of the JLM, "The Prison Litigation Reform Act" for more information on the exhaustion requirement and Chapter 14 of the JLM, "Inmate Grievance Procedures," for information on prisoner grievances. Remember to keep copies of everything that you or prison officials write in this process, so that if a defendant claims that you did not use all required administrative procedures, you will be able to prove that you did.[267] Note, however, that neither Section 1983 nor the PLRA requires you to exhaust your possible state court remedies before suing in federal court.[268]

4. Where to File

Once you have decided to bring your Section 1983 action in federal district court, you have to figure out which federal district court is the correct court.[269] For example, New York is divided into four federal judicial districts. Your Section 1983 suit must be filed in the same district where the harm occurred or in the district where any defendant lives if all the defendants live in the same state.[270] If not all of your defendants live in the same state, and there is a reason that you cannot file in the district where the harm occurred, then you can file in a judicial district where any defendant can be found.[271] In most cases, this means you have to file in the district where your prison is located. If you have been moved to another prison or have been released since the time you suffered the wrong, you must still file in the district where the harm occurred. Appendix I

---

262. Allen v. McCurry, 449 U.S. 90, 101 S. Ct. 411, 66 L. Ed. 2d 308 (1980) (holding that collateral estoppel applied to § 1983 actions and included both civil and criminal state-court decisions); see Parklane Hosiery Co., Inc. v. Shore, 439 U.S. 322, 326 n.5, 99 S. Ct. 645, 649 n.5, 58 L. Ed. 2d 552, 359 n.5 (1979) ("Under the doctrine of res judicata, a judgment on the merits in a prior suit bars a second suit involving the same parties or their privies based on the same cause of action. Under the doctrine of collateral estoppel, on the other hand, the second action is upon a different cause of action and the judgment in the prior suit precludes relitigation of issues actually litigated and necessary to the outcome of the first action.").

263. See Parklane Hosiery Co., Inc. v. Shore, 439 U.S. 322, 326, 99 S. Ct. 645, 649, 58 L. Ed. 2d 552, 559 (1979) (explaining that collateral estoppel and res judicata have the "dual purpose of protecting litigants from the burden of relitigating an identical issue with the same party … and of promoting judicial economy by preventing needless litigation.").

264. "On the merits" generally means that the previous lawsuit was decided on a motion for summary judgment or after a trial, or was dismissed with prejudice.

265. Jurisdiction is a word for a court's power to hear and decide a case. If the court that heard your original case was not a court with power to hear that case, you can file the same case in another court.

266. See In re Teltronics Servs., Inc., 762 F.2d 185, 190 (2d Cir. 1985) (describing the factors that prevent re-litigation of earlier decisions).

267. It is also a good idea to save all documents related to these procedures because if your complaints are ignored, the writings may be evidence of the prison officials' indifference that can be used in your § 1983 suit. Their responses might also admit things, like explanations for their behavior, which you can use later at trial.

268. See Jenkins v. Morton, 148 F.3d 257, 259 (3d Cir. 1998) (holding that the PLRA does not require exhaustion of state judicial review procedures and noting that the same is true of § 1983 claims); see also Powe v. Ennis, 177 F.3d 393, 394 (5th Cir. 1999) (per curiam) ("A prisoner's administrative remedies are deemed exhausted [under the PLRA] when a valid grievance has been filed and the state's time for responding thereto has expired.").

269. Visit http://www.uscourts.gov/court_locator.aspx (last visited Sept. 18, 2010) for help in locating your local federal district court.

270. 28 U.S.C. § 1391(b) (2006) (describing requirements for district court jurisdiction).

271. 28 U.S.C. § 1391(b) (2006).

of the JLM contains the addresses of all federal district courts. Appendix I also tells you the federal district for each of the New York state prisons.

5. When to File

The statute of limitations is the amount of time you have after the harm occurs before your right to file a lawsuit expires forever. Because there is no federal statute of limitations for Section 1983 claims, such claims use the state statute of limitations for personal injury suits in the state in which the court is located.[272] This may seem strange, but it is because the Supreme Court has found that Section 1983 claims are most similar to tort claims for personal injury.[273] New York law says that personal injury suits have to be brought within three years from the date you suffered the wrong,[274] so you have three years to file a Section 1983 suit in New York as well.[275] You should look up the statute of limitations for personal injury suits in the state where you are filing your claim (you can usually find this information in the state code of statutes). The statute of limitations for personal injury suits is also the amount of time you will have to bring your Section 1983 suit.

The statute of limitations period begins to run when you find out (or should have found out) about the injury that you are complaining about.[276] If the injury that violated your rights continues over a period of time—for example, failure to treat a medical condition despite repeated requests for medical care—the statute of limitations may not start to run until the end of the period of injury.[277] However, it is better not to gamble that the court will agree that your injury is continuing. If you can, bring your lawsuit early enough so that all actions that you are complaining about occurred during the limitations period.

---

272. See Wilson v. Garcia, 471 U.S. 261, 276, 105 S. Ct. 1938, 1947, 85 L. Ed. 2d 254, 266 (1985) (holding that the statue of limitations for a § 1983 claim is the same as for state tort actions for personal injuries), superseded by statute on other grounds, Judicial Improvements Act of 1990, Pub. L. No. 101-650, § 313(a), 104 Stat. 5114 (codified as amended at 28 U.S.C. § 1658 (2000 Supp. II)), as recognized in Jones v. R.R. Donnelley & Sons Co., 541 U.S. 369, 377–81, 124 S. Ct. 1836, 1842–45, 158 L. Ed. 2d 645, 653–56 (2004). If your state has different statutes of limitations for different types of personal injury actions, courts will apply the state's general or residual personal injury statute of limitations to your § 1983 case. See Owens v. Okure, 488 U.S. 235, 249–50, 109 S. Ct. 573, 582, 102 L. Ed. 2d 594, 606 (1989) ("[W]here state law provides multiple statutes of limitations for personal injury actions, courts considering § 1983 claims should borrow the general or residual statute for personal injury actions."). General statutes of limitations apply to all personal injury claims, but have some exceptions. Residual personal injury statutes of limitation are those that apply to types of personal injuries not specified elsewhere. Note that Congress has recently created a four-year "catch-all" statute of limitations applicable to "civil action[s] arising under an Act of Congress enacted after" December 1, 1990. 28 U.S.C. § 1658(a) (2000 Supp. II). This four-year limitations period applies to all claims "made possible by a post-1990 [congressional] enactment" that do not themselves contain a statute of limitations provision. Jones v. R.R. Donnelley & Sons Co., 541 U.S. 369, 382, 124 S. Ct. 1836, 1845, 158 L. Ed. 2d 645, 656 (2004). Do not be confused by this new four-year catch-all provision: § 1983 has not been amended after December 1, 1990, so courts still apply the statute of limitations given by state law.

273. City of Monterey v. Del Monte Dunes at Monterey, Ltd., 526 U.S. 687, 709, 119 S. Ct. 1624, 1638, 143 L. Ed. 2d 882, 904–05 (1999) (finding that "there can be no doubt that claims brought pursuant to § 1983 sound in tort.").

274. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 214 (McKinney 2003); see Eagleston v. Guido, 41 F.3d 865, 871 (2d Cir. 1994) (finding that "[f]or § 1983 actions arising in New York, the statute of limitations is three years.").

275. See Owens v. Okure, 488 U.S. 235, 251, 109 S. Ct. 573, 582, 102 L. Ed. 2d 594, 606 (holding that in New York, the time limit on bringing a § 1983 claim is three years, which comes from the statute of limitations for personal injury suits, rather than the one year limitation that applies to claims for assault, battery, or false imprisonment).

276. Hunt v. Bennett, 17 F.3d 1263, 1266 (10th Cir. 1994) ("Section 1983 claims accrue, for the purpose of the statute of limitations, when the plaintiff knows or has reason to know of the injury which is the basis of his action.") (citation omitted).

277. Federal courts are required to apply state rules regarding when the statute of limitations begins running. Therefore, you should look at the specific provisions of your state's statute of limitations. See Hardin v. Straub, 490 U.S. 536, 539, 109 S. Ct. 1998, 2000, 104 L. Ed 2d 582, 588 (1989) (holding that a federal court should have applied Michigan's law that tolls (pauses the running of) statutes of limitation for prisoners until they are released); Beck v. Caterpillar Inc., 50 F.3d 405, 406 (7th Cir. 1995) (noting that federal courts generally borrow states' tolling and savings provisions, and where the timeliness of a federal cause of action (including § 1983 claims) is governed by a state statute of limitations, "it only makes sense to apply the state's tolling and savings provisions, for they are interrelated.") (citations omitted). The Beck court also warned, however, that "[t]he same cannot be said when the federal claim in question is governed by a federal statute of limitations … If Congress explicitly puts a limit upon the time for enforcing a right which it created, there is an end of the matter." (emphasis added). Beck v. Caterpillar Inc., 50 F.3d 405, 407 (7th Cir. 1995).

6. What to File

(a) Your Complaint

Your lawsuit begins when you file your "complaint." Many districts provide model complaint forms for Section 1983 actions. After you figure out which district you have to file in, write to the clerk of that district and ask for the model forms (in New York, you should write to the pro se clerk). If you cannot get the forms, make your own using the examples in Appendix A of this Chapter. You should also read the local rules of practice for the federal district court where you decide to file. You can get the local rules for a small fee from the court clerk and possibly through your prison law library.

